We set up the science in technology complex because in 2004 UNESCO found that the number of researchers, scientists and engineers in a developing country is 340 per million of the population. In our country we have only 48 per million Filipinos. To achieve the UNESCO benchmark in the shortest possible time and to boost our effort at global competitiveness, the Philippine government is investing P3 billion from budget and off-budget sources in Engineering Research and Development Technology, including the UP Science and Technology Complex, between 2007 and 2010. This is to promote engineering R&D activities in the country at a significant scale in order to modernize every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the Philippines, including agriculture, to propel economic growth. Modernization will need a critical mass of R&D-capable manpower that will attract technology-based investors to the country. Since last school year, seven universities led by the UP College of Engineering have been offering scholarships for masters and doctoral degree programs in all fields of engineering.

The consortium steps up the creation of a favorable environment for science and technology to flourish. We can do it; we have the knowledge to build the basic industries that engage in high-value added activities such as design, R&D, product conceptualization, product development, and innovation. Investors know our caliber; our manpower is world class. At the forefront are our engineers; they are indeed the engines for national growth as they help spawn high-tech companies. With engineering R&D, led by the University of the Philippines, we further hone their skills and create our own technology roadmaps that will bring science and technology right at the doorstep of the Filipino nation.

With UP as the National University, the primus inter pares among state universities in our country, the leader in academic standards, and the primary seat for advanced studies, research and advancement of intellectual thought, this law ensures the hundred-year tradition of producing the best minds.

With this law, may the minds produced by UP become modern-day exemplars of the famed Oblation, that enduring symbol of the University's offering of itself to the Filipino people.

To the UP students, faculty, staff and officials in all of its campuses, and to the authors of the strengthened UP Charter, congratulations!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the University of the Philippines (U.P.) Charter Bill Signing Ceremony. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121940/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1338&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2nd Strong Republic Nautical Highway Conference

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2nd Strong Republic Nautical Highway Conference

[Delivered in Xavier Estates, Cagayan De Oro City, April 30, 2008]

In 2002 I presented to the Cabinet a work program to reduce transport costs from the food basket of Mindanao to the large consuming population of Luzon. Then Agriculture Secretary Cito Lorenzo and then Philippine Ports Authority General Manager Al Cusi had started doing something about decreasing handling and wharfage costs. I instructed the DBP to take the lead for other measures like financing logistics, storage and port facilities.

We pulled out from the DBP filing cabinet an obscure master plan of a Sustainable Logistics Development Plan initiated by their SVP Marietto Enecio made up of 48 Road and Roll-on-Roll-Off routes.

At a Mindanao Shippers Conference that year, we launched the DBP Program with P 20 billion for long-term lending.

When we completed the Dapitan, Zamboanga del Norte to Dumaguete, Negros Oriental and Roxas, Mindoro Oriental to Catiguan, Aklan routes in 2003, we baptized as the Strong Republic Nautical Highway, a 900-kilometer seamless stretch of roads and ports that cut travel time by 12 hours from Dapitan to Batangas port and on to any point of Luzon by land.

Thanks to the U.S. government, this Nautical Highway can now connect through the Dapitan-Siocon Road which we are completing, to the Zamboanga-Basilan-Sulu-Tawitawi Corridor made up of the GEM RORO ports in Lamitan, Basilan, in Siocon, Zamboanga del Norte, in Siasi, Sulu in and Bongao, Tawi-Tawi.

Indeed, the U.S. has worked side by side with our military and local governments on a number of community public works projects. The positive impact of these projects cannot be overstated: from RORO ports to health care to building schools, the outreach has built more than buildings – it has built trust, which is the basis for effective and lasting diplomacy.

Now we showcase the Central Nautical Highway. We started last Monday by launching the link from Bulan, Sorsogon to Masbate City to Cawayan, Masbate, to Bogo, Cebu to Cebu City, which has an existing RORO link to Tubigon, Bohol. Yesterday we traveled by road from Tubigon to Jagna, Bohol and by RORO to Mambajao, Camiguin, from where you can motor to Benoni, Camiguin. This morning we saw off a RORO ferry in Benoni bound for Balingoan, Misamis Oriental. In sum, the Central Nautical Highway goes from Sorsogon to Misamis Oriental.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo Speech during the 2nd Strong Republic Nautical Highway Conference. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121922/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1336&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the general assembly and induction of officers of the Federation of Philippine Industries and launching of the FPI-FFCCCII Advocacy “Buy Pinoy-Buy Local”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the general assembly and induction of officers of the Federation of Philippine Industries and launching of the FPI-FFCCCII Advocacy “Buy Pinoy-Buy Local”

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Hotel Intercontinental Manila, Makati City, May 2, 2008]

Thank you. (applause)

Thank you Secretary Ermita for your introduction and thank you for being here at the same time that your brother is here. It turns out he’s a member of the Board of Directors of FPI. Now, we have a direct link between Malacañang and the FPI. (applause)

Chairman Carlos, President Arranza, Executive Vice President Coseteng, other officials of FPI, other officials of the Philippine government — we see Bayani Fernando and Bebot Villar here — officials of the Federation, ladies and gentlemen.

First of all, Congratulations to the newly-inducted officers of FPI. And thank you for working with the government and the rest of the business community and the labor community as well to promote the growth of the nation’s industries.

Congratulations on your fight against smuggling! Congratulations on your joint project with the Federation on your “Buy Pinoy – Buy Local” campaign. The campaign against smuggling and the campaign to ‘Buy Pinoy,’ as Jess Arranza said earlier, are related to each other because as Jess quoted earlier, “When the buying stops, smuggling stops.” So, the move to ‘Buy Pinoy’ is a market-based solution to smuggling.

Other things being equal, economists like me focus on market-based solutions except that many times economists like me interpret the market-based solution to mean that they don’t necessarily believe in buying local because they don’t necessarily believe that buying local is always in the best interest of the nation. The argument given in Orthodox Economics is that other things being equal, there are instances when it will cost a huge amount of money and create inefficiencies to merely buy local.

But as has been said on this platform earlier other things are not equal when there is smuggling.

And so, therefore, we support the campaign to buy local. (applause) And to support your campaign, I hereby instruct Secretary Ermita — your brother in Malacañang — to reissue our Executive Order regarding the Government’s Preferential Procurement of Materials and Supplies Produced, Made and Manufactured in the Philippines. (applause)

The challenge here is to reconcile the legitimate interests of our local businessmen, on the one hand, with the obligation to make available the best goods and services for our taxpayers at the lowest cost from a truly open and competitive market. But given the track record of FPI in supporting our initiatives for a better life for our people, there is enough good faith and goodwill in FPI for us to master that challenge together.

We share the challenge of fighting smuggling. The leaders of FPI here on stage and I also share a governance style based on faith and hard work. I have made tough and politically unpopular decisions to raise revenues and crack down on smugglers so that we could invest in our infrastructure and our people. There is no room in the development of our country to tolerate smuggling and the corruption that goes with it when so much remains to be done to invest in the nation.

We have a lot of room to increase our tax and customs collections through strengthening investments in technology and innovation, bolstering our compliance and anti-corruption efforts, and regulatory and legislative reforms we will deliver on the necessary revenue to balance the budget and make the vital investments that have been neglected for a generation. We count on FPI to help implement new innovations and also to evaluate the use of sophisticated technologies that will allow us to increase collections.

We will soon have watchdog bodies for the Bureau of Customs, as mentioned by Jess. I note a recent report that the PORTALS program linking customs with industry sectors is getting ready for start-up. We expect the FPI to be part of the PORTALS. (applause)

I guess some of you might have noticed that I was on the phone and on the text while I was still seated, that's because I called up Customs, and you know earlier when we were in Customs there was a name that keep frequently coming up among the importers, about three cases, successive, that with the reports from industry or with our spot checks they came out and now charges are being filed against them. In fact, charges had been filed against them and new charges are being filed against them. So I said, the problem is how did they get accredited to begin with. So, I asked Jess Arranza earlier, "Remember the last time I spoke before the FPI, I said I want you to be part of the Accreditation Committee." So he said, it hasn't been done yet, that's why I called up Boy Morales. So he said, "Please tell them it's going to be done. FPI will be part of the new Accreditation Committee." (applause) You see Boy reorganized the Accreditation Committee, because precisely as I said, how come this guy gets caught three times in a row. How did he get accredited in the first place? So, Boy had to reorganize the Accreditation Committee and in this reorganized Accreditation Committee you will be there.

I have put a lot of pressure on our Customs Bureau. You've seen part of it on TV, a lot of it is also behind closed doors and executive sessions. But I have also taken an interest in making sure that this area gets the support it needs for me to deliver positive results.

But the principle of "No buyers, No sellers" — if there are no buyers, there will be no sellers — applies not only to smuggled goods. It also applies to the anti-corruption program. So, I ask the FPI to make sure that the private sector does not seek "slight favors" from your working friends in the Customs. That should be one of the responsibilities of FPI — that kind of culture in the business community

From the day I took office, we have been focused not only on protecting our industries from the unfair competition of smuggling but also on modernizing every aspect of the underpinnings of global competitiveness, so that you will be at par even with the fair competition. And we have in last year's State of the Nation Address... no, two years ago in 2006, I enumerated the strategic areas where we are working, investing in a comprehensive program on competitiveness including:

1. Making food affordable to keep our labor cost globally competitive. And I'm glad, as was mentioned earlier — was it Ito who said? — that the labor sector has been very cooperative with us. And it is only right that we make sure that their food remains affordable;
2. Reducing the cost of electricity to make our factories regionally competitive;
3. Modernizing infrastructure to efficiently transport goods and people;
4. Mobilizing and upgrading knowledge and technologies for productivity; and Reducing red tape — and the ultimate red tape is corruption — reducing red tape in all agencies to cut business costs.

Let me say a little bit about each of these five. On food, we have been working on agricultural modernization, from the development of new hybrids — which we have been working with the IRRI, for instance. I just came from there today — to see how their new innovations can be rolled out. To unprecedented investments in irrigation — 1.4 million hectares, never seen before in history. And to dramatic increases in loans, four-fold as a matter of fact, to help our farmers purchase better equipment.

But as Ito mentioned, there are global clouds on the horizon that are driving up the price of oil and food, particularly rice. And again as Ito mentioned, thankfully, we are now in a vastly improved position to weather this storm than at any other time in recent memory.

I've seen this coming for some time now — certainly before the world took notice. That is why we were reaching out to Thailand and Vietnam for rice supply long before the headlines. So don't be alarmed by today's headlines, both Thailand and Vietnam and other neighbors elsewhere, have already concluded contracts with us of 1.2 million metric tons enough to cover the 10 percent differential between our production and our consumption. (applause)

If we're to go into the market again it's for buffer stocks so that's why it's a "take it or leave it" situation as far as NFA is concerned. In other words, we can take it or we can leave it, depending on how the prices are. We are managing the issue the best way possible through our three-step program to contain price and prevent a crisis. FAO named 36 countries in a rice crisis. Certainly, the Philippines is not one of them. FAO has said that too. One of the three phases is to ensure supply, which as I just mentioned earlier, we have essentially done for the foreseeable future. Two, guarantee distribution, particularly to those most in need, and we are doing that through our own distribution to schools when classes start, as well as through the church and religious network. Third, we are ensuring enforcement of consumer protection by a fierce effort to crack-down on rice bandits especially those who divert NFA rice and tag it as commercial rice so they can get a higher price for it.

On the second area of competitiveness – electricity. I have been wondering aloud why power costs in Luzon, in the Luzon Urban Beltway, where many of you operate, should be so high when Luzon is reliant on imported oil for only one percent of its power.

And therefore we know there is room for improvement in the rates. I have instructed NAPOCOR to charge Meralco only P4.11 per kilowatt hour, the same rate it charges Luzon Electric Cooperatives, instead of the 6 to 10 pesos at which Meralco has been buying from NAPOCOR and from WESM at peak hours.

Last night, at a meeting after midnight — one of the very few meetings we have after midnight because Ed and I usually sleep very early — but Ed was in the meeting and we are happy that when we were asking NAPOCOR to account for it, they did even better. The generation cost of high load factor PEZA Ecozone locators has been reduced to an average NPC billing rate to Meralco not of P4.11 but of P P3.52 per kilowatt hour. (applause)

There are a number of petitions I instructed to be filed before the Energy Regulatory Board:

- 1) Is to enjoin MERALCO from buying electricity from WESM at peak hours;
- 2) Is to ensure preferential treatment for poor households and power-intensive industries in the distribution of Transco charges by Meralco;
- 3) Prohibit Meralco's system loss from being charged as a separate item. (applause) Remember these are petitions we don't know how ERC will finally judge and they're independent of us, so we can't dictate on them how they will judge;
- 4) To require Meralco to charge the same as VECO, CEBECO or Davao Light, whose distribution charges along with all the 140 utilities and cooperatives are all lower than Meralco. (applause)

We spent last night, or maybe this dawn Ed Ermita and I and a couple of officials who are involved in the petition, where the papers are, what are the missing links, how can they fast track. To make a long story short the ERC will hear these petitions on Tuesday, May 6. (applause) Yes, Jess Arranza said you will be there. Please be there with all your legal luminaries because this is going to be a tough legal fight. And you will be the beneficiaries, your workers will be the beneficiaries, your consumers will be the beneficiaries, the Filipino people will be the beneficiaries, but you are the ones with the means and the articulateness to be able to make a good case before the ERC. (applause)

In the other branch of government, Congress is in the process of amending the Electric Power Industry Reform Act to remove the requirement of 70 percent power privatization for open access because open access will give industrial consumers like you... we allow industrial consumers like you to enjoy the power of choice which will also mitigate the cost of electricity.

On the third item, infrastructure. This year, investment, public investment will be about 200 billion pesos from the national government, the government corporations and the local government for among other things 9,000 kilometers of roads together with other investments in education, healthcare and training along with new bridges and ports to upgrade our competitiveness among others.

Investing in the vital infrastructure also includes building up our environment as a reflection to our commitment to the quality of life. People need to breathe clean air and swim in clean water while also building manufacturing and bridges to span our waters.

Speaking of clean water. Last Earth Day, we celebrated the environment and the theme of the DENR was "Clean Water." We had a Cabinet meeting on that day, Tuesday is a Cabinet day. And Secretary Ermita gave us his program on the requirements for clean water. One of the most important waters we have to clean is the Pasig River. And one of the most important reasons for why the Pasig River is not clean is that we have only a five percent coverage, sewerage coverage in Metro Manila. Now sewerage is the responsibility of the two concessionaires so I guess if we want to really be competitive, FPI should also help us to be very persuasive with the two water concessionaires to fast track their sewerage system for which they are charging us after all.

Boosting spending on infrastructure, we are also building a firewall against any global economic volatility and we are creating a springboard for further growth to ensure we are able to sustain our economic momentum.

On knowledge, as part of the billions we are spending in education and training, we are investing three billion pesos in Science and Engineering Research and Technology Development, including scholarships for masters and doctoral degrees in Engineering in seven universities. Upgrade know-how and learning, and Filipino talent is unbeatable.

Speaking of learning and training, I'm glad to hear about the interface between FPI and TESDA, in order to tap TESDA's resources in education and training to improve the skills and capabilities of workers employed by FPI members.

On red tape. Earlier this year, I instructed the Anti-Red Tape Task Force headed by Trade and Industry Secretary Peter Favila, who can't join us today because after our dawn meeting he had to go to Indonesia to Bali for the Asean Economic Minister's Meeting. But he heads the Anti-Red Tape Task Force. I tasked him and I tasked the Procurement Transparency Group of Secretary Nonoy Andaya to link up with the business sector, the academe and the church to draft reforms in government systems.

Through constant consultations with your leaders, and with all of you whenever we can, the Cabinet where Ed is the primus inter pares and I will continue to seek ways to improve... to help improve industry efficiency. On your part, I encourage local industries to find, defend and expand your competitive niches.

We will continue to support "Buy Pinoy – Buy Local."

We will continue to partner with you against smuggling. That's why we have Bebot Villar signing the MOA with FPI. And I'd like to thank Mrs. Arranza because Jess says you're the one who tells your husband always to be supportive of me. No wonder you are there whenever we need you.

We will be there when you need us.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech During the General Assembly and Induction of Officers of the Federation of Philippine Industries and Launching of the FPI-FFCCCII Advocacy "Buy Pinoy-Buy Local". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121912/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1420&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Oas Town Fiesta celebration [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa selebrasyon ng Oas Town Fiesta

[Ipinahayag sa Oas, Albay, ika 6 ng Mayo, 2008]

Okay, Dios mabalos Nonoy Andaya, apo ng Oas.

Sa lahat ng ating mga panauhin, at mga hosts; mga narito sa entablado; mga mayor ng 1st and 2nd districts; sa inyong lahat; Dios marhay nga aga as in advanced happy fiesta sa indo gabos! (applause)

Ang dami pala nating taga-Oas dito pati si Nonoy Andaya, apo ng Oas. Kaya hindi masyadong mahirap yung mga iuutos ko mamaya. (applause)

Ako'y nasisiyahan, thank you, Mayor Ricarte for inviting me sa inyong fiesta. At ako naman ay gustong-gusto kong pumunta rito dahil ang Oas ay malapit sa puso ng aking tatay, si President Diosdado Macapagal. (applause) Gaya nga ng sabi ni mayor, ang unang pangulo na nagpunta dito ay si Diosdado Macapagal dahil siya ay isang malapit na malapit na kaalyado ng dati ninyong Mayor, si Mayor Jose "Peping" Ricarte, ang tatay ni mayor ngayon. (applause)

At ako ay nagpapasalamat kay Mayor na kinilala niya na tinulungan kayo ng aking tatay upang masimulan yung Oas-Mabayawan-Cagmanaba Road. (applause) At ako ay nasisiyahan na narito, pinili ko pumunta rito ngayon kasi kahapon ang wedding anniversary ng aking tatay, so parang selebrasyon na rin ng kanyang wedding anniversary. (applause)

At ngayon, bilang regalo sa kanyang nasa langit na, at sa panungkulan ng mga anak ng magkaibigang Macapagal at Ricarte, aayusin natin yung kalsadang tinayo ng ating mga ama. (applause) Kaya salamat na lamang at taga-rito pala sa lolo si Nonoy Andaya, kasi magpapa-release tayo kay Nonoy — sa DA, sa DAR, sa DPWH (applause) at sa PDAF ni Congressman Reno Lim, yung pondong kailangan para ayusin yung kalsada doon sa Coastal Barangay na kailangan sa pag-ayos nong kalsadang yun.

At gusto natin ayusin talaga yun kasi importante sa produksiyon ng palay at bigas ang farm- to-market road. At gusto kong batiin ang Oas hindi lamang sa inyong fiesta kundi na rin dahil napakahalaga ang Oas sa produksiyong ng pagkain ng lalawigan. (applause) Sabi ni Joey Salceda governor, na ang Oas ang pinakamalapad na lupain sa probinsiya, pinakamalapad na may surplus na bigas sa buong lalawigan. (applause) Kasi sabi ni Joey, hindi kagaya ng Camarines Sur na nag-eexport ng bigas sa ibang probinsiya, ang Albay ay nagiimport. Pero ang Oas ay nakakatulong dahil ang Oas ay nag-eexport sa ibang bayan ng lalawigan ng Albay. (applause) Kaya nagagalak akong marinig na kayo ang may pinakamalaking surplus sa bigas sa taong ito – umabot sa 75 metric tons ang inyong produksyon itong taong ito. Congratulations sa mga magsasaka ng Oas! (applause)

Malaki ang naitutulong ng inyong sobrang palay hindi lamang sa Albay kundi na rin sa buong bansa. Lalong nagiging importante ang pagpalago ng ani ngayon because there are global clouds on the horizon that are driving up the price of oil and food, particularly rice. Thankfully, we are now in a vastly improved position to weather this storm than at anytime in recent memory.

Tungkol sa isyu ng pagmaneho ng bigas, ito ay problemang pangmundo na nakita na natin matagal na, kaya matagal ng trinatrabaho natin na makaraos pagdating nitong panahong ito. Yung sagot natin sa pangmundong pagkukulang ay para sumagot sa tatlong saligang pangangailangan.

Number one, siguraduhin ang supply. Kaya matagal na tayong nakipag-usap at nakipagsarahan ng kontrata, hindi ba Secretary Artie Yap? Sa Thailand, sa Vietnam, sa Pakistan, sa Amerika, matagal na bago dumating, bago pa tumama yung shortage. At tayo ay namuhunan ng mabigat sa mga production efficiency at saka sa bagong mga binhi.

Para sa Oas, nagpatayo ng dalawang dam, rubber dam — ang halaga ay P250 milyon. (applause) Ito ang ginagamit na patubig ng mga palayan.

Sa Barangay Mayao, may taga-barangay Mayao ba dito? Sa Barangay Busac, kayo ang pinagmulan ng tubig para sa irrigation. Maraming salamat sa inyo. At hindi lamang kayo nagpapatubig sa Mayao, sa Busac, pati na rin sa Saban, pati na rin sa Gumabao, pati na rin sa Manga at pati na rin sa katabing bayan hanggang sa Libon ni Mayor Gonzales.

Yung isang dam naman ay nasa South Quinale. Ah! yun kayo nga yun. Pero narinig ko na yung dam na yun ay mas makakatulong pa kung maglagay pa tayo ng mas maraming irrigation canal. (applause) Kaya si Artie Yap na hindi kasama namin ni L-Ray Villafuerte at Reno Lim at ang anak ko si Dato kahapon doon sa Camarines, pinapunta ko ngayon, pinahabol ko ngayon para sabihin kay Artie na maglagay ng 50 milyon para sa irrigation canal. (applause) Eh, mabuti at si Nonoy Andaya ay taga-Oas kaya magre-release si Nonoy kay Artie Yap. (applause)

Second response, to make sure that the distribution of rice gets to the people who need it most — efficiently and cost-effectively. Kaya para maganap ito, we have moved to utilize distribution through churches, Father Jun, ewan ko kung nagsimula na yung bigasan sa parokya ninyo para ituro ninyo kung sino yung mahihirap at doon ibebenta. Pati na rin sa eskuwelahan pag simula na ang mga klase. Pati na rin yung sariling distribution network ng pamahalaan.

Kahapon doon sa Camarines Sur, sa Caramoan, sa Lahuy ay nagmudmod tayo ng family access cards sa mahihirap. Wala tayong family access card dito ngayon, ano? Walang family access card dito ngayon? Okay, ano'ng ibig sabihin sa mga family access card? Doon mga lugar kung saan nagbibigay na, ibig sabihin non, na-identify na yung mga mahihirap. At sila, yung mga may family access card, yun ang puwedeng bumili ng NFA rice na P18.25. Kasi, yung iba, yung hindi gaanong mahihirap, puwedeng bumili ng commercial rice lalo na ngayon at bumababa na ang presyo ng commercial rice.

Pangatlo, kailangan magmatyag tayo para yung mga unscrupulous traders ay hindi magsamantala sa sitwasyon. Sinisigurado natin na kung sinuman ang mahuling nagnanakaw ng NFA rice sa taong bayan ay paparusahan at kasama dito yung mga opisyal ng NFA na nahuling nakipagsabwatan sa mga unscrupulous traders. (applause)

Mamaya sa miting ng mga Obispo, AFP, PNP at mga gobernador at mga regional director, magrereport si Artie Yap tungkol sa kung ano na ang nagawa don sa mga nahuli dito sa Albay na nakipagsabwatan sa unscrupulous traders.

Ngayon ang Bicol, nong ako ay unang umupo, second poorest region sa buong bansa. Ngayon, hindi na, number four – number four nag-graduate na. (applause)

Kasi gaya ng sabi ni Joey, gaya ng sabi ni Reno, gaya ng sabi ni Mayor ay nagbuhos tayo dito ng maraming serbisyo na bahagi ng ating 10-point program, kasama doon yung ating SEA-K. (applause) Okay, para dumami ang mga maliliit na entrepreneur dito sa Oas at saka sa Albay, congratulations sa inyo. (applause)

At bahagi rin sa ating programa, magkaroon ng tubig sa bawat bayan, at kuryente sa bawat barangay. At binabati ko ang Oas dahil lahat ng inyong barangay ay meron ng kuryente. (applause) At tungkol sa tubig naman, very recently nagrelease tayo ng P5 million para sa tubig dito sa Oas. (applause)

Gusto natin pabilisin ang kaunlaran, hindi lamang ng Oas kung hindi ng probinsiya, hindi lamang sa pamamagitan ng palay, o hindi lamang sa pamamagitan ng SEA-K, tubig at kuryente kundi na rin sa pag-unlad ng turismo dahil ang Bicol ay bahagi ng Central Philippines kung saan 55% ng mga turista sa ating bansa ay pumupunta sa Central Philippines. Kaya ipromote natin ang turismo ng Albay. After all, ano ba ang original tourism attraction ng Bicol?

Walang iba kung hindi ang Mayon Volcano. Wala pa man nga yung Camarines Water Complex, wala pa man yung Donsol, wala pa man yung Caramoan, nandoon na yung Mayon Volcano.

Kaya Joey, magkampanya naman tayo para iboto yung Mayon Volcano as one of the world's new seven wonders. (applause) Dapat lahat ng mga taga-Albay, lahat ng mga taga-Bicol ay bomoto www.new7wonders.com para sa Mayon Volcano. Pero dahil kailangan bomoto kayo sa pito, huwag niyong kalilimutan, bomoto rin kayo sa Tubattaha Reef, sa Chocolate Hills, at saka sa Puerto Princesa Underground River.

Sa pagpa-unlad ng turismo, ang papel ng pamahalaan ay access – kalsada at paliparan. Ang kabutihan ng Mayon Volcano ay malapit na nga sa airport, maganda ang kalsada at nasa Maharlika Highway. Pero dito sa Bicol, kung gusto natin dumiretso na ang mga turista dito mula sa ibang bansa, kailangan ng international airport. Pero hindi naman puwedeng bawat probinsiya, may sariling international airport, kasi hindi naman magkakasya yung mga eroplano, hindi naman pupunta dito kung maliliit lang ang pasahero, dapat marami. Kaya pinagkasunduan ng mga gobernador na yung international airport ng Bicol ay ilalagay sa Daraga dito sa Albay. (applause)

Tamang-tama kasi yung Cagsawa ruins hindi ba nasa Daraga? Ang status ngayon, tinanong ko kay Secretary Lary Mendoza kagabi, binibili na yung lupa para sa ganon, kasi kung international airport, malaki yun kaya binibili na yung lupa. Kaya importante na masimulan natin ang international airport at maayos parati ang Maharlika Road.

Alam niyo kahapon, yung Maharlika highway, at saka may Quirino Highway, tapos naging Maharlika Highway sa Bicol, Kahapon pinuntahan natin yung Andaya highway na dating bahagi ng Quirino Highway, tinutukso naming si Congressman Reno Lim na dapat yung bahagi ng Maharlika Highway na dumadaan sa distrito ninyo, ay tawagin naman, imbis na Quirino highway, kay Reno highway. (laughter/applause)

Pero yan ang ating mga vision sa Albay, yumaman sa turismo and our vision is based on a strong and growing economy. It's the central pillar we have labored to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country.

At yung inyong pag-angat, mula sa second poorest region at naging fourth na lamang, kasama na rin yun sa naabutan natin – ang pinakamalakas na ekonomiya sa loob ng tatlumpong taon. Kaya tuloy tayong magtulungan kagaya yung panahon ng tatay ko, ayun o, may litrato yung tatay ko at saka yung tatay ni Mayor Greg, ayun. (applause) Kagaya nong panahon niya, sa panahon natin muli ngayon, magtulungan tayo para yung mga programang binanggit natin at yung programang iba pa, meron tayong mga grocery packs para sa mahihirap, meron tayong gamot na kalahating presyo na ibebenta sa mga botika, lahat itong mga programang ito ay magdadala ng higit pang pagpalakas ng ating kaunlaran, sa Oas, sa Albay, sa Bicol, sa buong bansang Pilipinas.

Dios mabalos, happy fiesta sa indo gabos.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Oas Town Fiesta Celebration. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121851/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1418&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Luncheon with Soroptimist International of the Philippines Region
Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Luncheon with Soroptimist International of the Philippines Region

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, May 9, 2008]

Thank you very much Celia.

That was Celia, right? Yes. I didn't see you but I could recognize your voice. (laughter)

Miss Wells, president of Soroptimist. Congratulations on your election as president!

Our Soroptimist members of the house. Ang kaakit-akit na mga Congresswomen ng Bulacan — (laughter/applause) Lorna and Neneng Nicolas; (applause) Governor Villarica, our beautiful head of Soroptimist in the Philippines; Commissioner Amelou Benetiz-Reyes; our awardees, very outstanding indeed; members of the Soroptimist from America and of course from the Philippines; to our friends from the United States, welcome to the Philippines! And to our Soroptimist friends and our awardees from the Philippines, welcome to Malacañang! (applause)

It's a pleasure for me to break bread with some of the most active advocates of women empowerment.

And as I learn about the Soroptimist, I learned that from a handful of determined Filipinas in 1966, Soroptimist International in the Philippines has grown to 2,000 with 88 clubs and making up two percent of the worldwide membership of Soroptimist. So, Congratulations! (applause)

You have been an important presence in Soroptimist International not just because of your large percentage of the membership, but you've also been a very important presence in our country. You've been working to improve the lot of the poorest and the most marginalized Filipinas in health, in environment, in education — as we have seen from our awardees — in human rights and in socio-economic development.

Because of your meaningful programs, I have learned that you are one of the few global women organizations consulted by UN bodies like the UN ECOSOC, the UNESCO and the ILO. Congratulations for that! (applause)

Speaking of the UN, the UN and in its Millennium Development Goals Report recognizes our country for gender parity. And if we have been successful in this and recognized for this, I think one of the reasons is that our administration's programs hew very closely to your organizations programs. So we have been working together and in synergy. This common commitment has helped our nation become one of the leaders in gender parity.

For instance, in the World Economic Forum Gender Gap, we are ranked number six in the world among all countries and the only Asian among the top ten in the world in closing the gender gap. And we are the only Asian country and one of only six countries in the world to have closed the gender gap on both education and health. And if you look at who is outranking us in the top 6, it's New Zealand the the four Scandinavian countries, and then comes the Philippines.

So indeed it is a group that we should be very proud of as becoming a member, the top 6 in gender parity. (applause)

What puts us in the top 6? We are number one in gender parity, or in fact, gender equality in the world in terms of the literacy rate and enrollment in primary, secondary and tertiary education. In fact, more females enroll in schools than males and less females drop out. Our females have a slight edge over our males in both simple and functional literacy.

There is also a gender gap in scholastic achievement but in favor of girls. And the gap widens in favor of the girls as the children move up to higher grades in elementary school.

No wonder we end up leading the world on gender equality among managers and professional and technical workers.

The number of women in the labor force has increased as well because of the better education that the women are getting than the men.

Women dominate the civil service at the technical level.

We lead in gender parity among legislators and senior officials. Four out of 24 Senators are women and our two beautiful Soroptimist are two of the 54 of the 239 members of the House of Representatives. Five of 15 Supreme Court Justices are women. And our nation has entrusted its top leadership to a woman twice within 15 years. (applause)

What also makes us number 6 in the world is that on health, we are number one in gender parity on life expectancy. In fact, Filipinas live longer than Filipino men. (laughter)

And most recent demographic surveys indicate a decline in the maternal mortality ratio.

I mention all of these because I want to thank the Soroptimist for contributing to these manifestations of women's rights.

For example, because we have awarded one of your beneficiaries with regard to education. And because of the work that Soroptimist has done in education, you have helped close the gender gap in education. You have helped close the gender gap in health and helped reduce maternal mortality because you have a good health program in place and women's health is among your top concerns.

Thank you for the medical missions you regularly send to your adopted barangays. Thank you for what I understand is the success of your Breast Cancer Awareness program.

Well, one of our beneficiaries is also an example of... awardees is an example of your training activities. You have helped increase the labor force participation of women through your technical-vocational courses that the clubs offer to make unskilled women economically productive and able to enter the wage labor force.

And over and above that our third awardee, though not a beneficiary, is an example of what you have done to promote women's human rights not only by advocacy against women and child trafficking but also I know about Soroptimist role since I was Vice-President in promoting Women's Humans Rights through your assistance to the PNP's Woman and Child Protection Desk. (applause)

Indeed, we have a common vision. You as an NGO and we, as government. Our vision is based on a strong and growing economy. It's the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country. And it's paying off — we have the strongest economy in 30 years, the peso is strong, investments are up and we are close to balancing our budget.

Thank to the tax reforms that our two beautiful Soroptimist Congresswomen help to enact into law.

The results of our efforts come none too soon. As we all know, you are educated women. You all know that there are global clouds on the horizon that are driving up the price of oil and food, particularly rice.

A combination of factors in the whole world including spiralling petroleum costs; increased demand from countries like China and India; negative climatic conditions probably due to climate change; record low closing stocks therefore decreasing investment over the years in productive agriculture all over the world; encroaching urbanization all over the world and because of climate change and trying to mitigate the use of oil and gas which contribute to climate change; the diversion of agricultural land for bio-fuels to reduce climate change. All of these have all acted together in the world to drive up the price of all food especially rice.

The typical reaction is for exporting countries to husband their own stocks because prices are going up even in the exporting countries. Thailand and Vietnam are selling their rice at home higher now than we are selling our NFA rice in the Philippines. So they have to contain their own inflationary tendencies while importing countries make all efforts to buy their food not only for their normal requirement, but also to stock up and increase the national security stock, what we call the buffer stock. And even locally, traders, importers and even families also tended to 'stock up.' All of these lead to a shortage which has been further exacerbated all over the world by panic situations and hysteria created by the media and political opponents in various countries.

This year some destinations will not get to buy what they want. It will not be for lack of funds, but just the sheer unavailability of the rice. Traditional relationships are a key element as sellers are forced to choose between hordes of willing buyers with open wallets. So buyers who bought early are the only ones with rice. Only those who come to the party early leave with party favours. Thank goodness, the Philippines is one of them. (applause)

How did we become an early arrival in the party? Well, on the issue of rice management — this is a global problem that we have seen coming. And I thank the Secretary of Agriculture and the NFA for plugging this to me way before it really happened. So we have worked to head it off for some time now. Our response is based on three fundamental needs:

One, to ensure supply. So, we have reached out to Vietnam and Thailand long before the shortage hit. And we had invested heavily in production efficiencies and new strains like the hybrid rice which is now a household word in agriculture.

Two, to make sure distribution of rice gets to the people who need it most — efficiently and cost-effectively. To this end, we have moved to utilize distribution through the churches and faith organizations, and the schools when classes start in June, in addition to our own government distribution network.

Lastly, we must be vigilant that unscrupulous traders do not price gouge and exploit the situation. We are making sure that anyone caught robbing the people of rice is punished.

Well, we have American visitors here. The American statesman Adlai Stevenson once said, "that a man who is hungry is not a free man."

Hunger mitigation measures are important in a democracy if we really want to have freedom. And they consist of supply side and demand side measures.

On the supply side, as I said earlier, we must increase food production and enhance the efficiency of logistics and food delivery. Our agricultural modernization program — and again I thank Congress for funding this — has allowed us to increase our rice production by more than the population growth rate of 2.04 percent.

On the demand side, we are challenged to put more money in poor people's pockets. That's why your training program to enable women to have jobs is so important. We are challenged to promote good nutrition. We are challenged to promote birth spacing because even if our rice production is growing more than our population we have been importing rice since the Spanish times and we have not yet closed that gap in a sustainable manner. We are thankful, as I said earlier, that your training programs help put more money in poor people's pockets.

And as you continue to help our women find their true strength in health, in the environment, in education, in human rights and in economic and social development, I hope that in this trying times for the world, the Soroptimist will also take up the challenge of promoting good nutrition and birth spacing. The ultimate winners of the combined program of your health program combined with nutrition and birth spacing will be the Filipino people and the Filipino women.

And so therefore in congratulating the Soroptimist on the occasion of your convention and the turnover of Linabelle to her successor. Together let us work to assure that in this great democracy of the Philippines where women's rights have been quite well-promoted not only by government but by groups like yourself. Let us make sure that all women, children and men are fed and therefore free to live with dignity and liberty.

To all Soroptimist in the Philippines, Congratulations and more power to you! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the Luncheon with Soroptimist International of the Philippines Region. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121829/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1417&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Change of Command Ceremony of the Armed Forces of the Philippines

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Change of Command Ceremony of the Armed Forces of the Philippines

[Delivered at the GHQ Grandstand, Camp Aguinaldo, Quezon City, May 12, 2008]

Thank you Secretary Teodoro for your introduction.

Troop commander, please give ‘Tikas pahinga.’

General Esperon, former AFP Chief of Staff; General Yano, our new Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of the Philippines; (applause) members of the Cabinet; members of the Diplomatic Corps; Speaker Nograles and the members of the Legislature; Senator Enrile, both senator and former Secretary of National Defense; Senator Dick Gordon; Governors; Congressmen and women; Mayors; General Ibrado, the incoming Commanding General of the Philippine Army; (applause) Vice-Admiral Calungsad; Lt. General Cadungog; PNP Chief Avelino Razon; the Unified Commanders, almost all of whom are new in their commands; our new Vice-Chief of Staff and the Deputy Chief of Staff; ladies and gentlemen.

General Esperon, I speak for everyone in congratulating you and thanking you for a job superbly done! (applause)

General Yano, Congratulations and welcome to a job so tailor-fit for you! (applause)

Subok na natin ang kakayahan nila General Esperon at General Yano. We have known and worked with these two gentlemen for years. They are outstanding leaders in the finest tradition of our Armed Forces. The men and women of the AFP are doubly fortunate to have been well-led by Jun Esperon and to have a man of Alex Yano’s character and talent leading them into the future.

General Esperon, your leadership has helped our country realize its key security objectives. You came to your job well-prepared. Hero of Rajamuda, rescuer of many of the Dos Palmas victims, one time outstanding alumnus of the Philippine Military Academy. Indeed, well-prepared for leadership. Your credentials, your legendary audacity and your extensive background in both staff and field positions. And may I say, showing all of these excellence in performance at a time especially when as a widower for many years, you had to be what we all women try to be — a supermom. You had to try to be a superpop (laughter) because you had to raise very young children at a time exactly when your career was taking off, and that challenge in your private life I think contributed to the excellence of your work in public life. (applause) All of these challenges in private and public life prepared you for the challenges you faced in the transition of the AFP into a solid and truly dependable Armed Forces.

The Communist as you have said, the Communist rebels, had been spending years as a low level threat and as you started your watch, I said, it is time for their destruction and violation of human rights to be put to rest so that the nation can move ahead. The Communist rebels had been impeding the progress and development of a number of rural areas. They are responsible for a wide range of human rights abuses. And so I said, during your watch that if we are to become a first world country, we have to put a stop to their ideological nonsense and their criminal acts once and for all by 2010.

And may I say, Jun, you have done well in leading the AFP’s charge towards this mission success. Congratulations! (applause)

We have heard it in the citation given to you for your award today. We have heard it in your own tour of duty summary that you gave today. Indeed, going by the results of 2007 and the first quarter of 2008 with so many an unprecedented number of guerilla fronts dismantled and many others downgraded we have every reason to be optimistic about Alex Yano's tour of duty.

All insurgency parameters are on the downtrend, from NPA numbers plummeting to a historic low to firearms now not many more than the rebels themselves.

You have done this because of many reforms you made. You revitalized the CMO. You organized the AFP National Development Support Command to pursue grassroots upliftment efforts across the country all in the interest of expanding the AFP solidarity with the people while at the same time dismantling the support networks of the enemies of peace.

You and I, and I am glad Alex Yano too, has said, that the frontline against terrorism begins with alleviating poverty, which is exactly what we are focused on. And in Mindanao, where you served for so much of your career, you have proved the value of our paradigm for peace through — and you used the term in your address — the use of both hard and soft power. What you have done there is quite unique, particularly against the backdrop of other trouble spots in the world where hard power alone has been struggling. With your leadership of the Armed Forces, we have been able to meld together confidence building measures grounded on strong interfaith dialogue and cultural awareness; investments in economic and basic infrastructure development; and mutual security arrangements to keep the peace in Mindanao.

Under your leadership, indeed, we have had success in fighting terrorism. Our country is vastly improved in terms of safety, security and economic growth, particularly in the southern part of the country. Your experience in Mindanao before you became CSAFP served you indeed well. Your daring exploits and your victories in Basilan especially have helped you make the right decisions about Mindanao.

You established the EASTMINCOM and the WESTMINCOM. You rationalized the forces and resources there, that is why over the last few years we have made important captures and eliminated key figures of the Abu Sayyaf and the JI terrorists who in fact you named in your own Valedictory address. Yes you have hit them hard and most important you have hit them with success. Congratulations! (applause)

Not only did you use your Commander's prowess, not only do you use your managerial capabilities of organization but also your care for the men that they should be well-equipped and well-cared for.

You worked tirelessly to have unprecedented amounts released for Armed Forces modernization, for AFP housing, and increased hazard pay and subsistence allowance.

And not only have I been so comfortable having you as commander in chief, I have full confidence in the men and women of our Armed Forces who are loyal to our Constitution and to our nation. (applause) The dismal failure of destabilization attempts underscore just how out of touch the plotters are with the mood of the nation. The nation wants peace, order and stability — not more political shenanigans.

Ninety nine percent of our military men and women are good, upstanding and loyal patriots, fighting to protect our country everyday. Where there are rogue members of the military — and indeed, General Esperon you used the word rogue members in your speech — where there are those involved in adventurism or in human rights violations, you have substantiated your commitment to let the wheel of military justice roll smoothly. You have shown that no one is above the law, even as you support and as you have repeated in your address, the support of the pardon of a number of Magdalo officers who have shown remorse and utmost potential for rehabilitation.

As my last act as Commander in Chief of CSAFP Jun Esperon before I stood up as we were sitting down while Alex was still beginning his job as the new CSAFP my last approval of General Esperon's recommendations is to approve his recommendation on the Magdalo soldiers. (applause)

And now we have General Yano. Indeed, in the term of Jun Esperon — the fight against the communist insurgents snowballed so much which is the reason why many of the officers in the field said, let's keep General Esperon at least for awhile so that this snowball can really be sustained, the momentum will not be stopped. And so, I extended the term of General Esperon for three months. I would have if I could extend it all the way for the three years that we're allowed to have a Chief of Staff but General Esperon himself said that it would be better to have a short extension, announced from the beginning of the extension the choice of his replacement so that there can be a smooth phase in, phase out so that even if in General Yano's time we are giving him a whole new slate of field commanders, the phase in and phase out has been so smooth and seamless that this snowball will turn into an avalanche by 2010. We hope. (applause)

General Yano says, he doesn't know the rhyme or reason behind his being chosen as AFP Chief of Staff. Well, there is one thing that we call meritocracy. General Yano you were highly recommended by the Defense and AFP top brass, and even by the Cabinet. And more importantly, you were clearly voted by the Team AFP itself in my discussions with many field officers owing to your reputation as a soldier's soldier, a no-nonsense combat leader, simple and frugal as you want the whole AFP to be during your tour of duty, and one with a heart. Now you know why you are AFP Chief of Staff. (applause)

You have had a glittering career, that's why I made you Army chief, to begin with. And before that, that's why I appointed you head of the Southern Luzon Command whose jurisdiction covers the government priority areas for counter-insurgency operations comprising CALABARZON, MIMARO and Bicol. And before that, you played a crucial role in curbing terrorism in Mindanao and a crucial role also in a peaceful solution to the Kabatangan standoff.

As chief of the AFP, you are expected to bring the AFP modernization to new heights. You are expected to bring the anti-insurgency campaign as I said, from its snowball to an avalanche towards the defeat of the rebels by 2010.

Under your leadership, as you have rightly foreseen as guardians of our security and a pillar of the rule of law, the AFP shall play a central role in countering forces hoping to exploit the global clouds in the horizon driving up the cost of oil and rice, to advance their agenda of violence and lawlessness.

Thank you for foreseeing that. Thank you for being prepared for that.

And as we have all celebrated today, you are the first Army Chief and the first AFP Chief to come from Mindanao. (applause) That's why the first speaker from the House of Representatives from Mindanao is here (applause) to wish you well and the entire, almost the entire officialdom of Mindanao, almost all the governors, congressmen, mayors of Zamboanga del Norte, the ARMM Governor are here. Buti na lang nandito si Congressman Celeste to represent Pangasinan to see off General Esperon. (applause)

We count on you therefore to help bring lasting peace to your native island of Mindanao.

Peace remains within reach in Mindanao. We have made huge progress across the board, as General Esperon said in his tour of duty report, in terms of stability, peace, order and goodwill. Yes, there are political dynamics and we are working to sort them out. But I can think of nothing more desirable for the people in Mindanao and our nation than peace during our administration. And hopefully peace during the tour of duty of the son of Mindanao as CSAFP. (applause) It would really be such a wasted moment if our Muslim brother did not take advantage of our dedication to this effort and conclude a peace deal in the next few years.

In all of these, in all of the important missions that you have to accomplish, General Yano, the national leadership is behind you, behind you and the Armed Forces in your important mission. We will support you with resources and political will, to provide you the wherewithal to do your job.

To keep our troops' morale high, a 10 percent increase in base pay is coming this year. (applause)

To complement the AFP's capability upgrade program and further improve counter-insurgency, as has been mentioned by General Esperon, one billion has been allocated to finance the Kalayaan Barangays Program.

As we improve the security of parts of the country that have known some degree of violence, we are able to develop quickly the economy of those areas. When we ensure that, we ensure a lasting peace and order that ensures that security is no longer an issue. Yes you have said in your speech General Yano, that you realized that development is primarily a function of the economic team but you also realize that you have enumerated the role of the AFP in contributing to development and to fighting poverty.

In other words, 'Magaling na Kasundaluan Laban sa Kahirapan.' I know that the AFP will rally behind the new Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces in its mission so crucial to bringing us to the first world in 20 years.

And so Alex, I congratulate you and I wish you well in your important role of leadership. And to Jun, I thank you from the bottom of my heart. If I extended your term by a few months, one of the reasons why I am happy to do that was that we were able to have your daughter get married in Malacañang Park where she spent many of her young years when you were my PSG Commander. This just shows how important family is and how important it is for us to be one family — the family of the Filipino people.

Have a well-deserved vacation, Jun. Hurry back to serve our people again.

Alex, congratulations!

Mabuhay kayong lahat. Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Change of Command Ceremony of the Armed Forces of the Philippines. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121804/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1412&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 29th National Conference of Employers by the Employers Confederation of the Philippines (ECOP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 29th National Conference of Employers by the Employers Confederation of the Philippines
(ECOP)

[Delivered at the Centennial Hall, Manila Hotel, City of Manila, May 15, 2008]

Thank you very much, Mike for your very kind and generous introduction.

Secretary Favila and the other members of government who are here today; Jun Ortiz-Luis, Donald Dee and the other top brass of ECOP; David Chua, the new generation representative who chairs this Conference; (applause) ladies and gentlemen.

Congratulations! for being devoted to striking a balance between employers' interest and workers' welfare. That is what ECOP is known for.

Since your birth in 1975, ECOP has been the voice of the business community on employment, industrial relations, labor and related social policies. Thank you for your special task and thank you for doing it so well. (applause)

Your theme this year, "The Empowered Workplace," recognizes that today in order to create an empowered workplace, management's role must change from a command-and-control mindset to a responsibility-oriented and supportive environment in which all employees have the opportunity to do their best.

I was just re-reading the book, "The World is Flat" because when I was reading the talking points and the introductory material for your theme, it's as if I was reading "The World is Flat." Although I read it three years ago, I re-read it again today. This is the bestselling book by the author and journalist Tom Friedman. He uses the terminology the world is flat, but the world he is describing is exactly the world that John Tan was describing earlier.

And I can see that ECOP's vision of the empowered workplace embraces the notion indeed that the world is flat. Friedman outlines the compelling and revolutionary change that has affected the world as a result of tectonic shifts in the post-cold war order. You know, when the Berlin Wall fell started the coming of age of China, Russia, the Eastern countries, Russia breaking up into not one empire but many equal nations. And also the changes that happened with the impact of technology. Our awardee for this year, Andrew Tan is really a personification of the recognition of the importance of technology because Andrew's shares, Andrew's stock has risen because he pioneered in being the landlord of all those BPOs and that is a representation of the new world that ECOP is describing. (applause)

ECOP's theme underscores the substantial elements that make up the new and thriving face of the Filipino employer in the flat world. In the world that is flat, office zones are designed by borderless business, and enterprise competitiveness is driven by labor creativity and technological innovation.

Yes, the world is flat! You don't have to have large starting capital to make it if you have creativity and innovation. And if you know how to bring out the best in those who work in your theme. Yes, the world is flat and the flatter it gets, the more it requires companies to adapt and innovate, to survive and thrive. And that is what the theme of ECOP is all about this year.

More and more companies are realizing that developing and supporting an empowered workplace results in a return on investment for all stakeholders in the enterprise, not just the workers but also the employers and the customers and the suppliers.

Employers, labor and government, make joint decisions because the world is flat. And our joint decision-making at the policy level is institutionalized by the Regional Tripartite Productivity and Wage Boards where ECOP is very active.

I would like to take this opportunity to ask you to join me in thanking the Wage Boards for doing overtime work last Labor Day. Thank you very much to all those who are in the Wage Board. (applause)

You know in the past and up to today, in order to promote domestic tourism — although we celebrate the national holiday on the day itself determined by law where all the ceremonies and all the commemorations are done — we usually move the day-off to the day, the closest day to the weekend, either Monday or Friday. But Labor requested that, “No, let us not make Labor Day the day-off Friday.” ‘Coz Labor Day was Thursday this year. They said, “Keep the Labor Day day-off Thursday not Friday.” So it was a no-work holiday for all on May 1, except for the Wage Boards. And because the Wage Boards have been working very hard, last night Secretary Marianito Roque — who is not here today because I will explain in a moment what other job he has to do today — last night Nitoy Roque reported to me that as a result of the discussions initiated on Labor Day, the NCR Wage Board has come to some agreement which will be refined further today in a meeting, ongoing, and that was why Nitoy Roque is attending to that. The agreement they have come to is 20 pesos added to the minimum wage in the sense what is... but the refinement to be determined today is whether it will be 15 minimum wage addition plus 5 percent... 5 pesos COLA or 20 minimum wage addition. Nitoy Roque will be coming I believe to join ECOP when their meeting is finished today and you will get the final decision of the Wage Board.

Last night, Nitoy also reported — and I thank the Region X for being here — that the Region X Wage Board has also finished its deliberations. Before the deliberations, the existing cost of living allowance in Region X was 26 pesos. The Regional Wage Board decided that of the 26 pesos, 16 pesos will now be part of the integrated minimum wage. And of the remaining 10 pesos COLA, there will be an additional 12 pesos. So, a 12-peso increase in the take-home pay of our workers.

So thank you to the Wage Boards who have finished your work, and we look forward to the Wage Boards in the other regions coming up with their work soon.

We have also been working for non-wage benefits. Yesterday, I understand Senator Angara and Congressman Manny Guinigundo were here in ECOP where you discussed the legislative agenda of ECOP. And earlier our speakers talked about the things that you have to be doing in the days to come on legislation, Jun Ortiz-Luis mentioned some of them being in the resolutions but let us also thank Congress, especially the House of Representatives for work already accomplished. Let us thank the House of Representatives for the swift passage of the tax exemption bill for minimum wage-earners.

This bill has been balanced with a measure on simplified income taxation. I hope that... I want to congratulate the House for a beautiful bill and we hope the Senate will soon pass its own version.

I understand from our Legislative Liaison Office that the Senate has a different version but also a very good version. So, we hope that whatever version will come out or whatever compromise will come out in the Bicameral Conference Committee will be something that will be good for employers and good for workers as well. So, this is what we wish to do in an empowered workplace.

It is especially important to empower the workplace at a time today, not just because the world is flat, but also there are clouds in the world that are driving up the price of oil and food, particularly rice. Thankfully, in large part because we have taken advantage of the blessings of a flat world including information technology, education using Business Process Outsourcing and knowledge outsourcing as among our drivers of growth. We are now in a vastly improve position to weather the global storm than at any time in recent memory.

Our response to the rice situation is based on three fundamental needs: One, to ensure supply; two, to make sure distribution of rice gets to the people who need it most efficiently and cost-effectively; and lastly, to be vigilant that unscrupulous traders do not price gouge and exploit the situation.

To help in our fundamental need, number one, which is to ensure supply. Last May 2nd, I signed an Executive Order — still to be released by Secretary Ermita — encouraging large corporations to provide for the rice requirements of their employees. But because the world is flat, we use the word ‘encourage,’ we do not use the word ‘require.’ The one that we gave an order to is not the corporation. We gave an order to the National Food Authority to encourage large corporations to provide for rice requirements of their employees either by engaging in the production of rice or by importing rice to meet their employees’ requirements.

I remember going to one of the top cement factories in Cebu — one of the model employers, in fact — and when I was telling them about rice, they said because Cebuanos eat kamote and corn, they will instead plant either kamote or corn in their available land. We encourage those large corporations with existing landholdings determined to be suitable for rice production, to indeed engage in rice production. Those without landholdings who decide to engage in rice production may lease public agricultural lands for the purpose or subject to mutual agreement with landowners whose lands are still idle to plant on those lands. Again subject to mutual agreement because the world is flat it must be because of common consensus and not anybody forcing anybody to do anything. Those corporations who decide to import rice may register with the NFA so that the importations can be coursed through the NFA and so that they may be eligible for fiscal privileges provided through the NFA.

Now these are for large corporations, meaning, 500 employees and above. But other corporations may enter into agreements or other forms of combination among themselves for the purpose of engaging in the production and/or importation of rice for employees.

This is an important non-wage benefit at this important time in our history. After all, the law provides for tax exemption for benefits up to 1,000 pesos worth per month.

Making food affordable to employees, indeed, brings about an empowered workplace. Because if they have the rice, they don’t have to worry about the most basic need of their families.

I would like to thank ECOP and congratulate you because ECOP has long realized the importance of developing and maintaining an empowered workplace. You have become a cornerstone of our country’s development. Prior to the flat world we wanted an empowered workplace because of social justice. But now that the world is flat, your message is clear — an empowered workplace is also good for business, good for the economy, and good for our country.

And therefore, in promoting an empowered workplace ECOP is a major partner in helping the Filipino nation take advantage of the flatness of the world and move into the first world in 20 years.

So to ECOP, I say, “Salamat, “flat-worlders.” Maraming salamat sa inyong ginagawa para sa kapakanan ng manggagawa at inyong mga negosyo.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s Speech during the 29th National Conference of Employers by the Employers Confederation of the Philippines (ECOP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121730/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1405&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 14th Quadrennial Conference of National Commissions for UNESCO of Asia and the Pacific Region

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 14th Quadrennial Conference of National Commissions for UNESCO of Asia and the Pacific Region

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, EDSA Shangri-la Hotel, Mandaluyong City, May 19, 2008]

Thank you very much, Acting Secretary Ebdalin for your introduction.

Ambassador Soliven, Secretary Lapus and the other officials of the Philippine Government, Mr. Sayyad, Dr. Tait, National Commissions from the member nation of the Asia and the Pacific Region, ladies and gentlemen.

First of all, welcome to our partners in Asia and the Pacific Region!

We're honored to host this conference of UNESCO of the National Commissions and the Director Generals Consultation on your new program and budget. It's a great opportunity to have you here and to be able to speak with you and to thank UNESCO for supporting our country's priority programs which dovetail with the mandates of UNESCO and the overarching objectives of UNESCO's Medium-Term Strategy for 2008 and 2013.

This is a very informative experience because, as Mr. Sayyad said, you have just recently approved the Medium-Term Strategy and it is important for us, the national officials, to be aware of your five overarching objectives and see how our own programs dovetail with UNESCO and where we can work together.

UNESCO's first medium-term overarching objective is attaining quality education for all and lifelong learning. And we are very proud that our own Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan for 2004 and 2010 gives high priority to education for all. In fact, we have used that term as one of the ten points of our administration's ten-point agenda.

We hear and heed the U.N.'s advice to expedite the implementation of the basic education sector reform agenda in order to achieve the U.N. Millennium Development Goal of universal primary education by 2015. Our education services to the poor have vastly improved though we have a long way to go. We're expanding early childhood education. We're paying cash to the poorest of the poor who send their children to school. We're providing food-for-school programs in food-poor areas in the elementary school. We're abolishing all fees collected in public primary schools.

And, as Ambassador Soliven has said earlier in her speech in support of UNESCO, we have issued an Executive Order establishing a center for Lifelong Learning for Sustainable Development of the Philippines. We are also proud to be in tune with UNESCO's second overarching objective in its Medium-Term Strategy which is mobilizing science knowledge and policy for sustainable development.

We are investing billions in Science and Technology Research and Development including scholarships for Masters and Doctoral degrees in Engineering. Sustainable development is one of our top priorities. We have begun the "Green Philippines Program", and I am glad we have some environmentalists here in our audience with us. Our Green Philippines plan is a blueprint for mapping our environment and economic policies that allow for sustainable development that doesn't fall on the backs of the poor or erode our environment.

In this regard, we thank UNESCO for re-nominating the expanded Tubbataha Reef Marine Park to the UNESCO World Heritage list and for encouraging the nomination of Mt. Apo Natural Park as the first site in Mindanao to be inscribed in the World Heritage list. We also thank UNESCO for facilitating the establishment of an efficient emergency communication infrastructure network and communication system for the Department of Health in Eastern Visayas in Central Philippines which is quite disaster-prone.

So, we thank UNESCO for helping us achieve UNESCO's second overarching objective.

The third overarching objective of UNESCO in the Medium-Term Strategy is addressing social and ethical challenges such as poverty, biotechnology, human rights. Our improved fiscal position is allowing us to invest in job creation, better healthcare and more educational opportunities. These are the keys to lifting the poor up. We have the support of UNESCO here and therefore we are optimistic.

We also count on UNESCO to help us work out the safe and responsible use of modern biotechnology and its products as one of several means to achieve and sustain food security, equitable access to health services, sustainable and safe environment, and industry development.

And on the issue of human rights, since the formation of a special commission to tackle our unfortunate history of political violence, extrajudicial killings are down and prosecutions are up. Of course, we will not be satisfied until we are at zero and we count on UNESCO's support for this.

The fourth overarching objective of the UNESCO Medium-Term Strategy is fostering cultural diversity, intercultural dialogue and a culture of peace. And so, we thank UNESCO for including the Jose Maceda Music Collection in the international memory of the World Register. This attests to the universal significance of preserving the traditional music of the Philippines which are very important part of our culture.

Our society is a multi-ethnic society and multi-cultural. It should be founded on social justice for all and the institutionalized accommodation of ethnic traditions.

So, we have adopted inter-faith dialogue as an official policy of our Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan. The role of inter-faith dialogue in restoring peace in Southern Philippines is an experience we would like to share with the world through UNESCO.

Finally, the fifth overarching objective of the strategy is building inclusive knowledge societies through information and communication. Our information structure is cost- competitive and we have a highly trainable English Proficient, I.T-enabled management and manpower. That is why we are a leader in the outsourcing space.

And even more than that, we are deeply committed to press freedom and its role in building inclusive societies. Well, I might not always like what the media writes about me, I respect their right to say it because we live in a vibrant and robust democracy.

As we improve security in the parts of the country that have known some degree of violence, with the support of UNESCO, we're able to move quickly to build inclusive societies and develop the economy of those areas. And as a neighbor and friend in an inclusive regional society, we all I'm sure share the anguish of the Chinese and the Burmese in their current moment of tragedy.

Together, we will rise above catastrophe with the support of UNESCO.

So, it is fitting that this conference highlights 'Strengthening Partnerships and Collaboration in Asia and the Pacific Region.' By working together, we can combine efforts and resources toward the mission of UNESCO to contribute to the building of peace, the eradication of poverty, sustainable development and inter-cultural dialogue through education, the sciences, culture, communication and information.

I understand that by next week, the UNESCO Secretariat will start to draft UNESCO's program and budget for the next biennium.

So, I wish all of you a fruitful and productive discussion as you plan the region's strategic programs to bring about a culture of peace and to deepen and develop mutual understanding, reconciliation and dialogue.

Once more, to all of you, welcome, mabuhay and thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the 14th Quadrennial Conference of National Commissions for UNESCO of Asia and the Pacific Region. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121719/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1402&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Region VI Local Peace and Security Assembly

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Region VI Local Peace and Security Assembly

[Delivered at the Planta Centro Bacolod, Mabini cor. Araneta Sts., May 22, 2008]

Thank you Secretary Gonzales for your introduction.

Other Cabinet members and national officials who are here with us today; ang atong host diri sa Bacolod City, Congressman Monico Puentevella and Mayor Bing Leonardia; and then although jurisdictionally Bacolod is not part of Negros but geographically it is, so we also consider as our host, Governor Zayco. Congratulations! (applause)

I'm also happy to see Governor Niel Tupas here, thank you very much for joining us; (applause) and I'm happy to see Mayor Jerry Treñas here aside from the other city mayors and municipal mayors all over the country; (applause) Congressman Jeffrey Ferrer, I have him listed here. He's coming. Okay, alright. Soon, okay.

So, sa inyo nga tanan, maayong aga and thank you for your resolutions. Many of your resolutions are very welcome — well, all are welcome — but many are especially welcome because they give us a good reminder of our Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan 2004-2010 where we have a whole chapter on the peace process. And in this Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan on the Peace Process, the peace process consists on the one hand, peacemaking and peacekeeping, and on the other hand, peace-building and conflict prevention.

Peacemaking and Peacekeeping include:

1. Continuation of peace talks and the conclusion, hopefully, of a peace agreement with the CPP-NPA-NDF which is why Nieves Confessor has just come from Netherlands with an informal no agenda discussion with the leaders of the NPA-NDF-CPP;
2. Complementary measures to reduce the level of violence arising from armed conflicts. And there are many examples of these but I think the most relevant is the LGU or civil society-led localized “peace talks” that is something that we encourage;
3. Full implementation of existing final peace agreements. And that is also very relevant to Western Visayas because there is an existing peace agreement with the RPA-RPM;
4. And this is very strong in your recommendation, the Implementation of an Enhanced Reintegration, Rehabilitation and Amnesty program. The enhance reintegration and rehabilitation is provided for now by Executive Order under what we call the Social Integration Program. And the Amnesty Proclamation has been done; we are awaiting the concurrence of Congress. But I think Congress has already concurred, right Monico? We're awaiting the concurrence of the Senate for this amnesty to take full place although even now we're already beginning to implement it at the Executive level.

The other aspect of the peace process – Peace-building and Conflict Prevention include:

1. Rehabilitation and development of conflict areas, and I have more to say about that here later, and
2. The conduct of healing and reconciliation programs in conflict-affected areas.

Because as we improve the security in parts of the country that have known some degree of violence, we should be able to move quickly to develop the economy of those areas. Because when we do that we ensure a lasting peace and order that will ensure that security will no longer be an issue.

And indeed, considering how important development is to former NPA- controlled areas, I want to thank again Mayor Montilla for her hospitality yesterday, because yesterday some friends and I went diving in Sipalay. And I couldn't help thinking Sipalay for one, more recently, it was named by the Women in Travel as the best-kept secret in tourism destinations. And I remember saying that in one of my speaking engagement here in Bacolod, but it's a secret no more. So many beautiful private vacation houses and commercial resorts are now located there. It's amazing especially when we remember that Sipalay is the S in the once dreaded CHICKS area, the area of the NPA stronghold. Now it is a popular tourism destination. It validates the thesis that when insurgency is defeated, it has been defeated in the CHICKS area that promotes growth.

One of your recommendations indeed recognizes that Western Visayas as a growth sector tourism. And you have asked for assistance for a Masterplan for tourism development, it dovetails with Mayor Montilla's number one recommendation which she gave me yesterday. She also would like to have a Master Development Plan for Sipalay Tourism. I think that is one very important resolution that we must follow through because Western Visayas is truly such a beautiful region.

And it highlights that the way to peace isn't through the barrel of a gun. Rather it begins with providing a person a job, food on the table and human dignity. And central to that success is to invest in the people — in education, healthcare, roads, bridges and schools — that is part of the resolutions made here and we are making those investments.

Now to go to that portion of the peace process about implementing peace agreements that are already there, and I said that is very unique here in Western Visayas because of the peace agreement with RPA. We want our peace agreement with the RPA to bring a new era of economic development to areas like — and I ask my new P.A., Mayor Baniyas, to take this all down — Barangays Caliling, Lumbia, Tomina, Sura, Talacdan and Tambad in Cauayan; Payauan and Agboy in Candoni; Bago, Bagong Silang and Pinowayan in Don Salvador Benedicto; Alegria, Amayco, Pandanon, Silos and Santa Cruz in Murcia; Guimbala-on in Silay; Ara-al and Yubo in Carlota; Amontay in Binalbagan; Baviera, Bulanon, Himoga-an Baybay, Himoga-an and Puey in Sagay; Laga-an and Villasin in Cadiz City; Magsaysay and Paitan in Escalante; Winaswasan in Calatrava; Cayhaga in Sipalay; Asia, Bulwangan, Daug and San Rafael in Hinoba-an; Magballo in Kabankalan; and Pinggot in Ilog, all in Negros.

In Aklan, Aparicio, Malindog and Monlaque in Ibajay, where I will visit this coming, I think... June 2, I'm going to Ibajay, and I hope to have a report on what we are doing in those barangays. In Iloilo, Governor Tupas' province, Isian Victoria, Cabutongan and Salngan in Leon; and Camia, Jawod and Santa Ana in San Joaquin. What are these areas? These are the RPA areas that are now the subject of our concluded peace talks and should be the subject of the implementation of bringing development in a post-conflict areas.

Coupled with this is our new paradigm for peace even in areas where we still have no peace talks or no peace agreement. At a time when hard power has not proven its value in the world, our model for dealing with flashpoints has focused on a unique combination of soft and hard power to promote peace. We have been able to meld together confidence-building measures, investments in economic and basic infrastructure development financed by the Kalayaan fund, and mutual security arrangements to keep the peace.

We are very happy on the other side of Negros of a post-conflict Rebel Returnee program in Seaton and when General Yano was still the PA Chief. We remember we discussed that about how to bring that same Seaton model here in Negros Occidental. Because when we were in Dumaguete a few weeks ago, we met with some recent rebel returnees and even with oldtime rebel returnees. Well, the one in Seaton is going quite well because they have a livelihood program with a ready market because the program was market-driven. It started with a demand and then the DTI brought the demand to the community of rebel returnees. We want to do the same thing here in Region VI. So my friend Nick Abad — I don't know if he is here — we'll be counting on him for that.

We have achieved a great deal. Well, not only in CHICKS, but Western Visayas is vastly improved in terms of security and economic growth. And I believe that one of the reasons for that is the current agreement with the RPM-RPA is making things better. And because our soldiers have been able to very well combine soft and hard power to defeat insurgency in many areas.

We are making headway in reducing poverty and building a bigger middle- class. Self-rated poverty is down, employment is up. Our education and healthcare services to the poor are vastly improved. That said, we have a long way to go.

And the results of our efforts comes none too soon because there are global clouds on the horizon that are driving up the price of oil and food, particularly rice. Thankfully, we are now in a vastly improved position to weather this storm than at any time in recent history.

As the recent global oil and food price surge has underscored, the Philippines is a price-sensitive nation. The poor who are doing well can be setback very quickly when these types of price problems arise. So we are very concerned about that.

On the issue of rice management, this is a global problem that we have seen coming. We have worked to head it off for some time now. Our response is based on three fundamental needs: One, to ensure supply. We reached out to Vietnam and Thailand long before the shortage hit. I was wanting to stay here in Negros longer but I have to go back today to Manila because the Prime Minister of Thailand is making an official visit and it's a good opportunity to thank him for selling us rice very, very early in the day. So that now, at least we have enough rice in our bodegas.

We have also invested heavily in production efficiencies and new strains. And here again, I saw in your recommendations that we have to strengthen also agriculture in Western Visayas, especially Iloilo is a rice granary not only for Western Visayas but also for the rest of the country. We used to be a rice granary for Luzon but now with the Roll-on/Roll-off ferry you're a rice granary for everywhere else. So, it is also very important to continue to strengthen agricultural productivity in rice granaries like Iloilo and also in Antique.

Second fundamental need, make sure the distribution of rice gets to the people who need it most efficiently and cost-effectively. To this end, we have moved to utilize distribution through churches and faith-based organizations, in addition to our own government distribution network.

Lastly, we must be vigilant that unscrupulous traders do not price gouge and exploit the situation. Anyone caught robbing the people of rice shall be punished. We have done this in Bicol. We are doing this in Northern Mindanao. I hope nobody is committing the crime in Western Visayas so that we don't have to do anything in Western Visayas.

Aside from rice management, in Western Visayas you have in addition a special problem. And that is the issue of fuel management, especially in Panay and to a lesser extent in Negros Occidental because it is affected by the situation in Panay. Panay has no indigenous source of power. Including what it imports from the rest of the Visayas, including Negros Island which should be going, I mean from Oriental it should be going all to Occidental, but it has to go to Panay as well. Panay has just enough electricity for its basic needs. No buffer supply. So that if there is any shutdown whether accidental or for maintenance, there will be a power shortage. And since Panay has to import from Negros Island, Negros Occidental is also affected. And therefore because Negros Occidental is already affected by the lack of an indigenous power source in Panay, there is no additional power for additional economic or population growth.

So, I see here about energy and I see here about... but at the same time protect the environment. Of course at the same time protect the environment, but let us be reasonable about believing whether the technology can protect the environment or not. Let us be reasonable about looking at the track record of the proponent in other countries whether they have protected the environment or not. Because if the opposition to new power plants prevails, and if investors are driven away from the Panay power sector, as they are being driven away, the people of Panay will indeed face a dark future. But let that not be said that we told you so this early.

Ug sa subong ang Panay may ara pa nga bag-o nga problema, ginapadanga nato ang atong pagkasubo tungod kay damo gid ka pamilya sa Iloilo, Governor, ang naapektuhan sang nagligad nga 'Cosme.' Mapadala ang gobyerno sang padayon pa nga bulig.

Tulad sa una, mabuylog ang mga sundalo sa pagluwas kag sa lain-lain nga disaster response activities. Makapadayon ang mga sundalo sa ila ginahimo sa mga hilimuon sa civic action kag sa kauswagan and the development activities. Magabulig sila sa rescue and rehabilitations sa panahon sang mga natural nga kalamidad, and also for longer term basic infrastructure development especially in the former conflict areas.

Apan padayon nga magin alerto ang mga pulis kag sundalo sa mga aktibidades sang mga dako nga grupo sang rebelde na padayon sila sang extortion kag pagpangita sang mga recruit.

The Communist rebels have spent years as a low-level threat. It is time for their disruption and violation of human rights to be put to rest so that the nation can move ahead. Look at Sipalay, how long it was a well-kept secret because the Communist rebels were impeding the progress and development of CHICKS, and that is true of a number of rural areas. And not only that, I'm glad when you talked about human rights here by state and non-state agents — I think the Armed Forces and the Police are doing their part to put their house in order — but let us not forget that the Communist rebels are responsible for a wide range of human rights abuses.

Thank you for putting in your preamble that we want to become a first world country at least in 20 years. If we are to become a first world country, we have to put a stop to their ideological nonsense and their criminal acts once and for all.

Some would ask why do we want to be a first world country in 20 years, because in a first world country poverty is marginalized; in a first world country the marginalized are raised by a robust middle-class. In a modern country, institutions are strong and all your issues of governance become very minimal. But now we are not yet first world we have to work doubly hard on good governance.

By 2010, we hope that the Philippines should be well on its way to achieving that vision. But for that to happen, by 2010 insurgency must be defeated.

Kalinong ang ginapakita naton tungod kay gusto naton ang kalinong kag kauswagan.

And so, I thank you for your very wise resolutions and action agenda. Secretary Bert Gonzales and his group will put this together with the results of the other Regional Peace and Security Assembly so that they can come up with a master work program that will be implemented and that the National Security Council will make sure will be implemented.

So my dear friends, mga kasimanwa, salamat gid sa very very active workshop that you had yesterday and I do hope that our success in peace and security will be something we can be proud of in the years to come.

Damo gid nga salamat sa inyo nga tanan. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's Speech during the Region VI Local Peace and Security Assembly. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121659/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1397&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Opening Program of the 16th ASEAN Farmers' Week Celebration and Joint Convention Rural-Based Organizations, May 22, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Opening Program of the 16th ASEAN Farmers' Week Celebration and Joint Convention Rural-Based Organizations

[Delivered at the Grand Caprice Convention Hall, Grand Caprice Hotel, Misamis Oriental, May 22, 2008]

To our delegations from the other ASEAN countries, welcome to the Philippines and to Mindanao.

Your presence here today affirms the commitment of the Philippines and not only as one country but as a member of ASEAN, to realize shared goals with our ASEAN brethren for the agricultural advancement of our region. And when I say our region, I don't only mean the region of Northern Mindanao. I mean the region of ASEAN, especially in agricultural training and extension. This is one of the thrusts of ASEAN.

And as our previous speakers have said, our meeting this week is timely because of the global clouds on the horizon that are driving up the price of oil and food, particularly rice which is a staple food in the ASEAN.

We are totally sensitive to the fact that a large segment of our population is price sensitive. We feel deeply for our poorest who, one minute, are doing well and moving up the ladder but then, almost overnight, are subjected to pain and setbacks as a result of high fuel and rice prices.

On the issue of rice management, this is not only a national problem, it is not only an ASEAN problem, it is a global problem that we have seen coming. In the Philippines, we have worked to head it off for some time now. Our response is based on three fundamental needs: one, to ensure supply. We have reached out to our ASEAN neighbors who happen to be among the big rice exporting countries long before the shortage hit. And we have as well invested heavily in rice production efficiencies in which agricultural training and extension is important and also in new strains, especially our hybrid.

Number two fundamental need, to make sure distribution of rice gets to the people who need it most efficiently and cost-effectively. To this end, we have moved to utilize distribution through churches, faith-based organizations and the schools, especially in our food-poor provinces. For instance, I saw a delegation from Shariff Kabunsuan, that is one of the provinces where we have — and tell me if it's not working — a food-for-school program where we distribute rice to the children when they go to school so that they can bring it home to their families. This is in addition to our own government distribution network.

Lastly, we must be vigilant so that unscrupulous traders do not price gouge and exploit the situation. We are making sure that anyone caught robbing the people of rice is punished, and in fact, Cagayan de Oro and Region X, Artie, were our first cases that was cracked by the Department of Agriculture.

From the day I took office, we have been focused on our economy and modernizing every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the Philippines. This includes agriculture from, as I said earlier, the development of new hybrids, to investments in irrigation, to dramatic increases in loans to help our farmers purchase the needed equipment, among other activities.

And lately, we have directed our government to crackdown on price gouging and increase the supply of rice where necessary. For instance, in provinces that are poor but don't produce their own rice, like Dinagat Island we have to supply them with additional rice.

In the case of Misamis Oriental, because you are a high-value crop producing province, your people have the income to buy the rice that comes from other provinces. But there are those who are very poor and still don't produce their own rice, so that is a very important target where we must make sure there is supply of rice.

Also, I have directed our officials since long ago to invest more in planting and agricultural modernization. And that is what Artie Yap was saying earlier, when he introduced me and finally provide rice subsidies for the poor. Our program that we call FIELDS — F for fertilizer; I for irrigation and infrastructure; E for equipment, education and extension; L for loans; D for dryers and post-harvest facilities; and S for seeds — is our summary of our agricultural modernization program. This has allowed us to increase our rice production by more than the population growth rate of 2.0 percent. What's our rice production this year, Artie? Five percent? 5.69 compared to our 2.0 percent growth rate in population. This is a result of our ongoing economic, including agricultural, reforms.

These efforts will ensure that we will be able to improve the livelihood of each and every Filipino in this country in the longer term, including the Filipinos represented in our Congress today.

We have yet to determine the long-term plan for the National Food Authority, but it would be a mistake to shift all of our attention to long-term policies at the expense of near-term efforts to stabilize the situation and put food on the table for our people.

For today, definitely, there is still a role for the National Food Authority. And because of their work and the hard work of our farmers, for now we have the supply issue well in hand. The price, of course, is another matter. But then, as I said clearly, this is a global phenomenon and this global phenomenon is a global wake up call that we must address both individually as a country and collectively as ASEAN.

We must realize that we must spend considerable time as we are doing today and in the months ahead not just resolving the situation in our individual countries, but dedicating ourselves to the regional and global discussions on what must be done for emerging nations such as ASEAN on the vital issue of food security.

We must work together to resolve this — work together in the country, work together in ASEAN. That's why we should all work with the International Rice Research Institute, which happens to be located in the Philippines, to explore ways of meeting the future needs for rice in the Philippines and that of other rice-producing countries in ASEAN.

These techniques range from ensuring that farmers are aware of and can use the latest techniques in crop establishment, to making sure that social safety nets are in place. We must work together in the Philippines and in ASEAN to improve agronomic practices, to enhance the ability to utilize rice varieties more effectively. It's not enough that we have hybrid rice seeds that have a specific way of planting and cultivating the hybrid rice. And also to promote rice breeding because many want to plant hybrid rice but where will they get it, so rice breeding is very important and, of course, the subject matter of ASEAN's very close coordination building training capacity. If we work together on these priorities, this will help prevent any global food crisis in the longer term.

And so because we are all together here to determine, indeed to work together, we remain bullish on our country. We remain bullish on our region, the ASEAN. We are optimistic about the future.

Let us all be deeply committed to being a force for good and a force for food security in the Philippines and the ASEAN.

To all of you thank you and welcome!

*Source: Adamson University Library

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the State Dinner in Honor of their Majesties King Mswati III and Queen Lankhambule of the Kingdom of Swaziland

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the State Dinner in Honor of their Majesties King Mswati III and Queen Lankhambule of the Kingdom of Swaziland

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, May 26, 2008]

His Majesty King Mswati III and Queen Lankhambule; Vice President De Castro; members of the Swaziland delegation; members of the Swazi Royal Family; Secretary and Mrs. Romulo; His Excellency Edward Joseph Adams, Dean of the Diplomatic Corps; Executive Secretary Ermita; Senator Angara; members of the Diplomatic Corps; members of the Cabinet, the Senate and the House of Representatives; other government officials and members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines; guests for the private and business sector; ladies and gentlemen.

We welcome His Majesty King Mswati III, the members of the Royal Family and our other distinguished guests from the Kingdom of Swaziland. We greet His Majesty a belated 40th Happy Birthday last month and Advance Congratulations on the forthcoming 40th anniversary of Swazi Independence. And we congratulate Swaziland that on the occasion of your 40th anniversary as an independent state you have just completed your constitutional reform.

His Majesty's visit signifies the strengthening of our two countries bilateral relations and helps bridge the gap between Asia and Africa. The global clouds in the horizon driving up the cost of fuel and food demonstrate the need for the various nations of the world to diversify their trading partners.

We welcome this state visit which demonstrates Swaziland's intent to draw our countries together.

We both labor to create a strong and growing economy in our respective countries to help guarantee peace, order and stability. And in our discussions today, His Majesty and I agreed to push our relations forward particularly in the fields of education and trade, and also in tourism which is the reason why we invited a number of members of the tourism industry tonight.

King Mswati has brought with him a remarkable business delegation. I hope that their meeting tomorrow with the Philippine Business Community would increase commercial interaction between our two countries. And I was happy to hear from His Majesty that he liked the world-class furniture that he saw during his visit to Cebu.

Indeed, this is a good opportunity for us to know the people of Swaziland more and for the leaders of Swaziland to get to know the Philippines more.

We are bullish on our two countries. We are optimistic about our future relations. We're deeply committed to developing our friendship.

On this note, may I invite you all to raise your glasses and offer a toast to the good health of His Majesty King Mswati III, to the prosperity and happiness of the people of Swaziland, and to the relationship between Swaziland and the Philippines.

Mabuhay! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the State Dinner in Honor of their Majesties King Mswati III and Queen Lankhambule of the Kingdom of Swaziland. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121638/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1391&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of PLDT's 2nd International Cable Landing Station of the Asia-America Gateway (AAG) Fiber Optic System

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the inauguration of PLDT's 2nd International Cable Landing Station of the Asia-America Gateway
(AAG) Fiber Optic System

[Delivered at Brgy. Baccuit, Bauang, La Union, May 27, 2008]

Thank you Ray for your introduction.

Chairman Manny Pangilinan and President Polly Nazareno, and all the officials of PLDT and all their partners, Congratulations! Governor Ortega, Congressman Ortega, Congressman Dumpit and the other officials of La Union, congratulations on the location of this important gateway here in your province.

I'd like to greet also Congresswoman Luna from Abra and Congressman Joseph Santiago, the chairman of the ICT Committee in the House of Representatives; Cabinet members; Ladies and Gentlemen.

Congratulations, first of all, to PLDT on your 80th Anniversary, 80 years of service to the Filipino people. (applause)

So this year is an auspicious moment to launch the Asian-American Gateway. As we have heard from the other speakers, your company's second International Cable Landing Station.

The first gateway facility of PLDT in Batangas was a watershed in the development of the country's telecoms infrastructure. But today it is exceeded by this new landing station, which as we have heard from the speakers earlier, links our country through over 20,000 kilometers of submarine fiber optic cable to our neighbors in Southeast Asia, Hong Kong as well as our Pacific partners, Hawaii and the continental U.S.

We thank PLDT and its partners for this over half a billion dollar cable system. And may I mention the list of partners they gave me: AT&T of the U.S., Bharti of India, CAT of Thailand, StarHub of Singapore, PT Telkom of Indonesia, Telstra of Australia, TM of Malaysia, VNPT of Vietnam, and the Government of Brunei. What a great international partnership!

And this award winning system will support, as we have heard, the rapidly growing telecommunications traffic between our country and the rest of the region as well as the U.S. It will provide us with a resiliency and redundancy of service that is not easily disrupted by natural disasters like the Taiwan earthquake of December 2006. I remember that earthquake, it was a very, very short disruption but our BPOs especially our call centers cannot even afford a few minutes of disruption. So they demanded for redundancy if our industry was to continue growing and I'm happy that PLDT has provided this redundancy. Thank you. (applause)

Now, the BPO and all the other IT companies can breathe easier.

This is what I was referring to in my last State of the Nation when I said and I quote: "So that no Taiwan tremor can cut off our cyber services from their global clients, PLDT and Globe are investing 47 billion pesos in new international broadband links through other regional hubs." And here it is. Congratulations! (applause)

The AAG International Cable System and Landing Station represent a big boost, as we have said, as Ray have said, to the continued growth of our ICT industries, especially offshoring and outsourcing which depend on reliable international broadband services.

Spending on transport, digital and human infrastructure remains central to the ability of our nation to break the historic cycle of despair and to meet the challenges of the future, and the future has landed. And we will continue to invest heavily in new spending. We thank PLDT and its partners for sparing the government the need to be the one to build this gateway.

When the private sector puts up an important infrastructure such as this gateway, it spares the government to be the one to put it up, we are better able to balance the budget which remains a very important priority. We have always said that a balanced budget was our goal by the time we leave office. That remains our target. We are well on our way to meeting that goal, thanks to private infrastructure investors like PLDT. Our surplus in April when PLDT paid its income tax more than doubled year-on-year due to higher tax collection. (applause) Our cumulative budget deficit from January to April fell to P25.8 billion. I'm confident we will be able to sustain progress on the budget front.

Thanks to private infrastructure spending like this international gateway, for the first time in a generation, our budget is under control; we are lowering our deficits and raising unprecedented amounts of revenue. Again, thanks to big taxpayers like PLDT. We do not want to and will not go back to the days of heavy deficit spending. Our commitment to economic reform has proven effective. We're both comfortable and confident that our discipline will allow us to continue on a balanced path of targeted investment and overall restraint. Balancing the budget as I said remains a very important priority that will not be abandoned. But we will do this while investing in much-needed infrastructure and social services.

With firms like PLDT taking on a large part of the burden of building vital infrastructure, there is no need for new taxes. We have plenty of room to increase revenues by enhancing tax administration. And tax administration can be enhanced because we have better internet services. This continues to be one of our main focus areas this year. That is also how we will address the short-term challenges we face in meeting our revenue-generating targets.

Rating agencies like Moody's which investors listen to, which raised our credit rating outlook to positive recently, have recognized our fiscal progress. We are determined to show that we are a government that delivers on its commitment, and one of our most important commitments is to have a friendly environment for business. We are confident that the Filipino people themselves, the masses, the ordinary citizens will acknowledge the sustainability of our reforms in the long-term.

Our Medium-Term Plan for the government and the private sector to invest in social and physical infrastructure includes billions of pesos in education, healthcare and training along with billions in new bridges, roads, ports and digital infrastructure to upgrade the competitiveness of the Philippines. This will in turn attract more investment and create more jobs, which at the end of the day is our goal to improve the lives of our people.

We thank PLDT for this redundancy because as I said when the tremor from Taiwan hit everybody said, you need redundancy. Now, the industry tells me, 'coz I told them, well, the PLDT is putting it up in Northern Luzon. They said, but now that the cybercorridor is all over the country, maybe we should have another redundancy in Southern Philippines. And I'm very glad that very readily the way Manny answered me the first time, when I said Manny we need a redundancy because of what happened in Taiwan. And Manny said we've already started working on it. Today, I said, Manny the BPO industry are asking for a redundancy in the South, and Manny said we are already working on it.

Thank you very much, Manny. (applause) Thank you PLDT. Thank you for giving us our future. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Inauguration of PLDT's 2nd International Cable Landing Station of the Asia-America Gateway (AAG) Fiber Optic System. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412124840/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1383&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Inauguration of the Sentrong Pamilihang Bayan, May 28, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Inauguration of the Sentrong Pamilihang Bayan

[Delivered at Brgy. Sampaloc 2, Sariaya, Quezon, May 28, 2008]

Talagang nagagalak akong magbisita sa inyong Sentrong Pamilihang Pambayan. Una sa lahat, dahil gaya ng sabi ko ay tatlong taon nang kinekwento ito sa akin ni Procy. At pangalawa, dahil ang dami-dami ninyong narito, ang ganda ng ating pagsasama-sama. At pangatlo, yung manager na kinuha ni Procy, ito ang dating nagkakampanya sa akin mula pa noong 1992, si Ariel Mañalac. Kasama siya ni Mely Jabola na aking PA ngayon dito sa Region IV.

So, Congratulations Procy sa inyong napakagandang proyekto. Ito ay isa na namang patunay na tagumpay na nakakamit natin pag nagtutulungan ang pamahalaan at saka ang ating mamamayan.

At bagamat ang Quezon ay bahagi ng CALABARZON ngayon ang parang pinakabungad o pinakasentro ng industriya ng ating bansa, importanteng-importante pa rin itong proyektong ito gawa ng napag-alaman ko, 70 percent pala ng taga-distrito ni Procy at lalo na yung ibang mga distrito mas malayo pa sa Maynila, ay ang hanapbuhay sa agrikultura.

So, itong Kalakalang Bayan bukod sa pagtatag nitong Kalakalang Bayan malaki ang naitulong ng pagsasama-sama ng pamahalaan at saka mamamayan sa paglatag ng mga makabuluhan at makamasang proyekto at pagkilos tulad ng mga pautang na walang interes pala, Procy? Tulong teknikal na tumulong din ang Department of Agriculture; yung libreng gamit nitong Kalakalang Bayan, hindi kayo nagbabayad; transportasyon kaya meron tayong itinulong na mga reefer van, di ba, Artie? para... ayun, naglo-load ngayon para kahit na nagbi-biyahe yung mga gulay ay parang nasa refrigerator, hindi mabubulok, mananatiling sariwa; at siyempre, tulong para sa pagbebenta para sa ating mga magsasaka. Dito sa Pamiling Bayan puwedeng dumiretso ang magsasaka, puwedeng dumiretso ang mga namimili sa ganun, hindi na kailangang dumaan sa mga trader o sa mga middlemen. Kaya congratulations sa inyong lahat! Congratulations kay Procy Alcala sa magandang ideyang ito.

Ako ay nasisiyahan na bahagi ng ating kontribusyon ay sa ibabaw nung mga reefer van, yung cold storage, iyan naman ay kontribusyon ng Department of Agriculture daan na ang ating Pamahalaang Pambansa. At kanina ako rin ay nasisiyahan na yung ating mga magsasaka ngayon, yung tumanggap ng mga dokumento para sa katiyakang panlupa ay hindi na mga tenant sa sariling lupa. Kayo na ang talagang may karapatan doon.

Kaisa ito sa mga proyektong isinusulong upang harapin ang hamon ng kahirapan at itaguyod ang kaunlaran ng bawat mamamayan. Kasi gusto natin na magkaroon ng isang malakas at lumalagong ekonomiya, pinagsisikapan natin itong ilikha upang tumulong na matiyak ang kapayapaan, katiwasayan at katatagan ng ating bansa. Ikinikuwento sa akin ni Procy na yung anak ni Ka Remo ay nasawi pala kasama ni Hector pero dito ngayon dahil lumalago, gumaganda ang buhay ng mga magsasaka ay hindi na gaano at humihina tuloy ang rebelyon, humihina ang NPA at mas lalo nagiging mapayapa ang lalawigan ng Quezon.

Kaya nagkakabunga ang ating mga pinagsisikapan. Ikini-kwento nung ating magnu-niyog kung papano tumaas ang presyo ng copra sa ilalim ng pitong taon, at ito rin ay bahagi ng kabuuan na ngayon pinakamalakas ang ating ekonomiya sa mahigit tatlumpung taon. Nakikita naman natin lumalakas ang piso, dumadagsa ang mga mamumuhunan at malapit na nating mabalanse ang ating budget.

Gumawa tayo ng mga mahihirap at hindi popular na desisyon na itaas ang koleksyon ng bansa para makagastos para sa mga magsasaka at iba pang mga mamamayan. Linalabanan natin ang mga smuggler para yung makokolekta natin ay magiging puhunan sa imprastraktura at sa ating taumbayan. Kaya kanina, yung pinakita sa atin ni Engineer Boner Seguit, yung ating mga kalsada bukod doon sa mga ikiniwento ni Governor Raffy Nantes sa atin ay may dalawang importanteng kalsada para mas lalong lumapit ang Sariaya sa Kamaynilaan.

Sa nakita ko dito, alam na alam ni Procy ang suliranin na hinaharap ng taga-distrito niya at kung ano ang inaasahan ng ating taumbayan mula sa ating mga namumuno. Gusto ng taumbayan ay nagdadala tayo ng mga pamumuhunan sa tatlong importanteng bagay ang tinatawag nating tatlong 'E' — ito ang ekonomiya, kaya ang ating mga magsasaka ay tinutulungan sa pamamagitan nitong Pamilihang Bayan at mga kasamang mga proyekto; yung environment, ito ay ipinakita sa akin ni Congressman Alcala yung kanyang proyektong organic fertilizer na mas maayos para sa environment kaysa doon sa urea fertilizer, kaya ito ay dapat ding tulungan ni Secretary Artie Yap; pinupuhunan din natin ang edukasyon. Kanina, bago kami dumaan dito ay dumaan muna sa isang eskwelahan doon sa Lucena dahil tiningnan natin yung bagong Science Laboratory ng ating mga bata. At pinanood ko yung microscope na nadeliver sa kanila, tinitignan nila yung mga ibat-ibang bahagi ng mga halaman. Eh, pag maganda ang pag-aaral nila sa botany, ay magiging magagaling na magsasaka o kaya mga technician o kaya mga engineer sa mga darating na panahon. Kaya itong mga ito ay nasa puso ng pag-ahon ng ating bansa at kanyang paghahanda sa susunod na henerasyon ng mga lider.

Ang pagbalik ng ating ekonomiya ay napapanahon, dahil may mga pangmundong ulap na nagpapataas ng presyo ng langis at pagkain. Kaya napakaimportante itong proyektong ito.

Batid natin na kahit na ano ang pag-ibayo sa ibabaw, marami sa ating taumbayan ay kumakayod pa rin nang matindi. Batid na batid natin na maraming mga nagsisikap na nagtatrabaho araw-araw para lamang makapaglagay ng pagkain sa inyong mga mesa.

Pero tumataba ang aking puso nung narinig natin yung mga kwento ng tagumpay nung ating tatlong mga nagsalita na nagsimula sa proyektong ito. Kaya congratulations sa inyo!

Kaya ang masasabi kong leksiyon sa ating pagdiriwang nitong araw na ito, magtulungan tayo para sa tagumpay ng ating mga programang mag-aalok ng higit na kalakal at pamumuhunan at para sa tagumpay ng iba pa nating mga pambansang adhikain. At sa pagkakaisa, makakamit natin na uunlad ang ating bansa, uunlad ang inyong distrito, inyong probinsiya, inyong pamayanan.

Nananatili akong malaki ang pag-asa ng ating bansa, malaki ang pag-asa sa ating kinabukasan at buong loob na maging pwersa sa ikabubuti.

Mahal natin lahat ang ating bayan. Mahal ninyo lahat ang inyong probinsiya, inyong distrito, inyong bayan. Talagang nakakataba ng loob na makakita ng mga kabalikat sa trabaho gaya ng mamamayan ng Sariaya at dito sa lalawigan ng Quezon.

Sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat. Mabuhay ang ating bansa! Mabuhay itong Pamilihang Bayan!

*Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching of the Tawi-Tawi Modified Mariculture Development Project, Sibutu-Sitangkai (Phase 1A and B)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the launching of the Tawi-Tawi Modified Mariculture Development Project, Sibutu-Sitangkai (Phase 1A and B)

[Delivered at the Sibutu Municipal Complex, Sibutu, Tawi-Tawi, May 29, 2008]

Maraming salamat Secretary, Artie Yap, na ang kanyang lola ba, lola?... great grandmother ay tiga-Sulu, Jolo, Sulu. Kaya apo ng Mindanao.

Maraming salamat Congressman Nur Jafaar dito sa napakagandang ideya ninyo para tumulong sa taumbayan ng Tawi-Tawi.

Maraming salamat Governor Sahali sa inyong pag-welcome at yung paliwanag naman ninyo tungkol sa isa pang napaka-importanteng proyekto, yung hatchery.

At gusto kong batiin ang mga opisyal ng Tawi-Tawi, mga opisyal ng Sibutu sa pangunguna ni Mayor Pajiji, mga opisyal ng Sitangkai sa pangunguna ni Mayor Ahaja, ang ating iba't-ibang Cabinet members ay narito pati na rin ang aking pamilya. At bagamat dahil nabanggit na yung iba hindi ko na sila babanggitin. Babanggitin ko lang na kasama rin natin ang kauna-unang Armed Forces Chief of Staff na nanggagaling sa Mindanao, si General Alex Yano. (applause)

Sa inyong lahat, Assalamu alaikum Tawi-Tawi!

Binabanggit kanina ni Congressman Jaafar yung aking State of the Nation Address noong isang taon, July 27 ba yun? 23. At doon sinabi ko and I quote: “Magtatayo tayo ng mariculture o palaisdaan sa dagat sa Sibutu. Hiling ito ni Nur Jaafar.” (applause)

And here we are launching that project, and we are happy that we are in the midst of the leaders of the community. And I bring you the greetings of the dignitaries from Muslim nations who are in Bongao who would have wanted to come to be here but they are waiting for us because we will launch yet another mega-project as Governor Sahali calls them. These are the countries supporting the peace process, they greet you and I greet the beneficiaries of this development project — the people of Sibutu and the people of Sitangkai. (applause)

This project I very heartily agreed to to put in the State of the Nation Address not only because it was proposed by our very important ally and leader Congressman Jaafar but also because this project is in line with our Super Regions plan, the creation of five major regions including Agri-business Mindanao to spread development away from an inequitable concentration in Metro Manila.

Gaya nang napaliwanag ni Congressman Jaafar, ang proyektong ito ay mahusay na paraan upang palakihin ang kinikita ng mga taga-rito habang inaalagaan ang mga lamang-dagat na mamanahin ng inyong mga anak at apo. Sa ibang salita — sustainable development. Hindi lang mga mangingisda ang makikinabang dito, kung hindi pati na ang mga nag-aani ng perlas at agar-agar o seaweed.

Malaki ang inaasahang kikitain ng proyektong ito. Ang mga isdang aalagaan dito ay matataas ang halaga sa bilihin tulad ng mameng. Ang mameng ang endangered species (applause) pero kung aalagaan sa fish cage hindi pa rin pwede sabi ng aking anak na environmentalist. Pero yung lapu-lapu pwede pa, yung abalone pwede pa. Okay. So isang payo dahil gusto natin na alagaan ang kinabukasan — lapu-lapu, abalone, perlas, agar-agar. (applause) Kaya sa palaisdaan lamang, kung makakabuo kayo ng limang daang kilo tuwing anihan, hindi malayong umabot sa sandaang milyon piso ang kikitain ng komunidad. Hindi pa kasama dito yung perlas at agar-agar.

Pinakikinabangan ng proyektong ito ang likas na kaalaman ng mga taga-rito tungkol sa pag-aalaga at lamang-dagat. Tinanong ko nga kay Congressman Jaafar kanina bakit ang tawag mo modified mariculture. Sabi niya kasi hindi lamang yung scientific knowledge galing sa ibang lugar kung hindi yung likas na kaalaman ng taga-rito kasama sa inyong teknolohiya. Kinu-combine ito at ang mga siyentipikong pamamaraan nagmumula sa pananaliksik ng Mindanao State University Tawi-Tawi College of Technology and Oceanography. (applause)

Napag-usapan natin itong Tawi-Tawi College of Technology and Oceanography. May nakita ako yatang tseke dito na two million pesos galing sa CHED. Ito ay para sa scholarship program ng inyong eskwelahan dito kasi gusto natin... Ewan ko kung ilan ang mga naka-enrol sa fisheries dito. Ilan ba? Gusto natin doblehin, (applause) gusto natin maging 2,000 ang mag-aaral dito kaya meron kayong scholarship fund dito na two million pesos para makatulong na maging 2,000 ang inyong enrollment. (applause)

The way to peace begins with providing a person a job — ito magbibigay ng trabaho sa inyo. Providing a person food on the table — ito magbibigay ng pagkain sa inyo and, therefore, human dignity. Central to that success is to invest in the people — in education kagaya ng ating scholarship, in healthcare, roads, bridges na ilo-launch natin mamamaya sa Bongao.

Spending on physical and human infrastructure network remains central to the ability of Tawi-Tawi to break out of what Congressman Jaafar described — the poverty, the historic cycle of despair, and to prepare and to meet the challenges of the future. So we have and will continue to invest heavily in new spending. (applause)

Later, it will be in Bongao, right Jess? Jess Dureza will update us on the development programs in Mindanao. Baka yun na ang magiging huling report ni Secretary Jess Dureza dahil aalis na siya bilang Office of the Adviser on the Peace Process. Siguro ang susunod na pagbisita ko dito sa Tawi-Tawi pag kasama ko si Jess Dureza, pupunta na siya dito hindi bilang OPAP kung hindi bilang Press Secretary na ng ating bansa. (applause)

Anyway, Jess has done a great job, as OPAP and as BIMP-EAGA head where Tawi-Tawi is very important. Through him we have worked closely with our allies on an amazing number of public works projects. I talked about the bridges and roads.

Later today, we will launch the 324 million-peso Tawi-Tawi Bridge-Road Partnership Project, which is funded by the USAID, the DPWH and the ARMM government. It is a long road in the Tawi-Tawi mainland with a bridge to connect the five towns of the mainland to Bongao. This is important because we need infrastructure in Tawi-Tawi if we are going to bring Tawi-Tawi out of poverty.

And we are happy that our allies are only too willing to help Muslim Mindanao. When we were coming to Bongao in the airplane, the Ambassador of Saudi Arabia, Ambassador Wali gave me a note. Saudi Arabia has a loan with us of 20 million dollars which we are already implementing. But he also said that Saudi Arabia is willing to loan another 80 million dollars for priority projects in Muslim Mindanao. (applause) But we need not new ideas but those we already have, those that already have feasibility studies, those already in the pipeline, those already in the GAA budget. And so I have instructed, for one, Secretary Arthur Yap to put the projects in the pipeline, submit it for Saudi funding including the four phases of the Mariculture project of Tawi- Tawi. (applause)

And then because we want to double the enrollment of students in the schools of agriculture and fisheries in Muslim Mindanao, I asked Commissioner Ricafort and Commissioner Omar also to present a full-blown feasibility study and proposal to the Saudi fund for doubling the enrollment in the schools of the Autonomous Region for agriculture and fisheries. (applause)

Investing in vital infrastructure also includes building up our environment as a reflection of our commitment to our quality of life. So, with regard to the road that's being built now or going to be built now in Bongao and in mainland Tawi-Tawi — although it will be implemented by the private sector — I count on Governor Sahali and the mayors of the towns directly benefiting from the Tawi-Tawi Bridge-Road Partnership Project to ensure that construction will be done with the least damage to the ecosystems of the project area.

Speaking of the environment, I am glad also that Congressman Jaafar mentioned the strategic location of Tawi-Tawi in the coral triangle. This is the largest almost contiguous collection of corals in the whole world. And the reason why I was asking my daughter Luli for her opinion on the mameng is that in the World Wildlife Fund she happens to be the policy officer of the coral triangle. (applause) So, please follow her advice on how to make mariculture here sustainable. In return, I will ask her to help you to also prepare project proposals for sustainable fisheries in the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao that we can submit to funding for the Saudi fund. (applause)

Later today also in Bongao, we will visit a Madrasah being spruced up for the opening of classes because before the students can enter the Tawi-Tawi College of Technology and Oceanography they must first be able to finish grade school and high school. So, we will inspect the desks and the chairs which are part of the one billion-peso national budget for school furniture to prevent 'standing room only' or SRO schools.

ARMM being autonomous has his own DepEd. It has his own budget for education. But because we have provinces in the Autonomous Region that are very poor we are also providing help from national government budget including helping repair the Madrasahs and helping make sure that your school furniture is complete.

These investments in people and in physical infrastructure will in turn attract more of the private investment that Governor Jaafar says he is hoping for and it will create more jobs, ultimately improving the lives of the people of Tawi-Tawi. Congressman Jaafar has already mentioned the 2006 figure says Tawi-Tawi is the poorest province in the country. It has a poverty incidence of 7.89 percent, and we must do something together to bring that percentage down.

We are aware that no matter how much improvement there is at the top of the economic ladder, many of the people in Tawi-Tawi still struggle mightily. Dahil dito, ilulunsad rin natin mamaya yung programang Conditional Cash Transfer. Sa Bongao din yata yun gagawin. Tatlong libong pinakamahihirap na pamilya ng Tawi-Tawi ay makakatanggap ng pera buwan-buwan. Pero may mga kundisyon. Halimbawa, kailangan pumasok sa eskwela yung mga anak na sa edad pang-elementarya. Yan ang isang halimbawa, kailangan pumasok, ito ay buwan-buwan pero may kundisyon, kailangan pumasok sa eskwela ang mga anak na nasa edad elementarya.

At para lalo pang himukin ang mga magulang na mag-aral ang kanilang mga anak, at upang mabawasan ang gutom sa Tawi-Tawi, itinatag natin ang Food-for-School program. Sa programang ito — ewan ko kung nandito na yun, sana nandito na yun — yung mga estudyanteng elementarya ay mag-uuwi ng isang kilong bigas araw-araw (applause) para sa ganun — hindi pa ba ginagawa yun dito? O, ginagawa na — para sa ganun maiwasan ang gutom at may incentive para pumasok ang mga bata.

Mamaya pupunta tayo sa NFA bodega. We will help segregate rice for Food-for-School in a National Food Authority bodega.

I like to call what we are doing today our focus on three areas. The three "Es" — the Economy like this mariculture project, the Environment where we have to make sure the mariculture and the road projects all conform to the requirements of the coral triangle, and Education which I have mentioned several times in connection with the Tawi-Tawi College of Technology and Oceanography, the Food-for-School and the Madrasahs and the desks and chairs. These are central to lifting up the people of Tawi-Tawi.

Kanina binanggit ni Governor Sahali na apat na beses na raw ako nagpunta dito sa Tawi-Tawi. Yung apat na beses yun ang yung kasama siya. Pero sa katotohanan siguro mga anim na beses na ako nagpunta rito.

Kanina binanggit ni Congressman Jaafar na noong 1949 ba yun? 48, yung aking tatay ay nandito. Noong panahong yun siya ay Assistant Secretary ng Department of Foreign Affairs. Siya ang nag-negotiate para mabalik ang Turtle Island sa Pilipinas mula sa Malaya. (applause) Nung siya ay Vice-President na, 1958 yata, ay nagpunta siya muli sa Tawi-Tawi, nagpunta siya muli sa Turtle Islands at dala-dala niya yung kanyang anak, ako na nga yun. Kaya (applause) naalala ko doon sa bisitang yun ay binigyan ako ng regalo, isang malaking turtle. Nakatali parang yung mga kabayo o mga carabao na may tali, binigay sa akin. Tapos nakita ko yung turtle lumuluha. Umiiyak pala ang mga turtle. Sabi ko sa Nanay ko, “Ma, the turtle is crying.” Sabi nung Nanay ko... kasi noon dala ko... ang Tatay ko dala ang Nanay ko at saka dala ako. Ngayon dala ko ang asawa ko at saka dala ko rin ang anak ko. Kaya sabi ni Nur, history repeats itself. (applause) Sabi ko, “Ma, the turtle is crying.” So, yung Nanay ko pumunta doon sa... ewan ko kung Governor ng Tawi Tawi o — Sulu pa noon, di ba? Sulu pa — o Mayor ng Turtle Island, sabi niya, pakawalaan na lang natin yung turtle. So, pinakawala yung turtle, nanduon kami sa beach. Aba nung pinakawala yung turtle, ang bilis tumakbo hanggang dagat. Akala ko ang turtle symbol ng mahinang kumilos, marunong pala... ang turtle pala hindi lamang marunong umiyak, marunong din palang tumakbo. Pero mula noon talagang nakita natin dapat inaalaan natin ang ating kalikasan. Kaya yung Turtle Islands bagamat hindi ako magbibisita doon nitong araw na ito, alagaan natin ng husto. Ito rin ay bahagi nung tinatawag na Turtle Islands Heritage Park, isa ring project ng World Wildlife Fund.

Yung naalala kong pangalawang bisita ko dito ay doon sa Balimbing, noong bagong halalan pa lamang at nung bagong halal pa lamang ako bilang Senador. At nagse-celebrate pa yung mga local officials dahil sila rin ay bagong halal. Di nagpunta ako doon, at sabi nila, “Eto, eto kain kayo dito meron tayong — ano’ng tawag dito? — yung roast calf.” Ay, ang daming roast calf naman sa Manila. So, “hindi,” sabi ko, tinitignan ko yung lobster. Naku! pina-uwì ako ng isang basket ng lobster. Yung yamang-dagat talaga ng Tawi-Tawi, yan ang ating aanihin ngayon sa inyong mariculture para sa ganun gaganda ang buhay ng ating taumbayan.

Naalala ko rin noong ako ay Vice-President, or Senador pa nga yata, Senador pa nga yata, isa pa. Nagpunta naman ako doon sa Mapun sa Cagayan de Tawi-Tawi. Kaya ako ay nasisiyahan na aside... tapos siyempre Bongao ilang beses na gaya ng sabi ni Governor Sahali at noong Vice-President ako doon sa Sitangkai — yung kapatid o tatay? — kapatid ni Mayor Ahaja ang mayor, yung Vice-Mayor ngayon, at ngayon — ah, noon bahagi pa ang Sibutu ng Sitangkai, ngayon hiwalay na — at nasisiyahan ako ngayon na narito tayo sa Sibutu. Kaya anim na bayan na sa labing ilang bayan ninyo ang nabisita ko. Pero naririnig ko na yung susunod na phases, mga binanggit na pangalan ni Congressman Jaafar ay mga bayang hindi ko pa napupuntahan. Kaya susunod na phase ng mariculture, imbitahin niyo muli ako para mabisita ko yung inyong limang bayan ng Tawi-Tawi. (applause)

To all of you, Congratulations! Ngayon ang simula ng pagbangon ng Tawi-Tawi.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s Speech during the Launching of the Tawi-Tawi Modified Mariculture Development Project, Sibutu-Sitangkai (Phase 1A and B). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121608/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1366&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Kick-Off Ceremony of the first-ever Minalin Egg Festival

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Kick-Off Ceremony of the first-ever Minalin Egg Festival

[Delivered at the Apung Monica Covered Court, San Nicolas Town Plaza, Minalin, Pampanga, June 4, 2008]

Dacal a salamat.

Dacal a salamat, Secretary Ed Pamintuan king pamagpakilala mu. At mayap abak karing kekatang officials na ning Pampanga ning distrito ampo ning balen Minalin y Governor Ed Panlilio, ing Mayor Flores, y Congresswoman Anna York Bondoc Sagun. Kayabi naman tamu karing aliwang Congressman keti Pampanga y Tarzan Lazatin ampo y Dong Gonzales. At salamat naman karing Provincial Board Members naning Pampanga, manibat keng 1st district atyu keti y BM Garbo, BM Halili — nukarin ya y Lina Bagasina? okay — y Art Salalila... ah y Edna David atyu ya keti, y Edna David; ampo karing keng 3rd District y Jake Quiambao; manibat king 4th District BM Calara ampu Rick Yabut; at y BM Joel Simpangco ing Federation of Barangay Captains ning ABC. Atyu keni pa y Raul Macalino ampo y Eric Tumang? Alayu oneng mayap a abac karela. At karing kegana-ganang mayors sa Pampanga atyu keti. Ana ning Mayor ning Candaba ana karakal namang biyaya keti, kegana-ganang balen ning Pampanga atin biyaya manibat king gobyerno. The egg producers, karing egg producers; karing poultry farm workers; karing farmers and fisherfolk; our bus and trucking operators that we invited here today; our national government officials who are here with us today; kekayung kabalen ko keti king Pampanga; Monsignor Mercado, mayap a abac kekongan.

Ampong mayap a oras karing tau-Minalin king kekayung egg industry, oneng ali mu keng egg industry. Uling ana y Congresswoman Anna York Bondoc, ikayu naman ing number one king crabs, karing prawns exported, ing tilapia dadalan king Metro Manila, fresh, A-rated and your other products that you have shown today. Congratulations! king masanting a production king agrikultura. Ana pin ning Mayor Flores, atandakanan na pa king panahon na ning Pinatubo, nilahar ing Minalin, oneng mibangun pasibayu and now you are the “egg basket” of the Philipines.

Karakal ing ambag ning industriya ning ebum ampo king ali-aliwang produkto yu, king kekatamung agrikultura ampo maulagang sustansiya king mesa ning pamilyang Pilipino.

Inya pin, I’ve come to Minalin not only to deliver some of the support for the people of Minalin but also I have chosen to come to our province to make a very important announcement to highlight the importance not only of raising production but also lowering the cost of bringing food products to the market. Then, we can lower the cost of food through lower delivery cost. Last month through Secretary Larry Mendoza, I instructed the Toll Regulatory Board to review the toll rates of the Manila North Tollways Corporation at the critical North Luzon Expressway.

Uling, the favorable peso-dollar exchange rate has dramatically reduced the debt service load of MNTC, therefore, MNTC has been generating a financial windfall for its toll road operations. It’s clear that the MNTC can pass on a part of this huge windfall to the public via reduced toll rates.

The MNTC secured dollar-denominated loans to rehabilitate the NLEX at an average of 54 to a dollar, and now it is 43 to a dollar. The high debt service cost was heavily factored in the computation of its toll matrix. Transport groups whom we have invited today now estimate that the debt servicing cost of MNTC for its NLEX loan is now 31 percent lower because of the favorable exchange rate regime and the favorable interest rate regime.

Therefore, today, I direct the Toll Regulatory Board to approve a new Toll Rate Adjustment Formula. This shall result in a package of benefits for all types of vehicles using the NLEX. TRB’s approval of the new formula will facilitate MNTC’s conversion of its remaining U.S. dollar loans into pesos. The operation of this new toll rate adjustment formula will reduce the toll in NLEX since MNTC will realize foreign exchange gains that resulted from the favorable economic conditions. The foreign exchange gains in turn shall be passed on to NLEX motorists in the form of lower toll rates.

I hereby direct the TRB to implement the downward adjustment of NLEX toll rates as a result of the new toll rate formula to take effect on June 30th this year 2008.

A toll rate reduction will bring relief to the areas within the NLEX axis, particularly Metro Manila, North Luzon, Central Luzon kayabi na ing kekatang probinsiyang Pampanga.

It is expected to bring down the cost of rice and basic food items and construction materials.

Malaking biyaya ang bawas-singil sa lahat na bumibiyaha sa NLEX, lalo na sa pagtalon ng presyo ng langis sa buong mundo. At malaking tulong din ito sa pagsisikap nating maghatid ng abot-kayang pagkain sa bawat mesa.

We expect that the benefits to the public of a toll rate reduction will be immense, specifically on the cost of basic food items.

Metro Manila and the several areas in the CALABARZON depend on haulers whom we have invited today and food producers from Central Luzon and Northern Luzon for their rice, meat, poultry and vegetable needs. And being 'egg basket' of Central Luzon, Manila, Minalin more than 50 percent of Metro Manila's egg supply comes from the Minalin 'egg basket' keti king Pampanga.

Lower rate tolls means lower transport cost for producers and haulers.

Sa pagbaba ng singil sa NLEX, inaasahan nating bababa ang gastos sa pagdadala ng pagkain sa Kamaynilaan. Hinihiling natin sa mga mangangalakal na makikinabang sa bawas ng singil na partihan naman ang mamimili at saka ang magsasaka. Bawasan sana ang presyo ng pagkain at dagdagan ang bayad sa magsasaka. Marapat lamang makinabang ang lahat sa ating walang patid na pagsisikap bawasan ang gastos ng tao at negosyo.

With a toll rate reduction at the NLEX, transport fares charged by the major bus operators between Central Luzon and Metro Manila and Northern Luzon will hopefully remain at the 2004 level.

The toll rate reduction will hopefully impact on the cost of construction materials being moved to Metro Manila, Cavite, Rizal and Laguna.

The resulting stability of the toll rates will generate for NLEX motorists these additional benefits: First, there shall be no increase of toll rates within the next two years and six months; and second, subsequent increases shall be in smaller increments owing to the new adjustment rate formula that is no longer subject to foreign exchange fluctuations.

Pasibayu, mayap a oras karing tau-keti king matagumpe a produksyon yu king ebun at ali mu king ebun karing ali-aliwang produkto na ning agrikultura. And let us thank the MNTC for agreeing to this toll rate reduction, saup-saup tamu ngan ban ayabut tala ding kekatamung paninap, asundut taya ing pamanangat ning ekonomiya at akamtan tamu ing malambat a pamanyulung.

Mabuhay Pampanga! Mabuhay Minalin!

Dacal a salamat kekongan.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's Speech during the Kick-Off Ceremony of the First-Ever Minalin Egg Festival. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121525/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1574&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Launching of the New Students' Assistance Fund for Education for a Strong Republic and Presentation of DBP's "Iskolars ni GMA", June 5, 2008 Speech
of

Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines

During the Launching of the New Students' Assistance Fund for Education for a Strong Republic and Presentation of DBP's "Iskolars ni GMA"

[Delivered at Eulogio "Amang" Rodriguez Institute of Science and Technology Gymnasium, Nagtahan, Manila, June 5, 2008]

Thank you very much Secretary Neri for your introduction at maligayang bati rin sa lahat ng mga mag-aaral, mga guro, mga administrator narito kayo at alam ko lahat kayo ay bising-bisi sa pagsisimula ng klase sa darating na linggo.

Today, we launched the second of the major components of the fruits to be made available this year by our lower than program budget deficit which can be attributed to VAT reforms. Congressman Abante, pwede mong i-congratulate ang inyong sarili at mga kasama mo dahil itong mga binigay natin hindi mangyayari kung wala tayong value-added tax. Thank you.

From January to April, four billion pesos was generated from the value-added tax on oil products. And during the last Cabinet meeting, two billion pesos was allocated to provide cash transfers to the four million poorest of the poor and those using up to 100 kilowatt electricity consumption. That was our first program yung "Katas ng VAT: Pantawid Kuryente."

Now, this is the second program. The Cabinet also approved the amount that Nona mentioned, one billion pesos to provide interest free loans and scholarships to poor students. Gaya nang sabi ni Nona, half a billion for the loans, half a billion for the scholarships, ito ang tatawagin nating Students' Assistance Fund for Education or SAFE.

Binabati natin yung mga estudyanteng tumanggap ng pautang sa matrikula mula sa ating bagong SAFE. Dahil sa SAFE, may programang pahiram na hindi lalampas sa 8,000 pesos bawat semester na pambayad sa tuition, libro at iba pang pangangailangan.

Aside from the one billion that we've set aside from our VAT – ito na nga, kaya tawag natin dito kung yung isa ay yung two billion ay "Katas ng VAT: Pantawid Kuryente," itong for SAFE naman ay "Katas ng VAT: Pantawid Pag-aaral."

And aside from the one billion from the VAT, we have also from the Development Bank of the Philippines, advocating quality education for poor but intelligent students yun ang kaibahan, kasi yung Katas ng VAT kahit na hindi kayo masyadong matalino basta pumapasa kayo, okay. Pero itong DBP kailangan matalino kayo. Through its 10-year, one billion-peso program also to pay for the tuition and other fees of college students from poor families. DBP is opening a wide window of opportunity for 1,000 bright high school students who pass the program's academic and other requirements. Nandito yata yung— to our first 125 who comprised the first batch of DBP scholars, and I understand you will take up nursing in the Bank's partner schools. Good luck to all of you. Congratulations na kaagad!

Mona talked about our meeting with the SUCs a couple of weeks ago, so I would like to tie that up with what we're doing today and I'm glad that Mona anticipated what I would want and she made the announcement. But I just want to repeat — for those in the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle and Agri-business Mindanao, indeed, the focus should be on student loans and scholarships in agricultural courses. And because we're talking here about poverty, they're the ones who bear the biggest brunt of the increasing price of fuel and power, there should be a special quota for the 10 poorest provinces in the country, namely: Tawi-Tawi, especially for the fisheries courses of the Tawi-Tawi College of Technology and Oceanography; Zamboanga del Norte, including their access not only to the state college in Zamboanga del Norte but also to the West Mindanao State University; Maguindanao, including their access not only to the state college in Mindanao but also in education in the good private schools in the vicinity like Notre Dame; Apayao and Abra, not only access to their own state college but also access to the education in the private colleges and universities of Baguio City; Dinagat Islands; Lanao del Sur, especially for agriculture education at the Mindanao State University; Northern Samar; Masbate, which I understand has the smallest state college in the whole country but with the scholarship they can have more students and can become more viable; and Misamis Occidental which is a very, very good state college.

There should also be a quota for those provinces which do not belong to the 10 poorest but are part of the 10 most food-poor provinces, namely: Agusan del Sur, Kalinga and Surigao del Sur, especially for agriculture because we want them to produce more food. And in the case of Surigao del Sur, especially for agriculture and mineral courses at the Surigao del Sur State Polytechnic College.

We're doing this because everyone in this nation, public and private, has an obligation to meet the needs of the nation on education, food security and vital services like energy.

Because we are distributing Katas ng VAT na binabayaran ng mga nagkunsumo ng langis at kuryente, 80 percent of whom are well-off, eh, pag-usapan nga natin ang enerhiya at ang pamahalaan, mga opisina ng pamahalaan including SUCs, including DBP.

Starting today, all government agencies and entities, including government-owned and controlled corporations are directed to start electricity and fuel saving measures, using widely accepted practices and creative and innovative ways that can be employed to substantially lower fuel and electricity consumption. For this purpose, last June 2nd, I signed an Administrative Order to this effect:

1. All agencies shall reduce transport fuel consumption in liters by ten percent starting June.
2. Government buildings shall turn off airconditioners — walang problema ang EARIST, hindi airconditioned — government buildings shall turn off airconditioners at 4:30 p.m., except those with 24-hour work. Halimbawa ang mga ospital, hindi naman kailangan.
3. Agencies shall implement, starting July, plans to replace all incandescent bulbs and make them fluorescent.
4. Agencies shall convert twenty percent of their vehicles in major cities, not in the provinces, to liquid petroleum by September 2008 kasi mas mura ang LPG.
5. Agencies shall install and/or adopt other energy saving technology with the help of the Department of Energy and/or the Department of Science and Technology.

We are also appealing to the local government units to undertake similar saving measures.

The era of cheap and plentiful fossil fuel, the source of much of our fuel and the fuel of the world and a major generator of electricity in the Visayas and Mindanao, is definitely over. In this context, cutting down on fuel and electricity consumption is an economic imperative, a moral duty and a global obligation. Huwag nating kalimutan na buong mundo ang nagdudusa sa mataas na presyo ng langis at mataas na presyo ng pagkain. Therefore much of the world has adopted stringent measures to cut down the consumption of fuel and electricity.

We are celebrating World Environment Day, so we can add that reducing our use of fossil fuel is also 'a direct boost to our environmental programs, specifically efforts to mitigate the impact of climate change.

Adhering to this directive, or going the extra mile to be creative and innovative in cutting down fuel and electricity, will have its rewards. The savings, translated into peso value, shall be given back to the personnel of the complying agencies in the form of additional rice and transportation subsidies. This will provide immediate relief from the rising price of rice in the whole world and adjusted transport fares.

Alam niyo kanina, meron akong kausap na mga congressmen, sabi nila, pwede bang dagdagan yung P18.25 na bigas? Sabi ko, depende kung ano ang isasakripisyo natin doon sa ating budget and at the same time hindi masyadong malaki ang deficit na tataas tuloy ang interest rate. Magkano ba? Eh, sabi ko kung ano yung diperensya ng commercial at ang diperensya ng NFA, lahat yan halos subsidy yan. Sabi nung congressmen, ganun pala, hindi namin alam, akala namin yang P18.25 na NFA talaga yun ang presyo. Hindi yun ang presyo, binibili ng NFA ng mahal binebenta ng mura. Akala ng congressmen sabi nila, akala namin meron kayong special price. Totoo yun, meron tayong special price. Halimbawa, kung 1,200 dollars nilang binebenta sa ibang bansa, yung mga kaibigan natin, siguro ibebenta sa atin ng 800 dollars pero yung 800 dollars doble naman yun binibili ng buong mundo nung araw ng 400 dollars kaya kahit na meron tayong special price malaki pa rin ang dinagdag nating bayad kaya malaki ang subsidy. Kaya napakaimportante na tayong lahat ay nag-iimpok.

A breakdown of the household expenditures of employees, public or private, shows that a sizable portion of a family's household income expense goes to rice and transport fares.

So, I direct the Chairman of the Philippine National Oil Company Development and Management Corporation, si Waldo Flores, and the Department of Budget and Management, Nonoy Andaya, to monitor the compliance of government entities with the directives I gave in my Administrative Order.

The PNOC-DMC and DBM are tasked to submit quarterly reports on the compliance of government agencies, so that we will know how much additional rice and transport subsidies can be released to their employees every quarter at kasama doon ang ating mga state universities and colleges.

Itong ginagawa natin ngayong hapon ay sang-ayon sa tatlong “E” — the Economy, the Environment and Education. These are central to lifting our nation up and getting it ready for you — the next generation of leaders.

Kaya sa inyong lahat, ating mga scholars, ating beneficiaries ng loan program, Congratulations!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the 7th Filipino-Chinese Friendship Day Celebration Night

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 7th Filipino-Chinese Friendship Day Celebration Night (Organized by the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. or FFCCCII)

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Sofitel-Philippine Plaza Hotel, Pasay City, June 9, 2008]

Thank you. Thank you very much.

Thank you very much, Dr. Tan for your introduction.

May I also greet Mr. John Tan and the other officials of the Federation; His Excellency Ambassador Song Tao and the other friends from the People's Republic of China; members of the Cabinet; our host mayor in Manila, Mayor Lim; our distinguished Filipino-Chinese members of the Legislature: Congressman Ong and Congressman Angping, Congresswoman Angping; our awardees; friends; ladies and gentlemen. (applause)

Greetings to our Chinese friends and our Filipino-Chinese friends on the anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries.

It was my honor when I was Co-Chairman then of the Association for Philippines-China Understanding, to have been among those who worked for our diplomatic relations 33 years ago, in recognition of the friendship between our two peoples that has existed for centuries.

And as mentioned by our speakers earlier, again, it was my honor to sign Presidential Proclamation No. 148 in 2002 to celebrate June 9th of every year as Filipino-Chinese Friendship Day, in recognition of the indelible bonds between our two countries that has enriched Philippine life for so long. (applause)

Since that day, that first celebration of Filipino-Chinese Friendship Day in June of 2002, since then our overall relations with China have become more confident, mature, and comprehensive. Our relations are punctuated with substantial and important projects aimed at deepening exchanges in many areas, including trade, investment and official development assistance. China is currently our largest export market today. We have a trade surplus with China since 2002. Our Framework Agreement on Expanding and Deepening Bilateral Economic and Trade Cooperation further enhances our bilateral merchandise trade with China.

Tonight's commemoration of friendship, expanding trade and economic cooperation assumes greater significance in the grim shadow of the tragedy that struck Sichuan province a few weeks ago.

We share in the suffering of our Chinese brethren. In behalf of the Filipino nation, we reiterate our heartfelt sympathies to the earthquake victims but we know that the Chinese people under the leadership of President Hu Jintao and Premier Wen Jiabao will recover swiftly from this tragedy, rebuild their lives and march on toward greater progress. (applause)

We wish China our best as it hosts the Beijing Olympics. This global event will showcase what China can offer as the fastest growing economy in the region and in the world. (applause)

Tonight, as we witness the awards given to many of the leaders of the Filipino-Chinese business community for their contributions to the Federation's projects, tonight is a good occasion to thank our organizer, the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry not only for hosting this and many other events to deepen the friendship between our two countries, but also for the immense contribution of the Federation and its members to Philippine economic and social life. (applause)

Your contribution and support are especially vital at this time with the high price of fuel and food is a global problem affecting the poor and middle-classes all over the world. The volatility of the price of rice is a challenge faced by countries around the world. The Philippine government is working hard to solve the rice and price issues facing our country and our people. Our efforts to address this challenge are focused on doing whatever is possible to ensure access to supplies of rice at fair prices.

Our rice czar, one of our two Filipino-Chinese in the Cabinet, Secretary Arthur Yap, the other being Secretary Rey Chua of ICT. Artie Yap has secured adequate supplies of rice for current needs. We have secured adequate supplies of rice for our needs for the rest of the year from both domestically produced rice and from imports. Further imports of rice will be made when prices and conditions are acceptable to expand buffer stocks. Our current target is consistent with our historic approach to buffer stocks.

We will do everything in our power to stabilize and lower prices and to crack down on price cheaters. Our actions include providing NFA rice at subsidized prices to those members of our society who are most vulnerable. They also include working with the Local Government Units like Mayor Lim, I hope, faith-based organizations and others to carry out targeted distribution of NFA rice.

Rice traders and others who carry out price gouging and hoarding are criminals who demonstrate by their actions that they have no concern for the plight of their countrymen. We will work diligently to continue to track down and prosecute them until these anti-Filipino practices are stopped. Actions we are taking in this regard include the filing of charges against 73 traders and against the Regional Directors of NFA of Regions V and X; the NFA Provincial Managers of North Cotabato, Camarines Sur and Misamis Oriental; the Assistant Provincial Manager of Misamis Oriental.

We are focused by our distribution, supply and enforcement efforts on both fair prices today and fair prices in the years to come. The new economics of global food security now make it imperative that we control our own destiny in terms of rice. We are taking control of our food supply. We are working with all levels of government in our country with multilateral agencies and our other development partners, and with the private sector to achieve rice self-sufficiency in five years from now. (applause)

Our longer-term efforts to promote rice self-sufficiency will also ensure that we will no longer have to rely on expensive imports to meet our country's needs for this important commodity. The actions we are taking to achieve self-sufficiency include providing unprecedented amounts of investment in fertilizers; in irrigation and other infrastructure; in agricultural education, extension and equipment; in dryers and other post-harvest facilities; and in seeds.

As the government increases our programs to cushion our people from the pain of price shocks, we hope that the FFCCI will continue to believe firmly in our economic reforms and will continue to be a strong partner of our social and economic development programs. (applause)

And as we continue down the path of greater regional economic and security cooperation, we are confident that our relations with the People's Republic of China will become even stronger. (applause)

Once again, to our Chinese and our Filipino-Chinese friends, xie xie.

Thank you. Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the 7th Filipino-Chinese Friendship Day Celebration Night (Organized by the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. or FFCCCII). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121428/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1565&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 110th anniversary of the proclamation of Philippine Independence Plaza San Lorenzo Ruiz Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 110th Anniversary of the proclamation of Philippine Independence Plaza San Lorenzo Ruiz

[Delivered in Rizal Park, Manila, June 12, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Kalihim Lapus.

Excellencies of the Diplomatic Corps; Mayor Lim; the congressman from this district, Congressman Amado Bagatsing; our other Congress persons who are here today with us: Congressman Benny Abante, Congressman Asilo, Congressman Roxas, Congresswoman Susano — Oh? No, I greeted Bagatsing first, it's his district, okay. It's his district, okay. Didn't I greet you first? Okay — (laughter)...Our members of the Committee who worked very hard to make this out-of-the-box Independence Day Commemoration headed by Secretary Lapus but we have Chairman Ambeth Ocampo who's been very active as well; other members of the Cabinet and national government officials who are here today; our officers of the Armed Forces and the police; non-government organizations; mga ibang kasama ko sa pamahalaan; mga Kababayan; ladies and gentlemen.

Happy 110th Anniversary of the Republic of the Philippines!

Mga Kababayan:

Isang siglo't isang dekada na ang nakalipas mula noong ideklara ang kasarinlan ng bagong Republikang Pilipinas doon sa Kawit, Cavite. Noon tulad din ngayon, maraming banta at maraming hamon ang hinarap ng ating bayan. Kahit isinigaw na ang kasarinlan sa Kawit, marami pa ring bahagi ng Pilipinas ang nasa ilalim ng puwersa ng kolonyalismo.

Nguni't hindi umatras ang mga bayaning nagtatag ng ating bayan. Hindi sila nagpagapi sa anumang pag-aalinlangan tungkol sa kanilang magiging kinabukasan. Bagkus, pinalakas nila ang loob ng buong sambayanan upang ipaalam sa buong mundo na may bagong silang na bansa, ang bansang Pilipinas, na handang lumahok sa komunidad ng malalayang bansa sa buong mundo.

Sa kasalukuyang panahon, sa harap ng mga banta at hamon na hatid ng kapalaran ng buong mundo, dapat nating isaloob at patuloy na buhayin ang mga katangiang nagbigay-dakila sa ating mga ama, ina ng ating bayan. Ang kanilang magiging makabayan, ang pagmamalasakit sa kapwa, ang tibay ng kanilang kapasiyahan na magtatag at magtanggol sa isang malaya at maunlad na bansa.

Para sa ating Independence Day sa taong ito, ang bumabalot na tema ay ang "Republic Service sa Ganap na Kalayaan at Kaunlaran."

Chairman Ambeth Ocampo was telling me, was telling us about his first chairmanship of the working group in 2002, that the parade was too short. I was telling him I wasn't really scolding him because it had been the Cabinet members who said, "Let's make the parade short." But after the parade, I was watching TV and one of the citizens who came all the way from Isabela told the TV reporter, "I came all the way from Isabela to see all those floats and I didn't see too many of them." So it's really very difficult to figure out what is the right length of a parade.

Anyway, this year we have no such dilemma, but we have decided that in keeping with how we are trying to conserve our resources so that we can give direct service to the people during this period of high world prices of oil and food, we have decided to dispense with the parade and use the budget instead to give direct service to the poor.

Kaya binibigyang diin ng temang ito ang nangingibabaw na tungkulin ng ating pamahalaan na paglingkuran ang mamamayan, upang mabigyan ng katubusan ang mahaba nating pakikibaka para sa kalayaan, at upang magkaroon ng kaganapan ang pambansang kaunlaran.

Ang pananagutang maglingkod ay lalong matingkad na ihandog sa hanay ng mahihirap, pinakamahihirap sa ating kababayan, na kasalukuyang hinahagupit ng mga kasalukuyang suliranin hatid ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya. Kung hindi man natin kayang iwasan ang mga problemang ito na angkat mula sa ibayong dako, saklaw pa rin ng ating tungkulin ang mamahagi ng tulong para sa pinahihirapan nito.

Nakapagtindig ng matipunong ekonomiya ang Pilipinas, na tumutulong harapin ang hamon ng panmundong sibat ng presyo ng pagkain at langis. Nagbubunga na ang ating pagsisikap: sa 2007, naabot ng ekonomiya ang pinakamataas na paglago sa mahigit tatlung taon, malakas ang piso, malapit na nating mabalanse ang budget.

Bunga ng pagsigla ng ekonomiya, nakapamumuhunan tayo sa mga pangunahing sektor para sanggahan ang dagok sa maralita ng tumatalong halaga ng bigas at krudo. Naitutuloy din nating mamuhunan sa kailangang imprastraktura gaya ng mga kalsada, mga tulay, edukasyon, para banggitin ang ilan lamang. Habang binabalanse natin ito mga napaka-kailangang pamumuhunan sa pangakong matupad ang ating mga obligasyong piskal at mabalanse ang budget sa 2010.

Ang katatagan ng mga batayan ng ating ekonomiya ay natutulungan din ng dumadaming iba't-ibang bansang bumibili ng ating produkto. Halimbawa, hindi na tayo gaano umaasa lamang sa ating benta sa Amerika, at di-hamak malakas na tayong nakakapasok sa Tsina at iba pang mga palengke sa Asya.

Walang pagod tayong nagpupursige upang tugunan ang mga hamong bunga ng paghina ng ekonomiya ng mundo at pagsipa ng mga presyo ng langis at pagkain. Malubha ang tama sa mahihirap nitong mga puwersang pandaigdig.

Maliwanag na ang kalagayan ng ekonomiya, dala ng mahal na langis at pagkain sa mundo ay isang hamon, at hinaharap natin ito nang buong sigasig. Nakikialam tayo upang ipagtanggol ang ating pinakamahihirap.

Nagsisikap ang pamahalaan upang tiyakin na ang kasapatan ng pagkain ng bansa ay matatag at maglagay tayo ng pagkain sa hapag ng bawat Pilipino.

May tatlong haligi ang ating plano: tiyaking sapat ang ating bigas, subaybayan ang maayos na pagbebenta ng bigas, at hulihin ang mga nagtatago at nagpupuslit ng bigas.

Marami na ang mga nagsasamantala na ating natunton, napigil at nakakasuhan. Bagaman matagal ang proseso ng batas, at tama naman sa demokrasya, huwag magkamali: mabilis tayong kumikilos nang buong bagsik laban sa mga lumalabag sa batas.

Nakatutok din sa pinakamahihirap ang ating pagsisikap, upang siguruhin na sila ang mangungunang makakuha ng bigas na kailangan nila.

We have adequate supply of rice today, and we have a solid plan for self-sufficiency. This is important for our domestic and international audiences to appreciate. Samantala, nag-aambag tayo ng bigas at pagkain para sa reserba, ngunit para sa hinaharap. Magagawa nating maghatid ng pagkain sa hapag. And I am gratified and grateful to the Lord that notwithstanding the very high price of rice in the whole world market in the last two quarters, hunger has gone down significantly. Thank God for that.

Lagi tayong nag-aabala sa ibinabayad ng kuryente ng mga pamilya. Habang kaya, gusto nating bumaba ito.

Pagdating sa langis, pinakamabigat ang tama ng mataas na presyo ng diesel at pang araw-araw na bilihin sa maralita. Bagaman pandaigdigang problema ang mataas na presyo ng langis at labas sa kapangyarihan ng isang gobyerno, nagpapatupad tayo ng mga programa upang tulungan ang ating mamamayan. Ibinaba natin ang taripa o customs duty sa langis, ginawa na lamang nating zero. Nagbibigay rin tayo ng pera para sa pinakamahihirap para tulungan silang makayanang bayaran ang kanilang kuryente.

Subalit anuman ang ating gawin, pangdaigdigang problema ito, at dapat tayong magbalikatan upang maibsan ito, upang magkaroon ng lutas sa malayong hinaharap.

Sa enerhiya, gaya ng sa pagkain, pandaigdigang itong isyu at labas sa ating kakayahan ang malaking bahagi na magagawa nating kilos. Gayon pa man, nagbibigay tayo ng kapili-piling pang-ginhawa sa krudo at langis na nakatutok sa pinaka-nangangailangan. Nagsusulong tayo ng mga mahigpit na pagkilos upang magtipid sa enerhiya at mas umasa sa sarili nating pagkukunan ng enerhiya, sa bisa ng mga investment sa natural gas, geothermal at kuryenteng galing sa araw at hangin. At salamat din na meron tayong produksiyon ng sariling krudo para umabot sa diyos porsiyento ng ating pangangailangan ang sarili nating produksiyon ng krudo.

Malaking pabigat sa buong mundo at sa Pilipinas ang mga problema ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya. At mamumuhunan tayo sa taong-bayan upang makaraos sa panahong ito.

Marami ang kailangang gawin. Magtatrabaho tayo upang tuparin ang ating mga planong reporma para sa Pilipinas. Ipaglalaban natin ang Ekonomiya, Edukasyon at ang Environment.

Itinaguyod ng ating mga sinaunang bayani ang isang bagong bayan sa pamamagitan ng kanilang pagbuklod, pagsakripisyo at pag-iisang damdamin. Kung pupunuin din ang ating mga puso ng kasintulad na pagmamahal sa bayan, makakamit din natin ang matatamis na bunga ng kalayaan, katarungan at kaunlaran. Makakahanay din natin ang ibang mga dakila't malalayang bansa sa mundo.

Tungo sa matayog na layuning ito, hinihiling ko ngayon na magkaisa tayong lahat alang-alang sa Inang Bayan, alang-alang sa pamilya ng bawat mamamayan, alang-alang sa mga darating pang salinlahi.

Muli, sa ating lahat, Happy 110th Independence Day.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the 110th Anniversary of the Proclamation of Philippine Independence Plaza San Lorenzo Ruiz. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121347/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1562&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the reception for the 110th anniversary of Philippine Independence
Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the reception for the 110th anniversary of Philippine Independence

[Delivered at the Malacañang Palace, June 12, 2008]

One hundred and ten years after we broke free of foreign bondage, we remember with deep gratitude our heroic forebears who paid the ultimate sacrifice on the altar of freedom so that we may live as a sovereign people.

The centuries-old struggle continues. Instead of colonizing powers, we must now protect our freedom and future as a nation from global economic storms and security threats.

The Philippines has built up a strong economy which is helping us meet the challenges of the global surge in the price of food and fuel. A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country. It is paying off: our economy reached its highest level of growth in 30 years last year, the peso is strong, and we are close to balancing our budget.

As a result of our economic comeback, we are able to invest in key sectors to cushion the harsh impact of rice and fuel on our poor. We are also able to continue to invest in necessary infrastructure like roads, bridges and education, to name a few. All the while, we are balancing these vital investments with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations and balance the budget in 2010.

We have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with the spike in oil and food prices. The government is working to make sure that our food supplies remain stable and that we put food on the table for every Filipino.

In terms of oil, the high price of gasoline and everyday commodities hits our poor the hardest. While the high price of oil is a global issue and outside the control of government, we have introduced measures to lift the burden of our people.

However, no matter what actions we take, this is a global problem. We must work together to resolve this if there is going to be any long-lasting improvement.

As a responsible member of the international community, we are doing our part to create a world that is more humane.

We have reached out in sympathy to our Chinese brethren in Sichuan Province.

Likewise, we have sent medical teams and continue to make those teams available to help the people of Myanmar. And we coordinate with our ASEAN neighbors on the level of financial aid that each of us sends to Myanmar.

Now that ASEAN has taken tangible steps to be a true union, it must accept its responsibility to advance the cause of economic and social justice within its membership.

As for the passage of the ASEAN Charter: we would love nothing more than to see ASEAN consolidate its gains and move closer together. However, we'll leave this up to the Philippine Senate which has been asked to review the charter for ratification. Certainly, economic integration among Asian nations is imperative if we, as a region, are to take advantage of the expanding global trade and economic opportunities. We are thrilled at the prospect of a vibrant ASEAN. We hold great hope for the ASEAN Charter which will be the first and the boldest step towards the creation of a regional economic community.

Our strong course of global engagement has been an essential part of our economic turnaround.

It is important to acknowledge the important role that our international friends and allies have made to our national development. This includes the countries and organizations who are our development partners and the foreign investors who have become part of our business community and who have brought their technologies and capital to the Philippines. You are a part of the Philippine economic success story. We are grateful for your contributions and your commitment to our nation and our people.

Be with us in our steadfast desire for the Philippines to break free from the bondage of poverty and to be able to join the first world in 20 years.

We stand today – aware of the challenges we face and the responsibilities we carry. When we act with a singularity of purpose and a focused vision in solidarity with our allies in the world, we can achieve great things.

Indeed, our nations can achieve greater strides when we work as a united force, for we share ideals and possess the same aspirations of peace, stability, freedom and progress.

Ladies and gentlemen, join me in a toast to international solidarity and a resurgent Philippines.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's Speech during the reception for the 110th anniversary of Philippine Independence. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121403/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1563&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the reception for the 110th Anniversary of Philippine Independence, June 12, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the reception for the 110th Anniversary of Philippine Independence

[Delivered at Malacañang Palace, June 12, 2008]

One hundred and ten years after we broke free of foreign bondage, we remember with deep gratitude our heroic forebears who paid the ultimate sacrifice on the altar of freedom so that we may live as a sovereign people.

The centuries-old struggle continues. Instead of colonizing powers, we must now protect our freedom and future as a nation from global economic storms and security threats.

The Philippines has built up a strong economy which is helping us meet the challenges of the global surge in the price of food and fuel. A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country. It is paying off: our economy reached its highest level of growth in 30 years last year, the peso is strong, and we are close to balancing our budget.

As a result of our economic comeback, we are able to invest in key sectors to cushion the harsh impact of rice and fuel on our poor. We are also able to continue to invest in necessary infrastructure like roads, bridges and education, to name a few. All the while, we are balancing these vital investments with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations and balance the budget in 2010.

We have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with the spike in oil and food prices. The government is working to make sure that our food supplies remain stable and that we put food on the table for every Filipino.

In terms of oil, the high price of gasoline and everyday commodities hits our poor the hardest. While the high price of oil is a global issue and outside the control of government, we have introduced measures to lift the burden of our people.

However, no matter what actions we take, this is a global problem. We must work together to resolve this if there is going to be any long-lasting improvement.

As a responsible member of the international community, we are doing our part to create a world that is more humane.

We have reached out in sympathy to our Chinese brethren in Sichuan Province.

Likewise, we have sent medical teams and continue to make those teams available to help the people of Myanmar. And we coordinate with our ASEAN neighbors on the level of financial aid that each of us sends to Myanmar.

Now that ASEAN has taken tangible steps to be a true union, it must accept its responsibility to advance the cause of economic and social justice within its membership.

As for the passage of the ASEAN Charter, we would love nothing more than to see ASEAN consolidate its gains and move closer together. However, we'll leave this up to the Philippine Senate, which has been asked to review the Charter for ratification. Certainly, economic integration among Asian nations is imperative if we, as a region, are to take advantage of the expanding global trade and economic opportunities. We are thrilled at the prospect of a vibrant ASEAN. We hold great hope for the ASEAN Charter, which will be the first and the boldest step towards the creation of a regional economic community.

Our strong course of global engagement has been an essential part of our economic turnaround.

It is important to acknowledge the important role that our international friends and allies have made to our national development. This includes the countries and organizations who are our development partners and the foreign investors who have become part of our business community and who have brought their technologies and capital to the Philippines. You are a part of the Philippine economic success story. We are grateful for your contributions and your commitment to our nation and our people.

Be with us in our steadfast desire for the Philippines to break free from the bondage of poverty and to be able to join the first world in 20 years.

We stand today, aware of the challenges we face and the responsibilities we carry. When we act with a singularity of purpose and a focused vision in solidarity with our allies in the world, we can achieve great things.

Indeed, our nations can achieve greater strides when we work as a united force, for we share ideals and possess the same aspirations of peace, stability, freedom and progress.

Ladies and gentlemen, join me in a toast to international solidarity and a resurgent Philippines.

Thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB) launching ceremony of its Transport Modernization Program: “Mga Makabagong Sasakyan para sa Kalusugan at Kapaligiran” [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas

Sa seremonya ng paglulunsad ng Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB) ng kanilang Programa ng Modernisasyon ng Transportasyon: “Mga Makabagong Sasakyan para sa Kalusugan at Kapaligiran”

[Ipinahayag sa One Esplanade, SM Mall of Asia complex, Lungsod ng Pasay, ika 16 ng Hunyo, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Mendoza sa iyong pagpakilala. At sa iyo, kay Tom Lantion at lahat ng mga nagtatrabaho sa DOTC at saka sa LTFRB, happy 21st anniversary!

Pwede na ho kayo umupo.

Secretary Reyes; Secretary Limcaoco na nandiyaan; ating mga congressmen na narito: si Mikey, si Congressman Roxas at saka si Congressman San Luis at yung ama ng Biofuels Act, si Migz Zubiri; ang ating host dito sa Pasay City, si Mayor Peewee Trinidad; ang ating host naman dito sa gusaling ito, si Mr. Hans Sy; iba’t-ibang mga negosyante, mga investor, mga driver, mga manggagawa na bahagi ng napaka-importanteng industriya ng transportasyon, sa inyong lahat din, happy 21st anniversary sa LTFRB. Kasi kayo lahat ay mga stakeholders dito. Ay! batiin ko rin pala ang chairman ng Biofuels Corporation, si Rene Velasco.

Gaya nang sabi ni Tom Lantion, itong anibersaryo ng LTFRB ay ipinagdidiriwang sa panahon, at sabi nito ni Migz Zubiri na nakapagtindig na tayo ng matipunong ekonomiya ng Pilipinas, na tumutulong sa atin harapin ang hamon ng pangmundong sibat ng presyo ng pagkain at langis. At nagbubunga itong ating tinayong ekonomiya, sa 2007 naabot natin ang pinakamalakas na paglago ng ating ekonomiya sa loob ng tatlung taon, dahil malakas ang piso — at nakita ko doon sa peryodiko kahapon — dumoble and pamumuhunan noong unang tatlong buwan nitong taon, at malapit na nating mabalanse ang budget.

Bunga nitong pagsigla ng ekonomiya, nakakapagpamuhunan tayo sa inyong mga pangunahing sektor para sanggahan ang dagok ng tumatalong halaga ng bigas at krudo sa maralita. Naglaan tayo ng apat na bilyong piso mula sa value-added tax sa langis upang pondohan ang iba’t-ibang programa na tinatawag nating “Katas ng VAT.”

Itong enerhiya, gaya ng pagkain, pandaigdigan itong isyu at labas sa kakayahan ng isang pamahalaan ang malaking bahagi ng magagawang kilos. Gayon pa man, nagbibigay tayo ng kapili-piling pangginhawa sa krudo at langis na nakatutok sa pinaka-nangangailangan. At kayo yun yung mga nagmamaneho at nagpapatakbo ng mga sasakyan.

Nagsusulong tayo ng mga mahigpit na pagkilos upang magtipid sa enerhiya at mas umasa sa sarili nating pagkukunan ng enerhiya sa bisa ng mga investment gaya ng natural gas, sariling langis, biofuels — doon nga yung batas ni Migz Zubiri, yung renewable energy na malapit na maging batas ni Migz Zubiri at saka nung anak kong si Mikey, pareho silang Juan Miguel, ang pangalan nila Juan Miguel — renewable energy ang tawag sa kanila.

Kamakailang pinalad tayo magsimula ng produksyon ng langis naman, pati langis doon sa Galoc, di ba, Angie? Sa dagat, sa kanluran ng bansa, na mag-aangat ng produksyon ng krudo sa bansa hanggang sampung porsiyento ng ating konsumo. So yun ay isang swerte rin natin o pagbasbas.

Pero binabati rin natin si Migz at saka si Congressman San Luis hindi lamang dahil sa Biofuels Law kung hindi dahil kasama nila yung mga kasapi ng Laguna Biofuels Development Cooperatives — saan kayo? Ha, hindi pumasok yata. Sa likod ba, saan kayo? Ayun! Ayun! Okay — na nagtitiyak sa ating magkakaroon tayo sa hinaharap ng karagdagang produksyon ng biodiesel galang sa jatropa.

Nagalak tayo na puspusan na ang paghahanda ng Laguna Biofuels Development Cooperative, kasama ang U.P. Los Baños — nandito ba yung ating mga taga U.P.? Nandoon sila. Congratulations sa inyo! — upang palawakin ng jatropa. At nagkaroon na pala ng launching kamaailan lang yung cooperative, yung U.P., si Migz at saka si Egay at sinabi ni Congressman San Luis na maglalagay siya ng mga farm-to-market road upang maging malapit yung jatropa sa pagdadalhan, kaya maraming salamat sa inyo Congressman San Luis.

Bilang Katas ng VAT at ng Vehicle Pollution Control Fund, inilulunsad natin ngayon ang isang bilyong pondo, isang bilyong pisong pautang sa mga namamasada sa jeepney at iba pang pampublikong sasakyan upang magpalit ng makina para magamit ang LPG, compressed natural gas at iba pang alternatibong pangkarga sa sasakyan na malaking mura kaysa sa gasolina at diesel.

Inatasan ng inyong lingkod ang Department of Energy kasama ng DOST ng DTI, ng DOTC na to oversee the shift or conversion to alternative fuels from fossil fuels towards the implementation of Migz Zubiri's Biofuels Act. Kaya yan ang ginagawa natin ngayon. Kasi kung... halimbawa, yung mga sasakyan ng pamahalaan, 20 percent — Angie, di ba? — ng lahat ng sasakyan ng pamahalaan ay dapat i-convert. At kayo naman mga nagmamaneho, nagpapasada kailangan din hindi lamang dahil sa utos kundi dahil para man makakita pa kayo kasi kung hindi kayo magco-convert talagang napakataas na ang presyo ng langis.

Ngayon, abot sa dalawangdaang libong piso ang kailangan kung magpapalit ng makina, abot sa 70,000 kung bibili ng conversion kit, abot sa 550,000 kung bibili ng bagong jeepney na gumagamit na ng alternative fuels kaya tutulungan kayo ng pamahalaan. Target nating magpa-convert ng sampung libong jeepney, at para na rin sa mga bus at mga taxi. Kaya nasisiyahan ako na nandito yung mga lider ng ating industriya ng transport hindi lamang jeepney, bus pati taxi. At itong pondong ito ay ipapautang ng Development Bank of the Philippines. At sabi ko, hindi lang DBP, Larry, pati yung Postal Bank dapat lalaanan din ng pondo para pwede kayong pumili, pwede kayong humiram sa DBP, pwede kayong humiram sa Postal Bank kung saan mas malapit, mas convenient para sa inyo.

Sa matitipid ninyo sa LPG, CNG o biofuel, mababayaran niyo ang utang, at maaaring magpahiram pa itong mga bangko sa ibang namamasada upang sila naman ay makakatipid. Sabi nga ni Larry ang bayad ay yung boundary ninyo 80 pesos per day ang ibabayad ninyo sa utang. So, yun ang ginagawa natin para magaan ang bayad. Saan kayo makakahanap ng ganung pautang na ang bayad ay 80 pesos per day lamang kung hihiram kayo ng 200,000. At hindi lang yun walang interest, so siguro mababayaran niyo paunti-unti sa loob ng dalawang taon. So, sa loob ng dalawang taon 'di lahat noon inyo na ang kita.

Kaya binabati natin ang mga tsuper ng jeepney at bus kayo ang unang makakatanggap nitong benepisyo. Congratulations sa inyong lahat! Pero hindi lang congratulations, salamat, nabasa ko kanina sa peryodiko ang pahayag na 'di na itutuloy ang hiling na itaas ang pasahe. Maraming salamat din.

Bukod doon, inatasan natin si Energy Secretary Angie Reyes na sugpuin ang mga kotong at kolum na kumakaltas, kasi dinig ko hanggang apat na libong piso raw sa kita ng tsuper bawat buwan ang nakakaltas sa mga kolum at kotong. Eh biro mo kung wala na yun eh di mas madali kayo makabayad ng inyong utang.

Sa mga nakalipas na linggo, meron din tayong ibang mga Katas ng VAT na nailunsad na. Sinimulan natin ang unang programa ng Katas ng VAT sa paglunsad ng Pantawid Kuryente, ito naman ay tulong ng limangdaang piso para doon sa mga kumukunsumo ng hindi hihigit sa 100 kilowatts per month. At inaasahan natin na apat na milyong pamilya ang mabibiyayaan ng dalawang bilyon na nakalaan sa programang ito — Katas ng VAT: Pantawid Kuryente. Kayo naman yung inyo — Katas ng VAT: Pantawid Pasahe.

Nagbigay din tayo ng Katas ng VAT para sa mga estudyante sa halagang isang bilyong piso rin — kalahating bilyon bilang scholarships sa mahihirap, at kalahating bilyon bilang pautang sa mga gastos na maliliit. Nakalaan ang mga scholarships sa mga nag-aaral sa mga kursong kailangan sa pagpapalago ng produksiyon ng pagkain tulad ng agrikultura at fisheries. Samantala, sa ilalim ng programang SAFE 4 SR (Student Assistance Fund for Education for a Strong Republic), makakahiram ng walong libong piso bawat semester ang mga estudyanteng nasa third, fourth or fifth year ng pag-aaral para sa diploma, sa kanilang uniporme, sa kanilang toga o kung ano yun.

Kaya wala tayong pagod na nagpupursige upang tugunan ang mga hamong bunga ng paghina ng ekonomiya ng mundo at pagsipa ng mga presyo ng langis at pagkain. Malubha ang tama sa mahihirap nitong mga puwersang pandaigdig.

Kaya ang mensahe natin sa araw na ito, sa 21st anniversary ng LTFRB ay ito: gagawin ng pamahalaan ang lahat ng makakaya upang mapagpatuloy ang nasimulan na nating pag-angat ng ating ekonomiya.

Sa inyong lahat, Mabuhay! At sana patuloy ang inyong kaunlaran.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). PGMA's Speech during the Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB) Launching Ceremony of its Transport Modernization Program: "Mga Makabagong Sasakyan para sa Kalusugan at Kapaligiran". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121335/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1560&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the declaration of merger of the Lakas-CMD and the KAMPI Parties in Davao region (Region XI)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the declaration of merger of the Lakas-CMD and the KAMPI Parties in Davao region (Region XI)

[Delivered in Apo View Hotel, Davao City, June 18, 2008]

Thank you very much, Secretary Puno, chairman of Kampi. I would like to greet also and congratulate our host, Speaker Nograles, president of Lakas, and all the many VIPs of Lakas and Kampi who are present here today. Congratulations to all of you, to all of us for this merger.

(dialect)...from Luzon and the Visayas, who are also the big leaders of Lakas and Kampi. (dialect)...At the core of those organizations is a strong economy, not just the core but the product that the Philippines has built up under our two parties' leadership now to become one which is helping us meet the challenges of the global surge in the price of food and fuel.

A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar that together our two parties, now to become one, have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country. It is paying off. Our economy's ... reached its highest growth in 30 years last year; the peso is strong; and in the first quarter of the year, approved investments doubled; and we are close to balancing our budget. (dialect)... plus the head of the local government league. Mayor Guico, Governor Ocampo and City Mayor Abalos. (dialect) This collaboration has given the final push to our economic comeback, as a result of which we are able to invest in key sectors. And Nonoy Andaya is here with us to help us make that investment to cushion the harsh impact of rice and fuel on our poor.

And due to our collaboration, we are also able to invest, continue to invest in necessary infrastructure project like roads, like the Manay-Boston road (?) which we should be groundbreaking soon; the Tandag-Butuan Road which will travel on to Molo; bridges like the Bankerohan bridge which opened in time for classes here in Davao City; and we're able to invest in education, to name a few. All the while we are balancing this vital investment with the commitment to meeting our fiscal obligation and balancing the budget in 2010. (dialect)

Peace is a central ingredient in the nation's and island's future. It is a path that we are firmly committed to achieving. This includes defeating the NPA, wiping out the Abu Sayyaf once and for all and returning the Mindanao countryside to the people. I have ordered the AFP to launch a massive manhunt for the kidnappers of Ces Drilon. (dialect). At East MinCom we will also meet with rebel returnees. And I ask the stalwarts of Lakas-Kampi who are here to work for amnesty concurrence which will enable the insurgents to rejoin society. The path of peace also includes working with the MILF to achieve permanent peace in Mindanao.

I would like to announce that yesterday, our National Security Council ...(unclear) government's draft of the ancestral domain agreement in our negotiation with the MILF. So, I now direct our negotiators to present our government position to the MILF so that we can quickly resume the stalled negotiations and hopefully hasten the signing of our final peace agreement with the MILF and bring sustainable peace and development not only to Mindanao but to the country as a whole.

Our choice of candidates in the forthcoming elections of the ARMM is anchored on the commitment of every Lakas-Kampi candidate to work for permanent peace. Later we will open this separator here and officially present our ARMM candidates led by ARMM Governor Zaldy Ampatuan. And I know that you will all join me when I tell them that we, their party mates look upon them, the vanguards of peace and the front liners in the fight against poverty in the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao. I have no doubt that our candidates in the ARMM will win the elections as I have no doubt that our candidates in the next national elections will also win.

So, this early we will ask Zaldy Ampatuan to prepare his plan for a peace offensive centered on expanding the people's economic opportunity. And this early I ask our president Boy Nograles, Lakas president, to convene the party institute so that they can work on refining our party vision and party draft for the years to come. Many things are left to be done. We will continue working to strengthen our merged party to increase the mass of like-minded individuals. We will continue to work hard to fulfill our Philippine reform agenda until the day I turn the national leadership over to my successor who, I'm sure, will be whoever Lakas –Kampi will support.

We will work for victory to propagate our reform agenda. And I depend on you, party mates, to carry on our program and continue to fight for the economy, education and the environment. (dialect) I remain bullish on our country, optimistic about our future and deeply committed that LAKAS-Kampi shall be a force for good of Mindanao, of Region 11, of the entire Philippines .

Congratulations! and.... (dialect)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Declaration of Merger of the Lakas-CMD and the KAMPI Parties in Davao Region (Region XI). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412121254/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1556&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Conferment of the Golden Heart Award

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Conferment of the Golden Heart Award

[Delivered in Washington, D. C., June 24, 2008]

Thank you very much. Thank you, thank you.

Our honorees... Secretary Romulo and the other members of the Philippine delegation, ladies and gentlemen, good evening.

The Order of the Golden Heart represents our nation's humble way of recognizing those who help build life to the noble aspirations of the Filipino people. Relations between the United States and the Philippines will always be close as well as special. In fact, those of BBC poll (?) released this past April our global perceptions towards the US. And you guessed it, Filipinos are, hands down, the most supportive nation of the US in the world.

Against the backdrop of these close bilateral relationships are tonight's... who have forged an even stronger bond between our two nations. We're here tonight to honor our distinct awardees with the Golden Heart Award for their exemplary contributions to the Filipino people, especially to Filipino veterans. The Golden Heart award is given to those with a golden heart. One of these gives hope for our nations and our people.

And so, on behalf of the 85 million Filipinos and their families and friends who make up the four million Philippine-American community, thank you for continuing the deep friendship. Thank you also for your expression of support and... thanks from our friendly half of Congress. And if you appreciate... (unclear) about our Filipinos, and we do hope as you have said that we will find more survivors, and thank you for all of the support that you have given.

And I'd like to take this opportunity to thank everybody here in the Capitol who has expressed sympathy and who has also provided support for our efforts now in the Philippines. And we are very happy to have so many friends in Washington and we are very happy to have the three gentlemen that we are honoring tonight among the leaders of that friendship.

Once again, congratulations!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the Conferment of the Golden Heart Award. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412120357/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1544&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 41st Founding Anniversary of Davao del Sur

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the 41st Founding Anniversary of Davao del Sur

[Delivered in Digos City, Davao del Sur, July 1, 2008]

Daghang salamat, Mark sa imong pagpaila kanako. (applause) Daghang salamat, Governor Dodo Cagas sa imong imbitasyon. (applause) Kami anhi ni sa inyong sa inyong anibersaryo.

Atong mga congressman na Franklin Bautista, daghang salamat sab na unity karon diri sa probinsiya sa Davao del Sur. (applause) Tanang opisyal sa Davao del Sur, kauban na si Mrs. Cagas; si Vice Governor ug tanan mga mayors; mga board members; barangay officials; kaninyong tanan mga kaigsuunan, kauban ko karon sab ang duha a cabinet member: si Jess Dureza nga taga-Digos diay; (applause) ug si Cerge Remonde na inyong guest sa crowning sa inyong Mutya kagabii, (applause) kaninyong tanan mga kaigsuunan, malipayong anibersaryo sa Davao del Sur! (applause)

Sa pagsulong sa anibersaryo sa probinsya, ang labing maayong panahon aron magpasalamat sa mga grasya sa tibuok tuig nga gikan sa Gino-o. Pasalamatan nato ang Gin-o kay usahayra ang mga bagyo diri sa Davao del Sur. (applause) Kay murag ingon ni Governor Cagas kinahanglan maadto ako sa mga laing lugar — 45 provinces ang naga-suffer karon tungod sa typhoon Frank. Ug tungod pa sa ferry apan ang Davao del Sur nalibre ngining mga aksidente. (applause)

The terrible tragedy left in the wake of typhoon Frank and the ferry accident was constantly on our mind during our trip to the United States. Overseeing relief efforts was part of our daily agenda. We were in constant contact with our officials. We directed our operation practically on a minute by minute basis hangtod karon. We have demanded a full accounting of the ferry accident. Ang Coast Guard humingi ng 15 days within which they will submit their findings. We were able to receive extensive assistance to aid in search, recovery and relief.

But now we are happy to be back on Philippine soil and happy to be back diri sa Davao del Sur. (applause)

Salamat usab sa Gin-o nga daghan ug mga resources ang inyong probinsya: mga uma kun di-in matambok ang mga tanom, maayong klima, walay bagyo, katawhan murag sa upat nga bar topnotchers gikan sa Davao del Sur, (applause) kauban na si Governor, (applause) katawhan nga desidido nga gatabang sa pagpa-uswag dili lang sa probinsiya kundi sa tibuok nasod. And that is important. Your beautiful soil, your beautiful climate, your brilliant and productive people because there are big issues rocking the world, namely the high price of food and fuel that is affecting everyone around the globe, particularly the poor. At every meeting during our trip to the United States, we worked to help secure additional funding and support for stabilizing prices and discussing ways to help secure additional funding and decrease our reliance on imported rice and imported oil.

Nipirma si Agricultural Secretary Arthur Yap ug ang iyang counterpart sa America si Secretary ____ sa D.A. sa America bahin sa:

Number one, collaboration on sanitary and phytosanitary measures tungod kay ubsa hay dugay mga sulod sa atong produkto sa Amerika and the use sanitary measures to prevent products from going there. Apan ingon ni Governor Cagas garbo ninyo mga makasulod ang mango gikan sa Davao hangtod sa Australia. (applause) Unta tungod ngining bag-o nga agreement between Secretary Yap sa Pilipinas and Secretary _____ sa Amerika muabot ang panahon nga makasulod sab ang Davao del Sur mango sa Amerika mismo. (applause)

Ikaduha, agricultural market, institutional, and rural development;

Ikatulo, biotechnology and other new technologies;

Ug ikaupat, an improved climate between entrepreneurs of America and the Philippines for agricultural trade and investment.

The trip to the United States affirmed the strong ties between our two nations and advanced important issues we have between us, with the US, our most important strategic ally.

We were able to speak with President Bush, the Speaker of their House, the Senate Majority leader and other officials to press for economic aid, food security and stronger military cooperation.

In this very important presidential year in the US, we were able to conduct far ranging discussions with the Presidential candidates, Senator McCain and Senator Obama. There is a new generation of leadership murag ang bag-o nga generation diri, si Mark Cagas, dito sa America nasab bag-o that will emerge to lead the United States. It was important for Philippine interests for us to have first hand contact with Senators McCain and Obama to discuss US-Philippine relations. We are comfortable that either of these leaders will continue the strong relation between our two countries.

We met with a number of investors and business leaders in New York. We secured new commitments for job creation and investments in the Philippines.

Usa sa mga negosyante kan kinsa kita na kistorya ang Target. Tingali kamo nagabisita sa Amerika kaila ninyo katong target, ang usa ka tinda, ang isa nga importante nga store retail outlet, ug kining Target, daghan na ang napalit nila gikan sa Pilipinas, sama sa mga natural fiber o dried grass, mga storage jars, mga laing-laing items o furniture and also of accessories, labaw pa ang ilang gustong mopalit ni-ining produkto, mga natural fibers, busa gusto nila nga ang raw materials sa ilang mga vendor sigurado. Kay ang mga vendors kay natural fibers sa una pa nakabulu ka na diri sa Davao provinces, sama sa Davao del Norte naan ang mga produkto gikan sa natural grass o dried grass. Apan ang problema, wild kanong mga grass so depende sa availability gikan sa nature apan kini mga dagko nga mga tienda sama sa Target, gusto nila dagko sab ang ilang order. So busa importante unta makatanom ang atong mga uma sa Davao del Sur sa grass, dili na ng wild, itanom na nato nga mubaliga sa mga vendors kaya sigurado ang market. So mau ang atong mga kinahanglan mahimo sukad sa akong pagbisita sa Amerika aron maka-share ang mga probinsiya sama sa Davao del Sur sa mga resulta sa atong international relations.

Ug aron masiguro nga mapadayon ang kalambo-an, kinahanglan ang kalinaw ug seguridad sa Mindanao. We repeat the primacy of the peace process. But we direct the AFP to be vigilant and take appropriate action to protect citizens from harm by elements who disrupt the peace.

Sa ako niaging pagbisita diri dito sa Davao City, na-meeting mi bahin sa kalinaw diri sa Davao provinces, sa Region 11, sa gitawag nilang Eastern Mindanao Command ug dako giyud ang kinahanglang mahimo alang sa kalinaw diri sa Davao provinces ug dako ang mahimo ug atong bag-o nga Chairman sa Regional Peace and Order Council, walay laing kundiri ang Gobernador sa Davao del Sur, si Governor Dodo Cagas. (applause)

Atong pag-abi-abi usab kan Dodo ang gi-upgrade nato nga provincial hospital gakanina dunay gipadak-ang' Outpatient ug naapa kamo bag-o nga under construction nga Pediatric Center. (applause) Kini ang usa nga example sa partnership between the national government and the provincial government of Davao del Sur. Mao kanunay ang gifollow-up ni Congressman Mark Cagas kanako dito sa Manila, (applause) kaingwan niya pet project ng iyang amang kining upgrade sa inyong ospital, so congratulations sa atong gi-inaugurate gakanina.

Gipatindog sab nato ang tulay sa Hagonoy. Nahuman na ba? Human na? ongoing karon.

Ug Gusto usab nato pa-lambo ang Southern Davao del Sur ang JAGS-CT o Jose Abad Santos-Glan-Saranggani Cooperative Triangle. (applause)

Dito sa Pikas, nagpatindog ug mga pantalan sa Glan, gusto nato nga maconnect ang Glan diri sa Davao del Sur — ang Glan Abad Santos Road. (applause) Ingon ni Governor Cagas nahuman na ang dito sabahin sa Glan, so karon kinahanglan, mahimo nato ang Abad Santos portion. (applause) Naakita ug bag-o nga Secretary, sa DA, si Undersecretary Momo, asan siya? Okay. Nagikan siya sa Caraga ... ngano siya ang gipili ni Secretary Ebdane nga mu-appoint ko isip undersecretary tuod kay dito sa Caraga nga lisod kayo mga kalsada basta naako ug direksyon sa iya, o sa kining adlaw kinahanglan mahuman kining kalsada, nangahuman ni Director Momo, (applause) so karon ang atong bag-o nga direksyon sa iya, katang Glan Abad Santos Road, gakanina, kaistorya ko si Secretary Ebdane, naakita ug bag-o na 100 milyon pesos release kinahanglan mao ang imong inaugural duty isip undersecretary sa Mindanao, director.... Layo kaayo ang Abad Santos busa ingonamo ni Secretary Ebdane basig kung lisod alang sa mga private contractors bisan ang engineering brigade sa armed forces ang makaconstruct aron paspas ang construction ug maabot (applause) ang kauswagan dito sa Abad Santos. Kay gusto nato, tibuok Davao del Sur, maduol sa palengke, kay ang produksyon sa bugas sa Davao Del Sur, garbo ninyo. (applause)

Ang labing-taas nga productivity sa tibuok nasod Pilipinas, aniya diri sa Davao del Sur. (applause) 5.6 tons kada hektarya. Ug kung magpabiling' makugi sa produktibidad ang katawhan dinhi, sama sa inyong na-andan, ug kung mo-paspas ang uban nga maapas ang uban mga probinsya, moabot ang atong nasod sa self-sufficiency.

Apan in the meantime, bisan naapak kita ug 10% sa tibuok ... sa nasod, nag-iimport nato, garbo sa Davao del Sur nga kamo, nag-i-export sa mga laing probinsiya sa inyong produksyon. (applause)

So nalipay kong makapabisita diri sa Davao del Sur para makapag-abi-abi kaninyong tanan sa inyong mga kontribusyon sa atong nasod, ug aron makaistorya saon sa ang gusto sab tibuok nasod nga mahatag diri sa Davao del Sur. Busa kaninyong tanan, malipayong anibersaryo! Tuod nga garbo ninyo na kamo taga Davao del Sur.

Daghang salamat kaninyong tanan. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the 41st Founding Anniversary of Davao del Sur. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412120235/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1625&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 61st Anniversary of the Philippine Air Force

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the 61st Anniversary of the Philippine Air Force

[Delivered at the Mactan Air Base, Lapu Lapu, Cebu City, July 2, 2008]

Thank you very much, Secretary Teodoro, for your introduction. Commanding General of the Philippine Air Force General Cadungog, our host for today's celebration; the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of the Philippines General Yano; commanding General of the Army General Ibrado; Vice Admiral Calunsag; our all other officials of the Armed Forces and the Air Force; Governor Garcia; Congressman Salimbangon; Congressman Gullas; and the other officials of the Province of Cebu; Secretary Remonde and Secretary Esperon and other appointees of our government; our awardees; men and women of the Air Force; ladies and gentlemen.

Congratulations to the Air Force on your anniversary!

I would like to start by expressing a personal tribute to the Air Force on the occasion of your anniversary. I have entrusted my life to the Air Force. The head of our Presidential Security Group Brigadier General Celedonio Boquiren is from the Air Force. His immediate predecessor and now head of the Intelligence Service of the AFP Brigadier General Romeo Prestoza is from the Air Force. The head of the Presidential Guard Battalion Lt. Colonel Ralph Mamauag is from the Air Force. Your Commanding General Lt. General Pedrito Cadungog was the head of my Presidential Air Lift Wing. Thank you very much Philippine Air Force for your care for me and my family.

Today, of course, we honor not just those who take care of me and my family but we honor those who have risked their own lives to save others. Our Gold Cross awardee won his award in battle, but most of the other awardees are those who have won their awards by saving other people's lives or incidentally Troop Commander, Gibtikas Pahinga.

Since General Cadungog was my – was the head of my Presidential Air Lift Wing I was comfortable enough to ask him on a very short notice to transfer your anniversary celebration to Cebu, coming on the heels, as he has said, of the terrible tragedy left in the wake of the typhoon and the ferry accident. Because we want to focus attention on the heroism of the members of the Philippine Air Force who flies, search, rescue and relief mission out of these days and to pay our respects to the casualties of the calamity, most of whom are the Cebuano victims of the ferry accident.

Dahil balita na ang pagdating ng bagyo ilang oras bago ako umalis patungong Estados Unidos, noong gabing iyon bago ako umalis, pumunta muna ako sa Villamor Air Base, upang tiyaking handa ang Air Force tumugon sa pagsaklolo o pagtulong sa taong bayan. At pagbalik sa madaling araw unang pinuntahan muli ang Villamor Air Base para kumustahin ang mga nagkakarga ng gamit sa C-130 para dalhin sa Panay Island ang pinakanasalang lugar. Twenty four hours nagtatrabaho ang Philippine Air Force dito sa kalamidad na ito. Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

When I was away, the Presidential planes were used as part of the assets and in fact they were used here in Cebu, in Northern Cebu, especially to help out in search, rescue and relief. The trip to the United States reaffirmed the strong ties between our two nations and advanced important issues with the US, our most important friend and strategic ally. We were able to meet with President Bush, the Speaker of the House, the Senate Majority leader, and other important officials to press for economic aid, food security and stronger military cooperation. We have strengthened military cooperation with the US to continuously implement the Philippine Defense Reform Plan, particularly the capability upgrade program. So, among other things, we expect more skills upgrading programs for our air men and other soldiers sponsored by the US, on top, of course, of the hard assets. For hard assets we are not just relying on the US; we are also relying on the fruits of the reforms of the Value-Added Tax, so that we can finance much of our own modernization. This is why we have been able to set aside billions of pesos for the purchase of new helicopters and not just reconditioned ones. And they will be bidden out soon.

A number of primary and basic trainer aircraft are also coming soon. These should prevent the Air Force from running out of planes and prevent pilots from running out of the Air Force. As for personnel in non-combat missions, PAF reservists, who count Secretary Teodoro among them, have more wings than the Air Force. So, we have a great force multiplier. They can fly planes for peace while PAF regulars press on with missions to end conflict. And because we are so appreciative of the work of the Air Force, the work of the Armed Forces and the work of all government workers, we have a 10% pay increase for all government employees starting this month including all AFP personnel.

With your better pay must come better means to do your work not only hard assets but operating expenses. Secretary Teodoro will make sure that your MOOE for petroleum, oil and lubricants and spare parts is always adequate. With all these to help you do your work even better, may I ask you, may I enjoin you, brave and hardworking men and women of the Philippine Air Force, as you pro-fly to provide lift, to deliver support, to revive hope, to ensure peace for a nation that is taking off and hoping to rise to the level of first world in 20 years,. I call on you surge on full power, fly safely and press on with your role as the all- embracing wings of our nation.

Once again, Happy Anniversary!

Mabuhay and Thank you!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the 61st Anniversary of Philippine Air Force. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412120143/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1622&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo at the Groundbreaking Ceremonies of Shangri-La Hotel

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines At the Groundbreaking Ceremonies of Shangri-La Hotel

[Delivered at The Fort, Taguig City, July 3, 2008]

Thank you very much Secretary Yap for your introduction.

Sir Robert Kouk, Ambassador Cojuangco, our three Senators Ed Angara, Loren Legarda and Chiz Escudero, Cabinet members, Mayor Freddie Tinga, other officers of the Kouk group and the San Miguel group, ladies and gentlemen.

In the space of the last hour we have seen two laudable objectives. One, that will go a long way to attracting visitors and investors and enhancing our image as a choice tourist destination in Asia; and the other, which will have a great impact towards food self-sufficiency for our countrymen. Both are important, both redound to the benefit of the Filipino people. To the Kouk group, thank you for your faith in the Philippines.

I've met with Mr. Kouk in two of my working visits abroad: in Singapore and in Hong Kong. The purpose of which was to secure new commitments for job creation and investments in the Philippines. And we are happy that our meetings have borne such valuable fruit. We are encouraged by your investing our country. Thank you very much, Sir Robert Kouk.

Shangri-la is one of our image models for demonstrating that the Philippines has become an increasingly attractive location for tourism investments, along with other services that you will see already coming up and still to come up in this beautiful development in Fort Bonifacio. Congratulations to Freddie Tinga and congratulations also to the executives of Fort Bonifacio.

In fact, we think we are the best value and the best place to invest in Asia. We offer a strategic location in a fast growing region. Our work force is well-educated, productive and English speaking. We are cutting red tape, especially, I am sure here in Taguig, to simplify the requirements for investment.

In fact, in the Millennium Challenge Corporation in Washington, when we were talking about our compliance with requirements of the Millennium Challenge for governing well to fight poverty, Taguig was one of our examples of a very business-friendly environment in which it takes only a very short time to start a business. Congratulations, Freddie.

Our strengths are working to sustain our competitiveness for investment. And we are happy to hear that aside from Shangri-la, there will be four other hotels coming up here, but Freddie says Shangri-la will definitely be the most luxurious of them all.

In the rest of our country, other heavy investments have been and are coming in. Sir Robert already talked about Shangri-la Boracay. And we have others — huge investments like Texas Instruments in its way for a fabrication plant in Clark Economic Zone, which is attracting its suppliers and downstream customers to come, and therefore promoting a whole industrial estate within the Clark Economic Zone to cater to Texas Instruments' customers and suppliers downstream.

Korea's Hanjin has a multi-billion dollar shipyard in Subic, and tomorrow we will be inaugurating their first large ship coming out of there. Marubeni, Tokyo Electric, AES and other electric power giants purchased power plants in the Philippines worth billions not to mention Ashmore's purchase of controlling shares in Petron.

During our trip to New York, Libby's foods announced a $500-million investment in a pineapple plantation and processing plant in Bicol. I mention Libby's because as we have said earlier, we are glad to have food investments in our country.

As our speakers have said earlier, there are big issues rocking the world namely, the high price of food and fuel that is affecting everyone around the globe but particularly the poor.

At every occasion, we work to help secure additional support for stabilizing prices and ways to ensure food supplies. That is why to the Kouk and San Miguel groups, thank you for answering the government's call for private sector investment in the issue of food security.

That Southeast Asia's largest food and beverage company and one of the region's largest food, sugar and vegetable oil companies have convened to launch this program feeding the future offers a signal that food security transcends both the private sector, the public sector and private institutions. It demands action from all sectors.

When government and private sector come together for public good, the results can be powerful. So, we thank the Kouk and San Miguel groups for your generosity, for your cooperation in food security.

And may I add, I would also like to thank you because I have a note here that the San Miguel Corporation will be donating half a million dollars for the victims of typhoon Frank, and that the Kouk Group of Companies will also donate half a million dollars to match the donation of San Miguel Corporation.

Thank you, thank you, thank you and see you all again when we inaugurate Boracay Shangri-la in November.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo at the Groundbreaking Ceremonies of Shangri-La Hotel. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412120050/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1620&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo at the Hanjin Subic Shipyard

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
At the Hanjin Subic Shipyard

[Delivered at the Redondo Peninsula, Subic Freeport Zone, Zambales, July 4, 2008]

Thank you Secretary Pamintuan for your introduction. Other Cabinet members, Chairman Nam Ho Cho and the other officials of Hanjin; Chairman Papadimitriou and your beloved parents; and the other officials and guests. Our friends from Greece, our Father of Subic, Senator Richard Gordon, Governor Deloso and Governor Tet Garcia, Congressman Magsaysay, and Congressman Monico Fuentabella, Mayor Jeffrey D. Khonghun, and the other officials of Subic, the host municipality. Chairman Salonga, Administrator Arreza and the other officials of Subic, not to mention, our very, very proud work force that we all proud to have.

Ambassador Hong Jeong-KI of South Korea and the Charge-de-affairs of the Greek Embassy, Philippine Ambassador to Greece, Bobbi Tiglao, Mr. Shim.

I had mentioned already our Cabinet members, Peter Favila and Cerge Remonde, our beloved countrymen especially the proud people of Zambales and Subic, ladies and gentlemen.

Congratulations to Hanjin for this milestone achievement in shipbuilding. Congratulations too, to the Dioryx Maritime Corporation — the first shipping firm to buy, the first ship from Hanjin Philippines, the largest ship in the Philippines and the first of six ships which had have a total of half a billion dollars worth. Thank you very much and congratulations. Oh, $1.2 billion for the six ships, wonderful.

Congratulations to the workers of Hanjin for your superior Filipinos here. And congratulations to the Filipino people for having the fourth largest shipyard in the world. We are very proud of that.

This very first ship that sails out of Hanjin's Shipyard, the largest ship ever built in the Philippine, M/V Argolikos, is a marvelous showcase of sound engineering and design, completed six months ahead of schedule. This 41,000-ton container carrier, its brings pride to its creator, it brings pride to us as the host of its creation. M/V Argolikos shows off to the whole world the excellence of the Filipino workforce in building vessels sailing the seven seas. Noong araw, kilala ang ating mga Filipino dahil magagaling na mga seamen, ngayon, kilala na rin, dahil magagaling sa paggawa ng mga seacraft.

Kaya, lalung-lalo na, congratulations sa lahat ng mga manggagawang Pilipino na nakaparte sa paglikha nitong higitang barko. And we thank Hanjin Philippines and the Dioryx Maritime Corporation for giving us this opportunity. I remember three years ago, almost to the same date, July 2005, when Congressman Monico Fuentabella of Negros, of Bacolod, brought Mr. Shim to me in Malacañang to tell me Hanjin is going to put up a $1-billion dollar investment to the Philippines. I said, wow, that's fantastic and not very long after, we were here groundbreaking the $ 1.7 billion Hanjin Shipyard.

A massive boost to the Philippines' bid to be the best value for investment in Asia. So today, we see the first fruit of Hanjin's investment in this shipyard. And we are elated and proud. Hanjin is helping secure our country's place as an attractive investment destination. It is a display of our countrymen's skills and work ethic. Hindi lang kayo magagaling, masisipag at may malasakit. And we are happy to hear that at the end of the day Hanjin will have created at least 21,000 new jobs here.

We join Hanjin in looking forward to the five other ships of Dioryx that will be built here. One is being built, we look forward to its christening also this coming November and we look forward to ask other vessels for other international companies.

Our vision, as Armand Arreza said, there are three ship building or ship-related establishments here in Subic. Our vision is to develop the Clark-Subic corridor into the most competitive international service and logistics center in the region. The Clark-Subic corridor is at the northern edge of the superregion that we call Luzon Urban Beltway which extends all the way from Subic-Clark through Metro Manila through Calabarzon to Batangas Port. The economic activity along this beltway generates 55% of national economic production. And therefore, the biggest challenge of this beltway is to remain competitive.

The Clark-Subic corridor literally opened a few months ago when we inaugurated the Subic-Clark Expressway. Businesses can now optimize the services of the Clark International Airport and this beautiful Subic International Airport linked by a half-hour drive, like similar seaport-airport, tandems across the Southeast-Asian region.

And to our friends here, our Korean friends here, KAMSAHAMNIDA for keeping faith in our country and our people.

May ships built in this shipyard and hopefully, very soon also in the shipyard of Mindanao from Hanjin, sail over the seven seas of the world for many years.

Thank you for your investment in Asia.

Mabuhay ang Hanjin.

Mabuhay ang Dioryx.

Mabuhay ang Pilipinas.

Maraming salamat sa inyo.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo at the Hanjin Subic Shipyard. Retrieved https://web.archive.org/web/20100412120027/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1617&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Opening Ceremonies of the 8th 'Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Science and Technology Week and the 50th National Science and Technology Week, July 7, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Opening Ceremonies of the 8th ASEAN Science and Technology Week and the 50th National Science and Technology Week

[Delivered at the World Trade Center, Roxas Blvd., Pasay City, July 7, 2008]

Good morning. Welcome to all our guests from all over ASEAN! It's an honor for us to host this very important sets of conferences on this very happy 50th anniversary of the Department of Science and Technology. Happy anniversary, DOST!

On this 50th anniversary of our DOST, thank you all for gathering to help further our collective goals of peace, security and sustainable development through science and technology. On the part of the Philippines, to pursue our vision to join the First World in 20 years. We have proclaimed technology as the foundation of future economic development.

Our Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan defines a strategy to further S&T and mobilize our advances through a four-pronged approach: first, enhancing the competitiveness of our human capital; second, developing a critical mass of scientists and R&D personnel; third, speeding up knowledge creation and dissemination to push productivity; and fourth, improving the mechanisms that promote technology-based entrepreneurship.

Even as we pursue the vision of reaching first world in 20 years, we remain focused on solving everyday problems. We are focusing on fighting for the average Filipino. Therefore, we are focused on putting food on the table. To put more money in poor people's pockets so that they can afford the higher world price of food, the programs of DOST include improving productivity in coconut areas, where we have a million farmers. For instance, we want virgin coconut oil to be as familiar in kitchen cabinets as olive oil.

Through its research projects carried out in various laboratories such as those of DOST's own Industrial Technology Development Institute and Ateneo University, the DOST is speeding up the development of physico-chemical and biological studies for virgin coconut oil to ensure its high quality in international and local markets. It is carrying out clinical tests to verify the therapeutic claims for this very simple yet very useful coconut derivative. Another good example of a coconut derivative is a dye that went into this particular dress I'm wearing. So, these are examples of how an indigenous product like coconut can make its mark in this modern day and age.

Our government is investing a special three billion-peso fund in research and development technology between 2007 and 2010, including the Science and Technology complex at the University of the Philippines headed by our scientists of ASEAN for this year. This is to promote engineering R&D activities in the country at a significant scale in order to modernize every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the Philippines to propel economic growth. Modernization will need, indeed, as we said in our Medium-Term Plan a critical mass of R&D-capable manpower to bring our country to first world in 20 years. Since last year, a Science and Technology consortium of universities headed by the University of the Philippines has been offering scholarships under our R&D development program for masters and doctoral degrees in Science and Engineering.

In this year's budget, the DOST received the largest percentage increase — 51 percent. Our research and development efforts prioritize food and agriculture, energy, public health, information and communication technology, and the environment, including disaster prevention. National know-how shall advance the three priority E's of our country — Economy, Education and Environment.

The best response by the Philippines to the rise in global commodity prices today is: if on the liability side of the national balance sheet we sustain a loss from rising prices of commodities that we import, that is oil and rice, then we should endeavor to generate compensating gains on the asset side through the commodities we can export. This asset side consists of “hard” commodities such as primary products supplemented by “soft” commodities such as outsource business processing under the leadership of our chairman of ICT Secretary Rey Chua seated in the front row. In the new exciting world of ICT, we now have the Cyber Corridor which encompasses the business process outsourcing centers. This corridor runs the whole length of the country from north to south. It has been configured by the Business Processing Association of the Philippines to include aside from Metro Manila, which is ranked number two next only to Bangalore in International Data Corporation’s list of Top 20 Outsourcing Cities in Asia and the Pacific, we have the 24 next wave centers: Tuguegarao, Baguio, Dagupan, Urdaneta, Cabanatuan, Clark, San Fernando in Pampanga, Subic, Cainta, Bacoor, Santa Rosa, Lipa, Batangas City, Camarines Sur, Legazpi, Iloilo, Bacolod, Dumaguete, Cebu, Leyte, Cagayan de Oro, Davao and General Santos — that comprises our Cyber Corridor.

To provide the resiliency and redundancy needed to protect our cyber services from interruption, such as what happen for a very short while during the Taiwan earthquake, the new international broadband links of the two telecommunication giants, PLDT in La Union and Globe in Cagayan, both in northern Philippines, will be operational in 2009. So, no tsunami or earthquake, nothing will interrupt gateway services to the Philippines.

We look at science and technology to do these things only as examples. We look on science and technology to do many other things to put food on the table, to save lives and prevent calamities, to harness renewable and indigenous energy, to cure and prevent illnesses, and to create more high-quality jobs. And I know that all the ASEAN has this same aspirations. So, I thank you all for working together to achieve ‘One Caring and Sharing’ ASEAN community through the empowerment provided by Science and Technology.

Maraming salamat. Welcome to the Philippines.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the Courtesy Call of the delegates to the 4th Annual Ambassadors/Consuls General and Tourism Directors Tour (ACGTDT) of the Philippines

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Courtesy Call of the delegates to the 4th Annual Ambassadors/Consuls General and Tourism Directors Tour (ACGTDT) of the Philippines

[Delivered at the Ceremonial Hall, Malacañang, July 14, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Ermita.

Secretary Romulo, Durano, Favila; Ambassadors Gaa and Brillantes; our Consuls General and Consuls, Honorary Consuls; Tourism officials; our Balikbayans; ladies and gentlemen.

I join Secretary Romulo in welcoming you to Malacañan Palace.

This is an annual event now, as our Speakers have said, and it has consistently drawn hundreds of participants since it started in 2005. In fact, this has become such an important occasion for us. Secretary Favila remembers that in the 2005 visit, that was the time when I announced Secretary Favila as the new Secretary of Trade and Industry, and now here he is serving you the people of the Philippines from America and Canada. Secretary Durano was afraid that because of the global crisis and the slowdown in America we would have a much smaller number this year. But here you are, all of you, thank you for being here.

We are pleased to see that many of our kababayans from the United States and Canada are eager to participate in this Tour. Some have joined the Tour even more than once. So, welcome to the second and third timers who are here today. And your applause to Secretary Romulo said that we should do this twice a year, upon the recommendation of Secretary Durano, is a testament to your desire to reconnect with your proud, colorful and unique cultural heritage. It's also perhaps an indication that this has become a new tradition of sorts, one that we look forward to with anticipation each year, like a grand homecoming or family reunion.

So, we hope that you will encourage your friends and colleagues to join this Tour in the future, so that they also may be able to share in this tradition.

Let me say once again, that Filipinos in the United States and Canada are truly a significant and positive force for development.

Four million-strong in the U.S. now and half a million-strong in Canada, you are an important partner of Government in ensuring that the Philippines remains firmly on the path of progress.

Your remittances, make up the bulk of the record-setting 16 billion dollars that we received in remittances in 2007, and therefore you have helped fueled the growth of the Philippine economy.

In fact, our GDP growth is 5.2 percent but because of your remittances our GNP growth remains at 7.0 percent. Thank you very much for that. Your investments in small and medium enterprises have fanned the flames of entrepreneurship among your siblings, children, nieces and nephews. Your investments in real estate have been instrumental in renewing the real estate market during my administration and sustaining its considerable growth.

And now you might have noticed our Philippine Stock Exchange is courting your investments as well. You are a crucial part of Team Philippines. We encourage you to continue championing Philippine initiatives aimed at lasting peace and development.

On our part, in the Philippines, we continue to build bridges and neighbors, and strengthen ties with allies around the world, especially America. That is why your Tour is important. But at the same time, at this moment in world history, with the rapid rise in food and fuel prices, which you're also experiencing as the whole world is experiencing, the Philippines must take greater control of its own destiny. We must become more self-reliant and self-sufficient.

We are in uncharted waters that we must navigate in the new and uncertain era.

The world crises did not catch us unprepared or without reserves.

We took hard decisions several years ago, hard on our people, unpopular with big business, but good for the country, as events have shown beyond any doubt.

These hard decisions were intended to raise new revenues, large amounts of new revenues from bold fiscal reforms — more money for more bridges, roads, ports and other infrastructure to create more opportunities for new wealth and new jobs, all towards a self-sufficient, self-reliant, strong republic.

With more money, we spent a lot on health and education, we spent a lot to train and retrain a growing workforce. And not just for specific tasks but for whatever challenges a wayward world economy may throw up.

And because we have been prepared for it, we have been able to shield our nation from the worst effects of food and fuel crises worldwide.

Had we acted differently, or not acted at all, all would be lost today.

So we remain committed to the path we have taken. The best solution is the one that has worked.

We remain on track and firmly focused on getting the country well on the road by 2010 to first world, like what you are enjoying, in 20 years.

We are sticking to and we are widening the fiscal reforms that have earned us the respect of international finance bringing our interest rates down and making our peso stronger. We shall plant them deeper in the structures of government of the economy. All this is for the benefit, not only of our people tomorrow, but the next President as well.

With the fiscal wherewithal bestowed by our reforms, we are now focusing on the day-to-day problem... we can focus on the day-to-day problems that have taken all countries by surprise including the U.S. in the world food and fuel crises, while continuing to invest for a better tomorrow.

All over the world food prices have spiked. In Thailand — from whom we buy rice — rice is 56 pesos per kilo, in Vietnam 67. So when we have commercial rice at 35, that's a blessing. Our subsidized rice is 18.25 and 25 pesos; Indonesia's subsidized rice is 25.30 and Malaysia's is 27. Either we are all handling the crisis well or equally bad.

The prospect of a real world food shortage has generated a real world crisis. Some say it is due to speculation, as money moved from subprime mortgages to commodities, and to food and now to fuel. You know very well the subprime events in the U.S. Others point to the very real increase in demand as millions more Chinese and Indians move up to the middle-class.

But when it comes to food and fuel, definitely, we cannot run the risk of no one selling us both unless we pay impossible prices. National food self-sufficiency and national fuel conservation are now entrenched as the first principle of statecraft. And that is why having prepared for this, we have adequate supplies of rice today, and we have a solid plan to reach self-sufficiency in the very near future.

We spent the last two years preparing for such world crises in two ways: first, by increasing productivity, with the help of the International Rice Research Institute which you have visited. Second, by increasing demand with bigger incomes and smaller income tax bites. Today, minimum wage earners no longer have to pay income tax.

We should have the world food crisis well in hand in the Philippines, with the programs we launched, combined with more vigilance over prices and greater severity against price manipulation.

In disaster-stricken areas such as Panay — and I understand you will be visiting Iloilo soon, you will see the devastation there — Panay, Romblon and Masbate, the Department of Social Welfare and Development has a cash-for-work program. This is part of the 1.7 billion pesos released for relief, recovery and rehabilitation from typhoon Frank. But I take this opportunity to thank our Filipinos in the U.S. and Canada because you have been so generously sending over support for our calamity victims. Maraming salamat.

We are clustering the programs of DSWD, Department of Health, GSIS, SSS, and other anti-poverty agencies into a National Social Welfare Program to shield the poorest from these ongoing global-wide developments.

But our best response in the longer term to the global commodity crisis is this: What is lost in rising costs of commodity imports like oil and rice must be offset by increasing volumes and hopefully increasing prices of commodity exports, whether hard commodities like primary products or soft ones like tourism. Whereas, Secretary Romulo said our tourism is going to be three and a half million this year; five million hopefully by 2010. But remember before our administration started it was not even one million, so it has increased indeed by millions. And we thank... it's still our number one source of tourism, U.S. and Canada? Okey. Another source of soft commodity exports to earn us the dollars to buy petroleum and food is the Business Process Outsourcing, where we rank second only to Bangalore.

And in all of these means, whether it is disaster response or building up tourism or building up primary exports or building up BPO, we acknowledge the role that the private investment, both domestic and foreign, especially American makes to our development. Filipino and foreign businessmen and especially Fil-Ams and Fil-Canadians are an important part of the Philippine economic success story. Maraming salamat din sa inyong lahat.

International finance agrees we are making important progress. International credit rating agencies like Moody's, Standard & Poor and Fitch have kept their positive or stable outlook on the country. A couple of years ago, we tasked Secretary Peter Favila to head our Competitiveness Council and we are happy that the World Competitiveness Yearbook, the latest edition, shows a remarkable improvement of five notches in the rating of the Philippines.

So as you wind up your brief official tour, and go on to your post-tour, we hope that you experienced first-hand that the Philippines is truly what the credit rating agencies and the Competitiveness Yearbook say.

And we count on you to spread the good news about the Philippines to your loved ones and our other kababayans and friends in the United States and Canada.

Mabuhay! Welcome muli sa inyong lahat!

Maraming salamat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). PGMA's Speech during the Courtesy Call of the delegates to the 4th Annual Ambassadors/Consuls General and Tourism Directors Tour (ACGTDT) of the Philippines. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115939/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1613&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Forum on Alternative Fuels for Public Transport and Launching of Department of Transportation and Communications' "Katas ng VAT: Microfinance for the Wives and Immediate Families of Public Utility Drivers and Conductors", July 16, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Forum on Alternative Fuels for Public Transport and Launching of DOTC's "Katas ng VAT: Microfinance for the Wives and Immediate Families of Public Utility Drivers and Conductors"

[Delivered at the Philippine Trade Training Center, Pasay City, July 16, 2008]

Unang-una, congratulations at salamat sa DOTC sa mabilis na pagtugon sa utos na tulungan ang mga driver ng jeep at iba pang pampasaherong sasakyan sa panahong ito sa biglaang pagtaas ng presyo ng langis at iba pang biling sa buong mundo hindi lamang sa Pilipinas.

Ang sunod-sunod na pagtaas ng presyo ng langis ay nagmumula sa pandaigdigang pamilihan. Sa sandaling ito sa kasaysayan ng mundo, sa mabilis na pagtaas ng pangmundong presyo ng gasolina at pagkain coupled with the rising frequency and intensity of disasters, kailangang hawakan ng Pilipinas ang ating sariling kapalaran. We must become more self-reliant and self-sufficient.

Sa bago at di nakasisigurong panahon, we must navigate uncharted waters.

As we ponder the weighty issues we face, the first imperative is to listen. To listen to the cry of our people for succor and support. To ponder the call of well-meaning sectors for longstanding policies to be reviewed. And to lend our ears to one another's insights and ideas, united by a singular wish to ease the pains and address the concerns of ordinary Filipinos.

We have been listening, pondering, lending our ears, and taking needed actions, harnessing all the resources at our command.

To give relief to the millions of our poor burdened by escalating world rice prices, we have maintained NFA rice at 18.25, and to do that we have spent eight billion pesos and counting. Sa Thailand, 56 per kilo ang bigas, sa Vietnam 67 at doon pa tayo bumibili. Ang bigas ng Indonesia na may subsidyo ay 25.30 at ang Malaysia ay beinte siyete. Kaya mas mababa ang ating presyo maging commercial o maging NFA. Either magaling tayong lahat na mga bansa na humawak ng pangmundong krisis, o kasinsama lamang tayo sa isat-isa.

For jeepney drivers and commuters squeezed by the quadrupling of diesel's cost, we are fighting kotong and colorum to boost driver's income while keeping fare increases to the cost of one text message per ride.

Noong isang buwan, magkasama tayong muli, nagpalabas tayo ng apat na bilyong piso mula sa koleksyon ng value-added tax sa langis — dalawang bilyon para sa pambayad ng kuryente ng apat na milyong mahihirap at isang bilyon bilang scholarship at pautang sa 70,000 na estudyanteng maralita. Noon nilabas natin, magkasama tayo, kalahating bilyong pautang upang palitan ang motor ng mga sasakyang pampubliko ng mas matipid na makinang LPG, CNG o biofuels. Na sa pag intindi ko itong forum na ito ay follow up doon.

Doon sa biofuels, upland farmers also stand to benefit from jatropha seedling propagation or planting. Meron ng 900 hectares sa Tamlang Valley sa Negros Oriental, 500 sa Fort Magsaysay, 200 sa Camarines Sur, isang daan sa General Santos City — na bibisitahin ko pagdating ng 21st of July — 60 hectares in Narra, Palawan, 40 para sa TRICAP — yung mga katutubo in Cagayan de Oro, 14 hectares in Bohol, 5 hectares in Cadiz in Negros Occidental.

Mamaya ilulunsad ang kalahating bilyon upang palitan ang makunsumong bombilya sa mas matipid na fluorescent para sa mga palengke, paaralan, ospital, gusali ng pamahalaan, kalsada, tahanan at traffic lights. Doon ako pupunta mula dito, nauna na nga si Mayor Peewee Trinidad dahil participant din siya doon.

Sa sunod na katas ng VAT na nakolekta naman mula Abril hanggang Hunyo, may karagdagang one billion na pambayad ng kuryente ng mahihirap at yung — ginagamit ko itong pagkakataon para ilunsad — kalahating bilyon ng kapital na ipauutang sa mga maybahay at kapamilya ng mga namamasadang tsuper at konduktor.

To put more money in poor people's pockets, our programs include more aggressive microfinance. Cumulative loan releases to low and middle income men and women who want to start or expand their own businesses have reached a102 billion pesos or 36 times more than the P2.8 billion we started with in 2001. Some of the institutions involved are the Land Bank with a loan portfolio of P69 billion; People's Credit and Finance Corporation, P8 billion; National Livelihood Support Fund, P3 billion; DBP one billion and DSWD's SEA-K, P800 million. And before big banking raises an eyebrow, let me say that the repayment rate is 98 percent. Kaya malakas ang loob nating magpahiram sa mga maybahay at kapamilya ng mga tsuper at konduktor.

So today, I take this opportunity to direct all government-owned-and-controlled financial institutions and corporations currently involved in grassroots microfinancing to craft a special, easily accessible, half a billion peso microfinancing program for the wives and the immediate family members of drivers and conductors of public utility vehicles such as PUJs, PUBs, taxis and FX, to be funded from additional VAT revenues resulting from the high price of oil.

I am also enjoining, thru Cerge Remonde who is in touch with them, private-run microfinancing institutions to carry out a similar microfinancing program with the wives and immediate family members of drivers and conductors of public utility vehicles as target beneficiaries.

Kailangan humanap ng naiibang mga paraan sa panahon ng pagsubok. Bago at naiibang pagtugon ang programa sa munting pautang para sa mga maybahay at kapamilya ng mga manggagawa sa hanay ng transportasyong pampubliko. Umaasa tayo na makadaragdag ito sa kita ng kanilang mga mag-anak at hindi aasa lamang sa nag-iisang kita ng tsuper or konduktor sa pamilya.

Mapasibol din sana ng programang microfinance ang masigasig na diwa ng pagnenegosyo na ating pinasisigla para sa paglago ng ekonomiyang pambansa. Alam ng mga maybahay at kapamilya ng mga namamasadang manggagawa ang labas-pasok ng kabuhayan ng lansangan bilang mamimili ng mga produktong pinopondohan ng mga tagalabas at madalas ibinebenta nang hulugan, in schemes defined by their own jargon — “two gives,” di ba yun ang tawag? Two gives or even more.

Dalawang uri ng kabuhayan ang maaaring paggamitan ng munting pautang: kapital sa pagbebenta ng mga produktong kasalukuyang binibiling mga umuutang na kapamilya o puhunan upang sila na ang gumawa ng mga bagay na iyon.

Napakalaki ang mga gawain at biyayang pangkabuhayan na ibubunga ng programa sa munting pautang para sa mga pamilyang magbebenepisyo. At harinawa, mababawasan din nito ang paulit-ulit na pagtaas ng pasahe tuwing aakyat ang presyo ng krudo, na nakabibigat sa ating mga mananakay

Sa mga darating na araw, may kalahating bilyong ding halagang ilulunsad natin upang mapataas ang kakayahan at kasangkapan ng mga munting ospital sa lalawigan, yun bang primary care hospitals gagawin nating secondary care hospitals para magkaroon sila ng delivery caesarian, simple surgery.

Para sa mga kalamidad naman, maglalagay tayo ng bumabagay na halaga para sa Panay at ibang mga pulo na natamaan nung bagyong Frank.

Balancing the budget this year would have been a nice target for our fiscal turnaround. But amid the call to review economic policies, we have in fact done our review months ago. Even then we said that we may need to forego the pleasure of a balanced budget in the present global environment. We announced our willingness to spend as much as 75 billion pesos if necessary on social welfare. But if things improve next year, we will return to our target.

Sa madaling salita, dinig natin ang hinaing at panawagan ng karaniwang mamamayan, at tumutugon tayo, gamit ang lumalagong kaban ng bayan.

The global crises did not catch us unprepared or without reserves. Thank God and thank to the Value-Added Tax.

We took hard decisions, hard on our people, unpopular with big business — but good for the country, as events have shown without doubt.

We raised new revenues from bold fiscal reforms: more money for more and better roads, ports and other infrastructures. With more money, we spent a lot on health and education. We spent a lot to train and retrain a growing workforce. And because we prepared for it, we have been able to shield our nation from the worst effects of the food and fuel crises worldwide.

Our 56 percent energy self-sufficiency is the highest in Philippine history. We are promoting, as we are doing here today, natural gas for transport; we are promoting geothermal steamfields, which are among the largest in the world; we are promoting windmills like those in Ilocos and Batanes; we are promoting solar power that lights up many communities in Mindanao even today.

The new Galoc oil field should produce 17,000 to 22,000 barrels per day, eight percent of our daily oil consumption.

The Renewable Energy Bill has passed the House. It is now up to the Senate.

And so therefore on this day, as we have this forum on alternative fuels, and as we launch the microfinance for the wives and immediate families of public utility drivers and conductors, let me assure our people of one thing: your government shall continue to harness all the resources at our command to help ordinary Filipino families pressured by cost and calamity, at the same time, we continue to build a better tomorrow.

Maraming salamat sa lahat nang tumutulong sa ating adhikain.

Thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during launching of “Palit Bombilya” Electricity Conservation program of the Department of Energy (DOE) Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the attendance to the launching of “Palit Bombilya” Electricity Conservation program of the Department of Energy (DOE)

[Delivered at the Summit Hall C and D of the PICC, July 16, 2008]

Thank you very much Secretary Reyes and congratulations for the SWITCH convenor Ito Carlos and the other convenor, our very distinguished mayors of Metro Manila, other officials present, representatives of different sectors with a stake in energy efficiency, ladies and gentlemen.

Inilulunsad natin ngayon ang isa pang programa mula sa malawakang katas ng VAT na pinopondohan ng buwis sa langis galing sa may kaya. Ngayon, nakatuon ang ating pansin sa wasto at matipid na paggamit ng kuryente. Congratulations kay Secretary Reyes at inorganisa ng D.O.E. itong programang SWITCH upang bigyang kaalaman at pakilusin ang taumbayan para sa mga proyekto kasama na iyong palit ilaw na inilunsad natin ngayon. Sinisimulan ngayon ang SWITCH dito sa kamaynilaan. Sa mga susunod na araw ilulunsad ito sa iba’t ibang rehiyon ng ating bansa. Makararating sa lahat ng Pilipino ang kahalagahan ng wasto at matipid na paggamit ng kuryente. Sa buong mundo nagtaas ang presyo ng langis dala ng mga puwersa sa pandaigdigang ekonomiya at merkado.

The global crisis did not catch us unprepared or without reserves. Thank God and thank the Value Added Tax. We took hard decisions, hard on people, unpopular with business, but good for the country as events have shown beyond doubt. We raised new revenues from bold fiscal reforms, more money for more and better roads, bridges, ports and other infrastructure to create more opportunities for new wealth and new jobs all towards a self-sufficient, self-reliant, economically strong Republic.

With more money, we spent a lot on health , and education; we spent a lot on train and retrain a growing workforce and not just for specific task but for whatever challenges a wayward world economy may throw in. And because we prepared for it, we have been able to shield our nation on the worst effects of food and fuel crises worldwide. So, we remain committed to the path we have taken, the best solution is the one that has worked.

With zero tariff on oil starting last month, we have curbed pump price increases to some degree. But refilling other taxes on oil and power will strip the vast majority of our people of the means to ride out the world food and energy crisis. In our discourse on the most effective solutions to our people’s travails, we will not agree on everything. It’s easy to understand why many would want to see taxes on oil and electricity removed but we have to carefully address some hard questions. If VAT on oil and power is lifted, how do we replace more than P70 million in revenues, mostly used to fund projects for the poor? VAT boosted investor confidence in recent years. From P56.50 to $1 the peso strengthened to P40.23 before the oil and rice imports brought it back to P45.55. Imagine, if without VAT our starting point was P55.00. Wouldn’t the removal of VAT erode confidence, lift exchange rates, lift interest rates and therefore raise cost anyway and slow down the economy?

Will scrapping VAT not be pro-rich who consume 84 percent of energy products . Isn’t it better to use the VAT collected mainly from the well-to-do for direct assistance to sectors hard-hit by rising global prices of food and fuel? Like for instance, this movement as Ito says, he’s been in the energy conservation movement for 13 years. And I remember the movement to switch to fluorescent has been there since 2005. It was supposed to be done last Christmas. It was supposed to be launched last January. Why did it take so long? Because we needed funds to be able to make the many who cannot otherwise afford the initial purchase, make them be able to afford it now. And that is the reason why as we launch this program, this is part of the fruits of the VAT collections on the additional price of oil in the first three months of this year of P4 billion. We allocated P1 billion of that to help 4 million poorest of the poor families pay their electric bills. We allocated half a billion to be able to help the transport sector shift to cheaper fuel like LPG, CNG and Biofuels. And we allocated another half a billion to be able to provide scholarships and student loans for college students whose families have to pay higher electric bills. And now for this Palit Ilaw we are allocating P500 million to fund the procurement of fluorescent bulbs.

We have come too far, made many sacrifices on the hard but wiser road taken to turn around now and give up enduring strengths for popular but counter productive short term gains. Yes, let us discourse, debate and without delay decide, but wherever our discourse leads let me assure our people of one thing, your government shall continue to harness all the resources at our command to help ordinary Filipinos pressured by cost and calamity like, helping them switch to fluorescent while still pursuing investments needed in our people, our infrastructures and our institutions.

National Fuel Conservation is now entrenched as a first principle of state craft. All government agencies have to reduce their energy bills by 10 percent. At gaya ng sabi ko, para sa proyektong Palit Ilaw, kalahating bilyong piso mula sa dagdag na kinita ng VAT ang inilaan sa tulong ninyong lahat upang himukin ang lahat ng Pilipino na palitan ang ginagamit an incandescent bulbs ng fluorescent lights. Sinisimulan natin sa pagpalit ng mga bombilya sa mga kalsada, opisina ng pamahalaan, ospital at iba pang pampublikong lugar. At ako ay nasisiyahan na narito ngayon ang mga mayor ng Metro Manila, pati na rin si Congressman Binay ng Makati na nagpakita ng suporta sa programang SWITCH .

Sa mga narito at sa iba pang mga kababayan sa buong bansa kasama ang libo libong pinuno ng lokal na pamahalaan na sumusuporta sa programang SWITCH at Palit Ilaw, sa inyong lahat maraming salamat. Let us switch fluorescent. Let us be for energy fluorescent.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the attendance to the launching of “Palit Bombilya” Electricity Conservation program of the Department of Energy (DOE). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115909/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1608&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the joint regional consultative meeting of LAKAS-CMD and KAMPI

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the joint regional consultative meeting of LAKAS-CMD and KAMPI

[Delivered at the CAP-JH Trade and Cultural Center Camp John Hay Club House, Baguio City, July 18, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Puno sa pagpakilala at salamat sa iyong trabaho para sa merger na ito.

Speaker Boy Nograles, thank you very much also for this very, very important merger in the Cordillera; Senator Migz Zubiri, secretary-general of the party, congratulations also; and of course as Speaker Nograles said, Congressman Maurice Domogan, thank you for going all over the Cordillera to promote this merger the way you went all over the Cordillera in 2004 to make sure that your presidential candidate, me, would win in the Cordillera. (applause)

Governors and members of the Mayors' League, our various Congresspersons who are here today, our different officials both of LAKAS-CMD and KAMPI, other government officials, ladies and gentlemen, congratulations kadakayo amin... kadatayo amin tatta. (applause)

Dakkel nga panagbaliw iti istorya dagiti pagilian iti maaramid no dagiti madaydayaw nga lalaki ken babbai, ket agkakadua para ti maysa nga noble cause. Iti panagkaykaysa ti pigsa iti LAKAS-CMD ken ti KAMPI, iti dua nga kapigsan nga partido iti Pilipinas, iti mangsusulong ken mangiturong iti pagilian tayo tapno maikadua iti First World status dagiti progresibo nga pagilian no sumangpet ti husto nga edad dagiti kayan-anak tatta. So we thank you because our unity will more strongly pave the way to bring our country to First World by the next generation.

Kagabi, kausap ko yung mga MOPC (Manila Overseas Press Club) at binalita ni Tony Lopez, yung kanilang chairman o presidente, na sinabi ng Goldman Sachs, within 20 years, makakasama nga ang Pilipinas sa mga mayayaman na bansa, so our dream will be coming true. (applause) But we can do that if we maintain our solidarity and make sure we promote the right policies between now and 2010 and beyond.

Tunggal maysa, iti LAKAS-CMD ken ti KAMPI ket dagiti nangruna ken kapigsan nga partido iti pulitika iti pagilian. No agkakaysa da, aglalo nga mapa-extend tayo ti kangrunaan nga papel tayo iti pulitika ken panangpasayaat iti nasyon, ken iturong iti pagilian tayo papan ti progreso nga ekonomiya.

Kalpasan na, awan ti agpayso nga diperensya ti ideology dagiti plataporma tayo. Para ti LAKAS-CMD ken ti KAMPI. Ti napigsa nga partido ket adda iti sentro ti estabilidad ti pulitika nga kadua kadagiti susi, it is stable, democratic ken progresibo nga pagilian nga supsuportan iti pinapigsa nga umili.

No pay kasta, patuloy ti panangdingngeg tayo kagaditi kadua tayo. It is even more important for us to be wholly together because due to the world spikes in the price of fuel and food, and the slowdown in the Western economies, we are in an uncertain era, navigating uncharted waters.

National food self-sufficiency for the Cordillera is so crucial because you supply 70 percent of the vegetables to the major markets of our country. National fuel conservation, both of them, food self-sufficiency and fuel conservation are now entrenched among the first principles of statecraft.

As we ponder these issues, the first imperative is to listen. To listen to our own partymates, to listen to the cry of our constituents for succor and support. To ponder the call of well-meaning sectors for longstanding policies to be reviewed. To lend our ears to one another's insights, united by a singular wish to ease the pains and address the concerns of the ordinary Filipinos who voted us into office.

We have been listening, pondering, lending our ears, taking action, harnessing all our resources.

We have heard our people burdened by soaring rice prices, and we responded positively and decisively. I understand, rice has gone back down somewhat to 35 pesos. In India, rice is 95 pesos per kilo; Thailand, P56; Vietnam, P67; Singapore, P45. All much higher than our P35. And aside from our commercial P35, we have kept rice for the poor at 18.25 pesos per kilo at a cost of eight billion pesos and still counting. Indonesia and Malaysia subsidized their rice also but at P25.30 for Indonesia and P27 for Malaysia, higher than our P18.25 by a mile.

For jeepney drivers and commuters squeezed by the quadrupling of the cost of diesel, we have fought kotong and colorum to boost the income of drivers, while keeping fare increases to one peso, the cost of one text message. Speaking of text messages, I was just in communications, I was just in La Union a few weeks ago because PLDT just finished its gateway, international gateway to make sure that whenever there are weather disturbances around the region, we will continue with our telecommunications. And I suspect one reason why they put that 2nd or 3rd gateway for our country here in the north is because of the progressive, very progressive ICT industry and call center business that is taking place now here in Baguio. Congratulations! to the Cordillera. (applause)

Balancing the budget this year would be a laudable milestone in our fiscal turnaround, but not if it puts a millstone around our necks. Thus, even before we heard the call to review our policies, we already did so. Months ago, we said that we may need to defer a balanced budget in the challenging global environment. We declared our willingness to allocate as much as 75 billion pesos on social spending. And if things improve next year, we will return to our target.

Sa madaling salita, dinig at dama natin ang hinaing at panawagan ng ating mga constituents at tumutugon tayo, gamit ang kaban ng bayan.

The global crises did not catch us unprepared or without reserves, thank God and thank our LAKAS-KAMPI majority in Congress.

You and I made hard decisions — hard on our people, unpopular with big business — but good for the country, as events have shown.

Our preparations now shield our nation from the worst effects of the worldwide food and fuel crises as I illustrated with the difference in price of rice in our country and in other countries.

We spent the last two years preparing for such world crises in two ways: First, by increasing food productivity. Second, by increasing the ability to buy food with bigger incomes and smaller income tax bites. Starting this month, those earning 200,000 pesos a year or less don't have to pay income tax. Again, thanks to our partymates in Congress. (applause) By passing the law on the exemption of minimum wage earners from the income tax, you have provided them an extra 12 billion pesos of disposable workers' income.

With the zero tariff on oil from last month, our pump prices are also lower than many of our neighbors. Philippine diesel is P55.90, I understand. Thailand, P60; New Zealand, P67; Hong Kong, P71; U.S., P60.

Our bold fiscal reforms have also raised more billions for development without relying on outside loans, as in decades past. And we are very, very happy that here in the Cordillera, foreign loan or no foreign loan we will be working on the Halsema Highway — (applause) Baguio, Bontoc to the Rice Terraces. With our own resources, we are building more roads. For instance, the Kibungan-Kapangan and Baguio, that's not in foreign funding. We build ports and other infrastructure, ports including airports. We're building a beautiful airport in San Fernando, La Union. We were about to close the Baguio Airport when that airport is completed because Texas Instruments and many of the other factories want to locate in Baguio and they need flat land. But we hear the cry of our leaders in the Cordillera, don't close the airport yet. (applause). Only I ask you, help me find a flat land so that those investors will still continue to invest in the Cordillera.

These roads open wider areas and more opportunities for new wealth and new jobs. And I don't only mean roads in the Cordilleras but also roads to the Cordilleras. We have built the Subic-Clark-Tarlac Road. Tarlac portion is going to reopen — it open and close again for repairs — it will reopen, I understand, this month but what is also important is that the private sector found our business climate good enough to build on a BOT basis a road from Tarlac to Rosario, La Union so that it will be easier to come to the Cordilleras. (applause) All these opened a way for new jobs, all towards a self-sufficient, self-reliant, strong republic as mentioned by Speaker Boy Nograles.

We can also spend billions more on health and education, and to train and retrain our workforce.

So we remain committed to the course we have taken. The best solution is one that has worked.

We have come too far, made too many sacrifices on the hard but wiser road taken to reverse now and give up enduring strengths for popular but counterproductive short-term gains. But we can continue to exercise political will only if we have the political strength that comes from the unity of our two very strong parties.

In deliberating on the best solutions to our people's travails, we won't agree on everything. But we must try our best to agree within LAKAS and KAMPI.

It is easy to understand why many would want to see taxes on oil and electricity removed. But we have to carefully address some hard questions.

If VAT on oil and power is lifted, how would we replace about 80 billion pesos in revenues, mostly used for the poor? Including the farm-to-market roads that have to built in the uplands like the Cordillera to increase more our productivity.

VAT boosted investor confidence. Interest rates for 91-day treasury bills went down from 7.7 percent to 2.92 percent after VAT. The peso, from P56 to $1, strengthened to P40.20 before bad world economic news brought it back to P45. And we're talking about all of these investors who want to put up call centers here in Baguio or who want to put up their factories if they can find flat land here in the Cordilleras. Wouldn't lifting VAT erode their confidence, and accelerate the rise in interest and exchange rates and raise the cost of living even more? In other words, with or without VAT, with the world being the way it is, prices will go up. But we would rather that those prices will somehow partially go to taxes that we can spend on the poor than that those high prices will just go to the payment of interests which will go to creditors and foreign creditors at that.

And won't scrapping the VAT on energy benefit mainly the well-to-do, because it is the well-to-do who consume 84 percent of oil and 90 percent of power, while depriving the poor of billions in programs now funded by VAT if we remove the VAT? In other words, wouldn't it strip the vast majority of our people the means to ride out the world food and energy crises?

But wherever our discourse leads us, in other words, the national discourse, we in LAKAS-KAMPI must be one in assuring our people of one thing: our LAKAS-KAMPI administration will continue to harness all the resources at our command to help ordinary Filipinos pressured by cost and calamity, while still pursuing needed investments in people and in infrastructure. That must be our message to our people.

Seguraduak nga sumangpet iti aldaw no caano nga ti kinapobre ket naikkaten iti pagilian tayo, ken amin dagiti kailian tayo ket maikadua iti productive workforce iti natalna, progresibo ken maipannakkel nga pagilian tayo. Dayta nga aldaw ket sumangpet babaen ti nagkadua nga trabaho dagiti kadua iti LAKAS ken iti KAMPI.

Tayo, nga kadua ti partido ket ready, we are ready for that day. We should be ready for that day where we can really be part of the First World. Ready not to accept it but ready to bring it about through our work. Patuloy nga pasayaaten ken papigsaen tayo iti mission ken vision ti partido tayo para kadagiti umay nga tawen.

Daytoy ket panawen iti nalaing nga reflection. Masapul nga dagiti leaders iti dua nga kadakkelan nga partido agkakadua tapno maamo-an no kasano nga papigsaen ti sistema met ti pulitika.

Nagkadesisyon iti LAKAS ken iti KAMPI ditoy Cordillera, ken kablaawan kayo iti desision yo, congratulations to all of you! (applause) Simmampet kayon iti decision. I am so impressed when I was invited to come to this consultation for a merger. I said, I don't want to go to consultations, I want to go when there's a merger. And they enumerated all the mergers that they have been decided — very impressive indeed! And I congratulate all our leaders in the Cordillera for such selflessness.

Pasayaaten tayo iti pigsa ken siglat iti partido LAKAS-KAMPI. (applause) Lalaingen tayo iti panagtrabaho para ti maysa nga napigsa nga ekonomiya, papigsaen iti panag-adal ken panan-alaga ti environment. Agtitinulong tayo tapno makaited iti makan ti tunggal lamisaan ken ti trabaho ti tunggal Pilipino.

Agbiag iti LAKAS ken iti KAMPI! Congratulations to all of you!

Mabuhay LAKAS-KAMPI! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the joint regional consultative meeting of LAKAS-CMD and KAMPI. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115828/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1606&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Keynote Address of President Arroyo before the Joint Regional Merger of Lakas CMD and KAMPI

Keynote Address
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
Before the Joint Regional Merger of Lakas CMD and KAMPI

[Delivered at the Cap Trade & Cultural Center, Camp John Hay, Baguio City, July 18, 2008]

Dakkel nga panagbaliw iti istorya dagiti pagilian iti maar-aramid no dagiti madaydayaw nga lalaki, ken babbai, ket agkakadua para iti noble cause.

(We can create big changes in the country when distinguished men and women come together for a noble cause.)

Iti panagkaykaysa ti pigsa iti LAKAS-CMD ken iti KAMPI, iti dua nga kapigsaan nga partido iti Pilipinas, iti mangsusulong ken mangiturong iti pagilian tayo tapno maikadua iti FIRST WORLD status dagiti progresibo nga pagilian no sumangpet ti husto nga edad dagiti kaiyan-anak tatta

(The merging of the strength of the two biggest political parties in the Philippines – LAKAS-CMD and Kampi – will lead the country towards First World status by the time newly born Filipinos reach the age of majority.)

Tunggal maysa, iti LAKAS-CMD ken iti KAMPI ket dagiti nangnangruna ken kapigsaan nga partido iti politika iti pagilian. No agkaykaysa da, aglalo nga mapa-extend tayo iti kangrunaan nga papel tayo iti politika ken panangpasayaat ti nasion, ken iturong iti pagilian tayo papan ti progresibo nga ekonomya.

(Both the LAKAS-CMD and the Kampi are the strongest political parties in the land. United, the more we could extend our foremost roles in the politics and progress of the nation, and direct our country towards a progressive economy.)

Kalpasan na, awan ti agpayso nga diperensia ti ideology dagiti plataporma tayo. Para iti LAKAS-CMD ken iti KAMPI, ti napigsa nga partido ket ada iti sentro iti estabilidad ti politika nga kadua kadagiti susi iti stable, democratic ken progresibo nga pagilian nga supsuportaan iti pinapigsa nga umili.

(In the end, there is no real difference in the ideology of our platforms. For both the LAKAS and Kampi, a strong party is the centrepiece of political stability which is one of the keys towards a stable, democratic and progressive nation that is supported by a strengthened citizenry.)

Iti panagkaykaysa ti pigsa iti LAKAS-CMD ken iti KAMPI, iti dua nga kapigsaan nga partido iti Pilipinas, iti mangsusulong ken mangiturong iti pagilian tayo tapno maikadua iti FIRST WORLD status dagiti progresibo nga pagilian no sumangpet ti husto nga edad dagiti kayan-anak tatta.

(The merging of the strength of LAKAS-CMD and Kampi, the two biggest political parties in the Philippines, will bring and lead the country towards the First World status of progressive nations by the time newly born Filipinos reach the age of majority.)

No pay kasta, patuloy ti panangdingngeg tayo kagaditi kadua tayo.

(Even then, we continue to listen to our fellow party members.)

We are in an uncertain era, navigating uncharted waters.

National food self-sufficiency and national fuel conservation are now entrenched among the first principles of statecraft.

As we ponder these issues, the first imperative is to listen.

To listen to the cry of our people for succor and support. To ponder the call of well-meaning sectors for longstanding policies to be reviewed. To lend our ears to one another's insights, united by a singular wish to ease the pains and address the concerns of the ordinary Filipino.

We have been listening, pondering, lending our ears, taking action, harnessing all our resources.

We heard our people burdened by soaring rice prices, and we responded positively and decisively.... In India, rice is P95 per kilo; Thailand, P56 per kilo; Vietnam, P67; Singapore, P45. Our rice is now P35 (?). We have kept rice for the poor at P18.25 per kilo, at a cost of P8 billion and still counting. Indonesia's subsidized rice is P25.30 and Malaysia's is P27.

For jeepney drivers and commuters squeezed by the quadrupling of the cost of diesel, we have fought kotong and colorum to boost the income of drivers, while keeping fare increases to P1, the cost of one text message.

Balancing the budget this year would be a laudable milestone in our fiscal turnaround, but not if it puts a millstone around our necks. Thus, even before we heard the call to review our policies, we already did so. Months ago we said that we may need to defer a balanced budget in the challenging global environment. We declared our willingness to allocate as much as P75 billion on social spending. And if things improve next year, we will return to our target.

Sa madaling salita, dinig at dama natin ang hinaing at panawagan ng karaniwang Pilipino, at tutumugon tayo, gamit ang kaban ng bayan.

The global crises did not catch us unprepared or without reserves, thank God and Congress.

You and I made hard decisions – hard on our people, unpopular with big business, but good for the country, as events have shown.

Our preparations shield our nation from the worst effects of the worldwide food and fuel crises.

We spent the last two years preparing for such world crises in two ways: first, by increasing food productivity, second, by increasing the ability to buy the food with bigger incomes and smaller income tax bites.

Starting this month, those earning P200,000 a year or less don't have to pay income tax, thanks to our partymates in Congress. That's an extra P12 billion of disposable worker income.

With the 0 percent tariff on oil from last month, our pump prices are even lower than that of many neighbors. Philippine diesel is P55.90. Thailand, P60. New Zealand, P67. Hong Kong, P71. US, P60.

Our bold fiscal reforms have also raised more billions for development without relying on outside loans, as in decades past. With our own resources, we are building more roads, bridges, ports and other infrastructure. They open wider areas and more opportunities for new wealth and new jobs, all towards a self-sufficient, self-reliant, strong republic.

We can also spend billions more on health and education, and to train and retrain our workforce.

So we remain committed to the course we have taken. The best solution is one that has worked.

We have come too far, made too many sacrifices on the hard but wiser road taken, to reverse now and give up enduring strengths for popular but counterproductive short-term gains.

In deliberating on the best solutions to our people's travails, we won't agree on everything.

It is easy to understand why many would want to see taxes on oil and electricity removed. But we have to carefully address some hard questions.

If VAT on oil and power is lifted, how do we replace about P80 billion in revenues, mostly used for the poor?

VAT boosted investor confidence. Interest rates for 91-day treasury bills went down from 7.7 percent to 2.92 percent. From P56.50 to $1, the peso strengthened to P40.20 before bad world economic news brought it back to P45(?). Wouldn't lifting VAT erode confidence, and accelerate the rise in interest and exchange rates, raising the cost of living even more?

Won't scrapping the VAT on energy benefit mainly the well-to-do, who consume 84 percent of oil and 90 percent of power, while depriving the poor of billions in programs now funded by VAT? Wouldn't it strip the vast majority of our people of the means to ride out the world food and energy crises?

Wherever our discourse leads, let us assure our people of one thing: our administration will continue to harness all the resources at our command to help ordinary Filipino families pressured by cost and calamity, while still pursuing needed investments in people and infrastructure.

Seguraduek nga sumangpet iti aldaw no katno nga ti kinapobre ket naikkaten iti pagilian tayo, ken amin dagiti kailian tayo ket maikadua iti productive workforce iti natalna, progresibo ken maipannakkel nga pagilian tayo.

(I assure you that the day will come when poverty will finally be wiped out from our nation, and all Filipinos could join the productive workforce of a peaceful and progressive country that we could be proud of.)

Dayta nga aldaw ket sumangpet babaen ti nagkadua nga trabaho dagiti kadua iti LAKAS ken iti KAMPI.

(The dreamed-of day of progress will surely come because of the combined efforts of the Lakas and Kampi.)

Sitayo nga kadua ti partido ket ready para dayta nga aldaw. Patuloy nga pasayaaten ken papigsaen tayo iti mission ken vision ti partido tayo para kadagiti umay nga tawen.

(We, members of the party, are ready for that day. We will continue to improve and strengthen our mission and vision to prepare for that coming day.)

Daytoy ket panawen iti nalaing nga reflection. Masapul nga dagiti leaders iti dua nga kadakkelan nga partido agkakadua tapno maamo-an no kasano nga papigsaen ti urnos ti politika.

(It is time for deep reflection, thus the need for the leaders of the two biggest political parties to come together to find the best way to strengthen political stability.)

Nagka-desisyonon iti Lakas ken iti KAMPI ditoy Cordillera, ken kablaawan kayo iti desision yo. Simmampet kayon iti decision. Pasayaaten tayo iti pigsa ken siglat iti partido LAKAS-KAMPI.

(The CAR LAKAS and Kampi have decided, and I bless your decision. You have arrived at a decision. Let us strengthen the merged party, LAKAS-Kampi.)

Lalaingen tayo iti panagtrabaho para iti maysa nga napigsa nga ekonomya, papigsaen iti panag-adal ken panan-alaga ti environment. Agtitinulong tayo tapno makaited iti makan ti tunggal lamisaan ken ti trabaho ti tunggal Pilipino.

(Let us do our best in working for a stronger economy, let us strengthen educational reforms and environmental protection. Let us help each other to provide food and job for each and every Filipino.)

Sitayo nga kadua ti partido, ket ready para dayta nga aldaw. Patuloy nga pasayaaten ken papigsaen tayo iti mission ken vision ti partido tayo para kadagiti umay nga tawen.

(We, members of the party, are ready for that day. Let us continue to improve and strengthen our mission and vision for the coming years.)

Agbiag iti LAKAS CMD ken iti KAMPI!

(Mabuhay, LAKAS CMD and Kampi!)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Keynote Address of President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo Joint Regional Merger of Lakas CMD & KAMPI. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115849/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1603&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the upgrading of Datu Odin Sinsuat Municipal Hospital [Filipino]

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the upgrading of Datu Odin Sinsuat Municipal Hospital

[Delivered in Odin, Sinsuat, July 22, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Nasser Pangandaman, ang ating CORD dito sa Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao. Ating iba't ibang mga Cabinet members na narito. ARMM Governor Datu Zaldy Ampatuan, maraming salamat sa iyong words of welcome and support. Congressman Dilangalen and Mrs. Dilangalen, maraming salamat din sa inyong pagdalo dito sa programa na ilulunsad natin ngayon mula sa national government. Mayor Sinsuat ng Datu Odin Sinsuat, iba't ibang mga government officials ng national governments, pati na rin ng Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao, mga taga ospital ng Datu Odin Sinsuat, mga kaibigan...

Noong Hunyo, nagpalabas tayo ng P4 billion mula sa koleksiyon ng Value Added Tax sa langis. Dalawang bilyon para pambayad ng kuryente ng apat na milyong mahihirap. Siguro, Nasser, i-check mo kung mayroon ng tumatanggap dito sa tsekeng iyon o iyong credit nila. Ito iyong mga bumibili ng less than one hundred kilowatts of power a month. Isang bilyon bilang college scholarship o pautang sa 70,000 na estudyanteng maralita. Iyon din sana, Nasser, i-check mo kung mayroong mga tagarito na nakakatanggap nitong scholarship na ipauutang. Kalahating bilyon pautang upang palitan ng mga mas matipid na LPG-CNG o biofuel ang motor ng libu-libong sasakyang publiko. I-tsek mo rin iyon ha? At kalahating bilyong pagkabit ng fluorescent sa mga kalsada, opisina ng pamalahaan, mga ospital at iba pang pampublikong lugar. Kasi kung mapapalitan ng fluorescent ang lahat ng bombilya sa Pilipinas, makakatipid tayo ng lampas P2 billion. Kaya importante iyon. Kasunod naman ng katas ng VAT, may karagdagang P1 billion na pambayad ng kuryente ng mahihirap. Kalahating bilyon para sa matatandang hindi sakop ng GSIS o SSS, at kalahating bilyong capital para sa maybahay at kapamilya ng mga namamasadang tsuper at konduktor, at kalahating bilyon upang mapataas ang kakayahan at kasangkapan ng mga munting ospital sa lalawigan.

Kaya ngayon, naglulunsad tayo itong programang ito, kalahating bilyong pisong programa upang dagdagan ang kasangkapan at kakayahan ng mga primary care hospital para maging secondary care hospital na makakagawa na mga simpleng operasyon, pati pagpapanak ng Caesarean. Ito ay galing sa pondo na nakolekta ng VAT mula Abril hanggang Hunyo. Kaya dito sa Datu Odin Sinsuat, pinili natin na ilunsad ang programa dahil inuuna natin ang mga lugar kung saan mas marami ang mahihirap na pinakanangangailangan ng kalinga. Kabilang ang inyong lalawigan sa ating priority provinces upang pag-ukulan ng higit na serbisyong mabawasan ang kahirapan. Sa ating pagtataas ng kakayahan ng inyong pagamutan, namumuhunan tayo sa inyong mga mamamayan.

Kaya para dito sa Odin Sinsuat Hospital, aayusin itong gusali, aayusin iyong bakod, kasi iyong bakod ninyo, eh, wire, chicken wire. Okay. Barbed wire, hindi naman chicken wire. In fact, kung chicken wire, maganda iyon. Sa Marikina, mga chicken wire ang kanilang mga bakod para see-through at magbibigay ng X-ray. Wala raw kayong X-ray? (Voice: Wala po) Laboratory diagnosis equipment, operating room, mga instrumento, ayun ang ating ibibigay para sa inyo. Kaya ang tseke, ibibigay natin sa inyong regional secretary ng Health ng Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao. Paki-witness nga, ARMM Governor Ampatuan and Congressman Dilangalen.

The sad irony of Mindanao as food basket is that Mindanao, aside from being a food basket, also has the highest hunger and malnutrition.

Salamat na lamang sa nakaraang mga buwan, bumaba ang kagutuman sa Mindanao. After all, Mindanao has the largest field of high productivity, but Mindanao also has six or seven of the 10 poorest provinces in our country.

One of the reasons they give for this unfortunate fact is that the endless conflict has affected Mindanao for so many years. For decades, a comprehensive peace has eluded us, but I am proud the talks will soon resume, and we are on the threshold of peace. If we can truly move from arms to farms in Mindanao, we can give the gift of peace and prosperity to Mindanao and to the whole country. Kaya inaasahan ko ang tulong ninyong lahat para sa kapayapaan at tagumpay ng ating peace talks.

Naging malaki rin ang epekto ng typhoon Frank upang hilahing pababa ang pamumuhay dito sa ARMM at sa mga katabing probinsya. Kami nga ni Governor Sacdalan, nanggaling sa Makilala, palipad dito at nakita namin iyong bahang-bahang lugar. Kaya para sa kalamidad, maglalagay tayo ng angkop na halaga.

Climate change is a key factor in increasing frequency and intensity of typhoon. Over the last 36 years, it cost the country 0.5 percent of the GDP. Our disaster management consists of mitigation, preparation, response and rehabilitation. At para asikasuhin itong apat na pangangailangan ukol sa kalamidad, dito mamaya pagkatapos nitong affair natin, magpupulong ang Cabinet at ang Disaster Coordinating Council ng ARMM upang pabilisin ang pagkilos para sa pag-ahon nitong rehiyon mula sa kalamidad.

The dramatic surge in the price of fuel and food has created a global price crisis unseen since the Great Depression and the wake of World War II. The economic uncertainty moved like a mighty tsunami around the globe affecting every nation, rich and poor. We must continue to build and buttress bridges to neighbors, and strengthen ties with allies around the world to bring in the rice we need to feed our people.

Kanina, nagtanung-tanong ako – dahil kahapon pa ako dito sa Mindanao – kung magkano na iyong bigas sa Mindanao, iyong commercial na karaniwan, doon sa General Santos. Sabi ni Mayor Jun Acharon, P32 to P35. Aba, maganda iyong presyong iyon, eh si Governor Sacdalan sa North Cotabato, sabi mo, Governor, P26, ang ganda-ganda ng presyo. Dito yata sa banda rito sa ARMM ay medyo mataas pa, pero kung naaayos na sa ibang lugar, we can say that we have the world food crisis well in hand for now. We have done this with our farming program combined with more vigilance over prices, and greater sovereignty against price manipulation under the leadership of our rice czar, Arty Yap, na mamaya kasama natin yata doon sa ating Cabinet meeting.

Pero itong umagang ito, sa araw ng panglunsad ng katas ng VAT para sa mga maliliit na ospital, binabati ko ang mga taga-Odin Sinsuat, kayong lahat, doon sa pagkakaroon ninyo ng pinalalaki at pinalalakas na ospital. Hindi kayo pababayaan ng pamahalaan, ngunit kailangan rin ng pamahalaan ang inyong patuloy na pagsusuporta na gaya ng sabi naman ni Zaldy sa kanyang diskurso, lagi naman ninyong binibigay sa mga programang pagtulong at pag-ahon ng buong bansa mula sa kahirapan. Kaya sa inyong lahat, congratulations! At (inaudible) sana, sunod-sunod pa itong mga ospital na maliliit na bibigyan ng kakayahan ng gamit para gumawa ng mga simpleng operasyon. Sa inyong lahat, congratulations sa Datu Odin Sinsuat Hospital!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the upgrading of Datu Odin Sinsuat Municipal Hospital. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115820/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1600&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of the Road Network “Widening and Concreting of Imelda Avenue” and launching of Katas ng VAT for the Elderly: “Tulong Para kay Lolo at Lola” [Filipino]
Talumpati

ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas

Sa inagurasyon ng Road Network “Widening and Concreting of Imelda Avenue” at paglulunsad ng Katas ng VAT for the Elderly: “Tulong Para kay Lolo at Lola”

[Ipinahayag sa Brgy. Manggahan, Lungsod ng Pasig, ika 25 ng Hulyo, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Cabral sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

Maraming salamat naman, Congressman Roman Romulo, sa iyong imbitasyon. At kasama ko ngayon yung minamahal at ginagalang nating ama ni Congressman Roman Romulo, si Secretary Bert Romulo.

Kasama ko rin pumunta rito dahil nagtingin kami sa palengke bago pumunta rito, ang Trade and Industry Secretary, si Peter Favila, taga-Pasig din — ang bahay ba Valle Verde? — Valle Verde, okay. At salamat din kay Kapitan Bobby Bobis at iba’t-ibang mga kapitan na narito ngayon. Maraming pinakilala si Roman sa akin. At siyempre ang ating mga lolo at lola mula Pasig at iba’t-ibang lugar ng Metro Manila.

Una sa lahat, binabati ko ang mga taga-Pasig sa inagurasyon ng inyong mga kalsada. Nandito lang tayo sa Imelda Avenue pero ang ipinagdidiriwang natin ay lahat ng mga proyektong inilakad at pinagtrabaho ni Roman Romulo na mga kalsada dito.

Malaking tulong sa mga mamamayan ng Pasig at karatig-lugar ang mga kalsadang ito. Mas mapapabilis at maginhawa ang inyong mga pagbiyahe. Di ba sa bilis ng progreso ng Pasig eh naging masikip ang traffic? Kaya tuloy nahihirapan pumunta dito yung mga investor na dagdag at saka yung mga nagkokomersyo. Pero ngayon maluwang na maluwang pa at, hindi lamang yun, noong huling binagyo dahil nagawa na itong drainage sa pagsisikap ni Congressman Roman Romulo, tinatanong ko doon sa mga taga-dito, ano, binaha kayo the last time? Hindi na. Okay. O ikaw, ano? Pero nakikita ko yung mga taga-Pasig na constituent mo, Roman, si Evelyn. Sa inyong lugar, binabaha kayo? O, hindi na rin. Okay, mabuti at peryodista yan. Kaya lalong makakatulong pag maluwang at hindi na binabaha, makakatulong talaga ito upang lumago pa ang negosyong dinaraan ng mga kalsadang ito.

At ginamit na namin din ni Secretary Cabral itong pagkakataon na dalhin ang tulong sa mga senior citizens ng Pasig, “Astig Pasig,” kasama ang marami pang mga ibang senior citizens sa buong Metro Manila, pero ito ay magiging programa para sa buong bansa — tulong na nagmumula sa mas malaking Value-Added Tax nitong huling buwan.

Noong Hunyo, nagpalabas tayo ng apat na bilyong piso mula sa koleksyon ng value added tax sa langis, dalawang bilyon para pambayad ng kuryente ng apat na milyong mahihirap. Ito yung mga bumabayad ng less than 100, ‘no? kilowatts? Meron ba sa inyong less than 100 kilowatts ang inyong...? O, ano, nakuha na ba ninyo yung pantawid kuryente? Ay, good. Tumatango sila Espie. Okay? Kasi sabi ni Espie, karamihan sa Metro Manila ay nakakuha na. Okay, so meron pang mga iba, pero makukuha niyo ito doon sa Land Bank, di ba Espie? Sa Land Bank ang mga distributing agent.

Tapos, doon sa VAT na yun ay nagpabigay din tayo ng isang bilyong piso bilang college scholarship o pantang sa 70,000 na estudyanteng maralita; ito naman ay dinadaan sa mga eskuwelahan. Yung pondo nandoon na sa kolehiyo. So yung mga estudyante, pupunta sa opisina ng kolehiyo para makinabang dito.

At meron ding kalahating bilyong pantang upang palitan ng mas matipid na LPG, CNG o biofuel ang motor ng libu-libong sasakyang pampubliko. Ewan ko kung meron ditong mga namamasada, mga operators ng jeepney o bus, sila ang bibigyan ng pautang. Kaya please pupunta kayo doon sa mga bangko gaya ng Postal Bank kung gusto niyong palitan yung makina ninyo na diesel ngayon o gasolina at maging LPG, CNG o biofuel dahil mas mura.

At meron din tayong kalahating bilyong piso pangkabit ng fluorescent sa mga kalsada, opisina ng pamahalaan, mga ospital at iba pang pampublikong lugar. At inaasahan natin na si Congressman Roman Romulo ay sisiguraduhin niya na lahat ng mga yun ay nakikipag-ugnay sa programa ng Department of Energy. Papahiramin din ng pera o kung masyadong mahirap bibigyan ng fluorescent lamp. Pero siyempre ang pagbayad ng kuryente pagkatapos kayo na. Kaya lang mas mura di hamak ang fluorescent.

Sa sunod na 'Katas ng VAT,' may karagdagang one billion na pambayad pa rin ng kuryente ng mahihirap. Kasi Espie, ilan yun? Eight million yung mga mahihirap na nangangailangan ng umento sa kuryente.

Kalahating bilyong kapital para sa maybahay at pamilya ng mga namamasada. At kalahating bilyon upang mapataas ang kakayahan ng mga kasangkapan ng mga ospital... kasama na nga yung sinabi ni Congressman Romulo na tinulungan natin yung ospital dito, yun ay isa ring katas ng VAT. At itong pondo natin ay mga kalahating bilyon din.

At ngayon naman, isang bahagi ng katas ng VAT ay kalahating bilyon para sa mga lolo at lola na hindi sakop ng GSIS at SSS. At kung sinabi ni Roman kanina na nagpapasalamat siya dahil mula ngayon, yung mga nagsusuweldo ng mas maliit sa 200,000 pesos bawat taon ay hindi na mangangailangan magbayad ng income tax. Ibig sabihin nuon, 12 billion pesos sa lahat-lahat ang nagkaroon ng ginhawa, yung mga mahihirap at karaniwang manggagawa. Kung siya ay nagpapasalamat sa akin na tinulong ko yun, ako naman nagpapasalamat din kay Congressman Roman Romulo na siya ay trinabaho yun sa Kongreso. Kaya congratulations, Congressman Romulo!

Itong pandaigdigang krisis, ang kanyang hamon: self-reliance against global imponderables.

Kanina, nanggaling kami ni Peter Favila diyaan sa kabila, sa Karangalan Market. Tinignan yung mga presyo ng bigas. Ay, sa wakas, meron nating nakikitang presyo ng bigas na 32 pesos, commercial. At tumawag ako kay Artie Yap, sabi ko, magkano naman doon sa Pasig? Sa Mutya Market, meron kayong makikitang commercial regular rice, P29; well-milled, P33 hanggang P35. Ibig sabihin yun, mukhang hawak na natin ang sitwasyon ng pagkain.

Itong tagumpay ay pambansang sikap sa mga programang magsasaka, kasama ang higit na pagmamatyag ng presyo and greater severity against price manipulation, sa masigasig na koordinasyon ni Artie Yap, na tinutulungan ng kapatid ni Congressman Romulo, si Undersecretary Berna Romulo-Puyat. Ay, ayun! At tinanong ko kay Roman, kung kasama ang mga LGU, mga barangay officials sa ating pag... yung pagdala ng mga NFA rice sa mga barangay-barangay, oo raw. Kaya salamat sa mga barangay officials, pasalamat din sa mga pansimbang grupo na tumutulong dalhin ang NFA rice sa mga mahihirap. So maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Yung NFA rice na 18.25 subsidized at itong presyong ito ay mas mura kaysa sa ibang mga bansa sa ating rehiyon. Habang kunswelo sa atin na mas maayos ang ating sitwasyon haming sa maraming ibang bansa, walang kapalit ang pagkasolusyon ng problema ng bigas at fuel sa sarili nating bayan.

At sa ginagawa natin, we have to be honest and clear eyed — there has been a fundamental shift in global economics. Ang presyo ng pagkain at fuel ay malamang mananatiling mataas. Yang 32 mababa na kaysa sa mga 40 noong araw. Pero yung mga 22 ganun, baka yun ang sinisikap natin para baka medyo matagal bago natin makita yun sa palengke habang meron namang NFA rice na mas mababa kaysa doon. Wala magiging madali; the government cannot resolve these problems overnight. But we can work to ease the near-term pain and invest in longer-term solutions.

Kaya bahagi ng paginhawa ng kahirapan kasalukuyan ay itong ating programa para sa mga lolo at lola.

Sa hanay ng tinatayang mahigit 5 milyong matatawag na senior citizens, marami naman sa inyo ang regular na tumatanggap ng pensyon, kaya't maituturing na may sariling kita. Ang GSIS, may old-age pensioners, halos kalahating milyon, kasama ang 123,000 na biyuda at biyudo ng mga GSIS members. Ang SSS naman, may old-age pensioners, halos 600,000 katao, at kung isasali sa bilang ang mga biyuda't biyudo at mga may kapansanang tumatanggap ng pension, aabot sa 1.25 million ang mga retiradong tinutulungan ng SSS.

Ang PhilHealth naman ay may nakalistang halos 400,000 na mga retirees na hindi na kailangang magbayad ng kanilang premium. Kung magkasamang bibilangin ang mga retirees na ito at ang mga nakalistang dependents ng mga miyembro, aabot sa dalawang milyong senior citizens ang tumatanggap ng biyaya mula sa PhilHealth tuwing sila ay naoospital.

Ngunit kailangan din nating tulungan ang mahigit tatlong milyong senior citizens na hindi sakop ng GSIS o SSS at maraming hindi rin naka-enrol sa PhilHealth. Kaya uunahin ng 'Katas ng VAT' for the Elderly ang pinakamahihirap na sektor na ito. Kayo yun, kaya kayo ay dinala dito mula sa iba't-ibang bahagi ng Metro Manila dahil kayo ang pinili doon sa survey ng DSWD. Bibigyan kayo ng minsanang halaga ng limang daang piso bilang tulong ng pamahalaan upang mapagaan ang inyong kahirapan.

Kalahating bilyon ang inilaan para sa programang ito, at ito'y makatutulong sa isang milyong matatandang maralita. Ang higit na mabibigyan ng tulong na ito ay yung pinakamahihirap na senior citizens. Dapat lang na kayo ang maunang tumanggap ng tulong upang mabawasan ang inyong dinadaranas na paghihirap.

Kaya pangarap ko sana, sa araw na ito, na patuloy nating susuportahan ang mga programang nagbibigay ng ginhawa sa mga mamamayan upang sabay-sabay nating babalikatin ang mga pasaning dala ng kasalukuyang panahon sa buong mundo — mga pasaning may kabigatan nguni't matitiyak nating may hangganan din basta't tayo ay nagkakaisa at nagtutulungan. Pinili natin itong lugar ng Pasig para ilunsad itong ating programa gawa ng kailangan ang pagtutulungan at ginawa na rin natin ito bilang pagpapasalamat kay Congressman Roman Romulo dahil siya ay isa sa pinakamatulunging congressman para sa akin.

Sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat. Congratulations!

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's Speech during the Inauguration of the Road Network "Widening and Concreting of Imelda Avenue and Launching of Katas ng VAT for the Elderly: "Tulong Para kay Lolo at Lola". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115746/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1594&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Launching Ceremony of “Proud Harvest” Vegetable-Enriched Canton Noodles [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa seremonyang naglulunsad sa “Proud Harvest” Vegetable-Enriched Canton Noodles

[Ipinahayag sa Dagonoy Public Market, Onyx cor. Dagonoy Sts. San Andres, Manila, ika 30 ng Hulyo, 2008]

Maraming salamat Secretary Remonde sa iyong pagpakilala at sa konting pagkwento ng background nitong ating proyektong ito.

Congressman Amado Bagatsing, Mayor Alfredo Lim, congratulations sa inyong dalawa! Sabi ni Amado ito noong araw isa sa pinakamahirap na bahagi ng Maynila — Dagonoy. Ang ganda-ganda na ng ating palengke at itong mga commercial building dito, congratulations sa mga taga-Dagonoy! (applause) Si Joey Concepcion isa sa nabanggit natin doon sa State of the Nation Address dahil sa tulong ng “Go Negosyo!” sa mga maliliit na mga negosyante, congratulations din dito sa launching. (applause) Si Pangulong Colting, pangulo ng Benguet State University, congratulations din! (applause)

I would like to acknowledge the presence also of Special Envoy Carlos Chan (applause) dahil siya ang inaasahan din natin na magde-develop naman ng snacks, Oishi snacks, gumagamit ng vegetables from Benguet. (applause) I’d like to acknowledge the presence also of former Secretary of Trade and Industry, Joe Concepcion and Mrs. Concepcion, (applause) and congratulate the whole family dito sa Golden Anniversary ng RFM Corporation. (applause) Sabi ni Joey ang selebrasyon daw nila ng 50th anniversary ay sa pamamagitan ng hindi itataas ang presyo ng apat na importanteng produktong binibili ng karaniwang taumbayan, baka pa nga bumaba ang presyo in the whole year 2008. Congratulations at maraming salamat. (applause)

Pero ngayon inilulunsad natin itong vegetable-enriched pancit canton na ang tatak “Proud Harvest,” talagang pinagmamalaki natin na ito ay nagmula sa pananaliksik ng Benguet State University. Kay Dr. Rogelio Colting, presidente ng unibersidad, at lahat ng mga guro at researchers ng BSU, sa inyong matagumpay na paggawa nitong vegenoodles. Congratulations! (applause)

Kay Joey Concepcion at sa kumpanyang RFM, na distributor nitong veggie noodles, salamat. (applause) Gaya nang sabi ko, na kilala na si Joey bilang nangunguna sa pagpapalaganap ng maliliit na negosyo sa pamamagitan ng programang “Go Negosyo!” (applause) Malaki ang maitutulong ng RFM ngayon upang makilala ng taumbayan ang kahalagahan ng masustansyang noodles na ito sa pagbibigay-lunas sa problema ng kagutuman.

At kay Cerge Remonde, Director General ng PMS at sa buong PMS, salamat. (applause) Noong Marso, gaya nang sabi ni Cerge Remonde, noong Holy Week nagpalabas ako ng sampung milyong piso upang tulungan ang pananaliksik tungkol sa veggie noodles, dahil si Cerge ay kasama ko nuon at dahil hihingiin namin ang tulong ng “Go Negosyo!” na kabalikat ni Cerge inatasan ko si Secretary Remonde na tutukan ang proyektong ito. Napakabilis ang produksyon, sa loob ng apat na buwan may veggie noodles nang mabibili sa palengke, congratulations! (applause)

Ang noodles na inihain natin ngayon, gaya nang sabi ni Joey, ay nagmula sa kalabasa. Panimulang produkto lang ito. Sa mga susunod na buwan, inaasahan ko ang Benguet State University na maglalabas ng noodles galling sa carrots, saluyot, at iba pang mga gulay, at gagawa rin sila ng iba pang mga produktong pagkain na hango sa gulay kagaya ng snacks na inaasahan natin si Ambassador Carlos Chan naman ay tutulong mailabas.

Pinagsamantala ko nga ang pagbisita sa Benguet noong Holy Week para atasan ang pag-aaral ng paggawa ng veggie noodles na raw materials na ang maaaring kunin sa salad bowl ng Cordillera, at huwag mong kalimutan, President Colting yung pinakbet bowl ng Pangasinan, tulungan din natin gaya ng Villasis.

Sabi ko noon, ang vegenoodles ay maging bahagi ng mga binibenta sa Tindahan Natin stock. Yung mga mahihirap na lugar meron tayong Tindahan Natin, pwedeng ibenta ang veggie noodles doon. Itong programa ay binibigyan ng malaking alokasyon sa pambansang budget itong taon. Ang mga veggie noodles na pinalakas ng gulay ay naging mas masustansya at masarap at mas mura gawin sa pahanong ito kasi lumilipad ang presyo ng arena kaya mas mura ang veggie noodles. At pag-iibayuhin din ang kita ng mga magsasaka, at bibigyan lutas ang problema ng storage kasi ang gulay madaling mabulok kaya pag naprocess sa veggie noodles wala nang mabubulok na gulay.

Pakakanin nitong pambansang proyekto ang ating mga bata, tutulungan ang ating mga magsasaka, at magbibigay sa ating mamimili ng higit at mas mabuting pagpipiliang sustansya.

Sa susunod na linggo mabibili na ang Proud Harvest sa mga palengke ng Cordillera, Ilocos at Cagayan Valley at pati na rin sana dito sa Metro Manila, pati na rin sana dito sa palengke ng Dagonoy. (applause)

Ang veggie noodles at iba pang masustansyang processed food ay kabilang sa ating mga programang naglalayong bawasan ang kagutuman. Hinahatid natin sa mas maraming mamamayan ang masustansyang pagkain sa abot-kayang halaga. Dagdag dito ang paggawa ng pagkaing ganito ay tumutulong din sa paghahanapbuhay ng mga nagtatanim ng gulay.

Ang ginagastos natin para sa ganitong mga programa magtitiyak sa kakainin ng taong bayan ay pawang nangagaling sa Value Added Tax. Ang VAT sa langis at mga produktong petrolyo ang pinagmumulan ng walumpung bilyong piso na ibinabalik ngayon ng pamahalaan sa taong bayan bilang mga programang tumutulong sa mahihirap, nagpaparami ng trabaho, nagpapalaki sa kinikita ng taong bayan.

Kumprehensibo ang ating programa sa pagkain. Sinusunod natin ang istrategyang supply at demand. Sa supply, pinapalago natin ang produksiyon sa pamamagitan ng mga programa katulad ng FIELDS. Kabilang dito ang pataba, irigasyon, pamumuhunan, punla, binhi at mga kagamitan sa pagtatanim at pag-ani, at maayos na distribution system na binubuo ng magagandang kalsada, mga farm-to-market road, mga RO-RO at mga bagsakan ng ani, at pati rin mga Tindahan Natin outlets na nagbebenta ng mura, murang bigas at murang noodles. Iyan ang specialty ng ating Tindahan Natin. Kaya itong noodles na ito ay ibebenta sa Tindahan Natin.

Malaki na rin ang iniunlad ng ating distribution system ng pagkain, magmula noong tinapos natin yung Western Nautical Highway, yung RO-RO van na dumadaan ng Iloilo, Negros mula Mindanao hanggang Luzon noong 2003. Naging mas kaya ang transportasyon ng mga pagkaing bilihin. Yung mga RO-RO ports na nagdudugtong sa ating nautical highway magsisiguro na pare-pareho ang presyo ng ating veggie noodles maging dito sa Maynila, sa Mindanao o sa mga tinamnan ng gulay sa Benguet.

Sa demand side naman, upang maging sapat ang kinikita ng mamamayan para sa pagbili ng pagkain ginagawa natin ang lahat para mas umangat ang pamumuhay at mas dumami ang trabaho. Tinuturuan din ng pamahalaan ang wastong pamamaraan ng pagkain para balansiyado ang sustansya, at wastong pagpapalano ng pamilya sa pamamagitan ng natural family planning.

Kaya ngayon higit nating kailangan ang sipag at pagkakaisa. Sana magkapit-bisig tayong lahat para makamit natin ang mga pangarap ng mga taga Manila pati na rin ng sambayanang Pilipino.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Tangkilin natin ang Proud Harvest at matuto tayo ng wastong pagkain.

Congratulations! Mabuhay Dagonoy! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Launching Ceremony of "Proud Harvest" Vegetable-Enriched Canton Noodles. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115711/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1589&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching of the Department of Education's Supplemental Feeding Program for School Children

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the launching of the Department of Education's Supplemental Feeding Program for School Children

[Delivered at Flora West Central Elementary School, Poblacion West, Flora, Apayao, July 31, 2008]

Dios ti agngina unay, Apo Governor Bulut ti napintas nga introduction yo kanyak. Ken agyamanak nga ammo amin itatta dagidiay naduma-duma nga projects tayo toy probinsiya ti Apayao.

Apo Congressman Butch Bulut, naimbag a bigat yo met Apo Congressman ken importante diay trabaho yo diay Kongreso ta sika ti chairman ti Land Reform Committee, Dios ti agngina unay. (applause) Agtugaw kayo amin, apo.

Apo Mayor San Jose, ti Mayor ti Flora; ti baro nga Assistant Secretary of Education, Thelma Santos; (applause) Apo Presidential Assistant Tom Quilip; dadiay naduma-duma nga opisyaes; gapo naduma-duma nga ili ti probinsiya ti Apayao; dagiti opisyaes ti Department of Education; dagiti teachers; dagiti estudyante; dagidiay amma ken inna; kakailyan, naimbag a bigat yo amin, apo. (applause)

Idi maysa nga aldaw, idi State of the Nation Address ko, imbagak iti panagirugi daytoy programa nga Massive School Feeding. Sangapulo nga piso iti inted para ti kanen iti maysa nga ag-adal-adal nga ubing nga maibilang daytoy nga programa, tapno maikkan da ti masustansya nga makan kada sumrek da ti eskwela. (applause) Maragdagan iti maala nga sustansiya ti ubing gapu ta kadua ti makan nga iti noodles nga ninayunan dagiti bitamina, wenno arroz caldo nga nalaukan ti marunggay nga nabaknang ti protina or whatever in the locality can be found that will be nutritious. Ken dakkell nga dayaw para kanyak nga agrugi datoy programa awan sabali no diket toy ili ti Flora ti Apayao. (applause) Agsarita ak tatta ti Tagalog ta gapo na ti panagrugi ti baro nga programa idtoy, kayat ko nga maamuan ti intero nga pagilyan.

Ang isang malakas at malusog na bata ay katumbas ng isang malakas at malusog na bansa.

Bawat bata ay kailangan ang “Healthy Start” o malusog na simula ng araw-araw, malusog na simula ng buhay. Kaya Assistant Secretary Santos, ang itatawat natin sa programang ito ay “Malusog na Simula” or “Healthy Start.” Ang Healthy Start Child Nutrition program na ito ay naglalayong punuin ang ating mga bata ng pag-asa gayundin isang malusog na almusal.

Dapat nating busugin ang mga puso at isipan ng ating mga bata sa pamamagitan ng biyaya ng edukasyon, subali’t bago mangyari ito, kailangan muna nila ng tiyan na busog din.

Ang ating mga bata ay dapat simulan ang bawat araw na masaya, malusog at puno ng pag-asa. Ang dapat lamang nilang panabikan ay karunungan at hindi ang pangunahing pangangailangan ng pagkain sa mesa kapag almusal.

Ang pagkakaloob ng masustansiyang almusal sa mga bata na kung hindi ay gugutumin ang pinakamahalagang bagay na magagawa ng ating bansa. Ito ay kagandahang-asal, kinakailangang panlipunan at kagalingang pangkabuhatan.

Iso nga mamatiak nga no agtitinnulong dagiti umili, awan panggep wenno tarigagay nga maisupiat kadatayo.

Iso nga Dios ti agngina kadakayo amin, agyamanak ti dayaw nga makapagrugi ditoy importante nga programa, awan sabali no di ket toy napintas uray bassit nga probinsiya ti Apayao.

Dios ti agngina manen kada kayo amin. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the launching of the Department of Education's Supplemental Feeding Program for School Children. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115625/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1585&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching of the National Supplemental Feeding Program [Filipino]
Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa paglulunsad ng National Supplemental Feeding Program

[Ipinahayag noong ika 31 ng Hulyo, 2008]

Ang isang malakas at malusog na bata ay katumbas ng isang malakas at malusog na bansa. Bawat bata ay kailangan ng healthy start o malusog na simula ng araw-araw malusog na simula ng buhay.

Kaya Asst. Secretary Santos, ang itatawag natin sa programang ito ay “Malusog na Simula” or “Healthy Start”.

Ang healthy start sa nutrition program na ito ay naglalayong punuin ang ating mga bata ng pag-asa gayundin isang malusog na almusal.

Dapat nating busugin ang mga puso at isipan ng ating mga bata sa pamamagitan ng biyaya ng edukasyon. Subalit, bago mangyari ito kailangan muna nila ng tiyan na busog din. Ang ating mga bata ay dapat simulan ang bawat araw na masaya, malusog at puno ng pag-asa. Ang dapat lamang nilang panabikan ay karunungan at hindi ang pangunahing pangangailangan ng pagkain sa mesa kapag almusal.

Ang pagkakaloob ng masustansiyang almusal sa mga bata, na kung hindi ay gugutumin, ang pinakamahalagang bagay na magagawa ng ating bansa. Ito ay kagandahang asal, kinakailangang panlipunan at kagalingang pangkabuhayan.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the Launching of the National Supplemental Feeding Program. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115651/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1581&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Local Peace and Security Assembly of Region II

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Local Peace and Security Assembly of Region II

[Delivered at the Roma Hotel, Tuguegarao City, Cagayan, July 31, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Bert Gonzales sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

Apo Governor Antonio, ti host governor tayo. Please sit down.

Amin nga opisyaales ti Region II; members of the National Security Council; I see here Congressman Junie Cua, he's here a while ago? Yes, and the other congressmen, the other local officials who are here; I see Governor Castillejos, I see Governor Cua and Apo Bishop Villena; Father Rani and other leaders of the religious sector; our leaders of the military and the police; mga leaders ti NGO, naimbag a bigat yo amin apo.

Ah, adda diay ni Governor. Sorry, Governor. Okay. They cut off your name. (laughter) O siguro, they didn't know that the governor of Nueva Vizcaya was so young and beautiful.

Bueno, anyway, agyamanak la unay kadagiti resolution nga inted yo kanyak. Dagitoy nga baro nga hamon or challenge iti pagilian tatta, saan tayo maliplipatan dagiti immuna nga panggep papan iti patuloy nga pagrang-ayan. Nangnangruna ditoy iti kinatalna ken kapia iti entiro nga pagilian. Isu nga patuloy tayo nga ar-aramiden dagitoy Regional Peace and Security Assemblies, this is the eighth? The ninth, nalpasen ti eight, tapno ipamuspusan ken sungbatan dagiti isu nga mangrigrigat iti permanente nga kapia ken urnos. And I would like to congratulate for the improvement of the crime rate here, kuna dagidiay inputs diay PMS. Congratulations to the PNP! General Damian. (applause)

Ngem kunada, adda pay il-ili ditoy nga ngumatngato pay iti crime rate, ken iti kunada ket maipanggep iti pulitika dagitoy nga krimen, sapay koma. Isu nga daytoy ti immuna nga pakpakaasik kadakayo. Kadagiti lokal nga lider, sadinno adda pay nangato nga crime rate, isantabi yo pay laeng dagiti away, gapu ta adayu pay met iti eleksyon. Pagsasaritaan tayo dagiti pakaigapuan dagiti problema in a peaceful and civilize way. That is the way we can discuss our difference tatta. And also for the decline in the number of armed rebels. Congratulations to NOLCOM! (applause)

Adda pay mano laengen nga non-combatants nga nabati, kuna da, awanen ti 500, wala ng 500 yung mga naiiwang NPA ti entiro nga rehiyon, ngem mamati ak nga mabalin met isuda nga akayin papan iti dalan ti panagbalbaliw ken kapia. And that is what we want to do in this Regional Peace and Order Assembly.

Naurnos iti pamuspusan nga Convergence nga inusar iti NOLCOM tapno bumassit iti bilang dagiti immalsa nga armado. Ngem ti kayat ti umili — from what I hear, what I understand for your inputs — ken kayat ko met ket komprehensibo iti kapia ditoy rehiyon yo, tapno saan nga ag-istorbo iti rang-ay. Bilbilinik iti NOLCOM to defeat the rebels that are still there in the hinterlands of Isabela, Nueva Vizcaya and Quirino.

Nakakadanag met ti report nga nagbaliw iti taktika dagiti rebelde, agpapaadu laengen iti recruitment, ken kanayon nga agaramid ti harassment ken extortion tapno dumakkel iti pondo da. Saan tayo nga kayat nga pumigsa manen iti rebelyon no umadu dagiti recruits. And that's why among the resolutions is to spread the culture of peace, pakisaritaan tayo iti umili nga tumulong tapno saan matuloy dagiti extortionists nga makadadael ti negosyo.

Uray no karigatan ti kadasaran nga rason ti panag-alsa, ti rebelyon met iti mangmangted ti aglalo nga rigat kadagiti umili.

The Communists have spent years as a low-level threat. It is time for their disruption and violation of human rights to be put to rest so that the nation can move ahead. They impede the progress and development of many rural areas. They are responsible for a wide range of human rights abuses. So if we are to become a first world country, as you say in the resolution in 20 years, we have to put a stop to their ideological nonsense and their criminal acts once and for all. And our instruction is, our goal is — they must be stopped by 2020. That is what we want to do.

Iso nga idi rabii, when I had coffee with the media, they were asking me, “So, what is the insurgency situation now?” So I asked Bert Gonzales to answer that. Sure, it is going down but the reason why we are having this Regional Peace and Order Assembly is that — yes, it’s going down, and it’s always there, low-level threat so we have to finish it once and for all so that our country can have a decade of total peace which will bring us to the first world in 20 years. And that is not a pipe dream, because there’s a Goldman Sachs analysis that indeed in 20 years it is possible for us to become first world but we have to do what we must to do. Maysa dagiti ket ti peace and order and political stability toy pagilian tayo.

But to the rebels who genuinely and sincerely speak peace, we will respond in kind. And I hope that the congressmen who are here today will help us pass the amnesty resolution soon. The most important part of our counter-strategy is the soft power of economic progress, dialogue and continuing efforts to arrive at mutual understanding. We continue to devise programs as fruits from these assemblies that will advance peace and development for the benefit of our country, especially the poor. It should no longer be necessary to lose lives on both side of the conflict, when so many opportunities are now available to improve the people’s welfare.

Itattay napanak diay Apayao, and Governor Bulut was telling me, so many new programs, we never saw these programs before. And I said, well, that’s because of the fiscal reforms that we have made, Congress acting on new taxes, and now improvements in tax administration.

Going back to Region II, the origin of the insurgency in this region can be traced to the problems that stood in the way of regional development. And you, in your assembly have analyzed what are the roots of insurgency that you share with other regions and what are the roots that are unique to this region.

And in our administration, we are resolving many of these. For instance, maysa dagiti prominent nga recommendations yo ket ti Cagayan Economic Zone wenno Port Irene. Yesterday, I went to the Cagayan Economic Zone, went to Sta. Ana and I saw there thousands of jobs have been created in that Cagayan Economic Zone that I visited yesterday. The airport, as I said in my previous SONA, before in my previous SONA, I said we will build a new airport in Lal-lo but the next year I said, upon further assessment, because the Navy, the CEZA and the private sector are willing to put up the international airport in Port Irene, we will just transfer our ambitions there. And sure enough, di napanak diay Port Irene, I saw the new expanded airport. Before the expansion, only six passenger planes could go there. Now the airport is bigger than the airport in Caticlan. But many of the international tourists land in Manila and then land there in a 20-seater plane. Or they land in Tuguegarao and ride two and a half hours to go there, so they complain. So the investors, the joint venture with CEZA and the investors from Macau wanted to expand that airport to an international airport but if they lengthen it some more, they will come across communities which we relocated and they don’t want social problems. So because of that, they look for an entirely new area without any communities and they will build a brand new international airport. (applause)

Gapo ti helicopter, I also saw the beautiful beaches of the Eastern Pacific Coast of Cagayan. And I was told in the briefing yesterday, that no less than three developers are interested in putting up resorts there just waiting for that new international airport to start being built because when it starts being built, they can start building because they know that by the time they finished, the airport will also be finished.

So iso ti maysa nga importante nga proyekto tayo para ti progreso ti Cagayan Valley. Maysa met nga ado nga indigenous peoples toy region yo, it is also important that we have Ancestral Domain Reform. And I am happy that one of the heroes I praised in my SONA last Monday is here but not wearing his fashionable outfit, si Chieftain Rosario Camma. (laughter/applause) He was on the frontpage of the newspapers outshining all those beautiful gowns of the ladies who were there but highlighting also, highlighting also how the Bugkalots of the Quirino-Vizcaya-Aurora tri-boundary after the Ancestral Domain Reform have been able to improve a thousand hectares of ancestral land returned to them by the government to his tribe and how they have built small irrigation facilities, increased planting activity and improved their incomes. Congratulations manen kada kayo, Apo Chieftain! (applause)

The FIELDS program is especially important in your region. Because you are number one in corn production and number two in rice production. So FIELDS is very important ken dagidiay probinsiya, as far as provinces are concerned, in the self-sufficiency program that were done together by IRRI and DA, uray number one it Nueva Ecija iti rice production, because the government has poured so much already there, which is why they are number one to begin with. Kuna ti self-sufficiency program, the number one that must receive now the most assistance from FIELDS is the province of Isabela. (applause) So that will be the part of the... Oh! our new cabinet secretary's smiling from ear to ear, Secretary Bebot Bello. But of course, that doesn't mean that we are not talking about the other parts of Region II. Because of the fertile soil of the Cagayan River Valley, the mightiest river in the country, and the hardworking farmers as I said, you'll be number one and number two.

Diay State of the Nation Address ko idi kunak nga ti Pilipinas gapo pay ti tiyempo dagidiay it Kastila, Español, we've already been importing rice. In fact, during that three years that we exported rice, we were also importing rice. So we've always been importing rice. Why? Because we have an archipelago with rocky, rough-laden and sparse soil and we don't have a mighty Mekong and vast fertile plains like Thailand and Vietnam. The closes thing we have to a Mekong in the Philippines is none other than the Cagayan River that is why it is the fertile plains of Cagayan Valley that will be the secret to our success of self-sufficiency in the future. (applause)

So, it is important to maintain your progress in agriculture, not only because you will feed the country but because so many of your communities depend on it. And in turn, your communities provide food for so many of our countrymen.

So we talked about the inputs to agriculture, talk about what we have to spend, and precisely because in our country, we don't have natural, great natural sources of irrigation, we have to build irrigation systems unlike in Thailand and Vietnam where the Great Mekong has so many tributaries that is natural irrigation.

So, this morning I visited the Abulog-Apayao Irrigation Project, which I started in 2001. It is very important both to the Cagayanons and to your neighbors in Apayao who share your water resources. It provides irrigation to three towns in... or four in Apayao : Sta. Marcela, Pudtol, Flora and Luna, and four towns in Cagayan province : Aparri, Allacapan, Ballesteros and Abulog — of course, that's the name of the project. And so we hope that with this new irrigation project and the new irrigation canals, there will be more and more lands available.

Panawen daytoy iti panagtitinulong ken damayan. Agkakadua tayo nga agbirok ti pamuspusan tapno: una, ma-conserve iti energy because we are now in the midst of a world energy and food crisis. Ken kayat ko nga Dios ti agngina ken ag-congratulate kenni Governor Antonio ta kunana next month, there will be a windmill project that will begin in Northern Cagayan province. (applause) And that will provide for the investment needs of the northern part where a lot of investors seem to want to go because of the beauty of Angid, etc. and the facilities of the airport. And also, maysa pay, because the gateway, the information technology gateway of the telecoms, the redundancy so that it does not... tsunami in Taiwan or something continued pay ti call center services tayo. The Globe put its redundancy gateway in Aparri and the expectation is that it will be cheaper to have telecoms in Northern Cagayan and that will bring call centers here. So I was telling the TESDA Director yesterday that she should start working with the good schools here like, for instance, St. Paul and... you have many good schools here in Cagayan and to put up already the Business Process Association accredited curriculum for call center training so that tapno by the time that the call centers are put up there and they start hiring, they will not have a difficult time rejecting so many applicants.

So there are so many things that can happen to Cagayan Valley — tourism, exemplified by the beaches of the Pacific Coast, and then even industry and services like possibly the call centers. Energy, kasla dagidiay windmill projects ken umay pay nga hydro project, but the most basic where the people count on you is really agriculture, agri-business. And with agri-business, we talk about countryside development. And with countryside development, we need peace and order in the countryside.

Iso nga agkakadua tayo met nga agaramid tapno maituloy iti rang-ay nga nangrugi iti napalabas nga pito nga tawen. But let us make sure that the people will feel the benefits of development, and one key to that is that Cagayan Valley will continue to be a food basket for the rest of the Filipinos.

Dios ti agngina kada kayo amin, apo. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Local Peace and Security Assembly of Region II. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115656/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1583&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a Luncheon with the Filipino Olympians and the Filipino Community in Beijing [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas

Sa handaang pananghalian kasama ang mga Filipino Olympians at komunidad ng mga Filipino sa Beijing

[Ipinahayag sa Grand Ballroom, Asia Hotel, Beijing, China, ika 9 ng Agosto, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Romulo, sa iyong pagpakilala.

Maraming salamat din, Speaker Nograles at ibang mga kasapi ng Philippine delegation na nagpunta dito sa Beijing, lalo na para magbigay ng parangal at to cheer on ang ating mga atletang Pilipino dito sa Beijing. (applause)

Gusto kong ipakilala sa inyo ang ilan sa ating mga Southeast Asian Games gold medalists na nandito ngayon sa Olympics. Well, hindi siya Southeast Asian Games gold medalist pero una sa lahat, nakilala ninyo ang ating four-time world champion ng boxing, si Manny Pacquiao.(applause) Dala niya yung kaniyang inspiration, si Jinkee.(applause)

Si Manny ngayon ang tinuturing na pinaka-greatest Asian boxer sa kasaysayan (applause) gawa ng apat na kategorya na siya nag-world champion. Ngayon ipaglalaban niya ang pang-lima, nagtra-training na sa Amerika, pero bumalik dito sa Asia para magbigay ng parangal sa ating mga atleta. (applause)

Yung ating mga gold medalist sa Southeast Asian Games na nandito ngayon para makapagpaligsahan sa Olympics, nandito si Miguel Molina (applause); si Daniel Coakley (applause); si Ryan Arabejo (applause); si James Walsh (applause); si Sheila Mae Perez (applause); si Ryan Fabrega (applause). At gusto ko rin tumindig yung ating ibang mga atleta na makikipagpaligsahan ngayon. (applause)

Alam niyo nung ginagawa nila itong... nung protocol yung schedule na ito, sabi nga nila sa Filipino community imbitahin natin yung mga atleta. Sabi ko, kaya lang, ‘wag natin silang pipilitin kasi gusto natin yung pahinga nila, yung training nila, hindi maistorbo kasi ang pinakamalaking parangal na maibibigay nila sa ating kababayan ay manalo sila at ayaw natin na magkaroon ng sagabal sa kanilang pananalò sa pagpunta dito.

Pero kaninang umaga, tinanong ko, “Ano, may mga atletang pupunta?” “Meron.” Sinabi ba ninyo, hindi kailangan kasi gusto natin na magpahinga sila, mag-ensayo sila? Alam raw nila ‘yon pero kusang sila ay pumunta rito para makibati rin sa ating Pilipino. (applause)

At dito sa China, meron din tayong mga gold medalists na Pilipino. Hindi sa Beijing Olympics necessarily pero sa kanilang ekonomiya, sa kanilang community.

Eh noong huling ilang beses na nagpunta na ako dito sa China, ang ating isang celebrity ay si Jimmy Flor Cruz. (applause) At yung isang torch bearer na pinakilala ni Ambassador Sonia Brady na binabati ko rin ngayon ay yung anak pala ni Jimmy Flor Cruz, di ba? (applause)

Isa pang torch bearer na pinakilala ni Ambassador Brady ay si Marco Torres (applause) na kumakatawan sa Filipino community dito sa entablado. At ako ay nasisiyahan na si Marco Torres ay marketing manager ng isa sa mga leading design firms sa Asia. Yan ang halimbawa ng mga magagaling na Pilipinong narito sa Beijing at saka sa China. (applause)

Meron pa tayong isang superstar, si Ben Lim ng Reuters (applause). At isa pang e-e-export muli ng China patungong Pilipinas, kasi si Vlad Reyes ay magiging manager ng Peninsula doon sa Pilipinas. (applause)

At yung ibang mga teachers, professionals, musicians na binanggit ni Sonia kanina, congratulations sa inyong lahat. Ang ganda-ganda ng inyong pagkakatawan sa ating bansa dito sa Tsina. (applause)

Ako ay nagpapasalamat sa pagkakataong makita kayo muli. Ilan sa inyo nakita ko na sa mga nakaraang pagbisita gaya nang sabi ko si Jimmy Flor Cruz ay isang parati nating pina-flag wave dahil sa kaniyang celebrity status. Pero ako ay nasisiyahan na narito kayo muli at para iulit yung sinabi ni Sonia na ginagalang kayo ng pamahalaan at ng taumbayang Pilipino dahil sa inyong sakripisyo at malasakit sa inyong trabaho, sa inyong pamilya at sa ating bansa.

At tinatanggap ng buong loob ang inyong kontribusyon. Ngunit gaya nang sabi ni Sonia, nagtatrabaho rin tayo sa bisa ng pag-angat ng ating ekonomiya para sa araw na hindi na kailangan pumunta pa ang Pilipino sa ibayong dagat para magtrabaho, that the day can come when overseas work is just a career option and not the only choice you have for a good job. (applause)

Noong isang taon, naranas natin sa Pilipinas ang pinakamataas na pag-angat ng ating ekonomiya sa loob ng isang henerasyon. Pero itong taong ito, buong mundo ay nahihirapan sa global economic slowdown at saka sa pagtaas bigla ng presyo ng langis at pagkain.

Kaya walang pagod tayong nagtatrabaho para harapin itong mga hamong nanggagaling sa paghina ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya na sinasamahan pa ng pagsipa ng matataas na presyo ng langis at pagkain. Masipag tayong nagtatrabaho para tiyakin na matatag ang supply ng pagkain sa ating bansa at may pagkain sa bawat mesa. At salamat na lamang na siguro pag kayo ay nanonood ng telebisyon, nakikita niyo ang food riot sa iba't-ibang mga bahagi ng mundo. Doon sa Pilipinas, hindi tayo nawawalaan ng bigas. (applause)

Hindi lamang yon, ang presyo ng bigas ngayon sa Pilipinas ay mas mababa keysa sa presyo ng ating mga karatig-bansa. Gumagawa rin tayo ng mga hakbangin upang bawasan ang pasanan sa ating taumbayan nitong matataas na presyo ng langis at pagkain sa mundo.

Halimbawa, may subsidyo tayo sa bigas at kuryente para sa pinakamahihirap. Kaya meron tayong... ang presyo ng bigas sa, halimbawa, Thailand o Vietnam umaabot ng 50, 60 pesos. Sa ating bansa, meron tayong mabibiling bigas, market price na 32 pesos. Yung Malaysia, yung Indonesia, sila ay nagsa-subsidize ng bigas. Yung kanilang subsidized rice mga 25, 27 pesos; yung ating subsidized rice, 18.25. At nagagawa natin ito dahil sa reporma ng buwis na nagawa natin ilang taong nakaraan. Meron tayong malaking kaban ng bayan ngayon para sa mga subsidyong ganoon. Kaya ako ay nagpapasalamat uli sa ating mga congressmen na narito ngayon dahil kung hindi niyo nagawa yuon nung ilang taong nakaraan ay hindi natin makakaya itong krisis na nangyayari sa buong mundo. (applause)

Yung sa presyo ng langis, ang pinakamalaking epekto noon dapat ay sa transportasyon. Ngunit sa kabila ng napakalaking sipa ng presyo ng langis sa buong mundo, dahil meron tayong mga tulong na naibibigay sa sektor ng transportasyon, pumapayag naman sila na ang pagtaas ng pasahe sa Pilipinas ay one peso lamang, parang presyo lamang ng isang text message ng inyong mga kamag-anak sa Pilipinas. At doon naman sa kuryente na pangalawang pinaka-epekto ng mahal na langis sa mundo, yung mga pinakamahihirap ay nagagawa natin na mabigyan ng konting subsidyo rin, subsidy, para tulungang bayaran ang kanilang mga electric bills. Kaya ito ang mga nagagawa natin, kasama ng ibang mga paraan para maibsan ang napakalaking kabigatan na kinakarga ng karaniwan at mahihirap na Pilipino.

Nagtuturo rin tayo ng Nutrition Education o wastong pagkaing hindi masyadong magastos. Kasama na nga dito ang pagpapa-iral ng breastfeeding para hindi tayo kailangan umangkat masyado ng gatas mula sa ibang bansa. At kaya naman tinanggap natin na ilunsad dito sa harap ninyo ang 2008 Breastfeeding Olympics o Worldwide Synchronized Breast-feeding. Kaya, congratulations! (applause)

Ganunpaman, anuman ang kilos na ginagawa natin, itong problema ng pagkain at langis ay pandaigdigang problema. Kailangan sama-sama tayo magtrabaho upang maresolba itong mga isyu kung gusto natin makita ang makabuluhang pagbangon muli ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya.

As President Hu Jintao said yesterday in his state lunch for the guests of the Olympics, and I quote, he said, “The international community faces grave challenges unprecedented in history. There has never been a greater need for us to understand, accommodate and cooperate with each other.” Yun ang sinabi ni Pangulong Hu Jintao kahapon.

At itong Olympics ay naghahandog sa bawat bansa sa mundo ng pagkakataong isantabi yung mga nagpapahiwalay sa atin at tunay na magsama-sama at ipagdiriwang ang human spirit. At kaya naman ipinagmamalaki natin ang ating mga atleta na naka-qualify sa Beijing Olympics.

Alam niyo, 15 ang ating athletes kasi ang hirap-hirap maka-qualify pa lamang. Kaya, the fact that they have qualified, sila ay mga kampeon na sa puso ng mga Pilipino. (applause)

Gaya ni Manny, yung ating Olympic athletes ay huwaran para sa susunod na henerasyon ng mga Pilipino. Kasi ang ating bansang Pilipinas, hindi ba napaka-hilig natin sa sports? At hindi ba tinatanaw natin yung mga sakripisyo ng ating mga atleta para makipag-kumpetensiya sa antas ng world class? Kaya si Manny Pacquiao ay isang talagang idol ng napakarami dahil nakikita natin ang kanyang sakripisyo at nakikita natin ang bunga ng sakripisyo sa pamamagitan ng kanyang tagumpay sa world stage. Dito sa Olympics, kinakatawan ng Pilipinong delegasyon ng mga atleta ang lahat ng mga Pilipino. So I’m glad that they are here even if we did not require them to come. I’m glad that they are here in this lunch para naman malaman that the whole country is cheering for them. (applause)

China has worked hard to bring the world a truly memorable Olympics. At kayo mismo kasi nakatira kayo dito sa Beijing, testigo kayo, first hand, sa napakahirap na trabahong ginawa ng China para mabuo these spectacular facilities and the exciting events associated with these games.

Naalala ko tuloy yung APEC Summit noong 2001. Ilan sa atin magkasama noon doon sa Shanghai. I have had the pleasure of attending a number of APEC Summits but the one I remember most was the summit that China so ably hosted in Shanghai in 2001. Para na rin yung pag-host nila nitong Olympics ngayon. It was my first summit after I became president. But more than that, it was the first summit coming on the heels of the tragedy of 9/11, which had changed the world, heightened global concern regarding terrorism which generated so many unfortunate events, including a global economic slowdown, similar doon sa nangyayari ngayon na global economic slowdown.

Sa pag-aalala ko noon under China’s oversight, that APEC Summit in Shanghai played a major role in sending a clear and strong message to the international community that the Asia-Pacific community was united in its efforts to counter the threat of terrorism and that the economies of APEC were also united in their efforts to promote APEC’s vision of free, open and prosperous economies.

Sabi nila, coming out party ito ng China. Yung APEC Summit, coming out party nila yun sa ekonomiya ng mundo. And the fact that APEC subsequently gave its support to China’s membership in the WTO, that year can clearly be attributed in great part to the leadership that China showed at the summit and afterwards. (applause)

First impressions are always powerful. In this case, not only was China my first APEC Summit, but China was also one of the first to congratulate me when I was sworn in as President of the Philippines in 2001. (applause) Sa mensahe noon ni President Jiang Zemin, he called me an “old friend of the Chinese people.” Alam naman natin lahat, for the Filipino people as well as for the Chinese people, reference to an “old friend” is an expression of deep respect and openness toward the other. The APEC Leaders’ Summit in Shanghai was also my first visit to China as head of state, though as vice-president, nagpunta na ako dito bilang panauhin din ni Vice-President Hu Jintao noong panahong yun kaya matagal na — old friend na nga.

So, I particularly remember the warm reception I received from the leaders of China, who manifested China’s wish to build our relations. At yun ay hindi sa salita lamang.

Today, Philippines-China relations are at an all time high.

Kahapon sa state luncheon ni President Hu Jintao, alam niyo, walumpu ang kanyang heads of government na nagpunta rito, isang dosena lang mauupo niya sa kanyang head table, kasama doon ang pangulo ng Pilipinas. (applause)

At sa walumpung mga pinuno na narito, hindi niya pwedeng ma-meet lahat sa bilateral, so may iba grupo-grupo. Ilan lang ang talagang bilateral na one-on-one at isa doon, ginanap kaninang umaga, kiniwento nga ni Sonia Brady, ay ang delegasyon ng Pilipinas. (applause)

At lumalawak nang husto ang ating kalakal kaya, eto, tignan niyo yung mga naka-amerikanong mga guwapo diyaan, sila ay kumakatawan ng ating malaking business delegation na narito ngayon. (applause) Kinatawan lang sila dahil ang daming ibang merong ongoing bilateral, you know, yung mga bilateral meetings between Chinese businessmen.

Kanina nga, binanggit ni President Hu Jintao na ang ating pangangalakal sa isa't-isa ay umabot na sa 30 billion U.S. dollars, number one export market natin ang China ngayon.(applause)

Tuloy rin nating pinapalalim ang pagsasapalaran natin sa ibang bagay. At ang isang importanteng kasama dito ay ang importanteng kontribusyon ninyo, ang ating Overseas Filipinos dito sa China. (applause) Oo nga't 1,500 lang kayo dito sa Beijing, gaya nang sabi ni Sonia, pero grabe naman yung 1,500 na yun, napakabigat na mga kasapi ng Beijing (applause) kayo dito. Ating mga Filipino professionals, ating mga skilled workers, ating mga technical workers, malaki ang inyong kontribusyon sa ekonomiya at sa kultura ng People's Republic of China.

Kaya sa inyong napakagalang-galang na pagtra-trabaho at mga pwesto sa inyong pinagtrabahuan dito sa China, ang laki ng inyong tulong sa pagpapalakas ng ating relasyon sa pamamagitan ng Tsina at Pilipinas.

Kaya bukod sa mga remittances na pinapadala ninyo, napakalaki ang inyong kontribuson sa kaunlaran ng ating bansa.

Kaya ako'y nagpapasalamat sa ating 1,500 Filipinos na narito sa Beijing, salamat sa inyong tulong sa ating gumagandang relasyon, lalong gumagandang relasyon sa Tsina.

Salamat sa inyong tulong sa kaunlaran ng ating bansa. At nawa'y tuloy-tuloy pa ang inyong suporta sa ating minamahal na bayang Pilipinas.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat (applause).

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during a Luncheon with the Filipino Olympians and the Filipino Community in Beijing. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412113406/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1648&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the State Luncheon for the Swiss President Pascal Couchepin

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the State Luncheon for the Swiss President Pascal Couchepin

[Delivered on August 11, 2008]

President Couchepin and Madam; distinguished officials of the delegation; officials of the Philippine government; members of the business community; members of the diplomatic corps; ladies and gentlemen.

We welcome President and Madam Couchepin on this first visit of a Swiss President to our country. Although it is a first visit of a Swiss President, it is not his Excellency's first visit to the Philippines. He visited the Philippines as a young man. From the description of where he went, he went to Laguna because he was able to see the residence of our national hero, Dr. Jose Rizal, and the beautiful falls that we know as Pagsanjan Falls.

The Philippines and Switzerland share a strong commitment to peace, freedom and democracy. Our national hero, whose birth place his Excellency visited as a young man and whose monument he visited earlier this morning, was so inspired by the legendary story of William Tell and his values of freedom and civil rights, and he translated the story from German to our native language. And as fate would have it, the monument of Rizal in Luneta was designed by the same Swiss sculptor as the monument of William Tell in Switzerland.

We thank the Swiss government not only for the values of freedom and civil rights that are enshrined in its culture but also for its willingness to share its experience in federalism with the Institute of Federalism located in Fribourg in Switzerland, which has been helping us do our studies on this form of government. We advocate federalism as a way to ensure long lasting peace in Mindanao. As for our economic ties, we acknowledge the important role that the sixty Swiss firms operating in the Philippines have made to our national development. Some of the CEOs of those firms are here today. We also appreciate the hospitality of Switzerland to our 10,000 Filipinos working there either as UN professionals or as health care professionals in institutions and homes for the aged. And we are grateful because his Excellency has said that we should expand our ties even more. We are grateful for the recognition that will be given to our country in 2009, and we will be the featured guest country in Muba, the biggest consumer trade fair in Switzerland. May that gesture and this visit of your Excellency to the Philippines transform our cordial relations into true relations. In this spirit, I invite all our guests to join me in a toast for the continued success and good health of President and Madam Couchepin.

Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the State Luncheon for the Swiss President Pascal Couchepin. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115610/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1645&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a State Dinner in Honor of President Jose Ramos Horta of the Democratic Republic of Timor Leste

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a State Dinner in Honor of President Jose Ramos Horta of the Democratic Republic of Timor Leste

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, August 12, 2008]

His Excellency President Ramos Horta, His Excellency President Ramos, Vice President de Castro, other officials of the Philippine government, members of the delegation from Timor Leste, ladies and gentlemen.

We're gathered here tonight in honor of an old friend of the Filipino people, an international icon, a noble prize laureate. President Jose Ramos Horta has been to our shores on numerous occasions but we welcome him tonight on his first visit as President of his nation. He would have been here earlier, but six months ago, an assassin's bullet almost put an end to his life and therefore causing his trip to be postponed for his recovery.

Since then, however, his land of one million people has been peaceful. Rebel leader was killed in the Presidential compound and 800 rebel soldiers have pledged allegiance to the government.

The Philippines is a natural partner of Timor Leste in many ways. Filipino religious missionaries, peacekeepers and development workers, minister to the needs of the Timorese people and stayed with them during the dark days of their struggle for independence at great risk to their own safety and welfare.

Today, the Filipino community in Timor Leste come from various backgrounds such as, aside from religious missionaries, include police officers who are part of the U.N. Police, international consultants and aide workers, U.N. volunteers and construction workers. A Filipino military general commanded the U.N. Peacekeeping Forces, a Filipino Police General led the U.N. Police in Timor Leste.

During the Philippine Independence Day in Dili, where President Ramos Horta was guest of honor, he graciously honored five outstanding Filipinos in Timor Leste. (applause)

During our Bilateral meeting this morning, we welcomed the opportunity to have all the technical cooperation and partnership that there can be. Major areas we are pursuing for partnership are education and training, labor deployment, infrastructure development, housing construction, oil and gas supply chain, construction supply chain, fisheries and air links.

This morning, we witnessed the signing of a Memorandum on the Training of Diplomats at the Philippine Foreign Service Institute. A Fisheries Agreement and an Agreement on Academic Cooperation which will be the loadstone of the Philippine commitment to Timor Leste's long term development.

We hope that the Timorese scholars who will be studying here in the Philippines will be the future leaders of Timor Leste.

As I said earlier, the Philippines is an appropriate partner of Timor Leste in many ways.

On this note, I propose a toast to the continued good health and success of President Jose Ramos Horta and of the Timorese people.

Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during a State Dinner in Honor of President Jose Ramos Horta of the Democratic Republic of Timor Leste. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115559/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1641&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening of the 2nd Philippine International Motor Show (PIMS)
Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening of the 2nd Philippine International Motor Show (PIMS)

[Delivered at the World Trade Center, Roxas Blvd., Pasay City, August 21, 2008]

Thank you. Thank you very much Secretary Favila for your introduction.

And congratulations to CAMPI President Beth Lee for your beautiful opening remarks and for putting all of these together.

I'd like to also greet and acknowledge our host congressman, Congressman Roxas; (Applause) officers and members of CAMPI; members of the automotive industry; workers; ladies and gentlemen.

Congratulations again to CAMPI on this second motor show! This show tells the world we are ready to compete. As Beth says, the presence of 15 leading global auto brands reflects the confidence of the big auto makers of the world in our local industry and the economy.

I understand that CAMPI was formed 13 years ago — that is 1995, when I was a senator — to respond to the challenge for the private sector to play a key role in the country's motor vehicle development. And I remember 1995 was also the year that WTO started, and that was the year that all those special protection programs of quantitative restrictions for the motor vehicle industry ended. So you were organized at a very important time for your industry, and indeed you have been playing a key role.

You were involved in crafting the New Motor Vehicle Development Program, which focuses on the use of local parts for vehicle assembly and also on exportation. And that is the way the automotive industry in the Philippines can survive and flourish.

You have also taken a strong stand for regional integration of the automotive industry given that you have shifted your focus to exportation and for the required international standardization, including compliance with safety and the environment, safer motoring as symbolized by your support for the Safety Belt Law and cleaner motoring as symbolized by your support of the Clean Air Act.

You have come up with automotive units that not only comply with the Clean Air Act but are also fuel-efficient. The automotive industry of the Philippines produces hybrid models producing flexifuel engines that blend ethanol with gasoline fuel. We await the hybrid models that shift from gasoline fuel to electric power at the touch of a button.

I asked Beth here, "So, when are we going to have that kind of hybrid model?" She said, "coming soon." We look forward to that. And I understand from Peter Favila that he was talking to Pepito Alvarez, and Pepito said, that he is coming up soon with that. So, we look forward to that. I saw Pepito Alvarez somewhere here earlier. Oh good! I'm glad you're sitting down. Thank you. Congratulations Pepito and Good luck! (Applause)

And we want all of these for many reasons: for one, this is part of our Green Philippines Program, wherein we want an energy efficient nation, free from reliance on costly and exhaust-spewing cars as well as smokestacks. Renewable energy is a very big help in our Green Philippines Program. So that is why we are waiting for the hybrid to become bigger in our automotive industry.

In general, for renewable energy, we can harness our sun, wind and geothermal resources and produce our own clean fuels through biofuels and not rely on foreign suppliers. But we need the will of the people and the support of CAMPI to move our political leaders to embrace this new clean Green Philippines. I asked Congressman Roxas to sit here in front because I want to thank him and through him Congress for passing the Renewable Energy Bill in the House of Representatives. (Applause)

Now, I ask CAMPI to help us in our call on the Senate to pass this urgent legislation on the development and promotion of renewable energy sources. We are confident that your voices will be heard. I have heard the term 'influential' many times this morning. And, indeed, CAMPI is influential.

We have not forgotten that you were among the supporters of the law rationalizing the excise tax on motor vehicles, and that you were among the staunchest campaigners for the Biofuels Act. So, I would like to thank you so much for your support. (Applause)

The search for cheaper and cleaner fuel has become a necessity not only because we want cleaner motoring but also in the light of the worsening global environment, environment both in terms of the ecology and the economy, and the increased pressure on economies that have little or no energy sources of their own.

The rise in oil prices we know is a global problem that is affecting consumers in developed and developing countries alike. However, we realize the reality that the problem is global, it provides little comfort for those here in the Philippine who are faced by this global challenge in their homes and in their barangays.

But because tough choices have been made on tax reforms, the global crisis does not catch us helpless and unprepared. Through foresight, grit and political will, we built a shield around our country that has slowed down and somewhat softened the worst effects of the global crisis. We have the money to care for our people.

We have acted to provide price relief to our most vital industries such as transportation to minimize costs to owners, employees and commuters. Halimbawa, para sa namamasada at namamasahe sa dyip, nagpalabas tayo ng kalahating bilyong pautang upang palitan nang mas matipid na LPG, CNG o biofuel ang motor ng libulibong jeepney.

I have already authorized the Secretary of the Budget to transfer half a billion pesos from the National Treasury to the Postal Bank which will be the main conduit for this kind of loan for transforming the engines of our public transport vehicles.

I have mandated government agencies to lower fuel consumption in liters by 10 percent and to convert 20 percent of their vehicles in major cities to use liquid petroleum gas. So, we call on the automotive industry to respond by providing more hybrid models and more vehicles using LPG, CNG or biofuels.

And we call on all businesses to respond by providing transport assistance to workers, for instance, company buses and eliminating unnecessary energy usage until prices somehow come back down.

And we call on our people to increase conservation and decrease use of unnecessary travel and energy use.

Meanwhile, we do not want our local automotive industry to suffer from unfair competition posed by smuggled Special Utility Vehicles especially. (Applause) You know when there's a smuggled sports car, we sell it an auction with a special committee composed of NGOs overseeing it and we earmark the proceeds of the auction for social welfare projects. Because super luxury cars don't compete with any cars produced in the Philippine, but SUVs do. So rather than sell them at auction, we'd rather do away with the small taxes that we have to sacrifice in order to save the industry itself who pays more taxes. That is why you have seen pictures of smuggled Special Utility Vehicles literally being smashed by the government's wrecking teams. (Applause) So, let us together sharpen our drive against corruption and smuggling.

Last March, I instructed the Department of Finance and Customs to form a government-civil society body called PORTAL or Ports Transparency Alliance to monitor collection efforts, gather lifestyle and corruption information, and follow up major evasion or smuggling cases, in close coordination with the Presidential Anti-Smuggling Group. I hope CAMPI is active in PORTAL.

And on the macro picture, in order to promote the growth of industries like yours, as well as the best interest of the majority of our citizens, it's essential for government to maintain a peaceful and orderly society. Most of you are aware of the disturbance of peace and order from the MILF-affiliated rebel groups who recently attacked civilians and destroyed properties in North Cotabato, Sarangani and especially Lanao del Norte.

As Commander in Chief, I think most of you also have heard me ordered the AFP and the PNP to pursue and neutralize those responsible for these treacherous attacks. But we remain committed to the peace process in Mindanao. We are not at war with the Muslim communities.

These recent developments in the South lead to a change in the basic premise of our peace efforts — the focus of our talks shall shift from the armed groups to the communities. The parameters governing our negotiations shall be a balance between constitutionality and public sentiment.

The objective of our peace processes shall be the end of all forms of armed rebellion in the country. Translated, this shall mean a national rejection of armed struggle as a means of achieving political and societal change and re-affirming our commitment to democracy.

Our engagements with all armed groups shall be about disarmament, demobilization and rehabilitation or DDR. From negotiations, our focus shall shift to dialogues with the communities, or government conducting authentic conversations or dialogues with the people. All armed groups must account for all of their actions not only to the government but most especially to the people. The force of arms does not entitle any armed group to represent the people.

DDR is about the people and government telling armed groups to give up armed struggle. Change shall be defined primarily by the people and the government.

So in this way that CAMPI has been a steady partner in our nation's 28 quarters of consecutive growth, I have high hopes that CAMPI will also be a staunch supporter, in fact, an influential supporter in our quest for long-lasting peace in Mindanao and therefore in the whole Philippines.

And in this environment, I have high hopes that the Philippine automotive industry will stand strong and continue to expand our country's presence in the global value chain of automotive manufacturing.

Maraming salamat sa inyo. Congratulations on this motor show! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's Speech during the Opening of the 2nd Philippine International Motor Show (PIMS). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115527/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1635&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Toyota Motor Corporation's Twenty Years of Solid Partnership Celebration

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Toyota Motor Corporation's Twenty Years of Solid Partnership Celebration

[Delivered at the Rizal Grand Ballroom, The Shangri-La, Makati City, August 22, 2008]

Thank you very much Secretary Favila for your introduction. Chairman Cho, Chairman Ty, Ambassador Katsura, Senator Angara, Congressman Zialcita, other officials of Toyota, President Roman of the University of the Philippines, other Filipino guests, ladies and gentlemen: Please sit down of those of you who have seats.

Congratulations, Toyota Philippines, on your 20th anniversary. (Applause) And on this occasion you inaugurated your new 5.6 billion peso transmission plant. Congratulations! (Applause)

Your expansion brings Toyota's investment in our country to 20 billion pesos, thank you. (Applause) And as Chairman Ty said earlier you have paid over 80 billion pesos in taxes to the Philippine government and you give jobs to 12,000 workers. (Applause) Moreover, you export 700 million dollars a year of auto-parts and components making up 27 percent of our exports. (Applause) Thank you for that.

You contribute to the growth of the great Filipino worker with your 100 million peso donation to the University of the Philippines on its 100th anniversary, thank you. (Applause) You contribute to Green Philippines, by reforesting the Sierra Madre in Peñablanca, Cagayan, (Applause) and you contribute to the world's effort to reduce climate change by selling fuel-efficient and environment- friendly new hybrid models.(Applause) These models can shift from gasoline-fuel to electric power at a touch of a button. We hope to see them soon in the Philippines. I already have one, (laughter) but more than that, we hope you produce a part of them in the Philippines. Just like our economy, one of the best values for investment in Asia, the local automotive industry has been able to withstand the full force of a growing global economic slowdown. Local vehicle sales have grown by 14 percent this year, in sharp contrast to the two-digit slump in automobile sales in the U.S. Congratulations! (Applause) And back in Sta. Rosa Laguna, we have a Detroit of the Philippines. (Applause)

And to have you grow your market, upon my instructions, the Department of Finance, Customs and the Presidential Anti-Smuggling Group have formed PORTAL or Ports Transparency Alliance. This is a government-civil society body tasked to monitor collection efforts, gather lifestyle and corruption information, and follow up major smuggling cases. We hope Toyota is active in this body. (Applause)

Let's work together to stop smuggling, and thereby ensure an expanding market for local-made vehicles. (Applause) That way, we can encourage more of your investments in the Philippines.

For your investments, it is also essential to maintain a peaceful and orderly society. You're our neighbors in Japan; you do a lot of business in the Philippines, so most of you are aware of the recent violence created by lawless MILF groups. I have directed the military and police forces to conduct full, vigorous and unrelenting pursuit operations against the rogue MILF elements.

The targeted 105th, 103rd and 102nd Base Commands are historically the recalcitrants. They have created trouble before and during the proceedings of the peace process. And they are the ones we would expect to create problems even after a final agreement would be forged between the government and the MILF.

The peace process must be anchored on justice. Hence, the MILF must turn in Commanders Umbra Kato, Bravo and Pangalian to face the bar of justice. We have never deviated from the objectives of the peace process. The campaign we are waging is intended to remove the obstacles to peace.

There is no all-out war. We are doing this to have an all-out peace in Mindanao. We have enough troops and law enforcers to address the situation, protect the people, prevent the lawless MILF groups from further terrorizing them, and maintain peace and order in Mindanao. But I bring these news here on this festive occasion because we need the support and cooperation of all sectors, including the automotive and other industries, including civil society and NGOs like the Toyota Foundation.

With the support of all sectors, there will be permanent peace in Mindanao. We have worked hard together, in fact, we are talking about 20 years of partnership and earlier in the private call, Chairman Ty said that Toyota, Philippines has been working as hard as the President of the Philippines. (Applause) With our hard work together and with our strong economic fundamentals which has helped us to be able to weather the global economic slowdown, we will attain the vision of First World status within in the next 20 years of Toyota in the Philippines.

Happy Anniversary and thank you! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Toyota Motor Corporation's Twenty Years of Solid Partnership Celebration. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115522/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1633&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Groundbreaking Ceremony of the Global Gateway Logistics City, August 25, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Groundbreaking Ceremony of the Global Gateway Logistics City

[Delivered at Clarkfield, Pampanga, August 25, 2008]

Last December, we were in Kuwait. The visit was a humanitarian mission, to ask for the commutation of Marilou Ranario and May Vecina's death sentences. And we thank His Royal Highness the Amir of Kuwait for granting our plea.

The visit also gave us the chance to advance Philippine economic and investment opportunities with business leaders. We're able to showcase our country's extraordinary value for investment: a strategic location, a productive and English speaking work force. These are increasingly being recognized by foreign investors all over the world, from Europe and North America to the Middle East as explained to us by his Highness Sheikh Al Sabah.

We have had a chance to meet with many prestigious Kuwaiti companies and we are very happy about the interests that they are expressing to invest here in the Philippines. Among the firms, the Kuwaiti firms we've met with are the Kuwait Gulf and Link group or KGL. And we encouraged them to avail of the significant opportunities offered by our country.

I remember one night, or was it a day time when Ambassador Rabi brought Sheikh Al Sabah, and we talk about the prospective investments here and want some of the bottlenecks might be, and I called up Nestor Mangyo and behold, the bottlenecks were gone, right Nestor? Congratulations!

And so it is with joy that we now launch the logistics and service center of KGL, to be called the Global Gateway Logistics City here in Clark.

Last April during my birthday celebration, we witnessed the signing of the agreements for this project. Now, it's only four months after that, and we see it beginning to take off. Welcome to Clark! Welcome to the Philippines! We thank you for your trust in our economy.

We ended 2007 with the strongest economic growth in a generation.

Our nation is on the move. For the first time in a very long time, we're on track to balance our budget. We have the revenues needed in the bank to invest in our people. And Invest we do: in education, the environment, healthcare. In roads, bridges and basic infrastructure like the Subic-Clark-Tarlac Expressway. How many of you have driven through the SCTEX? I'm sure a lot of you and I'm sure those who have will agree that it improves our transport system and ability to move people and products.

We have made tough choices. And our congressmen helped us make those tough choices. I want to thank them again through our Congressman Tarzan Lazatin here. And the congressman from Batangas, another favorite destination of Kuwaiti investors, Dodong Mandanas. And because of these tough choices that Congress helped us with, the global crisis occurring now did not catch us helpless and unprepared. Through foresight, grit and political will, we have built a shield that has slowed and somewhat softened the worst effects of the global crisis on our country.

And with the investment venture we are launching today, KGL joins Texas Instruments and other members of our billion dollar club.

As was explained in the briefing earlier, the Global Gateway Logistics City will be a world class logistics and business park, eventually worth over $1 billion. We are here, we can hardly wait to see it when it's there, a billion dollars worth of logistics and service facilities.

This is part of the 10-point legacy that I unveiled in 2004. The 10-point legacy can be remembered by the acronym BEAT THE ODDS: budget, education, automated elections, transport and digital infrastructure, terminating the rebellion and bringing peace to Mindanao, healing the wounds of EDSA, electricity and water, opportunities for jobs, decongesting Metro Manila, and finally, DS in BEAT THE ODDS is Developing Subic-Clark into a competitive service and logistics center.

And that's why I made it a point to have this event because today's launching boosts our legacy number 10.

The Global Gateway Logistics City as shown in the briefing earlier will be the first fully integrated master-planned center for airport and aviation-oriented operations and businesses in the Philippines. It will be a crucial hub in what we envision to be the best service and logistics center in the region. We anticipate with excitement their state-of-the-art facilities – we see the drawings — including excellent infrastructure, a comprehensive security system, which is just the phase I and sophisticated communications networks, along with many other physical amenities. And we count on Global Gateway to be managed and maintained to the highest international standards, befitting the international companies who will be locating here.

Today's launching also gives flesh to the agreement on tourism signed earlier this month during the official visit of His Highness the Prime Minister of Kuwait.

During its construction phase and when it becomes operational, this project will give job opportunities for the great Filipino worker. Our great Filipino workers' skills are known and acknowledged in Kuwait. Kuwait hosts the third largest Filipino community in the Middle East – over a hundred thousand Filipinos. But when His Highness the Prime Minister visited last week, he said they would welcome even a million Filipinos. There is no limit; there is no quota to limit the number of Filipino workers in Kuwait. Indeed, we're happy to have KGL here because Kuwait has been a very good friend of the Philippines.

Kuwait was the first Arab country to extend a developmental loan to the Philippines 30 years ago. Its biggest project is the road from Pagadian through Lanao del Norte and Sur and Maguindanao to Cotabato City -115 kilometers. And now during the visit of the Prime Minister, they formalized the offer to help upgrade the Davao Regional Hospital into a national cancer center, the Cotabato Regional Medical Center into a regional cancer center, and modernize the Zamboanga Medical Center surgery block.

The Kuwaiti government's projects and the Kuwaiti investments in our country such as these KGL Logistics and Service Hub inspire our efforts to achieve legacy number 5, to bring peace to Mindanao so that our Muslim brothers would be truly a part of the unified Philippine society.

We have never deviated from the objectives of the peace process. But peace must be anchored on justice. The rampage of some lawless MILF groups in Mindanao calls for resolute military and police action. The P10 million reward for Commanders Kato and Bravo manifests the government's firm resolve to hasten the neutralization of these criminals so that justice can be achieved and we can move on with the peace process. The targeted lawless groups are historically the recalcitrant commands. They are the ones who've been creating trouble before and during the proceedings of the peace process. And, they likely will be the ones to create problems even after a final agreement would be forged between the government and the MILF. So the campaign against them is intended to remove the obstacles to the peace process.

So I say to the Filipinos; to the world; to our Muslim brothers in the South; to the OIC through our Kuwaiti friends, there is no all-out war. What we are doing, we are doing to have all-out peace in Mindanao.

We wish for all insurgents to turn their swords into plowshares, their arms to farms.

We ask all sectors to be with us, including our brothers in the OIC.

To our Kuwaiti and American friends, for your support for Mindanao, for your compassion for our Filipinos in Kuwait and in the United States, and for this investment, in these all important Logistics and Service Center, we thank you! We are confident that Global Gateway Logistics City will become a sterling investment of beacon and progress.

Thank you very much. Daghang salamat kekongan.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the 100th anniversary of the Philippines Free Press Magazine

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the 100th anniversary of the Philippines Free Press Magazine

[Delivered at Captain's Bar, Mandarin Oriental Hotel, Makati City, August 27, 2008]

Thank you. Thank you very much, Teddy. That was such a beautiful introduction. And to all the other members of the Locsin family; to the Philippines Free Press publishers, personnel, readers, fans; to everyone, Happy Centennial! (Applause)

No one can do justice to such a venerable institution as the Philippines Free Press in quantifying its one century of contribution to national life.

To begin with, any privately-owned publication who reaches a hundred years deserves congratulations enough for surviving in one of the most competitive industries anywhere in the world.

What more if in its long and remarkable history, the publication can boast, not only of producing so many great Filipino writers, but also of reflecting in its own life the saga of the Philippines itself.

The struggles of our nation are interwoven with the work of the Philippines Free Press' people: the publisher who steered it over decades, ensuring its survival against economic and political threats; the editors and writers who made sure it not only gave people the news accurately and in timely fashion each week, but also helped cast the information and analysis in a manner that, as you've said earlier, inspires and illuminates in a manner that encourages discernment and inspired action.

And, of course, as we celebrate the centennial of Philippines Free Press, we cannot do it without paying tribute to the man who did the most in shaping the Philippines Free Press into a magazine that has become so irresistible as a fountain of truth and knowledge — Teodoro Locsin, Sr. (Applause)

He was a tireless worker, a brilliant writer, but beyond that he was a social advocate. He was in the newsroom, but he was beyond the newsroom. He lived as he believed; he advocated, as Teddy said, the noble causes of social justice, democracy and freedom in every possible way, disregarding the consequences to his own self.

He staked his fortune, liberty and life for causes. He opposed the Japanese invaders. He opposed martial law. In fact, he refused to open his paper, reopen his magazine until the snap elections were announced.

My own personal favorite part of his career, of course, was the one in between these two great historic events — that moment of his career when his life, his mission, as Teddy recounted so eloquently, was intertwined with the life mission of my father, President Diosdado Macapagal.

Because Teodoro Locsin, next only to freedom, was most concerned with social justice. And among the most important social causes that he advocated was the cause of land reform. And, indeed, Teddy recounts the great difficulties of my father in enacting land reform.

My father knew that in abolishing tenancy, he would encounter the traditional and formidable opposition of the landlords and powerful interests, and so he was so fortunate to have the support of Teodoro Locsin — the man in the Philippines Free Press who was the most advocate champion of land reform.

So realizing that the Senate was in control of the opposition, my father could only count on the most important, most effective countervailing force then, and that was the support of Teodoro Locsin, Sr. (Applause)

And so, it's propitious for me now to be present at this most important milestone to represent my late father because had he been here, he would even be more profuse than I in paying tribute to Teodoro Locsin, one of the finest personifications of Philippine journalism. Why is it propitious today? Not only because of the intertwining of the mission of Teodoro Locsin, Sr. and my father but also because this year the life of the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Law will lapse in December.

And once again, I count on a Locsin, a Locsin in Congress and the Locsins in the Free Press to champion its extension. (Applause) And I hope that we can work together, the way your father and my father did to have an extension of land reform with reforms that will truly emancipate and empower the farmer to be an agribusinessperson. Indeed, tonight, what we are saying is that history repeats itself.

In this mission to extend land reform, I count not only on the Philippines Free Press but on other media advocates for social justice.

Journalists are critical to maintaining our strong democracy. We need not overstress that. On the other hand, as Teddy says, it can reveal, it can conceal. In the words of Joseph Pulitzer: "A cynical, mercenary, demagogic press will produce in time a people as base as itself."

These are words of great precautionary value to those who seek shelter under the freedoms advanced by such as Pulitzer and Locsin, but disdain the concurrent responsibilities on their part to be disinterested and public spirited. Freedom in the hands of such as these who want the freedom without the responsibility degenerates into a callous license to aspire to little more than gossipy headlines and inflated circulation numbers, no matter what cost must be paid in the debasement of public discourse. That's why in times like this, we need institutions like the Philippines Free Press to stand like pillars of our most important freedoms and our most important responsibilities.

I deplore the killings, be they from left or right, against journalists. We aim to break this sad historical cycle. We are focused on bringing perpetrators to justice, working with Congress to pass new laws to protect victims and jail criminals, and exhort the nation to leave behind its terrible legacy of political violence and clan vendettas.

We've been making progress in stopping the tragic killings of journalists. Our law enforcement agencies have been achieving success in bringing to justice those who carry out these crimes. That has been the case in the tragic killings of the broadcasters: Dennis Cuesta, Martin Roxas and Bert Sison. I established a task force to especially pursue the cases of the killings of journalists with Administrative Order 211. That's why the task force is called Task Force 211. It is a body established specifically to address these terrible crimes against journalists, and the head of this right now is the Undersecretary of Justice Ric Buenaflor.

A few days ago, and a few minutes ago when I talked to him on the phone, he said that the cooperation of the families of the broadcasters, of these three broadcasters, contributed greatly to the solution of these cases. The cases were solved in an average of nine working days after the perpetration. And in the case of the killing of Roxas, the suspected killers have already been arrested.

It only shows that crimes such as these cannot be resolved by the government alone. Task Force 211 and our various law enforcement agencies need the support and cooperation of all stakeholders if we are to end these killings once and for all. Individuals who provide vital information against criminals who prey on journalists will be placed, if they choose, in the Department of Justice's Witness Protection program for their security and protection. What I would like to say this evening, in this tribute to 100 years of the Philippines Free Press, in this tribute to the great proponent of freedom, Teodoro Locsin, Sr., that we will stop at nothing to protect the lives of our nation's media men and women.

We welcome all the cooperation that media can provide, especially we welcome the cooperation from such a fine paper as the Philippines Free Press.

The lifelong cause of the Philippines Free Press has been, not just to chronicle the most important moments of the republic, but to articulate the sharpest insights and deepest aspirations of its people. In having done these tasks so well, the Philippines Free Press itself is worthy of being chronicled. The Philippines Free Press has lived for a hundred years, but worthy as it is to be chronicled we cannot even begin to quantify the debt that the Filipinos owe the Philippines Free Press for all the triumphs over evil, over ignorance, over despair. And, certainly, I will not even try. As Teddy says, all we have to do is to look at the treasure trove of the Philippines Free Press. And we can see that each story will live forever as the flame that burns in the hearts of all good and free peoples in the Philippines and all over the world.

Once again, Congratulations and Happy Centennial to the Philippines Free Press! Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the 100th Anniversary of the Philippines Free Press Magazine. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115515/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1629&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 10th anniversary celebration of the Busig-On Festival [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa selebrasyon ng ika-10 anibersaryo ng Busig-On Festival

[Ipinahayag sa Labo Sports Center, Brgy. Piña, Labo, Camarines Norte, ika 1 ng Setyembre, 2008]

Maraming salamat Secretary Andaya, ang ating Cabinet Officer for Regional Development, sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin. Although namiyesta na ako dito dati kaya magkakilala na tayo, di ba?

Mayor Winnie Oco, salamat sa pag-imbata mo sa akin ngayong fiesta. Noong huling inimbata mo ako vice mayor ka pa. (applause) I'm very happy to be here again. Congresswoman Chato, Governor Typoco, lahat ng official sa lalawigan at iba't-ibang bayan ng Camarines Norte, mga kaibigan, Happy Busig-on Festival sa inyong lahat! (applause)

At pagkakataon kong magpasalamat sa inyo sa tulong ninyo sa akin, dahil mula nung nagsimula akong tumakbo noong 1992 bawat halalan nananalo ako sa Labo. Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Kanina nung lumipad kami papunta dito sa helicopter dinaanan yung malaking ilog ng Busig-on at nabasa ko na yung bale yung summary noong epiko ni Busig-on, at ang masasabi natin ang bayan ng Labo ay tulad ni Busig-on — malakas, matapang, matibay. (applause) Kayo'y karapat-dapat na angkan ng inyong epic hero. At nangunguna sa pagpupunyagi ang inyong masipag na pinunong lokal, si Mayor Winnie Oco, Outstanding Mayor of 2006. (applause) Kasi mula nung nagpunta ako dito nang namiyesta sa inyo, dito mismo sa plazang ito, bago na ang palengke, nadagdagan ang commercial building at kalsada. Gumanda ang munisipyo. May bago kayong local government site. So, congratulations mga taga Labo! (applause)

At ang inyong Mayor si Winnie ay pangulo ng Mayors' League ng Camarines Norte at ng buong Luzon. (applause) At si Vice Mayor Pardo naman ay pangulo ng Vice Mayors' League. (applause) Pati pangulo ng Municipal Councilors' League ng Camarines Norte ay galing sa inyo. Kaya, congratulations sa mga taga Labo! (applause)

At isa pa, nandoon yung inyong opisyal sa Malacañang hindi nagtatagal kasi kayo ang nasa National Gawad Kalasag Hall of Fame (applause) for being the Best Municipal Disaster Coordinating Council sa buong Pilipinas dahil tatlong taong sunod-sunod ay nanalo na kayo as Best Municipal Coordinating Council kaya Hall of Fame na kayo. (applause) Sana lalo pang mapatuloy ang magandang disaster coordination ninyo lalo na at ngayon ay may naibigay na dalawang rubber boat sa inyo para sa inyong mga rescue operations.

At padagdag natin, nagkamit din ng 2008 National Gawad Kalasag Individual Citation Award ang inyong municipal defense coordinator, si Dr. Carlos Galvez. (applause) Na hindi ba kayo rin Dr. Galvez ang sumulat ng epiko ni Busig-on. (applause) Kaya, congratulations!

Noong ako ay naupo bilang pangulo nung 2001, ang Bicol na inabutan ko ang pangalawang pinakamahirap na rehiyon sa buong bansa. Pero hindi na ngayon. Ang Bicol nalampasan na ang dalawang rehiyon sa laban sa kahirapan. Congratulations sa inyong pag-angat! (applause) Nakatulong nang malaki rito ang kahandaan at kakayahan sa trabaho ng mga taga-Bicol at ang paggugol ng pamalahaan ng malaking pondo sa inyong rehiyon. Pati nga ang ating Secretary of the Budget ay anak ng Bicol, si Nonoy Andaya. (applause) Matibay ang political will ng pamahalaang lokal at pambansa para sa Bicol.

And para sa Bicol at buong bansa, we have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with the spike in high oil and food prices. But the fact is this is a global phenomenon. These global forces are causing real difficulties for our people.

Kaya, we have been working very hard to make sure that our country's food supply remain stable and we put food on the table for every Bicolano and every Filipino. Itong Camarines Norte, hindi kayo net producer ng bigas. Kayo ay bumibili ng bigas mula sa ibang lalawigan. Yung IRRI, yung International Rice Research Institute, ang kanilang recommendation kung gusto natin na agad-agad lumaki ang ani ng bigas, dapat ibuhos ang pera doon sa mga probinsyang marami nang pinoproduce ang bigas. Kaya kung susundin natin yung guideline na yun ay medyo ang gagawin sa Camarines Norte ay hindi production kung hindi transportation.

Ngunit sabi ni Governor Typoco na ang kailangan ninyo ay three million pesos para gumawa ng feasibility study para magkaroon ng irrigation yung Busig-on River, na sabi naman ni Congresswoman Chato ay maghahalaga ng 360 million buong-buo. Para masimulaan ninyo ang feasibility study ay meron akong tsekeng 1.5 million pesos counterpart, (applause) para magsimula ng feasibility study ng Busig-on Irrigation System. Pero gaya nang sabi ko, hanggang matayo yung irrigation system ngayon ang sagot para sa Camarines Norte para hindi magmahal ang pagkain na binibili ninyo lalo na ang bigas, we are cutting costs through more efficient transport.

At importante maganda ang inyong Maharlika Highway, lalo na mula sa Camarines Sur gawa nang ito ang pinanggagalingan ng inyong bigas. Kaya siguro nahahalata niyo ilang tulay ay halos sabay-sabay na ginagawa dito sa bandang Labo to Daet, at natapos na yung nasa Barangay Malangkaw to Basud. Ito ay para mabilis at hindi magastos ang biyahe.

Nabalitaan ko rin na malapit nang matapos ang farm-to-market road network ng bayang ito. Meron nga akong binigay nang kaunti diyaan kay Winnie pero ang kabutihan ay bumili raw kayo ng heavy equipment at nagtutulong-tulong ang iba'tibang barangay at maging mga pamahalaang lalawigan para dumami ang inyong farmto-market roads at barangay roads. Kaya, congratulations! (applause)

Kanina nung kami ay lumilipad hindi lamang yung Ilog Busig-on ang napapansin kung hindi yung malawak na taniman ng niyog at naaalala ko nung huling pagpunta ko rito marami rin kayong pinyahan. Yung niyog marami pero kulang pa.

Noong 2005, nagpunta rito, nagsimula yung Birla Group diyaan sa Jose Panganiban. Yung Birla Group ay isa sa pinakamalaking conglomerate sa India, at sila ay nagtayo ng kumpanyang Pan Century Surfactants upang gumawa ng fatty alcohol mula sa coco feedstock. Nung nalaman nila na ako ay pupunta dito sa Labo, sabi nila kung pwede dumaan doon pagkatapos. Mag ga-groundbreak tayo ng isang expansion nila, pero dinig ko na isa sa idadaing sa akin ay kulang sila sa raw materials ng niyog. Yun talaga ang nangyayari ngayon sa Southern Luzon. Yung doon sa Quezon, yung Franklin Baker na malaki-malaking pabrika lumipat sa Mindanao kasi binibili na nila yung kaniyang niyog mula sa Mindanao, kulang na sa Quezon. So ayaw natin na lumipat naman yung mga pabrika mula dito sa Camarines Norte, kaya meron din akong dalang tseke na one million pesos para palaguin ang inyong niyog na pwede maibenta doon sa Birla. (applause)

Sa pinya naman, ang Camarines Norte ay kilalang-kilala sa queen pineapple. At kwinento ni Governor Typoco sa akin na sa Basud, yung meron nang Chinese Corporation na bibili ng one million boxes of queen pineapple kaya importantengimportante palaguin natin ang pinya, yung queen pineapple. At siguro naririnig ninyo niyo yung tatak na Libby's, yung canned good, Libby's. Natikman ng mga may-ari ang ating queen pineapple dito sa CamNorte. Kaya pumunta sila dito para maghanap ng queen pineapple at kung kailangan magtayo ng joint venture na gagawa ng taniman at gagawa ng canning para sa pinya.

Pero yung isang malaking gumagawa ng pinya dito, nagtatanim, si Flora, si Aling Flora, sabi ni Liway, ay malaki na ang kanyang benta — raw, raw pinya sa ibang bansa. Eh yung fresh mas maganda ang presyo kaysa sa canned kaya hindi dapat tanggalin yung fresh para gawing canned dapat magdagdag tayo ng pinya, queen pinya dahil yung kasalukuyang production ng queen pinya sa Camarines Norte, maging sa Basud, maging sa Daet is already fully booked with orders. Kaya pagkakataon sana na pasukan ito ng Labo. Yung gastos para magpalawak ng patanim ng pinya at para gumawa ng canning factory at para magkaroon ng testing ng DOST yung shelf life ng pinya, queen pinya, ang gastos doon ay 10 million U.S. dollars. Eh hindi ko dala ang tsekeng 10 million U.S. dollars. Pero handa ang Department of Agriculture at ang Development Bank of the Philippines na pondohan ang farm development and canning plant kung papayag ang Labo na magtatanim kayo at gagawa kayo ng pabrika. Payag ba kayo doon? (applause) Yes.

In the meantime, we have also been introducing measures to lift the burden of high oil prices on our people. However, no matter what actions we take, this is a global problem. We must work together to resolve these issues if we are to see any significant recovery in the global economy. Kaya kanina mayroon tayong mga binigay na piglet at binhi ng mais at gulay para dagdag na kita ng iba't-ibang mga bayan ng Camarines Norte. At sana nakatulong rin yung Bicol CARE Fund na inilagay ni Nonoy Andaya sa budget nung isang taon pagkatapos daanan kayo ng apat na malalakas na bagyo dito sa Bicol.

Ang pasiya o political willpower ng mga Bikolano at ang katatagan ng inyong katauhan ay kay dami nang beses nasubukan. Maging karaos lamang ng unos ng bagyo, mababakas sa pagmumukha ninyo ang matibay niyong pasiyang mamayani.

Kaya mga kababayan sa Labo, sa inyong pakagandang mga katangian, mga katangian ni Busig-on patuloy pang gaganda ang takbo ng inyong buhay sa bayan ng Labo. (applause)

Kaya sa inyong lahat, sa mga nakamit na ninyo at makakamit pa rin ninyo, sa susunod na sampung taon pa na pinagdidiriwang ang epiko ni Busig-on, congratulations sa inyong tagumpay. At sa inyong suporta, maraming-maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 10th anniversary celebration of the Busig-On Festival. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412111951/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1710&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the commemoration of the 112th anniversary of the “Unang Sigaw ng Nueva Ecija” [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa komemorasyon ng ika-112 anibersaryo ng “Unang Sigaw ng Nueva Ecija”

[Ipinahayag sa Main Hall, Nueva Ecija Convention Center, Lungsod ng Palayan, Nueva Ecija, ika 2 ng Setyembre, 2008]

Maraming salamat.

Maraming salamat, Governor Oyi Umali sa iyong pag-imbita sa akin dito sa napakaimportanteng pagdiriwang ng Nueva Ecija, ang Anibersaryo ng Unang Sigaw.

Maraming salamat din kay Mayor Capinpin, ang ating host city mayor; (Applause) ang ating mga congresswomen, si Cherry Umali at saka si Nely Chavez; (Applause) at ang ating iba’t-ibang mga opisyal ng lalawigan maging yung mga opisyal ng iba’t-ibang bayan ng Nueva Ecija. At hindi ko na babanggitin ang napakaraming Cabinet members a kasama ko itong araw na ito pero open sila lahat mamaya pag gusto maginterview ang ocal media sa kanila. (Applause)

At siyempre higit sa lahat sa matatapang at magigiting na mga Nuevo Ecijano, Happy Anniversary ng Sigaw ng Nueva Ecija! (Applause)

Nakilala ng buong sambayanan ang katapangan ng mga taga-Nueva Ecija nang tanggapin ang hamon ni Andres Bonifacio na mag-alsa laban sa mga Kastila. Kabilang kayo, pati na rin yung aking lalawigang Pampanga, sa unang walong lalawigang naghimagsik. Kaya yung ating probinsya nakatanim na sa ating kasaysayan ang kadakilaan dahil sinigasig sa walong sinag ng araw ang ating bandila kasama ang probinsiya kong Pampanga. Kaya naalala niyo nung nag celebrate tayo ng Independence Day nung June 12 kasama ang Nueva Ecija sa walong lalawigan kung saan ipinagdiriwang natin ang Independence Day. Congratulations sa ating lahat! (Applause)

Lalo pang hinangaan ang pag-alsa ng Nueva Ecija nang talunin ninyo sa San Isidro ang mga Guardia Sibil at prayle, sa pangunguna nina Kapitan Mariano Llanera at Kapitan Pantaleon Valmonte.

Napagtagumpayan natin ang ating kasarinlan sa mga hintulong ng Nueva Ecija. Ngunit ngayon patuloy pa rin tayong hinahamon sa kasalukuyang panahon. Pero iba na ang ating kalaban, ‘di na Kastila. Tumutulong pa nga ang mga Kastila sa atin ngayon. Ang hamon sa atin ngayon ay kaunlaran sa harap ng paghina ng ekonomiya ngayon sa buong mundo, at hamon din ay kasarinlan sa bigas, dahil masyadong nagmamahal na ang presyo ng bigas sa buong mundo. At ang sigaw din ay kakayahang bilhin ang langis sa pamamagitan ng ating kitang dolyar.

We have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with the spike in high oil and food prices. The fact is that this is a global phenomenon. These global forces are causing difficulties for all countries around the world, at hindi exempted ang Pilipinas. So, we have been working hard to make sure that our country’s food supplies remain stable and we put food on the table for every Filipino.

At dito sa pagsisikap na ito napakahalaga ang Nueva Ecija. (Applause) Nangunguna kayo sa produksyon ng bigas sa buong bansa. (Applause) Biniyayaan kayo ng malawak at kapatagan at mayamang lupain na pinanggagalingan ng bigas para sa ating mga kababayan. Alam niyo tinatanong nga nila, bakit ba tayo ay nag-iimport pa ng bigas? Eh, dahil hindi lahat ng lalawigan ay parang Nueva Ecija. Yun ang dahilan. (Applause) Maraming ibang lalawigan sa Pilipinas bulubundukin, yun lupa mabato at walang malaking ilog na nagpapabigay ng tubig. Kung yung Nueva Ecija, yung kapatagan at yung pagkaganda ng lupa ay ganun sana yung buong Pilipinas, ‘di parang Vietnam na sana tayo na yung buong Vietnam ay Mekong Delta, pero hindi ganuon. Kanya lamang, although wala ring Mekong ang Nueva Ecija, pinuno naman natin ito, gaya nang sabi ni Oyi lalo na sa ating administrasyon ng napakalaking gastos sa agrikultura, sa irigasyon pati na rin malalaking kalsada. At sabi ni Oyi kayo ay kapwa bahagi ng North Luzon Agri-business Quadrangle dahil nga kayo ay nangunguna sa produksyon ng bigas pero bahagi rin kayo sa Luzon Urban Beltway. Kaya nagtatayo tayo ng magagandang kalsada kasama kayo dito sa ating ginagawang kalsada. (Applause)

Kanina nga tinanong ko okay Oyi kumusta na yung ating... yung parang sphere kasi meron tayong napakagandang expressway system mula Tarlac at saka Subic, daan ng Clark hanggang Metro Manila. May aayusing koneksyon sa North Luzon Expressway hanggang sa C-5 diretso na hanggang sa Batangas Port. Pero meron diyang branch magko-cross ng Nueva Ecija hanggang sa Aurora. (Applause) Tanong ko kay Oyi kanina, kumusta yung kalsadang yun? Sabi ni Oyi, ang nagkukulang doon ay yung sa Pantabangan hanggang sa border. Eh, tinatawagan ko na si Jun Ebdane, mabuti kinorek ako ni Cherry Umali. Sabi niya, nandoon na sa budget ng 2008. (Applause) Kaya yun ay bahagi ng inyong pagka Luzon Urban Beltway.

Pero hindi lamang yun, mula 2001, naglagay tayo ng mga bagong patubig para sa dalawangdaang libong ektarya para sa Nueva Ecija, kasama na dito ang Casecnan at yung Aulo. Noong isang taon nga, wala ako sa malaking pulong niyo na ganito nung Sigaw ng Nueva Ecija, pero nandoon kami nina Oyi, nina Cherry doon sa Aulo Dam dahil binuksan natin yung Aulo Dam nung isang taon. (Applause) Pero hindi lang yun, pinapaalala sa akin ni Artie Yap na ito ang mga Irrigators Association president sila mismo ang nagsabi pinabuhay muli natin yung mga lumang patubig sa labinlimang libong ektarya. In fact, ang ating administrasyon lamang ang nag-repair ng lahat ng irigasyon na napabayaan mula nang sila itinayo. (Applause)

Noong 2001, wala pang isandaang libong ektarya ang may irigasyon sa Nueva Ecija. Ngayon, 135,000 hectares na. (Applause) Magbigay lang tayo ng ilang halimbawa — nandito yung mga presidente ng mga Irrigators Association — pero sabi ko kay Arty, bigyan mo lang ako ng dalawang halimbawa ng individual na nakinabang sa ating irigasyon.

Si Marcelo de Vera — nandiyan ba si Marcelo de Vera? Yun! Ginoong Marcelo – ang kasaysayan, si Ginoong Marcelo ay taga Santa Ana, Guimba. Noon nagbubungkal ng limang ektarya at nag-aani ng pitungpong cavan. Ngayon at may Casecnan nagbubungkal ng sampung ektarya, at bawat ektarya 130 cavans per hectare ang kanyang ani. (Applause) Dito naman mismo yung binuksan natin nung isang taon na Aulo — nandiyan ba si Ginoong Onofre Bautista? Yun! Barangay Aulo — (Applause) nandito siya umakyat dito sa entablado, sabi ko, Ginoong Bautista kikwento ko ang istorya mo ha? Dati nagbubungkal ng isang ektarya lamang at nag-aani ng animnapung kaban. Ngayon at may irigasyon sa Aulo, nagbubungkal siya ng dalawang ektarya, nadoble, at per hectare 170 cavans. (Applause)

Kaya dapat isigaw ng Nueva Ecija, Mabuhay! ang mga irrigator ng Casecnan-Aulo-Pantabangan at iba pang maliliit na sistema. (Applause)

At maraming nagpapanukala na gagawin din ang patubig ng Balintingon sa pamamagitan ng build-operate-and-transfer. (Applause) So, Oyi sana pormal na ipasok na nila yung kanilang proposal. Samantala, inatasan ko si Secretary Artie Yap na ihanda na rin yung bidding documents para kung nahihiya sila mag-submit ng proposal i-aadvertise na lang natin para mag-submit ng mga proposal. (Applause)

Kanina, meron tayong mga binigay na mga tseke — yun ay mga tsekeng pampautang. May mga diretso galing sa Land Bank, may mga dadaan sa mga iba't-ibang rural bank at mga cooperative. At ito lang ang mga ilang halimbawa na mga napahiram nung Land Bank itong taong ito sa magsasaka ng Nueva Ecija. At ang buong pautang ay 1.2 billion pesos na ang napautang ng Land Bank sa magsasaka ng Nueva Ecija itong taong 2008 lamang. At para mas mabisa ang paggamit ng pautang, inatasan ko rin si Secretary Artie Yap na palakasin ang mga kooperatiba nung Nueva Ecija — 48 silang lahat-lahat Artie, hindi ba? May mga halimbawa diyan na pinapalakas sa Nueva Ecija yung mga umakyat dito sa entablado, yung Talabutab, yung Pakul, (Applause) yung Bagong Bayan, yung UPRIS, at iba pa. Papano sila pinapalakas? Sila ay binibigyan ng preyoridad na makakuha ng pautang sa pamamagitan ng guarantee fund ng Land Bank. So, eto ay isang tulong din sa ating magsasaka.

At bahagi rin nung mga tsekeng na ibigay natin — ‘di ba mga subsidiyo yun para sa seeds? Nagbigay tayo sa Nueva Ecija ng subsidiyo mula Mayo hanggang Agosto, ito yung planting season. At kanina may dagdag pa dahil malapit na kayo mag-ani, malapit na kayo magtanim muli. Para sa 140,000 bags ng binhi, ang subsidiyo ay 1,500 pesos para sa hybrid at 760 pesos para sa certified seeds. (Applause)

Kanina, sa talumpati ni Oyi, sabi niya sa inyo, na para bang narinig ko yung sinabi ni John F. Kennedy: “Ask not what the country can do for you, but what you can do for the country” — kayo mga taga Nueva Ecija. Isang masasabi ko, in return for what we have invested in the farms of Nueva Ecija to meet the challenge of today, we count on Nueva Ecija to feed our people (Applause) and get them through these globally hard times.

Pero hindi lang kayo ang nagpapakain, hindi lang kayo nagpapakain sa taumbayan dahil tayo ay kailangan umangkat ng langis na 10 percent lamang natin napo-produce sa loob ng ating bansa at kailangan din tayo mag-earn ng dollars sa pamamagitan ng export. At kayo bilang bahagi ng Luzon Urban Beltway ay inaasahan din kayo doon at yun ang dahilan kung bakit nandito ang Gabinete hindi lang para ihatid ang mga proyektong lalong magpapasigla sa agribusiness kundi na rin sa export ninyo. Baka nagugulat kayo, nag-eexport din ang Nueva Ecija — yung organic brown rice, yun ineexport yun. Yung isang korporasyon ay yung Better Country Community Corporation sa Gapan City — nandito ba sila? Inimbata ko sila doon sa Cabinet meeting – nageexport din kayo ng rice coffee, nanggaling ito sa Science City of Muñoz Food Products. Nag-eexport din kayo ng handicraft from cogon at saka yung Runo Handicrafts at iba pa. At yun ay pag-uusapan mamaya dahil yung buong Export Development Council ng buong Pilipinas ay nandito ngayon kasama ang Gabinete. (Applause)

We have also been introducing measures to lift the burden of high oil prices.

At para dito patuloy na gagamitan ng pamahalaan ang lumalago nating yaman upang tulungan ang mga pamilyang naghihirap sa taas ng bilihan sa buong mundo at hampas ng bagyo habang nagpupundar upang sanggahan ang bayan sa mga krisis na hinaharap.

Maraming kwinento si Oyi nung panahon nang siya ay congressman, at gusto ko naman magpasalamat kay Oyi na nung siya ay congressman isa siya doon sa mga tumulong para maipasa natin yung mga reporma sa buwis na nagpopondo ngayon ng mga irigasyon, pautang, at iba pang mga naitutulong natin sa magsasaka ng Nueva Ecija. (Applause)

At ngayon naman bilang Gobernador iba naman ang kanyang papel para mamuno sa ating pagkakaisa sa pagsalubong sa bagong hamon ng panahon na hinaharap ng Nueva Ecija. Kaya gaya nang sabi ni Oyi, eto: “Pagkakaisa para sa Patuloy na Pagbabago ng Nueva Ecija.” Magkaisa tayo para sa patuloy na pagbabago ng Nueva Ecija at ating bansang Pilipinas. Magkaisa tayo sa baong sigaw — sigaw ng kaunlaran, sigaw ng sapat na pagkain para sa lahat ng Pilipino!

Salamat sa malaking kontribusyon na pagkain na nanggagaling sa Nueva Ecija. (Applause)

Mabuhay ang diwa ng Unang Sigaw ng Nueva Ecija!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s Speech during the Commemoration of the 112th Anniversary of the “Unang Sigaw Ng Nueva Ecija”. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115459/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1706&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Opening Program of Technical-Vocational Education and Training with Arabic Language and Islamic Values Education at the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority (TESDA) – DepEd Jobs Fair for Muslims, September 3, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Opening Program of Technical-Vocational Education and Training with Arabic Language and Islamic Values Education at the TESDA-DepEd Jobs Fair for Muslims

[Delivered at Hall A & B, Philippine Trade and Training Center, Pasay City, September 3, 2008]

Thank you for being here. At sa inyong lahat, ating mga kapatid na Muslim na naririto, sa lahat ng Muslim ng Pilipinas, lahat ng Pilipinong hindi Muslim, Assalamu Alaikum and Blessed Ramadhan!

Congratulations sa mga kabataang Muslim na nakatapos ng mga training sa ilalim ng programang ALIVE. Ang ganda naman ng programa ninyong ALIVE, buhay na buhay or Arabic Language and Islamic Values Education ng DepEd na sinundan ng skills training.

New and better collection has put the Philippines on a path to permanent, sustainable economic growth and stability. We are committed to consolidating the gains in new revenue by making long overdue investments in physical and human infrastructure. This includes along with billions of pesos for new bridges, roads and ports billions of pesos for education, healthcare and training.

In training halos walong milyong katao ang nakatapos sa iba't-ibang training program sa ating administrasyon, double the number in the previous 14 years. Hangad natin kayong mga kabataan na matuto nang kasanayang magagamit para sa inyong kinabukasan. Pinaggastusan natin ng iba't-ibang training programs kabilang ang maikling pagsasanay na pagkakakitaan agad tulad ng pananahi—may nakita akong dressmaking dito, sabi ni Boboy maganda ang mga opportunity, o pag-ayos ng buhok, sana maganda rin ang opportunity doon. Yung pini-phase out na natin yung caregiving kasi sobra na ang supply. Kaya yung mga hindi makakuha ng trabaho sa caregiving ngayon pumasok kayo muli sa ibang klaseng training dahiI marami pang iba.

Yung mga mas mahahabang programa tulad ng welding, automotive, cell phone repair, na malaki ang demand sa labas ng bansa, at mga kursong vocational o technical kabilang na ang skills upgrading. Eh, eto alas diyes tayo nagsimula ng programa pero anong oras nagsimula itong jobs fair? 8 o'clock. Eh, sabi ni Secretary Lapus sa akin, ilan na diyan ay nakakuha na ng trabaho. Diyan sa call centers meron nang nakakuha ng trabaho.

This is an auspicious way of celebrating the first days of Ramadhan. Kasisimula ng Ramadhan, and I want to use this opportunity to deliver to all of you our deepest prayer na sana'y maging daan ang Ramadhan towards achieving peace and quiet in the whole nation.

I would like to take this opportunity to assure you that the highest respect shall be accorded to our Muslim brothers and sisters during the month of Ramadhan.

I would like to assure you that the law enforcement activities in Mindanao shall give the utmost consideration to the unhampered observance of Ramadhan by peace loving and law abiding Muslims.

Marami sainyo ay kabataang Muslim ng Metro Manila at kapaligid, Cavite hanggang Pampanga, at marami sa inyo o magulang ninyo ay lumikas mula sa Mindanao. Mindanao continues to feed you even if you are here in Manila. Mindanao is a food basket of the Philippines, but the sad irony of Mindanao as food basket is that it has some of the highest hunger in our nation. Yun siguro ang isang dahilan kung bakit kayo, pamilya ninyo ay lumipat dito.

Mindanao has the large fields of the highest productivity, yet it also has the majority of our ten poorest provinces. The prime reason is the endless Mindanao conflict. A comprehensive peace has eluded us for half a century. And we thank our Muslim neighbors, we thank Malaysia for helping us in our search for that comprehensive peace in Mindanao. But, we must bring stability to the region and regain order before we can effectively reactivate the peace process in earnest.

In the light of the recent violent incidents committed by lawless MILF groups, the government will not sign the Memorandum of Agreement on Ancestral Domain. The peace process — and we'd like to assure you and our neighbors and continue to convey our gratitude to Malaysia — the peace process must proceed. But, only after we have expanded the number of stakeholders for consultation.

We have refocused all peace talks from one that is centered on dialogues with rebels to one of authentic dialogues with the communities. Our commitment is to peace, the constitutional process, and the rule of law.

Let me take this opportunity also to be very clear to those elements who seek disruption and destruction: There will be no peace gained through violence. No peace agreement can or will be reached through intimidation or the barrel of a gun. The way to peace isn't through the barrel of a gun rather it begins with providing a person a job, food on the table and human dignity.

Central to that success is to invest in people, in education like ALIVE, in healthcare, roads, bridges and training such as TVET. And we are making those investments as we see in this affair, this jobs fair today. Bukod tangi ang programang TVET with ALIVE sapagkat ito ay nakalaan lamang para sa mga kabataang Muslim habang binibigyan kayo ng mga alternatibong kaalaman at livelihood training, binibigyan din kayo ng mga karagdagang kaalaman na sang-ayon sa mga panuntunan ng Islam.

Sa programang TVET with ALIVE, ipinagsasama ang programa ng Madrasah at ang pagtuturo ng kasanayang pangkabuhayan. Batay sa ginawang pagsangguni sa mga kabataan sa tatlumput walong bayan na karamiha'y Muslim, napili ang mga kursong tumututok sa mga pangangailangan at hinahangad na trabaho ng mga kabataan na Muslim.

Nitong nakaraang limang buwan, halos isang libong Muslim na out-of-school youth mula sa Metro Manila at Pampanga ang binigyan ng ALIVE training kasama ng pagsasanay para sa kabuhayan o TVET. At sabi ni Jing Lapus, ang target ay 25,000 Muslim youth to be able to benefit from TVET with ALIVE. At sa pamamagitan nitong jobs fair, inaasahan nating makapaghanap kaagad, kayong mga kabataang Muslim ng trabaho kaya natin idinaos itong exclusive na jobs fair para sa inyo.

Peace is a central ingredient to the nation's future. It is a central ingredient for stability in our region. And we'd like to thank again our Malaysian brothers and to assure them that peace is a path we remain firmly committed to achieving, and this includes working to achieve a permanent peace in Mindanao.

With all of us working together, mga Muslim, mga Kristiyano, mga nandito sa Metro Manila, mga nandoon sa Mindanao, and all our brothers in the Muslim world and all our brothers and sisters outside the Muslim world, if we all work together, peace will happen. Samantala, sa ating jobs fair ngayon, hangad natin ang tagumpay ng kabataang Muslim.

Blessed Ramadhan at maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching ceremony of the Libmanan Biogen Power Plant [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa seremonyang naglulunsad sa Libmanan Biogen Power Plant

[Ipinahayag sa Brgy. Bahay, Libmanan, Camarines Sur, ika 4 ng Setyembre, 2008]

Dios mabalos sa aking anak na si Dato and happy birthday! (Applause)

Ating kagalang-galang na mga opisyal ng First District ng Camarines Sur at ang ating mga bisita. Nandito si Congressman Danny Suarez na... sorry, nagsalita siya bago natin winelcome siya kasi tinawag kaagad dahil excited tayo marinig yung Biogen project niya; Congressman Joey Solis mula sa Sorsogon at si Nonoy Andaya, ang dating congressman sa distrito ninyo at ngayon ang Secretary ng Budget and Management; (Applause) si Mayor Jimenez, ang ating host mayor; at lahat ng mga mayor na narito ngayon sa buong distrito; iba't-ibang mga opisyal, Dios marhay nga aga sa indo gabos. (Applause)

Alam niyo talagang hiningi kong magpulong tayo ngayong birthday ni Cong. Dato dito para pag-usapan ang ilan sa napakaraming gusto nating gawin para sa railroad towns o yung First District ng Camarines Sur. Yung unang-una ngang item sa ating agenda bago pa man nag welcome remarks ay tinawag na kaagad dahil excited tayo tungkol doon sa Biogen Power Plant na minumungkahi ni Congressman Danny Suarez ng Quezon, at napaliwanag na ni Danny sa inyo na ito ay magbibigay ng enerhiyang mas mura at makakatulong pa sa waste disposal ng mga daan-daang libong metric tons na pinagtatalupan o ipa na nakukolekta taun-taon mula sa palay, mais at niyog dito sa Kabikulan.

Ang isang 10-megawatt power plant na iniisip ni Congressman Suarez ay 28 million U.S. dollars or one billion pesos. Ganun kalaki yang proyektong yan. Sabi ng DBP, pwede ring paliitin depende kung magkano ang capital na ilalagay ng mga investor ni Cong. Suarez eh merong debt equity ratio na sinusunod ng DBP kung magkano ang ipapautang nila. Basta sigurado ang pagkukunan ng pinagtatalupang feedstock. Yan din ang isang tinitignan ng DBP. Kaya kailangan maguhit nila o masukat nila magkano ang makukuhang mga bunot dito sa Kabikulan, dito sa First District.

Kung magtayo si Congressman Suarez ng planta dito sa Libmanan o doon man sa Pamplona na meron pang malaking lugar pala na pag-aari ng gobyerno na sequester, basta depende kung saan, salamat sa kuryenteng malilikha. Kung itatayo niya sa Bondoc Peninsula muna yung kanyang pinanggagalingan na katabi naman ng distritong ito, salamat pa rin dahil makakabenta tayo ng waste products sa kanya. So, yun ang importante, makakabenta tayo ng waste products. Hindi masasayang yung waste at baka magkaroon pa ng kuryente na kinekvento ni Danny na makaka-save yung mga drying mechanical dryers keysa magbibilad tayo ng bigas sa semento na hindi naman efficient yun.

Pero bukod sa waste products ng Biomass Power Plant, ang First District ng Camarines Sur ay napakaimportante rin dahil watershed ng Bicol River Basin. At yung ikalawang topic na yun ang gusto kong pag-usapan ngayong umaga. Kailangan manguna ang distrito sa pag-aalaga ng punongkahoy dahil tayo ay watershed.

Preyoridad natin ipagtupad ang Bicol River Basin Project na sinasakop ang forest management, irrigation at flood control. In fact, noong ako ay pumunta sa America nung 2001, yung unang pagbisita ko kay President Bush, yun ang unang-unang pinirmahan ng Philippine Government at yung World Bank para pondohan ang Bicol River Basin Project. (Applause)

Pero ngayon salamat sa tulong nila dating congressman nga, Nonoy Andaya, Congressman Danny Suarez, Congressman Joey Solis dahil pinasa nila yung Value Added Tax. Hindi na tayo kailangan umutang sa World Bank para sa River Basin Project ng Bicol. (Applause) Kaya dumating man yun o hindi, depende kung... o dadating ang ibang component pero hindi lahat magagawa kaagad, pwede na tayong magsimula.

Sa Forest Management halimbawa, nandoon sa budget naglagay na si Nonoy ng...meron ng 129 million pesos (Applause) para sa reforestation. At hindi lang yun, kasalukuyang bini-bid out na ng DENR, kaya malapit na ang implementasyon.

Ngayon, merong DENR component, merong mga local government component. Kasi kung matatandaan natin ayon sa batas yung communal forest ay devolved na sa local government. Kaya itong araw na ito inisip ko na bilang regalo sa Bicol River Basin communities sa birthday ni Cong Dato ay bibigyan ko ng tseke para sa reforestation ang iba't-ibang mga bayan, sampung bayan nitong distrito. (Applause) Iba-iba ang amount kasi iba-iba ang kalakihan ng mga bayan. Pero ang masasabi ko yung mga mas maliit na makukuha ang amount kung mai-implement ito kaagad dadagdagan naman hangang maging pare-pareho kayo lahat. So, ito di ba kasi may mga populasyon 30,000 or below, meron naman napakalaking bayan ng Libmanan kaya iba-iba ang mga amounts pero basta matapos ninyo ay dadagdagan muli.

Para sa irigasyon naman, pag-iibayuhin ang Libmanan-Cabusao Irrigation Project. (Applause) Kuwento sa akin nung ibang mga pare dito na itong irrigation na ito, yung ilan sa irrigation canals yan panahon pa ng aking tatay, ni Presidente Diosdado Macapagal. Pero ang problema doon sa mga natayo noong araw, ever since then sa buong Pilipinas ito, wala talagang administrasyon na nagre-rehabilitate kaya isa sa ating priority sa ating administrasyon ay mag-rehabilitate ng mga lumang irrigation projects. Pero dito sa Libmanan-Cabusao narinig ko naman sa mga magsasaka na namamahalan sila dahil pump irrigation.

Kaya mas mabuti na gawin nating dam and gravity. (Applause) At hindi ba pag dam, gravity na, ano? Pag dam, gravity na, di ba? Okay. So, yung kasalukuyan naglilingkod sa 1,500 hectares, gagastos tayo ng 700 million pesos para sa dam para magkaroon ng apat na libong ektaryang madidiligan ng Libmanan-Cabusao. (Applause) Sayang si Artie Yap wala dito kasi may flu kasi gusto niya personally ipakita sana sa inyo yung kaniyang advertisement sa Philippine Star. Dahil last Saturday, ginawa na yung unang publication para sa bidding ng Libmanan-Cabusao Dam and Irrigation Project na siya ang pinakamalaking component ng Bicol River Basin Project. (Applause)

Para naman sa flood control. Kailangan ang 600 million pesos para sa dalawampu't apat na kilometrong embankment sa gilid ng ilog sa Libmanan-Cabusao, pati na rin ang flood gates. Mula nung 2005, baka hindi niyo nahahalata, kunti-konti naglalabas tayo, nagtatayo ng revetment at 170 million na ang nagastos. Pero gusto natin pabilisin. Kaya kinausap ko si Secretary Ebdane na magrelease na ngayon ng 200 million pesos pa para mapabilis ang embankment ng Bicol River Basin. (Applause)

Pero hindi lang yung Bicol River Basin ang isang importanteng pinanggagalingan ng tulong mula sa national government. Yung Bicol CARE, kung naalala ninyo, yung "Bicol Calamity Assistance and Rehabilitation". At doon sa Bicol CARE project na yun napagalaman ko na kumpleto na ang Center for Health Development sa San Fernando at maraming tulong pati hanggang sa Sorsogon. Doon sa Bicol Sanitarium sa Cabusao, malapit nang matapos pero nagkulang pala ang pondo dahil may dinivert sa Albay — ni hindi dinivert sa Sorsogon, sa Albay dinivert, hindi bale — para tutulungan punuin yung na-divert meron din akong tsekeng one million pesos para sa communication system ng Bicol Sanitarium sa Cabusao. (Applause)

Eh hindi pa pala tapos lahat nuon, meron pang additional request na kung pwede raw magtayo ng Libmanan-Canaman Bridge. (Applause) At tinignan ng DPWH kung magkano ang gastos nuon, 800 million pesos raw, pero tinawagan ko si Jun Ebdane baka naman meron tayong mga bridge projects funds na pwede pang magamit natin para makamenos ng gastos. Dahil parang dalawang bridge ito eh, may island in between, so tinignan daw niya yan. But whatever it is, whether it's the whole 800 million or something less than that, sabi ni Secretary Ebdane ay gagawin raw niya. (Applause)

Kaya ito... sa ganitong bagay imbes na 40 minutes ang travel from Pili Airport to Naga, imbes na 40 minutes magiging 15 minutes na lamang ang travel. (Applause)

Kaya ito ang ating mga balak gawin para sa mga bayan dito sa First District ng Camarines Sur.

Ang hinihingi ko sa inyo ipagpatuloy natin ang pagkakaisa, magtulungan tayo — pamahalaang nasyonal, pamahalaang lokal, lahat ng mamamayan ng iba't-ibang bayan tungo sa pagpapabilis ng kaunlaran hindi lamang ng railroad towns ng Camarines Sur kundi na rin buong Kabikulan at buong Pilipinas.

Dios mabalos sa indo gabos. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Launching Ceremony of the Libmanan Biogen Power Plant. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115400/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1694&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Message of President Arroyo on the 108th Anniversary of the Philippine Civil Service

Message
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
On the 108th Anniversary of the Philippine Civil Service

[Delivered at the Presidential Broadcast Studio, Kalayaan Hall, September 8, 2008]

Happy Anniversary Month to our nation's Civil Service!

This September, we celebrate the accomplishments of Filipino civil servants who play an essential role in our national life. From government think tanks where public policies are crafted to frontline services where they interface with the public, our government professionals serve as the important link that connects our government and our people.

Lalong mahalaga ang pagkikilalang ito ngayon, sa harap ng mga hamon ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya at mga ligalig sa ilang sulok ng bansa. Kailangan ngayon ng taong bayan ang pagsulong at pagtanggol ng pamahalaan. Nagpupugay tayo sa mga kawani at opisyal na tapat at masigasig na tumutugon sa panawagan ng sambayanan.

Our faithful civil servants have been behind every stride, every challenge and every triumph that we have faced as a people, tirelessly working to provide service to the people and working to realize the dreams and aspirations of an entire nation through the different programs and projects that they are entrusted to implement.

A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored together to create to help ensure peace, order and stability in our country. And it is paying off — our economy is more resilient today than ever before. We have created almost seven million jobs in seven years. Investments continue to come in despite continued volatility in the global markets. As a result of our economic turnaround, we are also able to invest in key sectors to cushion the harsh impact of high prices for food and fuel on our poor.

In addition, we are investing in modernizing infrastructure like roads and bridges on an unprecedented scale. We are also investing in expanded education, healthcare, and other social services. All the while, we are balancing these vital investments with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations and balance our budget in 2010.

It is time that a grateful nation recognizes and thanks our civil servants for their service.

Ngayong Setyembre, sumaludo tayo sa lahat ng “lingkod-bayang Pinoy”.

Pasalamat natin sila sa kanilang paglilingkod sa bayan. Kilalanin natin ang mga sakripisyong kanilang pinagdadaan upang matamo ang tagumpay para sa ating lahat.

Many things are left to be done.

Congratulations to the Civil Service Commission for its endeavors to uplift the morale, efficiency, responsiveness, courtesy and integrity of our servants nationwide!

Let's continue to work hard together to fulfill our Philippine Reform Agenda.

Mabuhay ang Serbisyo Sibil ng Pilipinas!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). PGMA's Message on the 108th Anniversary of the Philippine Civil Service. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115331/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1691&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 37th ‘Araw Ng Quirino’ Anniversary or the celebration of “Panagdadapun Festival”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 37th ‘Araw Ng Quirino’ Anniversary or the celebration of “Panagdadapun Festival”

[Delivered at the VIP Grandstand, Provincial Capitol Sports Complex, Cabarroguis, Quirino, September 11, 2008]

Dios ti agngina unay apo Secretary Bello ti napintas nga introduction yo kanyak.

Apo Congressman Junie Cua, ti baru nga chairman ti Committee on Appropriations diay Kongreso, the first chairman of the Committee on Appropriations nga anak ti amyanan; (Applause) Apo Congressman Rodito Albano gapo Isabela; Apo Governor Daks Cua ken Mrs. Cua, the former Congresswoman Cua; Apo Bishop Villena; other Cabinet members; other officials ti probinsiya ti Quirino; amin nga mayores ken opisyaes dagidiay naduma-duma nga ili ti Quirino; kakabsat ken gagayyem, naimbag a bigat yo amin ken maragsak nga fiesta kadakayo. (Applause)

Ken iso nga ti tema ti fiesta yo ket “I Love Quirino.” Immay kami met ta siyak met I love Quirino. (Applause) And I consider it a humbling experience to be able to serve, as Congressman Junie Cua mentioned in the various ways that we work together, the people of Quirino and thank you for the honor of serving you. (Applause) Uray no Quirino, adda sab-sabali nga ethnic groups. Dagiti Ilokano, dagiti Bugkalot, Ifugao, Kankana-ey, Ibaloi, Agta, nagkakadua kayo kas maysa nga umili tano agaramid para ti vision ti pagilyan tayo to become a first world nation in 20 years.

Ipakpakita yo iti panagayat yo, saan laeng ti probinsiya yo ngem iti dadduma iti Pilipinas babaen ti panang-share yo iti bounty iti daga yo kadagiti sabali nga probinsiya, dagiti vegetables yo nga pinadakkel ditoy ket agpakpakan iti ado kadagiti kailyan yo iti sabali pay nga parte iti Luzon ken iti Visayas. Dios ti agngina kadakayo amin. (Applause)

Tungtungpalen yo iti importante nga role tatta nga adda kakurangan ti makan iti intero nga lubong daytoy nga tawen. Self-sufficient kayo iti bagas and you even export a part of it ken iti probinsiya yo ket iti immuna nga banana producer iti Region II. Ikikkan yo met dagiti sabali nga probinsiya iti kape, mani, ken sabali pay nga ani gapo iti industriya dagiti umili ti Quirino ken sabali nga probinsiya nga self-sufficient iti bagas, masapul laeng nga ag-import tayo ti 10 percent ti kasapulan tayo iti bagas. Sakbay nga dagiti rice exporting countries ket nagsardeng nga aglako dagiti sabali nga pagilyan. We have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with high oil and food prices. Iti tulong iti probinsiya ti Quirino, we have succeeded in ensuring that our country’s food supplies remain stable.

Isu nga pinagpigsa tayo iti agricultural production aglalo kadagiti probinsiya nga kangatuan iti yields da, babaen kas pagarigan ti irigasyon. (Applause) Ken kadua ti programa tayo ket ti Addalam Irrigation System (Applause) nga inrugi tayo idi Mayo. Ken kasla kuna ni Governor Daks Cua, adda gastos tayo nga 1.3 billion pesos (Applause) tapno maipatakder, but it will give us irrigation of 5,000 hectares — actually, 5,800 — of which 1,000 hectares already have been irrigated since last May diay ili ti Aglipay ken Saguday ditoy nga probinsiya ken kasta met iti Jones ken Echague diay Isabela. Manipud idi rugi daytoy nga panangaramid daytoy irrigation network ket nangaramid met tayo nga 1,200 nga baro nga trabaho.

And we have those who have benefited from this project. Elmer Pagaduan – addadtoy ni Elmer Pagaduan? Diak ammo no addadtoy because you’re so many here — used to have an idle land of 1.5 hectares diay Saguday. Itatta nga addan Addalam Irrigation System, fully irrigated, he expects to harvest at least 120 cavans this late September (Applause) compared to 60 cavans no idi no awan pay ti Addalam Irrigation System. Ta tatta, he is now assured of two croppings a year.

Maykadua iti proyekto iti Addalam River, adda met nagpaaramid met tayo iti 29 nga basbassit nga Community Irrigation Systems wenno Small Water Impounding Projects iti intero nga probinsiya nga mangpadanum iti 2,000 nga ektarya. (Applause) Ti intero nga pagilyan, we have restored about a million hectares of old rundown irrigation systems, including 2,000 hectares in Quirino. So the new and the restored irrigation systems have increased our nation's irrigation land to 1.5 million hectares, including 10,000 hectares here in the province of Quirino. (Applause)

In terms of oil, the high price of oil and gasoline and everyday commodities hits our poor the hardest. While the high price of oil is a global issue and outside the control of the government, we have introduced measures to lift the burden of our people. Several months ago, we removed the tariff on oil. We have also been providing targeted cash payments to the poorest of the poor to help you cope with their electric bills. Diak ammo no idtoy Quirino, dagidiay consumers ti menos ti 100 kilowatts ti kuryente, addan diskuwento para makatulong kadakayo amin nga nagrigrigat ti kuryente. (Applause)

But the fact is that this is a global phenomenon and these global forces are causing real difficulties for all countries around the world. So no matter what actions we take, we must work together to resolve these global issues if we are to see any significant recovery in the world economy.

Toy Quirino, saan laeng importante ti agtaltalon, importante met ti reporma ti daga. Committee dak ti land reform, kas anak daydi Pangulo nga nangirugi iti emancipation dagiti agtaltalon babaen iti land reform.

I know for a fact from being around my father — who incidentally was a protégée of President Quirino after whom your province was named — I learned from him how challenging it is to govern our nation especially with the media that is the freest in the whole world as it was during my father's presidency. But a President governs for the benefit of all Filipinos and should not be focused on public relations.

Ni papang ko, kuna ni former Governor Espino nga idi ti Quirino ket kadua ti Nueva Vizcaya, na ni papang ko iso ti nagrugi ti Diffun-Maddela road idi tiyempo na. (Applause)

My father was my greatest mentor, role model and inspiration. I learned early from him the meaning and importance of fortitude. Kasla kuna ni Congressman Junie Cua idi 38 years ago, awan pay nga napipintas nga kalsada, irigasyon, awan pay nga uray anyan. So nangruna pay idi tiyempo ni papang ko, and so the time when they came to open the Diffun-Maddela road, nagbiyahe da to... wen, 9 hours nagbangka gapo, saan? Sadinno? Gapo Aglipay inggana Maddela, 9 hours ti biyahe idi ngem itatta, nalpasen dagiti kalsada tayo, napipintasen dagiti kalsada tayo. But this lesson, travelling 9 hours by boat which is part of the two days of travel by land, is the lesson that still keeps us going everyday as we go about making tough decisions that we hope will set the Philippines on the path to becoming a modern, prosperous nation. (Applause)

Serving the people of our country iso ti importante. And I am very happy nga akas chairman ti Appropriations Committee itatta, Congressman Junie Cua, (Applause) will serve not only the people of Quirino but all the people of this great nation. (Applause) And I know he will be tireless in working to bring about the changes that will deliver a better life for all Filipinos including all the people of Quirino. And so, we work with the very strong work ethic at the same time promote an agenda that has delivered the strongest economy in more than 30 years and a better quality of life for millions of our countrymen including, I hope, the Bugkalots of Quirino. (Applause)

Dagiti Bugkalot kadagiti tallo nga probinsiya ti Quirino, Aurora ken Nueva Vizcaya ket naikkanen ti Certificates of Ancestral Domain Titles para ti 100,000 nga ektarya. Dagitoy CADTs, kadua dagiti sabali nga agricultural inputs ket mangikari to bring iti adu nga produksyon ken nangatngato nga kita. And that's the reason why your mayor chieftain, Rosario Camma, was the best dressed person in the opening of Congress. (Applause)

But that is to symbolize ti importansiya ti Quirino para ti intero ti pagilyan. You know, all provinces, all districts lobby to be included in the SONA. Ngem diay SONA is only a 35-minute speech kadua ti palakpak maybe one hour, so you cannot talk about everybody. Ngem iti SONA tayo, Quirino was mentioned two times — Addalam River ken dagidiay Bugkalots nga nabaro nga CADTs. (Applause) Iso ti importansiya ti Quirino para ti intero nga pagilyan. Immuna ti kontribusyon yo dagidiay kanem ti pagilyan na ikadua ti kontribusyon yo para ti social justice para dagidiay indigenous population.

Iso nga no agkakayat tayo ti Quirino agkakayat tayo met ti intero nga pagilyan. (Applause) And so that's why here we are — we love Quirino and we love the whole Philippines. And we are here to thank Quirino because you love the Philippines, you help feed the Philippines and you help the Philippines achieve social justice.

Dios agngina kadakayo amin and Happy 37th Anniversary! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the 37th 'Araw Ng Quirino' Anniversary or the Celebration of "Panagdadapun Festival". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115240/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1690&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Statement: President Arroyo during the National Competitiveness Council meeting with the turnover of Intel Philippines check donation amounting to U.S. $2.04 million

Statement of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo:

During the National Competitiveness Council meeting with the turnover of Intel Philippines check donation amounting to U.S. $2.04 million

[Issued at the Aguinaldo State Dining Room, Malacañang, September 15, 2008]

Good morning everyone.

Please sit down, ladies and gentlemen. Morning.

Good morning ladies and gentlemen. Welcome again to Malacañang!

Well, let me start by thanking Intel Philippines for the generous donation that will build thirty classrooms, provide a brighter future to thousands of school children, and contribute to our global competitiveness.

I decided that instead of receiving Intel's donation privately or in a separate meeting, I would call it in the middle of the meeting of the National Council on Competitiveness, to make sure that we remain on track to improve our business and investment climate and to continue to improve our global competitiveness.

The National Competitiveness Council will be two years old next month, but ladies and gentlemen, you have already accomplished a lot. I congratulate you all for the competitiveness initiatives that have influenced the direction of many industries and government agencies. Your efforts contributed to the five-notch improvement in our country's ranking in the Institute for International Management and Development survey and the four-rank improvement for competitiveness in the World Economic Forum. Congratulations! And thank you.

I called this meeting also to reassure the investment community, domestic and foreign, that the government is acting responsibly, will stay the course and has a plan for the future.

If you recall, in my State of the Nation Address last year, 2007, I outlined five comprehensive strategies for global competitiveness. Oh! Rather, 2006, two years ago:

Number one, plentiful and affordable food to keep our labor cost globally competitive;

Number two, reduced cost of electricity to make our factories regionally competitive;

Number three, modernized infrastructure to efficiently transport goods and people;

Number four, upgrade knowledge and technologies disseminated for productivity;

Number five, reduced red tape to cut business costs.

With regard to the first and second strategies, plentiful and affordable food and reduced cost of electricity, the upheaval in the global economy this past year has certainly had a significant and painful impact through higher prices of food, fuel and rice. This has led to an uptrend in inflation and even greater pressures on our very poor and working poor.

With the price of crude oil on the global market some 44 percent over the past year and the price of rice on the global market up some 43 percent over the past year, our economic team has been challenged, to say the least. Our team is doing their best on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures, provide the safety net for those members of our society who are hit hardest by these global developments and deliver the economic growth that will continue to generate jobs.

While the economic picture been challenging, thankfully we had the foresight to plan for this day through our tough choices to reform our tax system. It is important to remind ourselves of the tough past choices that have allowed for the revenues and stability to see the nation through this rainy day – namely, the successes of the revenue collection which is allowing for greater investment in the people during this tough time. The revenue collection has given us the funds to invest in targeted relief to our most-poor through programs aimed at relieving the high price of energy, food and other daily staples. In fact, our foresight is allowing us to expand this program to see our nation through this difficult time until the global economy turns around.

For instance, starting last July, those earning 200,000 pesos a year or less don't have to pay income tax — a 12 billion-peso tax break to keep our labor cost competitive.

I am proud of the advocacy of the Competitiveness Council for lower power rates. I thank the Council for your involvement in reducing power cost by P1.50 per kilowatt hour in the 13 economic zones under PEZA, and for pushing the Interim Open Access which the ERC has approved.

On the third strategy, modernized infrastructure, I recognize the role that the Competitiveness Council plays in the completion of vital infrastructure and the private sector-government joint projects that you continue to champion. A number of these projects were the result of recommendations presented by the private sector in 2006 during the Competitiveness Summit.

On the fourth strategy, upgraded knowledge, aside from contributing classrooms, I thank you for your support for improvements in the English, Math and Science proficiency of our elementary pupils. With the Council's help in aligning education projects, together with the infusion of more government funds into basic education, our elementary pupils have shown marked improvement in their National Achievement scores.

On the fifth strategy, reduced red tape, thank you for campaigning for such schemes as the Visa Upon Arrival for Chinese and Indian businessmen and the reduction of fees for exporters. The Competitiveness Council's constant campaigning for our cities to achieve ISO certification has also encouraged more LGUs to improve systems and procedures.

The recent challenges we are facing are broadly external. The heights to which oil and other commodity prices have risen were unexpected and the depth of financial market turbulence in the U.S. is still unknown. Against this backdrop, the best buffer we have to external vulnerability is our own domestic, internal strength. Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment and relying less on external markets is exactly what our reform agenda is about. This is one of the key contributors to our renewed economic strength and stability in recent years. This is indeed what is keeping our economy on its path of long-term sustainable growth.

We will continue on the path of economic reforms. Our reforms to date have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy withstand these external shocks. We will continue to be vigilant against further challenges to our economy. We must maintain the fiscally prudent policies that have given us the strength to weather this global storm.

We are doing everything in our power to focus on the fundamentals, keep the economy steady, and provide relief for those most in need.

That can only happen if we all commit to continue to work together to create a stronger and more competitive Philippines.

Thank you. And congratulations again for all you have achieved! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's statement during the National Competitiveness Council meeting with the turnover of Intel Philippines check donation amounting to U.S. $2.04 million. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412115154/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1683&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Mid-Year Philippine Economic Briefing

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Mid-Year Philippine Economic Briefing

[Delivered on September 17, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Teves for your introduction.

Governor Tetangco, Cabinet members, members of the media, members of the financial community, ladies and gentlemen, good morning.

There is no doubt that the global economy has hit the Philippines hard. The upheaval in the global economy this past year has clearly had a significant and painful impact on every Filipino through higher prices of food, fuel and rice. This has led to unfortunate levels of inflation and even greater pressures on our poor.

Crude oil prices smashed through the hundred-dollar barrier. World rice prices crossed the previously unimaginable price of a thousand dollars per metric ton.

Some blame speculators moving billions of dollars from subprime mortgages, whose collapse forced the icons of the U.S. financial might into making huge write-downs, and the fund managers transferred their money to commodities like fuel and food. Others point to rising demand from the Brazil, Russia, India and China economies; to the diversion of wheat, corn and the like to ethanol production; to crop failures due to climate change-induced weather shifts; and to protective cut backs on grains exports by some producing countries.

With the price of crude oil on the global market reaching a high of some 44 percent over the past year and the price of rice in the global market some 43 percent over the past year, our economic team has been challenged, to say the least. As you will hear from them and as you have somehow seen in the introductory video, our economy has not been spared by the global economic downturn. Our economic growth has been impacted.

Our growth in gross domestic product slowed down to 4.6 percent in the second quarter, a far cry from the sizzling 8.3 percent growth posted last year. But growth eased in our neighbors as well. Singapore grew by only 2.1 percent compared to 9.0 percent the year before. Hong Kong posted 4.2 percent compared to 6.2 in the same quarter last year. South Korea's growth is similar to ours at 4.8 percent.

Our team is doing their best on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures, provide a safety net to those members of our society who are hit hardest by these global developments, and deliver the growth that will continue to generate jobs and the tax revenues that we need to fuel our investment in the future.

While the recent economic picture has been challenging, there is also no doubt that thankfully we have had the foresight to plan for this day through tough choices to reform our tax system. This has given us the funds to invest in targeted relief to our most-poor through programs aimed at relieving the high price of energy and food. Examples of key projects and programs that are in place to alleviate the pain include removing tariffs on petroleum products; "Pantawid Pamilya" providing targeted direct payments for the most-poor linked to school attendance and good health practices; "Food-for-School" giving school children in the most food-poor communities a kilo of rice a day to augment the family food supply; "Pantawid Kuryente" to help pay the electric bill of indigents; "Pantawid Pag-aral" for interest-free college loans and scholarships; fuel discounts for public utility vehicles; "Pantawid Pasahe" to convert the engines of jeepneys and trucks to the less costly LPG, CNG or biofuels; microfinancing for the wives and immediate family members of drivers and conductors of public utility vehicles; "Tulong para kay Lolo at Lola" for the elderly who are not covered by SSS or GSIS; upgrading of hospitals that cater to the rural poor; a supplemental calamity budget; and income tax exemption for those earning 200,000 pesos a year or below.

The recent challenges we face are broadly external but they nevertheless require strong, decisive and targeted action internally. The heights to which oil and other commodity prices have risen were unexpected and the depth of the financial market turbulence in the U.S. is still unknown. Against this backdrop, the best buffer we have to external vulnerability is our own domestic internal strength.

Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment, and relying less on external markets is what our reform agenda is about.

The statistics on slower growth reflect what we hope is a lagging indicator.

We hope the worst is behind us and we have weathered the worst of the global storm.

We may have already seen the worst of the oil price spikes. You have felt it at the pump — fuel prices are starting to come down.

The results of the July 2008 round of the Labor Force Survey show that employment generation for this period reached 1.3 million.

The August inflation rate of 12.5 percent to a high was only 0.2 percentage points above the previous months, in contrast to the acceleration last April and June.

While no one can predict the future during these uncertain global economic times, it seems that our measures at home are seeing us through the toughest times as we prepare for a day with lower global fuel and food prices.

But even as some external challenges are letting up, we will continue to focus on reining in inflation, bringing down prices of the most essential commodities; increasing targeted investments to our poor and getting our economic engine moving in a higher gear.

We will work hard also to strengthen the banking system, improve our fiscal health, encourage investment in our most promising growth sectors, and expand our potential sectors.

We have a targeted strategy for food self-sufficiency; for less energy dependence; for greater self-reliance in our attitude as a people and our posture as a nation.

While it's good news that we are being more self-reliant and taking control of our own destiny, we must become even more globally competitive. To that end, we met with the National Council on Competitiveness early this week to make sure we remain on track to improve our business and investment climate and to continue to improve our global competitiveness.

The cut in corporate income tax rates next year will give companies more headroom to reduce their prices to the public and be more competitive.

We will continue on the path of economic reform. Our reforms have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy will withstand these external shocks. We will continue to be vigilant against further challenges to our economy. We must maintain the fiscally prudent policies that have given us the strength to weather this global storm.

The global economy may have knocked us down, but we have gotten up off the mat and dusted ourselves off. Filipinos are fighters, naturally optimistic, and we don't quit. Our story as a people has a practical, down-to-earth theme: BEAT THE ODDS.

We are doing everything in our power to focus on the fundamentals, keep the economy steady, and provide relief for those most in need. But we will only be successful if every segment of society pulls together and commits to building an ever-stronger Philippines.

Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the Mid-Year Philippine Economic Briefing. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135348/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1682&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Local Peace and Security Assembly Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Local Peace and Security Assembly

[Delivered at the Conference Hall, Dakak Park and Beach Resort, Barangay Taguilon, Dapitan City, Zamboanga del Norte, September 18, 2008]

Thank you very much, Secretary Gonzales, National Security Adviser and convenor of this series of Local Peace and Security Assemblies.

Atong mga host diri sa assembly, si Governor Yebes, si Congresswoman Carreon, si Mayor Carreon; ug si Congressman Jalosjos, atong mga leader sa laing-laing mga probinsya ug highly urbanized cities sa Zamboanga Peninsula gikan sa South, si Governor Au Cerilles kauban si Congressman Cerilles; ug ... sab nato, ang first speaker from Mindanao, Speaker Boy Nograles (applause); gikan sab sa South si Congressman Vic Yu (applause); ug gikan sa Zamboanga Sibugay, si Congressman Belma Cabilao (applause) and beside la ciudad highly urbanized de Zamboanga City, Mayor Celso Lobregat (applause); mayors, vice mayors, board members from the different cities and municipalities of Region IX, other officials of the national government, other participants, especially those coming from the religious, academe NGOs, farmers and fisherfolk, representatives kaninyong tanan, maayong udto ug buenos dias (applause).

Daghang salamat y muchas gracias sa mga resolusyon. Dunay guid mga espesyal nga problema dinhi sa Region 9 nga lahin sa mga uban tungod kay ang Zamboanga Peninsula usa ka melting pot sa lain-laing ethnic communities gikan sa Luzon, Visayas ug Mindanao ug mga lumad sab. And I'd like to recall that my own family reflects this particular quality or characteristic of Zamboanga Peninsula. My grandfather, Juan Macaraeg, was an Ilocano from Binalonan, Pangasinan and, in the 1920s he came to Zamboanga Peninsula to work for Sta. Clara Lumber, so he's one of those who contributed to the ethnic richness and diversity of this peninsula. He was already married to my lola who is from Pangasinan from San Carlos, and when they came, my lolo and my lola, they brought not only my mother, their only child, but they also brought my grandfather's cousins, my lola's siblings, a whole clan came over. And I think that's very typical of those who came over to that new frontier in the 1920s. My mother was in primary school and my grandfather, from my mother's stories of course... percent of Sta. Clara Lumber didn't spend most of his time in the big city of Zamboanga. He spent it in the hinterlands of Zamboanga Peninsula, then only one province, and my mother had many recollections of my grandfather being in Margosatubig.

And that's why I was so happy when Congressman Cerilles brought me then as senator to that town of Margosatubig. Now, as Governor Cerilles tells me, it's one of the oldest towns—the oldest town in what has become Zamboanga del Sur. So my grandfather left my mother in Zamboanga City in the care of the Lorenzo family, Celso's grandfather and grandmother. And that's how my mother became a very fluent speaker of Spanish aside from Chabakano. So, my grandfather being the head of that whole clan that came over was very patriarchal. One of his cousins, a Guico, because my grandfather was Guico-Macaraeg, was a bachelor and my grandfather decided that he would choose the bride for his cousin and he chose a member of the prominent family in Manukan — the Sagario clan — to be the bride of his cousin. And that's why the Guicos of Manukan, my cousins, have been my supporters here since I first ran in 1992. And being a nobody then, I still had an overwhelming victory here in Zamboanga del Norte because I have such a big clan here. Thank you for that (applause).

Today, in fact, I invited them to come to have lunch with me, forty of them are outside waiting to have lunch together with us.

So, that's one characteristic diri sa Zamboanga Peninsula mahimo ug melting pot. And I guess your... the first Chief of Staff from Mindanao, General Yano (applause) from Sindangan, Zamboanga del Norte must also be one of the examples, one of the fruits of that melting pot.

Dako sab dili lang diperensya sa ethnicity dako sab ug diperensya ang kita sa mga lumulupyo dinhi like my mother, when she was living with the Lorenzo family, was interacting with the old elite, not only the Lorenzos but the Aranetas, etcetera, etcetera, the Alanos. But on the other hand, dinhi naman sa Zamboanga del Norte kauban ang Sian. Ang labi kabus nga lungsod sa tibuok nasud Sian guid sa tibuok nasud. So aside from that, pila ka armadong grupo ang ga-impluwensya sa nagkalain-laing lungsod dinhi, ug sa pipila sa ka pobreng lungsod, kaapin sa usa ka armadong grupo ang gasamok-samok. In fact, Secretary Bert Gonzales said 'that here in Zamboanga del Norte, this is a microcosm, because all the armed groups are represented somewhere here in Zamboanga del Norte labi na sa pikas ha? Sa distrito ni Cesar. And because it's like it's so isolated from the rest of Zamboanga del Norte that it is like a different world altogether. Gumikan dini ang mga problema sa peace and order.

We are committed doing everything possible to bring lasting peace not only to Zamboanga Peninsula but to the whole of Mindanao and to end 40 years of fighting that has killed more than 120,000 Filipinos. It is in the interest of all Filipinos, Muslims and Christians, to end the violence that has held this part of our country back. We remain committed to the peace process. We have negotiated in good faith with our Muslim brethren to keep the peace these last seven years and also to look for a lasting peace for generations to come. However, lately, lawless groups within the MILF have taken the law into their own hands and that will not stand.

We will not negotiate with a gun pointed at our head. So, no matter what the Supreme Court ultimately decides, the government will not sign the proposed MOA-AD (applause).

We have refocused all peace talks from one centered on dialogues with rebels to one of authentic dialogues with the communities. And I hope that, that will address some of your resolutions that are expressed in many paragraphs about consulting with the communities, with the stakeholders. And disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) is the context of our engagement with all armed groups. And I thank you also that you agree with that as reflected in your resolution.

Indeed, your resolution contains the essential elements to any lasting peace and if everyone supports these elements and the national government is committed on our part to do such support, Mindanao can indeed be the bread basket for the country. I congratulate Zamboanga Peninsula for being self-sufficient in rice but it can be even more than that as long as we have lasting peace in this island. Maayo nga mahimug bread basket ang Mindanao, ara sa tibuok nasud mayo alang sa Mindanao mayo alang sab sa nasud.

Kay nasayod kita tanan sa epekto kanatong Pilipino sa kalibutang problema sa ekonomiya ni-ining tuig sa pagtaas sa presyo sa pagkaon, lana ug bugas, sa pagtaas sa inflation ug sa pag-antus ng mga kabus.

Usa ka dakong hagit sa atong mga economic managers ang pagtaas sa presyo sa krudo sa kalibutan ug 44 percent ug sa bugas sab kalibutan nga 43 percent sa sulod sa usa ka tuig.

Maayo na lang kay nakapangandam kita pina-agi sa atong tough choices to reform our tax system. And we have some of our congressmen here who were those who helped us make the tough choices and the tough tax reforms. Nga karon nakahatag ug pondo alang sa pamuhunan sa mga programa nga motabang aron makalingkawas ang mga kabos sa mga problemang gumikan sa pagtaas sa presyo sa lana, pagkaon ug uban pang labing kinahanglanon.

Ang Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino ang usa nining atong mga importanteng programa kining programa gahatag kada bulan sa mga labing kabos sa nasud ug cash kung matuman sa mga pamilya ang pipila ka kundisyon, labi na sa school attendance. Dinhi sa Zamboanga del Norte naa'y labaw 116,000 nga kabus nga pamilya; 32 percent sa ila apil na sa Pantawid Pamilya from 13 municipalities.

On this occasion, I reassert the concern of the government to continue and even expand these targeted direct payments to the most-poor to see them through this tough time. Busa kagabii na storya mi ni Secretary Espie Cabral who has just arrived from a leave of absence ug ingon sab ko sa iya nga pun-an nato moabot sa 50 percent sa mga pamilyang kabus sa Zamboanga del Norte ang moapil sa Pantawid Pamilya (applause).

Karong adlaw sa, gi-abrehan nato ang usa ka programa ga gi-announce ko ni adtong State of the Nation Address. We call this program “A Healthy Start” because it starts in the morning when the children go to school; it also starts their life, because we’re talking about the preschool daycare and grade one students of the poorest areas of the country. Kung diin ang mga gagmay nga estudyante sa mga labing food-poor nga probinsiya hatagan ug pamahaw. Gisugdan na kini karong adlaw sa Central Elementary School sa Dapitan, Mayor Jalosjos ug sa mga day care centers sa La Libertad, Mutia, Piñon, Polanco, Rizal, Sibutad, Liloy, Salug, Siocon, Siraway ug Tampilisan.

We will also work hard not only to provide this direct assistance to the poorest of the poor but also to work on strengthening the economy to further strengthen the banking system, to improve our fiscal health, to encourage investment in our most promising growth sectors and expand our potential sectors for growth. Here, diri sa Zamboanga Peninsula, the potential sectors for growth include seaweed farming for Zamboanga City and Zamboanga del Sur. Rubber is especially strong in Zamboanga Sibugay, in fact, we acknowledged that in our State of the Nation Address.

Apan, we will only be successful if every segment of society pulls together and commits to build an ever-stronger Zamboanga Peninsula and therefore hopefully an ever-stronger Philippines.

So, once again, I thank you for your resolution—the roadmap to an ever stronger Zamboanga Peninsula. Let us all together pull together and work towards that vision. Daghan salamat. Muchas gracias (applause).

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the Local Peace and Security Assembly. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135326/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1677&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the awarding ceremony for the officers and men of the AFP and PNP in recognition of their heroic acts

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the awarding ceremony for the officers and men of the AFP and PNP in recognition of their heroic acts during encounters with MILF

[Delivered at the 104th BDE, 11D, Barangay Ditucalan, Iligan City, Lanao del Norte, September 18, 2008]

Salamat, General Yano, ang first Armed Forces Chief of Staff from the island of Mindanao. Members of the Cabinet, Speaker Nograles, Governor Dimaporo, Congressman Dimaporo; Congressman Belmonte, Mayor Cruz, officials, men and women of the Armed Forces and the PNP, ladies and gentlemen.

At ease! Congratulations to the troops engaged in operations versus the lawless MILF groups under Kato, Bravo and Pangalian.

Nagpapasalamat ang sambayanang Pilipino sa ating mga kawal in your pursuit of justice for the victims of the lawless MILF groups. The support of the different LGUs, LGAs, NGOs, GOs and POs is clearly manifested in the donation in various forms that continue to be given to our troops.

This indicates the gratitude of the entire Filipino nation to the AFP's efforts. Continue to be relentless in the pursuit of justice for peace. Ensure that the criminal elements and lawless MILF groups are brought to justice. The communities affected by the armed conflict need your continual support and protection to ensure peace in their villages.

Ang inyong katapangan sa pagtugis sa masasamang elements sa MILF ay nagpatunay ng inyong kagustuhang maiwasto ang mga karahasang ginawa ng mga grupong ito sa ating mga sibilyan.

Tayo ay magtulong-tulong para managutan pa ang mga grupong responsible sa mga kaguluhang ito.

Rest assured that the government will support you in your objective to bring peace not only to Northern Mindanao but to the whole of Mindanao.

Let me remind you, but I know you're doing it that we must ensure that the rights of civilians are ensured and protected especially during the period of Ramadan.

In deference to Ramadan, I have directed the CSAFP to be deliberate and purposeful in the delivery of heavy firepower in order to avoid collateral damage.

Also, adjustments had been made on the ground to allow the faithful Muslims unimpeded religious practice during the Ramadan period. We are doing everything possible to bring lasting peace to Mindanao and end 40 years of fighting that has killed more than 120,000 people. It is in the interest of all Filipinos, Muslim and Christians, to end the violence that has held this part of our country back.

We remain committed to the peace process. But we will not negotiate with the gun pointed at our head.

Innocent civilians should not be terrorized for crass political gain. We can restart a dialogue when the area is secure and our people are safe through your efforts — our brave men and women of the armed forces and the police.

We have refocused all peace talks for one centered on dialogues with the rebels to one of authentic dialogue with the communities. And if everyone will support the essential elements to any lasting peace—Mindanao can be a bread basket for the country which we need very much at this time.

Batid nating lahat maging sibilyan o sundalo, kung paano humagupit ang pandaigdigang ekonomiya sa Pilipinas. Ang unos ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya nitong nakaraang taon at itong taong ito, ay nagkaroon ng importante at masakit na epekto sa lahat ng Pilipino sa pamagitan ng pagtaas ng presyo ng pagkain, langis at bigas.

Nagbigay daan ito sa hindi kanais-nais na inflation at mas mabigat na pasanin sa ating mga mahihirap kasama na ang mga pamilya ng maraming kawal ng ating bansa.

Naging napakalaking hamon sa ating mga economic managers ang nangyaring pagtaas mahigit 40 percent sa mga presyo ng krudo at bigas sa world market. Bunsod nito, ginagawa ngayon ng lahat ng ating economic team upang pababain ang inflation, alalayan ang mga labis na tinamaan at ipagpatuloy ang paglago ng ekonomiya na siyang tanging pagmumulan ng mga trabaho at koleksyon ng buwis na ipamumuhunan sa kinabukasan ng bayan.

Salamat na lang at nagkaroon tayo ng sapat na pangitang paghandaan ang araw na ito sa pamamagitan ng mga mahihirap na repormang ginawa ng ating mga Congressmen at tayo, ang Executive, sa nakaraang sistema ng buwis.

Dahil dito’y nagkaroon tayo ng mga pondong ilaan sa mga programang nakatutok sa mga mahihirap pati na rin ang pondong pag modernize sa ating Armed Forces at sa ating Police. Examples of key projects and programs that are in place to alleviate the pain include: yung pagtataas ng inyong sweldo na nagsimula nitong nakaraang Hulyo sa ibabaw ng inyong combat incentive pay na tinaas noong isang taon (applause), at para doon sa mga ang kita ay 200,000 pesos a year or below. Salamat din sa ating mga Congressmen, income-tax exempted yuong income na yun (applause).

On this event with you, our great Filipino soldiers, not only are we giving out medals to some examples of the brave men and women who achieved tremendous great victories and also who underwent sacrifices, some at the cost of their lives. We are also here to expand the benefits and programs to help you through this difficult period.

Up there, while you are fighting, there’s cold weather and harsh conditions in your operating area. That is why to each of the 5,000 soldiers involved in the Lanao campaign, we are giving one sleeping bag each (applause).

I know that this is not part of the normal equipment of the soldier but you deserve it at the very least. Also as you are separated from your families and loved ones, your cellphones are your most convenient link to them. Therefore, for each of these 5,000 soldiers, I am giving you free cell card loads of 300 pesos each. (Applause)

Ilan pang halimbawa ang ating mga programa to alleviate the pain of the present global economic storm include “Pantawid Pag-aral” para sa pautang at scholarships ng mga estudyante sa kolehiyo. Kaya bukod sa ibibigay kong pondo para sa sleeping bags at saka para sa cellphone cards, ay magbibigay din ako ng pondong isang milyong piso (P1M) na gagamitin sa pautang or scholarship funds sa mga college students na anak ng ating mga outstanding soldiers sa Lanao campaign. (Applause)

Bahagi rin ng programa ng pamahalaang pambansa ay ang “Tulong Para kay Lolo at Lola” for the elderly who are not covered by SSS or GSIS. Kaya magbibigay din ako ngayon ng isang milyong pisong pondo para pantulong sa mga magulang naman ng ating mga outstanding soldiers dito sa labanang ito.

Kasama rin sa ating biyaya na nanggaling sa ating reporma sa buwis ay yung upgrading of hospitals at kasama dito ang mga military hospital. (Applause)

I hope these projects will boost your morale as you pursue your mission against the lawless groups.

Bilang bahagi ng sariling kakayahan, we must now secure peace, order and stability in Mindanao and re-assure all the people that we can then move ahead with any broad-based discussion on the peace process. This includes bringing relief to affected refugees and victims and bringing to justice those purveyors of violence.

Great soldiers I reiterate the support of the Filipino people in your campaign for peace and justice. And I give this message as well to our great policemen. Continue performing your excellent job.

Mabuhay ang ating mga sundalo at pulis! Mabuhay ang mga mamamayan ng Lanao at ng buong Mindanao!

Congratulations, Team AFP! (Applause)

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the awarding ceremony for the officers and men of the AFP and PNP in recognition of their heroic acts during encounters with MILF. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135340/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1680&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2008 Parangal at Pasasalamat Awards Rites in Commemoration of the Philippine Civil Service 108th Anniversary Celebration, September 19, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2008 Parangal at Pasasalamat Awards Rites in Commemoration of the Philippine Civil Service
108th Anniversary Celebration

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, September 19, 2008]

To all of you, I'm very happy that we are together celebrating this event. At congratulations sa ating mga awardees ng 'Dangal ng Bayan,' 'Pagasa' at lalo na yung 'Lingkod Bayan' awardees!

Ipinagdiriwang natin ngayon ang tagumpay hindi lamang ng ating mga awardees, kundi na rin sa lahat ng mga lingkod-bayan sa pamahalaan, sa inyong napakahalagang papel sa buhay ng ating bansa. Mula sa mga think-tank, at ang daming think-tanks ang binigyan natin ng parangal ngayon na bumabalangkas sa mga programang pangkaunlaran, hanggang sa mga guro gaya ni Mrs. Banaag, mga pulis, mga duktor at iba pang kawaning front line, ang Serbisyo Sibil ang nagdurugtong sa pamahalaan at mamamayan.

Lalong mahalaga ang ating parangal ngayon, sa harap ng mga hamon ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya, na mas lalong kinakailangan ang paglilingkod ng bayan at mas lalong nadawit din yung mga mas mahihirap sa ating lingkod bayan.

Walang dudang humagupit ang unos ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya nitong taon sa bawat isang Pilipino sa pamamagitan ng pagtaas ng presyo ng pagkain, langis at bigas. Dahil dito, umakyat sa di kanais-nais na inflation at bumigat ang pasanin ng ating mga mahihirap, kasama na lalo yung mga mas mahihirap na mga kawani ng pamahalaan.

Ang pagtaas ng mahigit 40 percent sa presyo ng krudo at bigas sa world market ay naging napalaking hamon.

Ang ekonomiya natin ay hindi naiwasan sa pagbaba ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya. Sa katotohanan, bumagal nga ang paglago ng ating ekonomiya.

Our growth in gross domestic product slowed down to 4.6 percent in the second quarter, a far cry from the sizzling eight percent growth last year. But growth eased in our neighbors as well. Singapore grew by only 2.1 percent, compared to eight percent a year before. Hong Kong posted 4.2 percent, compared to six percent in the same quarter last year. South Korea's growth was similar to us, at 4.8 percent.

Ngunit umaasa tayo na ang mga numerong ito ay tumutukoy na lamang sa nakaraan na. Ganunpaman, ginagawa ang lahat ng ating economic team, kasama dun si Secretary Favila, kasama doon yung mga taga-Sentral Bank, na tumanggap ng award ngayon upang pababain ang inflation, alalayan ang mga labis na tinamaan at ipagpatuloy ang paglago ng ekonomiya na siyang pagmumulan ng mga trabaho at koleksyon ng buwis na pinamumuhunan sa kinabukasan ng ating bayan.

Habang nakahahamon ang kasalukuyang larawan ng ekonomiya, salamat na nagkaroon tayo ng sapat na foresight na paghandaan ang araw na ito, sa pamamagitan ng mga mabibigat na repormang sinadya natin sa ating sistema ng buwis. Binigyan tayo nito ng mga pondo para ilaan sa mga tulong na nakatutok sa ating pinakamahihirap.

Sadyang hiniling ko na imbitahin ngayon ang maraming mga sub-professional civil servants, hindi lamang yung ating security guard ng SBMA na tumanggap din ng award kundi na rin marami pang ibang kagaya niya upang bigyan diin ang mga pinalawak na tulong programa sa mahirap na panahon.

Nang naging sunod-sunod ang pag-angat ng ating ekonomiya sa 2006 at 2007, at lumaki ang pondo ng bansa, inatasan ko na bahaginan ang lahat ng kawani ng national na pamahalaan ng mga benepisyo ng paglaki ng ekonomiya. Kaya't noong Hulyo ng 2007, tinaasan ng sampung porsyento ang suweldo ng lahat ng national government employees at ang combat incentive allowance ng mga sundalo. At nitong nakaraang Hulyo ay ibinigay din sa inyo ang pangalawang 10-percent increase.

At ngayon, ang mga kumikita lamang ng P200,000 o mas maliit kesa dito ay hindi na kailangang magbayad ng income tax.

Noong Marso ng nakaraang taon, inatasan ko na maglunsad ng programang pautang para sa kawani ng pamahalaan na nais magpundar ng maliliit na negosyo. Ito yung 'Go Negosyo, Go Gobyerno' program, kung saan nagpapahiram sa mga empleyado ang Land Bank, ng halagang hanggang P150,000 bawat isa. Kaya kanina, yung 600 ay hindi 600 pesos para sa kanila, kundi 600,000 pesos yun para sa kanila.

Mula ng inilunsad ito noong Mayo ng 2007, P2.89 bilyon na ang naipahiram ng programa sa 164 na kooperatiba at samahan ng mga kawani ng pamahalaan. Halos 19,000 na ang empleyadong nakikinabang. At halimbawa lamang, yung mga 223 government employees mula sa limang kooperatiba to whom we awarded checks today.

Nais kong lumago pa itong programang ito, kaya hiningi ko na dito tayo magbibigay ng tseke sa ilan, gusto kong lumawak pa itong programang ito sa mga hanay ng serbisyo sibil. Kaya aasahan ko ang Civil Service Commission sa pagtulak ng Go Gobyerno, Go Negosyo.

Ang mga hamong kaharap natin ngayon sa pangkalahatan ay galing sa labas ng bayan, but they nevertheless require strong, decisive and targeted action internally. Hindi inaasahang ganuon ang itataas ng pandaigdigang presyo ng langis at ibang commodities. Hindi pa alam kung gaano kalalim ang kasalukuyang gulo ng financial market sa Amerika. Ganumpaman, ang pinakamatibay nating depensa ay sarili at panloob nating kalakasan.

Bagamat magandang balita na higit na umaasa tayo sa sarili at pinanghahawakan ang sarili nating kapalaran sa ekonomiya, totoo ring kailangan tayong higit na kayaning makipagtuligsa sa pandaigdigan.

To be world-class for global competitiveness, we invest in reducing red tape in all agencies to cut business costs. Ayun ang ating ginawa kaninang simbolo.

Binabati ko si Chairman Ric Saludo, yun chairman, at ang buong Komisyon; si May at saka si Cesar at pati na rin ang ibang ahensiyang lumahok sa paggawa ng Anti-Red Tape Implementing Rules and Regulations na pormal nating sinisimulan nitong araw na ito. Kaya ang dami nating kailangang gawin.

Tuloy-tuloy tayong magkapit-bisig upang isakatuparan ang pambansang agenda ng reporma at kaunlaran, kung saan napaka-importante ang papel ng ating serbisyo sibil.

Sa inyong lahat Happy Anniversary, Congratulations sa inyong paglilingkod sa ating bayan!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

*Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the World Islamic Call Society 4th Iftar (Breaking of the Fast), September 20, 2008 Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the World Islamic Call Society 4th Iftar (Breaking of the Fast)

[Delivered at the Sunset Pavilion, Sofitel Philippine Plaza, CCP Complex, Roxas Blvd., Manila, September 20, 2008]

Assalamu Alaikum Warahmatullahi Wabarakatu! Peace be unto all of you!
We praise and thank Our Lord, Allah for another chance to break bread together.

As we celebrate Ramadhan, we are hopeful that lasting peace for the whole country and especially for Mindanao will soon be counted among our blessings.

The sad irony of Mindanao is that it is our bread basket or food basket, and yet it has some of the highest hunger in our nation. It has large fields of high productivity, yet it also has the majority of our poorest provinces.

The prime reason is the endless Mindanao conflict.

Our archipelagic nation has had its share of religious strife, ethnic tension and violence. For years, we have worked earnestly and honestly to achieve peace in that southern island of our country only to have the peace process upended by the recent violence carried out by lawless elements.

Notwithstanding the setbacks in our peace process, I stand before you tonight to declare loud and clear that the Philippines will have peace in Mindanao. There is no alternative to peace. With the help of friends like the World Islamic Call Society, and our other nation friends from the Islamic countries, we will bring peace to Mindanao. So, we take this opportunity to acknowledge here tonight the central role of so many friends and allies in bringing peace and hope to the Philippines.

We have traveled many miles to keep the peace these last seven years, that gives me hope and confidence that we will rekindle the will to focus on peace.

We will refocus all peace talks from one that is centered on dialogues with rebels to one of authentic dialogues with the communities, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration or DDR shall be the context of our engagement with all armed groups.

And we thank our friends in the Islamic World both within this country, in the Middle East and Southeast Asia who have played or wish to play a role in making this possible.

Each and every one of our friends — these friends represented here tonight — these friends of peace and of the Philippines, have made the world better and safer because of your concern for what happens in Mindanao. For that, we are eternally grateful.

DDR is an internationally and UN-accepted process for resolving armed conflicts.

DDR is a UN peacekeeping term. It is part of the peace process in the post-conflict scenario being applied in such places as Liberia and Afghanistan.

Disarmament entails the physical removal of the means of combat from ex-belligerents, such as weapons and arms. Demobilization entails the disbanding of armed groups. Reintegration describes the process of reintegrating former combatants into civil society, ensuring against the possibility of a resurgence of armed conflict.

DDR activities are crucial components of both the initial stabilization of war-torn societies as well as their long-term development. As such, needs for DDR must be integrated into the entire peace process from the initial peace negotiations through peacekeeping and follow-on peace-building activities.

The objective of the DDR process is to contribute to security and stability in post-conflict environments, so that recovery and development can begin. DDR lays the groundwork for safeguarding and sustaining the communities in which individuals can live as law-abiding citizens, while building capacity for long-term peace, security and development.

We have high hopes that our friends in the Islamic World will support our focus. We maintain high hopes as well in the strength of our program of interfaith dialogue as a means to achieving the end of building bridges rather than barriers between communities of different faiths, cultures, traditions and ethnicity.

In continuation of this effort, the Philippines next year, will host the first ever Special Ministerial Meeting on Interfaith Dialogue for Cooperation and Development in May. And we hope that we will have the support of our brothers from the Muslim world. We will also cooperate with the Alliance of Civilizations.

Peace and dialogue are more vital than ever with the world undergoing economic turmoil.

Almost overnight, the global economic environment has turned 180 degrees. The dramatic surge in food and fuel prices and the financial turmoil in the world markets have created a global price crisis, the worst since the Great Depression and the end of World War II.

This is a complex time that defies easy and simple solutions. It's hard to identify villains, unlike in the 1997 financial crisis. Everyone seems to be a victim, rich countries and poor, though certainly some can take more punishment than others.

So, we must all band together now and find the right balance between our global economic dependence and national self-reliance.

In our shared quest for a brighter future, both in terms of peace and in terms of prosperity, we hope the peoples of the world can perceive that underneath the external differences among regions, tribes and religions, there remains one common truth: we are all in this world by the grace of a merciful God. A God that is called Allah in the Islamic language and that is called "Ama" in the Filipino language. But that is the same God and we must therefore praise, glorify and obey Him.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the Retirement Honors and Change of Command Ceremonies

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Retirement Honors and Change of Command Ceremonies

[Delivered at the PNP Headquarters, camp Crame, Quezon City, September 27, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Puno.

General Razon, happy birthday and congratulations! (Applause) Likewise to Mrs. Razon and Nanay Razon and the other members of the Razon family. (Applause)

Our new Police Director-General Jess Versoza, congratulations! (Applause) Likewise to Mrs. Versoza, Jess' parents and other members of the family. (Applause)

Secretary Ebdane here representing not only all the appointive officials of our administration but also all the former chiefs of the Philippine National Police (PNP) whom I all greet today. (Applause) Members of Congress, Don Emilio Yap and the other private benefactors of the Philippine National Police (applause), members of the diplomatic corps, ladies and gentlemen:

Nagpapaalam tayo itong araw na ito sa isang outstanding na pinuno ng Pambansang Kapulisan ng Pilipinas at tinatanggap ang isa pang katangi-tanging opisyal na sinisimulaan naman ang kaniyang panahon bilang pinuno ng PNP.

Director-General Avelino I. Razon Jr., as he said to us in his tour-of-duty report, started the first three months of his term as PNP Chief with three big bangs that tested his mettle fast: the Glorietta tragedy, the Batasan bombing, the Manila Pen coup attempt. And with those trials, the public very quickly got to know this loyal, perceptive and determined police officer, the unflappable man in uniform who won the public's trust in him and in the PNP.

Kaya nakamit ng kapulisan ang approval rating na pinakamataas sa nakaraang pitong taon. Congratulations, Mamang Pulis Sonny Razon! (Applause) Ang simbolo ng pag papamuno ni Sonny Razon ay Mamang Pulis and of course, Aleng Pulis, because at least 10 percent of our police force is made up of women. Itong simbolong pinapairal ni Sonny Razon na simbolo ng huwarang pulis ay pulis na maaasahan, magmalasakit, madaling lapitan, presentable, makatao at maka-Diyos, at bihasang tumugon sa iba't ibang uri ng pangangailangan ng sambayanan, maging ito ay pagsasaayos ng gulo sa loob ng bahay o sa labas ng kalye, pagdakip sa mga kriminal, o pagtugis sa mga nag-aalsa at terorista. Bunga ito ng mga progresibong gawain sa ilalim ng programang binanggit ng ating dalawang panauhing pangdangal, yung transformation program ng PNP.

At isang malaking nagawa ni Sonny sa transformation program na ito ay yung manpower allocation, which has seen more and more of Mamang Pulis and Aleng Pulis in the streets, downloaded to the ratio of 95 percent from headquarters, to sustain an increased number of patrol and checkpoint operations and ensure police visibility in the localities.

At hindi lamang yung statistic ng tumaas ang approval rating ng PNP ang dapat ipagmalaki, isa rin dahil nga naaalala ni Sonny nung isang taon dito sa bulwagang ito — mas maliit pa nuon malaki na ngayon, pinalaki ni Sonny — ang sinabi ko na inaasahan ko na maging legacy ni Sonny ay yung pag-iral ng karapatang-pantao ... o human rights. And so aside from the increased approval rating we must congratulate Sonny Razon for working on the issue of human rights so that, as he himself has reported, the number of extra-judicial killings or political killings has gone down by 85 percent, congratulations! (Applause)

The Mamang Pulis paradigm that Sonny Razon brought to the PNP and the transformation that he moved forward, a transformation that, as Jess Versoza said, spans several PNP chiefs during our administration, starting from the concept that has started during the time of General Jun Ebdane, is indeed a microcosm of how we came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippines and especially the Philippine economy.

The Philippine economy and peace and order are twins of each other. Without peace and order we cannot have a strong economy. And, conversely, a strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country.

Our efforts are paying off: not only an increased approval for the PNP, not only the giant reduction in political killings but also in that our economy is more resilient today than before, also that we have created almost seven million jobs in seven years, and that investments continue to come despite continued volatility in the global markets.

As a result of our economic turnaround, we are also able to invest in key sectors to cushion the harsh impact of high prices for food and fuel on our poor that has hit not only our country but the whole world this past year.

In addition to modernizing the PNP, we are investing in modernizing infrastructure like roads and bridges on an unprecedented scale. And we are also investing in expanded education, healthcare, and other social services.

Kasama na dito yung pinalawak na programang pabahay at pangkabuhayan para sa mga pulis at kanilang mga pamilya na binigay ng pangalang “Pulis Kalinga”. Naalala ko nung Disyembre, nagpunta tayo sa Bicutan ba yun? Di ba Sonny? Kung saan ang ibang mga yunit ay inumpisanhan natin pero natapos na sila sa panahon ni Director General Razon.

At patuloy din ang mga proyektong pabahay sa Baras, Rizal; yung binanggit ni Sonny sa San Miguel, Bulacan, ito ba yung bahagi nung, ano ba? 1,600 hectares na nakuha natin mula sa Central Bank bilang dibidendo ng Central Bank sa ating bansa; at yung 1,600 hectares ay hinati natin sa apat na bahagi — 400 hectares para sa pulis, 400 hectares para sa mga kasama ni General Yano sa military, 400 hectares para sa mga guro, at 400 hectares para sa ibang mga manggagawa at empleyado ng pamahalaan.

Kaya ako’y natutuwa na dun sa bahagi ng PNP naumpisahan na ni Sonny Razon ang horizontal development. Meron din dun sa Camp Castañeda sa Silang, Cavite at iba pa, maraming binanggit si Sonny Razon na mga lugar ng ating housing program para sa mga pulis. Para sa mga bata naman, mga anak, at ako ay, I want to give my best wishes to Miss Versoza as she takes her bar exams at sana lahat ng anak ng mga pulis ay maka-abot duon at para maka-abot sa ganung kataasan na pag-aaral libu-libong anak ng pulis din ay nakakapag-aral sa ilalim ng iba’t ibang klase ng ating mga scholarship.

Itong mga biyaya sa pulis ay tumulong sa mga transformation na ginawa ni Sonny at kanyang mga predecessor sa pagbawas sa incidente ng mga krimen, lalo na yung mga street crimes. Yun ang malaking ibinaba nung panahon ni Sonny Razon. And that is something that the ordinary Filipino feels if his street is more crime-free than ever before. At natitiyak tayong maipagpapatuloy ang maganda halimbawa ni Mamang Pulis Sonny nang papalit sa kaniya.

Our new PNP chief Jess Versoza had also a very, how shall I say, very varied experienced in the police force and as he was talking about how Ronnie Puno would advise him, inspire him, or comfort him as the case maybe, during the highs and lows of his career. I could not help but remember in my own mind the different things that Jess underwent at least during my administration. But one thing I’d like to point out is that he has been assigned to practically every hot spot of the country, including Basilan and Maguindanao.

And of the rich experience of Jess Versoza, I specifically point this one out because his experience is valuable to what we are seeking to do today. That is we are committed to do everything possible to bring lasting peace to Mindanao and end 40 years of fighting that has killed more than a 120,000 people.

It is in the interest of all Filipinos, not just to have his street free of crime but also to end the violence that has held the southern part of our country back and that has required our investment of hundreds of millions of pesos to support our military and police presence in Mindanao. As I said to the UN General Assembly a few days ago, we will pursue the peace process in Mindanao.

The recent violence has reminded us all that peace is the only option for our country and the people of Mindanao but also everybody in his own street even here in Metro Manila. However, we must end the armed rebellions through disarmament, demobilization and rehabilitation. And a very strong role of the PNP is expected in making sure that Mindanao remains peaceful.

After all, what is happening there in Mindanao is a law-enforcement exercise. It is not an all-out-war. We are now focused on dialogues with all of the communities involved in the peace process – both Muslim and Christians.

We are building more bridges to affected communities and to all men and women of good will who reject the use of armed struggle as a means of achieving political and societal change.

Kanina binanggit at pinatindig ni DG Versoza ang ilang mga mamamayan, mga sibilyan na gumamit ng kanilang karapatan bilang mamamayan para magkaroon ng pagbabago duon sa pulis.

At ito rin ang inaasahan natin sa ating peace process — yung ginagawa ngayon nung kaklase ni Sonny si Jun Esperon — bringing the peace process to the people themselves. At gusto natin na kagaya nang ginawa ng ating dalaga dito sa third row, na nanggaling sa kanya na dapat magkaroon ng pagbabago dun sa serbisyo ng pulis sa police station. Inaasahan din natin na manggagaling sa taongbayan mismo na yung mga rebelde ay dapat itabi na dapat ang kanilang mga armas para sa ganun buong bansa ay makasulong na.

And so with these new directions in the police, in the peace process, in our country at large against the gale force winds of the global economy, we remain bullish on our country, and with that continually transforming police under the leadership now of our new DG Jess Versoza, we're optimistic about our future. I am very pleased to hear the deep commitment of our police leaders to being a force for good.

Mahal nating lahat ang ating taong bayan. And as Commander-in-Chief, I can only end by saying, I am very grateful to the Lord, as Sonny calls "The Architect of the Great Universe", because He has given me the privilege to have Sonny Razon and Jess Versoza with me in serving the country.

To both of you, congratulations! Sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Retirement Honors and Change of Command Ceremonies. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135218/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1658&Itemid=38

Sponsorship Speech of Senator Benigno Simeon Aquino III on Senate Bill No. 1370, September 30, 2008

Sponsorship Speech
of
Honorable Benigno Simeon Aquino III
Senator of the Philippines
On Senate Bill No. 1370

[Released on September 30, 2008]

The 1987 Constitution expressly states that “the State shall regulate the relations between workers and employers, recognizing the right of labor to its just share in the fruits of production and the right of enterprise to reasonable return on investments, and to its expansion of its growth.”

Such an ideal can be realized if companies share a reasonable portion of their profits with the people who help achieve them: their employees.

Profit-sharing, a system in which the people who work for a company receive a direct share of the profits, can help improve performance and productivity in a business organization the way basic salary systems cannot.

Small local firms, such as One Network Bank, a network of over 70 rural banks in Mindanao, benefit from profit-sharing. In a 2007 statement, the bank’s president, Mr. Alex Buenaventura, mentioned that One Network Bank’s employees received an additional 15% of their salary in 2005 and 26% more in 2006. This improvement was largely due to their company’s productivity incentives program which he said, encouraged his employees to be more conscious of the bank’s performance, and therefore more actively involved in achieving their company’s targets.

This evidence of growth suggests that through profit-sharing, workers are endowed with a greater stake in the outcome of their organization. Their entitlement to a reasonable share of the company’s profits tends to heighten their level of participation in increasing the firm’s overall productivity.

Senate Bill No. 1370 or “An Act Granting An Annual Productivity Incentive To All Workers in the Private Sector, Establishing Mechanisms For Its Implementation, And For Other Purposes” is a recognition of the indispensable contribution of the labor force to the success of the business enterprise. It seeks to provide additional measures for the mutual benefit and industrial harmony between labor and management, which are not subsumed in the extend law, Republic Act No. 6971 or the “Productivity Incentives Act of 1990.”

Through this legislative initiative, workers can be expected to work harder as they assured of a just compensation for their labor. They will be encouraged to help their company sustain long-term growth, as this in turn, will benefit them. They will be empowered to live up to the core values of fairness and equity, which the company promotes by providing productivity incentives to its workforce.

This bill upholds the worker’s rights to improve their quality of life as well as the management’s rights to a reasonable return on their investments. It is a vital tool in changing the role of business enterprises from mere profit machines to socially responsible agents that place a high premium on the contributions of their people.

Source: Legislative Library, House of Representatives

Aquino, B. S. III (2008). Sponsorship speech of Senator Aquino. Journal of the Senate, 1, 590-591.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 107th Anniversary of the Office of the Solicitor General

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 107th Anniversary of the Office of the Solicitor General

[Delivered at the Philippine Army Officers' Club, Fort Bonifacio, Taguig City, October 2, 2008]

Thank you very much.

Thank you very much, Agnes, the first female Solicitor General in our country. (Applause)

Justice Nachura and the other very distinguished former solicitors general who are all here (Applause) in very prominent other positions in our society;

(Applause) General Ibrado, our host in this setting; members and officials of the Office of the Solicitor General; ladies and gentlemen.

Happy Anniversary sa OSG! (Applause)

The OSG has an important role in achieving our vision of a Strong Republic that's ready for first-world status in 20 years. In our vision of a first-world country, we envision one where we will have dramatically reduced poverty, created a robust middle-class and have all the hallmarks of a modern society in strong, stable institutions.

And among the strong, stable institutions we refer to is an effective government, from the national to the local governments, with a professional and dedicated civil service, like the civil servants in the OSG. (Applause)

You not only help strengthen the civil service of our country by your own good work but also by the important decisions that you work for in court. For instance, the success of the OSG on the constitutionality of the Attrition Law, which was decided on last month, should strengthen the civil service of the revenue agencies to neutralize smugglers and tax cheats and increase our revenues. Another way of strengthening our Republic.

An effective government delivers basic services for everyone — the most important of which is an environment of peace and the rule of law and the necessary infrastructure.

Among the services that you have helped to deliver for an environment of peace is your success as mentioned earlier in the Writ of Amparo cases. Congratulations for that! (Applause)

You have also contributed to delivering an environment of peace by your clarification of the MOA-AD in Mindanao. And I think it's a good time on the occasion of your anniversary to reiterate that no matter what the Supreme Court ultimately decides, in the light of the recent violent incidents committed by MILF Lawless Groups, the government will not sign the MOA.

We are committed to doing everything possible to bring lasting peace to Mindanao and end 40 years of fighting that has killed more than 120,000 people. It is in the interest of all Filipinos, Muslims and Christians, to end the violence that has held that part of our country back and required an investment of hundreds of millions to support our military presence there.

As I said to the U.N. General Assembly last week: we will pursue the peace process in Mindanao. The recent violence has reminded all of us that peace is the only option for our country and for the people of Mindanao.

However, we have refocused all peace talks from one that is centered on dialogues with rebels to one of authentic dialogues with the communities, both Muslim and Christian. Those dialogues are directed at ending all forms of armed rebellion in the country. We must make all armed groups accountable to the people and the government for all their actions. Our people, together with the government, will be the primary force in defining and shaping the direction of societal change, not the force of arms.

Disarmament, demobilization and rehabilitation will be the overall framework governing our engagement with armed groups in all peace talks.

And I thank the Office of the Solicitor General for helping us pursue the peace process. (Applause)

An effective government rests on the rule of law. And Solicitor General is essential for the rule of law.

The Office of the Solicitor General is the law firm of the Philippine government, both here and abroad. Your office engages in a wide range of legal issues, from titling lands to defending the position of the Philippine government before our Supreme Court and international tribunals. The Solicitor General is probably the busiest among Filipino lawyers. And the work of the Solicitor General, as said in your video presentation, requires the range of knowledge, the depth of wisdom, and the integrity of no less than a member of the Highest Court of the land.

Witness — former OSG Nachura becoming now a justice of the Supreme Court. (Applause)

The success of the OSG in prominent cases filed before the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals has indeed helped ensure the rule of law in our land. And we thank you for that.

The OSG helps in the task of a strong republic also to deliver the necessary infrastructure. For instance, your decisive action on properties along the NLEX and the SLEX from Calamba, Laguna to Sto. Tomas, Batangas enabled the completion of improvements in these crucial highways. Your success in the PIATCO case has provided the basis for opening NAIA 3. These improvements in turn eased the flow of goods and services and made the Philippines a better economy. Salamat. (Applause)

A strong republic must help not only in the decisions of the government, not only in providing infrastructure, not only in making sure that the rule of law prevails, not only in promoting peace but also must help its poorest and weakest citizens and empower them.

And again here, you have a role to play.

The function of land registration may appear merely ministerial to some, but your decisions of the OSG regarding land registration have given hope to thousands of small landowners and helped provide a good middle-class for our country. Salamat. (Applause)

If we want to be ready for a first-world in 20 years and be a strong republic, our justice system must be strengthened to become an efficient institution.

And so tonight, on this anniversary of the OSG, we celebrate RA 9417 or the Nachura Law, which strengthens the OSG system. It's called the Nachura Law not because Congressman Nachura made it a law but because OSG Nachura had still so many friends in Congress from his term that he was able to get it passed into law. (Applause)

And this law from what has been described gives the OSG more teeth in resolving cases. It provides the executive branch effective and far-reaching legal advice. It grants the SolGen more latitude in selecting the best minds to assist in performing the work. Now, the pay of our very young lawyers in the SolGen is competitive with the pay in the private sector. So, we can have the best minds. (Applause)

Kaya binabati ko ang lahat ng bumubuo ng OSG, dahil itong araw na ito sa okasyon ng anibersaryo ng OSG magiging epektibo na ang RA 9417 ngayong pumasa na ang implementing rules. Ngayon itataas ang sweldo. Okay. (Applause)

Next to the rule of law, a second institution of a strong republic on its way to first-world is a vigorous economy. And I've mentioned earlier how you helped to give us a vigorous economy.

We came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippine economy. A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability in our country. And it's paying off: we have created almost 7 million jobs in 7 years, investments continue to come — just witness all the cranes that are here in this area — despite the continued volatility in the global markets.

As a result of our economic turnaround, we are also able to invest in key sectors to cushion the harsh impact of the high prices of food and fuel on our poor that have hit the whole world this past year.

In addition, we are investing in modernizing infrastructure like those highways that you're able to make us build because of your action, like the expressways, and we're able to do these roads and bridges on an unprecedented scale.

We are also investing in expanded education, healthcare, and other social services. All the while, we are balancing these vital investments with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations and balance the budget in 2010.

We have been working tirelessly to address the challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with the spike in oil and food prices. But the fact is this is a global phenomenon. We have been working hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures, provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global developments and deliver the growth that will continue to generate jobs and the tax revenues we need to fuel our investment in our nation's future including the things that we have to spend to make the OSG competitive with the private sector.

Most notably, on the part of our food problem in the whole world, we have been working hard to make sure that food supplies remain stable and we're working hard to put food on the table for every Filipino. We have also been introducing measures to lift the burden of high fuel prices off our people.

On the same token, our economic team, in coordination with the Bangko Sentral, is closely monitoring developments in the global financial markets. Our economy is more resilient today than ever before. It is strong enough to withstand the external financial turmoil. The economic and fiscal reforms that we have implemented in recent years, through the cooperation of Congress, have resulted in the strengthening of our macroeconomic fundamentals and our banking system.

We are working hard to further strengthen the domestic economy by accelerated spending for infrastructure — that's why we need your help in all those writs of possession — and agriculture; fast tracking financial reforms to further strengthen the banking system; improve our fiscal health by improved revenue collection through better tax administration. And we thank you again for the decision of the Attrition Law as well as legislative measures, and encouraging investment by such measures as reducing regulatory bottlenecks for strategic industries. All these to sustain our economic growth momentum and to insulate our economy from volatility in world markets. Continuing these efforts will ensure that we are able to weather the global storm, that we are able to achieve the economic rebound we are projecting for next year, and that we're able to work for the strengthening of our Republic through the strengthening of institutions like the OSG.

The events in the U.S. and the slowdown in the global economy are really causing real difficulties for countries around the world. And like many countries around the world, we are not insulated from them. But the Philippine economy will remain resilient amid these challenges.

So, against the gale force winds of the global economy, we remain bullish on our country, optimistic about our future and deeply committed to being a force for good. And in being a force for good, I am very grateful that we have the Office of the Solicitor General to help us there.

I am grateful for the privilege of serving the Republic of the Philippines together with such fine men and women as we have in the Office of the Solicitor General. (Applause)

Kaya sa mga masisipag at mahuhusay na miyembro ng Office of Solicitor General: Mabuhay kayong lahat! Happy Anniversary! At maraming salamat.

(Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 107th Anniversary of the Office of the Solicitor General. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135204/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1762&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 10th Semiconductor and Electronics Industries in the Philippines, Inc. (SEIPI) CEO Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 10th Semiconductor and Electronics Industries in the Philippines, Inc. (SEIPI) CEO Forum

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 06, 2008]

Thank you. (Applause)

Thank you, Secretary Favila.

Chairman Arthur Young, President Ernie Santiago, all the members and officers of SEIPI, welcome once again to Malacanang!

Many of you may remember the last time we met as a group two years ago. But between then and now, I've met some of your principals at international fora and I get to see many of you individually during the many company events that have taken place in the industry. And I stay updated on your many successes as well as your concerns. For after all, you have made, as our two speakers have said, tremendous contributions to our economy. Thank you to the industry. (Applause)

A special thanks to the 242 companies that form SEIPI, the moving spirit that has made your sector among the most united and organized of Philippine industries. I have heard about your GAINS program for global competitiveness, advocacy, information, networking and services, and that it is the most forward-looking industry strategy in the country. Congratulations to you! (Applause)

We saw a part of your work in the two presentations today and for the ordinary Filipino, the Philippine economic landscape of the 21st century would be unrecognizable without your industries. You have every right to claim to be the "driver of the Philippine economy," as Ernie said in the beginning of his speech, you produce two-thirds of Philippine exports. Over a billion Philippine-made memory chips, power devices, disk drives, digital signal processors, magnetic heads and similar products are found in various electronic appliances all over the world coming from you. Because of you, our country has an 18 percent share of the global electronics market since 2006. I thank you also personally because during my presidency you have earned 200 billion dollars for our country. Your exports have grown almost 50 percent — from 22 billion dollars in 2001 to 31 billion dollars a year. And I was looking at the growth rate of the world and of Asia, your exports in the last seven years have grown faster than the rest of Asia.

Your industries have been major job creators. You give direct employment to almost half a million Filipinos, that is the same number as our Department of Education, which is our largest single government employer.

Your sector invested five billion dollars during my administration. And the peak, the rise in investments was with Texas Instruments which by itself is pumping more than a billion dollars for a new operation in Clark, not to mention its new activities in Baguio. So, we thank Bing for bringing that investment over. (Applause)

I've also had the fortune of presiding over the expansion of other companies like SunPower, large expansion. So, I'm very grateful for that.

In 2001, I was telling Ernie, but in 2001 you had a negative growth rate, didn't you? And Ernie remembers that 2001 had a minus 22 growth rate. It was a negative 22 percent. At that time, that was right after the 9/11, but even before 9/11 the global market was already slowing down. In 2001, the main market for Philippine-made electronics and semiconductor items was the United States. Then the U.S. market suffered a drop in sales. That's why your growth rate was minus 22 percent, though I might say that at that time, I remember how I said, "Naku! kakaupo ko lang magnegative growth rate ang Pilipinas," because electronics is such a major part of our economy. But we work to do other things to strengthen the domestic market, release all the arrears of IRA to the local governments, work on the housing industries, spend on agriculture, as a result of which the Philippine economy still had a positive growth rate even if the electronics industry had a negative growth rate. But in the meantime, just as we were working on how to make the Philippine economy remain with a positive growth rate, you were also working, you were looking for other markets. And indeed, you found other markets. So that when we met in 2006, China was already your main customer, taking in 26 percent of your exports. And today, with even more changes in the global economic arena, you have shifted your focus again. This year 2008, 'cause most of your figures are 2007, Ernie confirmed to me that about 22 percent of your products go to Europe, 15 percent to Japan, 14 to the U.S., 13 percent to China and the rest to other Asian countries.

But Arthur was telling me that there is a lot of potential, as you've shown us in the presentation, within our own region. And so, with such dynamism, your industry — though it had a negative growth rate for the first six months of the year — in June, it managed to grow 2.6 percent year-on-year, and maybe that means that the slump is over and you're beginning to go back to your upswing.

We have been working tirelessly as we did in 2001, and now even more to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy which this time is combined with the spike in oil and food prices. We all know this is a global phenomenon. Your presentation shows how aware you are, and you need to be aware, because you're so integrated with the global economy of what's going on in the world.

The events in the U.S. and the slowdown in the global economy are causing real difficulties for countries around the world. But we are not insulated from them, but our economy is more resilient today than ever before. And I would say more resilient than some other countries in our region. In some other country, which is also an attractive area for your investments otherwise, the overheating is so much that the government has to cut down on infrastructure spending. We have not reached the stage of overheating and we are not cutting down, in fact, we are increasing infrastructure spending.

We're able to do this because of the economic and fiscal reforms that we have implemented in recent years through the cooperation of Congress. These have resulted in the strengthening of our macroeconomic fundamentals as well as our banking system. So our economy is strong enough to withstand the external financial turmoil.

We've been working hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures, to provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global developments, and deliver the growth that will continue to generate jobs and tax revenues that we need to fuel our investments in our nation's future.

We've been working hard to make sure that food supplies remain stable and to put food on the table for every Filipino in order to avoid demands for a wage spiral and therefore keep you competitive. We were discussing what we know when Arthur was making his presentation about our... the cost being a small portion of the cost of goods sold compare to other places. So overall, there is still a good amount of competitiveness here and we contribute to that among other things by trying to keep the cost of food low or affordable so that there will be no demand for a wage spiral.

We've also been introducing measures to lift the burden of high fuel prices off our people. So that there will be no big transportation cost increase for the workers who go to work for the same reason to avoid demands for a wage spiral.

On the same token, our economic team, of which Peter is a member, in coordination with the Bangko Sentral, of which Peter is our government representative to the Monetary Board, our economic team is closely monitoring developments in the global financial markets. We're working hard to further strengthen the domestic economy by accelerated spending for infrastructure. As I have said, whereas other countries around us may be pressured to reduce infrastructure spending, we're accelerating infrastructure and agriculture, fast-tracking financial reforms to further strengthen the banking system, improve our fiscal health by better tax collection and also by legislative measures, and encouraging investment by such measures as reducing regulatory bottlenecks for strategic industries like the semiconductor and electronics industry.

Texas Instruments, Bing was telling us, came to the Philippines and it was not easy for us to make sure that they come to the Philippines. There were other very attractive or prospective hosts, and we are all vying and the key was the red tape. And we won over our other rival possible destinations and Texas Instruments decided to do their new plant here. The same thing with some other multi-hundred million-dollar investments coming up soon. Peter who is chairman of our Anti-Red Tape Task Force is working hard to make sure that old bottlenecks are removed and I hope we will be seeing this new investment soon.

We are addressing most of the concerns you presented in 2001, aside from the concerns that are presented by individual prospective investors. And I remember infrastructure was one of your biggest concerns. And your companies were among the ones we thought of when we pushed for big infrastructure projects across the nation. The SLEX, the Alabang Viaduct is now 83 percent complete — should be finished soon. But even now with one lane already completed, it has eased the flow of traffic from CALABARZON towards NAIA. The Batangas Port which was completed last year, last December, services some of your companies. The SCTEX has been completed also for the convenience of the factories located in the northern part of the Luzon Urban Beltway.

Now, I remember the last time we had a meeting, you saw all the infrastructure coming up. So you were confident about that, so you said the infrastructure we must work on now must be the power sector. And on power costs, PEZA now offers reduced rates for its locators. And hopefully, we will have the implementation of open access which would hopefully bring power cost down some more, and probably the milestone for that will be the consummation of the Calaca investment in the power sector, perhaps by November.

Earlier than that, we began the 'time of use method' of computing power rates along with the WESM, then MERALCO's Customer Choice program and High Load Factor Discount for customers consuming at least 5 MW, and that's certainly you. Other provisions of the EPIRA, particularly the condonation of the loans of electric cooperatives have been implemented. And let me point out that there are areas around the country where the host municipalities and barangays give discounts or subsidized the electric bills of their customers. So I would reiterate my invitation that when you do your expansions you think of locating in these areas where the local government has the royalties from the power sources that are in their areas and they used these royalties to subsidize electric bills.

One example would be Palinpinon in the town of, is it Dauin or Zamboanguito? Ah, no in Valencia in Negros Oriental and that's the reason why we're making the airport better so that your airports... so that your whole logistics will be acceptable to you. Another example would be the geothermal areas in Leyte in Tongonan, in Ormoc and the neighboring town of Kananga, I believe, because they also have a lot of royalties. Some barangay residents don't even pay any electric bill at all. And we have an airport in Ormoc or even in Tacloban that can be suited to your requirements, as Texas Instruments has seen, we are doing with La Union Airport for their Baguio operation. So these are things that will help you to reduce your power costs. And we will spend in the infrastructure that you need for your transport competitiveness.

And most recently an ERC ruling lowered to 8 percent the recoverable systems loss of distribution utilities.

But together let us look for more ways to reduce power costs especially for small and medium companies outside of PEZA's some of whom are your own suppliers and subcontractors.

On manpower, Ernie Santiago said I should announce to you because not all of you know, that we are promoting Engineering R&D activities in the country at a significant scale. Three billion pesos is our budget for that in order to modernize every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the Philippines, including semiconductors and electronics, to propel economic growth. Because we know that modernization needs a critical mass of R&D-capable manpower that will further attract technology-based investments like semiconductors and especially electronics. This three billion pesos that I'm talking about started last year. It's an investment in Engineering Research and Development Technology. As a part of this, as a big part of this since last school year, seven universities led by the U.P. College of Engineering have been offering scholarships for masters and doctoral degree programs in all fields of Engineering including what specialized field you might want for your own industry.

But I must congratulate SEIPI because they're already a part of this program spearheading linkages with U.P. and other reputable academic institutions for specialized masteral and doctoral training for your industry.

Government consults SEIPI on the steps that can strengthen your industries, expand your markets, and increase your convincing power in bringing in more investors to your sector. Ernie last appeared before a Cabinet meeting only last month, so he can attest to how frequently we consult SEIPI when we need to do our industrial planning.

A continuation of these efforts will help us weather the global storm and make sure that we are able to achieve the economic rebound that we are projecting for next year.

As I said, if you think of the fact that we will have flat growth this year, remember, you were minus 22 percent in 2001 and how you recovered, and you will recover even more now because we can see the investments that are under gestation. Texas Instruments will formally open in January and with their market of three billion dollars a year, we can expect that by yearend, we will have a very big increase in the electronics exports not to mention those new industries that Peter is nursing, or those new factories that Peter is nursing for them to locate here in the Philippines.

So, against the gale force winds of the global economy, we remain bullish on our country and your industry. We are optimistic about our future, your future, and we're deeply committed to being a force for the good of your industry which is good for our people. The semiconductor and electronics industries and the government have a strong synergy. You are an invaluable partner in Philippine growth.

So, from a grateful nation, mabuhay at maraming salamat sa inyo!

Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 10th Semiconductor and Electronics Industries in the Philippines, Inc. (SEIPI) CEO Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135155/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1761&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Media Launch of the Global Forum on Migration and Development, October 7, 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Media Launch of the Global Forum on Migration and Development

[Delivered at the Presidential Briefing Studio, Kalayaan Hall, Malacañang, Manila, October 7, 2008]

Secretary Romulo and Undersecretary Conejos have put this global forum in the context of overall development. Let me put it in the context of what we are experiencing in the world today.

As we face the most significant global economic and financial crisis in a generation, the poor feel it most.

I direct our economic team to work hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures and provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global developments. I also direct them to draw up a contingency plan, to cushion the impact of a possible economic recession of the developed economies on the ordinary people of the Philippines. Possible, but you hope it will not happen, but it's important to have a contingency plan. And I direct the Department of Foreign Affairs, the Department of Labor and the Commission on Filipinos Overseas to draw up a similar plan for overseas Filipinos.

Migration, as pointed out in the presentation of Undersecretary Conejos, is a growing global phenomenon.

We have 8 million Filipinos abroad, but, it's only a fraction of the 191 million migrants all over the world. Overseas Filipinos however in our country continue to play a critical role in the country's economic and social stability.

You know, when I was in New Zealand, they were telling me that they have an even bigger percentage of New Zealanders who work abroad than the Philippines. The difference is that mom and pop send their expatriates money abroad to help them with additional income. In our case, our overseas Filipinos send us money here and help their families, their communities and our economy.

And I might also add that one very, very well-known and well-paid Filipino working overseas says that we should begin to call our overseas Filipinos "expatriates", because the nature of their job is increasingly more on skilled professions. And they should be called expatriates because expatriates usually get higher pay than if you just call them workers.

The government and the people honor our overseas Filipinos, whether you call them OFWs, OCWs, as Dante Ang, likes to call them Overseas Filipino Investors. And I agree, that we should begin to call them expatriates rather than OFWs. But in any case, we honor them for their sacrifice and dedication to their work, their family and their nation.

We welcome their contribution. But we are working towards the day when Filipinos no longer need to go abroad for a job; for the day that overseas work is just another career option and not the only choice they have, to earn a living. This Filipino I'm talking about, that they should be called expatriates rather than OFWs, is working abroad because it's a career choice. He's one of the highest paid persons in his profession in the whole world.

Meanwhile, while we're working for that day, when for everybody, it will be just a career choice and not a necessity to go abroad, on the basis of our expatriates' contributions and on our nation's humanitarian responsibilities to our people wherever they are, whether they are here or abroad, our government works doubly hard to strengthen the protection of our workers.

Our policy is not to export labor. Our policy is to protect our workers when the market conditions both abroad and in the Philippines give them an opportunity to work abroad. And it is in this context today, in this day and age and its particular time in the economic development of the whole world, that it is our honor to host the Global Forum on Migration and Development this month.

So, I congratulate Secretary Romulo and his team for the preparations, and I hope that everybody contributes to making this a success not only for the sake of the organizers but for the sake of the Filipinos, whom we are proud of and who make a good name for our country all over the world.

Thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the Media Launch of the Global Forum on Migration and Development

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Media Launch of the Global Forum on Migration and Development

[Delivered at the Presidential Briefing Studio, Kalayaan Hall, Malacañang, October 07, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Romulo.

Mr. Zobel de Ayala, Cabinet members, members of media.

Secretary Romulo and Undersecretary Conejos have put this global forum in the context of overall development. Let me put it in the context of what we are experiencing in the world today.

As we face the most significant global economic and financial crisis in a generation, the poor feel it most.

I direct our economic team to work hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures and provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global developments. I also direct... I direct them to draw up a contingency plan to cushion the impact of a possible economic recession of the developed economies on the ordinary people of the Philippines. Possible, but you hope it will not happen, but it's important to have a contingency plan. And I direct the Department of Foreign Affairs, the Department of Labor and the Commission on Filipinos Overseas to draw up a similar plan for overseas Filipinos.

Migration, as pointed out in the presentation of Undersecretary Conejos, is a growing global phenomenon.

We have 8 million Filipinos abroad but it's only a fraction of the 191 migrants all over the world. Overseas Filipinos however in our country continue to play a critical role in the country's economic and social stability.

You know, when I was in New Zealand, they were telling me that they have an even bigger percentage of New Zealanders who work abroad than the Philippines. The difference is that mom and pop send their expatriates money abroad to help them with additional income. In our case, our overseas Filipinos send us money here and help their families, their communities and our economy.

And I might also add that one very, very well-known and well-paid Filipino working overseas says that we should begin to call our overseas Filipinos "expatriates", because the nature of their job is increasingly more on skilled professions. And they should be called expatriates because expatriates usually get higher pay than if you just call them workers.

The government and the people honor our overseas Filipinos, whether you call them OFWs, OCWs, as Dante Ang likes to call them Overseas Filipino Investors. And I agree that we should begin to call them expatriates rather than OFWs. But in any case, we honor them for their sacrifice and dedication to their work, their family and their nation.

We welcome their contribution. But we are working towards the day when Filipinos no longer need to go abroad for a job. For the day that overseas work is just another career option and not the only choice they have to earn a living. This Filipino I'm talking about, that they should be called expatriates rather than OFWs, is working abroad because it's a career choice. He's one of the highest paid persons in his profession in the whole world.

Meanwhile, while we're working for that day, when for everybody, it will be just a career choice and not a necessity to go abroad, on the basis of our expatriates' contributions and on our nation's humanitarian responsibilities to our people wherever they are, whether they are here or abroad, our government works doubly hard to strengthen the protection of our workers.

Our policy is not to export labor. Our policy is to protect our workers when the market conditions both abroad and in the Philippines give them an opportunity to work abroad. And it is in this context today, in this day and age and its particular time in the economic development of the whole world, that it is our honor to host the Global Forum on Migration and Development this month.

So, I congratulate Secretary Romulo and his team for the preparations and I hope that everybody contributes to making this a success not only for the sake of the organizers but for the sake of the Filipinos whom we are proud of and who make a good name for our country all over the world.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Media Launch of the Global Forum on Migration and Development. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135147/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1760&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 20th Anniversary of the Metro Manila Council of the Women
Balikatan Movement

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 20th Anniversary of the Metro Manila Council of the Women Balikatan Movement

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 8, 2008]

Maligayang ika-dalawampung anibersaryo ng inyong kilusan! Sabi nga ni Narda, taun-taon nandito kayo pero espesyal ito, 20th Anniversary Jubilee. Congratulations!

Kanina, ipinakilala ni Narda yung bumibili nung basura at talagang kilala kayo sa inyong ginagawang pangunguna sa pagbubukod ng basura or garbage segregation para mabili. At sabi ni Narda, mula sa mga bahay-bahay, 1.8 million ang nabili noong isang taon. Congratulations!

Ngunit itong taon, dahil 20 years, pwede nating irepaso yung mga ginagawa niyo sa maraming nakaraang taon. Isa rin kayo, sa pagkaintindi ko, sa naunang kumilos upang alagaan ang ating kapaligiran. Kaya itong pagbibili ng basura at recycling, ay isa lamang sa inyong maraming ginagawa sa loob ng nakaraang dalawampung taon at higit pa.

Noong 1980, hindi pa mainit ang isyu tungkol sa environment, sinimulan na ninyo ang kampanya sa pagtatanim ng punongkahoy, di ba Narda? At sa pag-organisa ninyo ng mga kooperatibang pangkababaihan mula sa Cagayan Valley, hanggang sa Mindanao, marami ang natutulungang magkaroon ng hanapbuhay.

At ngayon naman, sa pagkaintindi ko, nakatuon naman ang inyong pansin sa pagpapasimula ng mga kooperatiba at pagtuturo ng kasanayang panghanapbuhay at wastong pagkain sa kababaihan. Kaya congratulations sa Women's Balikatan.

At mula noong kayo ay nagsimula ng inyong kilusan 20 years ago, marami na ang nagbago magmula nuon sa kababaihan dito sa Pilipinas. We are proud of the gains in gender equality in the Philippines. Ito'y isa sa pinakamahalagang tagumpay natin sa ilalim ng United Nations Millennium Development Goals. Nasabi ko na yata sa inyo noon, we are among the top six in the world and the top in Asia in terms of gender parity. We are number one in the world in terms of gender parity in literacy and in health. Sa katunayan, nahihigitan ng mga Pilipina ang mga lalaki sa larangan ng simple and functional literacy.

We are also number one in gender equality in terms of enrollment in primary, secondary and tertiary education. In fact, more females enroll in schools than males, and fewer females drop out.

But as we face the most significant global economic and financial crisis in a generation in the world, women take a harder hit. A disproportionate number of women are single heads of households living in poverty and receive low-quality maternal care.

Salamat na lamang at bumabagal na ang ating inflation rate. Because with the soaring prices of food and oil, yung mga mahihirap na kababaihan are on the frontlines of managing the strains that these uncertain world economic ties are placing on families and communities.

Ang Women's Balikatan Movement ay maaaring maging kampiyon ng kababaihan nitong oras ng pandaigdigang pangangailangan. Higit kailanman, ngayon kailangan marinig ang boses ng kababaihan upang ipagtanggol ang mga karapatan at mga oportunidad ng mga babae, na yun naman ay ipinapakita ng Women's Balikatan Movement.

Kaya ipagpatuloy natin ang laban para sa katarungan, karangalan at pagkakapantay-pantay para sa kababaihan. Siguruhin natin na ang bigat na dala ng sumisikip na pandaigdigang ekonomiya ay hindi magdudulot ng karagdagang pagdurusa sa mga kababaihan.

Malaki na ang natulong ng inyong Movement sa kababaihan. At malaki rin ang naitulong ninyo, gaya ng sabi ni Narda, sa mga programa ng ating administrasyon, ang tinatawag nating 3 E's — Ekonomiya, Edukasyon at Environment.

We came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippine economy. Matibay at lumalagong ekonomiya ang pinakahaliging sinikap nating maipundar upang tumulong sa pagtamo ng kapayapaan, katiwasayan at katatagan sa ating bansa.

Walang humpay tayong nagtatrabaho upang tugunan ang mga hamong dala ng paghina ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya na sinamahan pa ng pagtaas ng presyo ng langis at pagkain. But the fact is, ito'y nangyayari sa buong mundo. Ang mga pangyayari sa Estados Unidos, at sa paghina ng ekonomiya ng mundo ay tunay na nagpapahirap sa bansa sa buong mundo. And we are not insulated from them.

Ngunit ang ating ekonomiya ay higit na matatag ngayon kaysa kailanman. Ang mga repormang pang-ekonomiya't para sa pananalapi, huwag nating kalimutan yung mga economic and fiscal reforms natin sa ating administrasyon ay sinimulan ng anak ni Narda, si dating Secretary of Finance Lito Camacho, at ipinatutupad natin hanggang ngayon nitong mga huling taon sa pakikipagtulungan ng Kongreso. Ito ang nagpalakas ng ating macroeconomic fundamentals, at ng ating sistema ng mga bangko o financial system. Our economy is strong enough to withstand the external turmoil.

We have created almost seven million jobs in seven years. Investments continue to come in, despite continued volatility in global markets. Yung isang anak ni Narda, si Boy, may dalang investors ngayon. Congratulations! Welcome, our investors!

As a result of our economic turnaround, nagawa rin nating mamuhunan sa pinakamahahalagang sector, upang maginhawaan ang mabagsik na hagupit sa ating mahihirap ng pagtaas ng presyo ng pagkain at langis na tumama nitong taon. Bukod dito, namumuhunan tayo sa pinakamalawak sa kasaysayan na pagmoderno ng imprastraktura gaya ng kalsada at tulay. Di ba yung mga galing sa Isabela, ang ganda-ganda na ng ating North Expressway at iba pang mga kalsadang dinadaan doon.

Inaayos natin yung banding, nung nag-kotse ako patungong Quirino, merong bahagi doon sa bandang Nueva Vizcaya, di ba? Doon malubak so pinapaayos natin yun. Ewan ko kung nandoon na yung mga bulldozer ngayon. Nandoon na ba? Very good. See. At least pag nakakautos tayo, nagagawa kasi meron tayong salapi para doon.

Namumuhunan din tayo sa mas pinalaking edukasyon, kalinga sa kalusugan at ibang panlipunang serbisyo. Samantala, binabalanse natin itong mga kinakailangang pamumuhunan, with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations. Kaya bumababa rin ang utang ng ating bansa.

We have been working hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures. Kaya gaya ng sabi ko kanina, salamat na lamang kahapon maganda ang ating balita, nagle-level off na ang inflation. Inflation this past month was lower than the month before. We have also been working hard to provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global events. Most notably, nagsisipag tayo upang matiyak na tatag ang supply ng pagkain at upang may pagkain sa bawat mesa.

Doon nga sa Millennium Development Goals, yung goal, to cut down hunger by one-half by 2015, ayon sa mga pagsusukat ng U.N., kayang-kaya natin. Ipinasok din natin ang mga programa to lift the burden of high fuel price off our people.

And though we are hoping that the U.S. will not slide into recession, I have directed our economic team to draw up a contingency plan, to cushion the impact of such a possible recession on the ordinary people of the Philippines.

Marami pa ang dapat gawin. Nagsisikap tayo upang makamit ang ating Philippine Reform Agenda. Patuloy nating ipagtatangol ang ekonomiya, edukasyon, environment, gaya ng sinabi ko kanina. And we will work to fix the corruption that has unfortunately long plagued our nation.

Kaya sa kabila ng unos sa pangdaigdigang ekonomiya, malaki ang paniniwala natin sa ating bansa. Malakas ang pag-asa na mararating natin ang magandang bukas. We are deeply committed to being a force for good. Kung kaya't sa nakaraang ilang taon, taun-taon dito kayo nagdiriwang ng inyong anibersaryo. Ito ay dahil mahal ko ang Women's Balikatan Movement. At kailanpaman, ako ay nagpapasalamat na tayo ay magkabalikat sa paglingkod sa ating bansang Pilipinas.

Maraming salamat at Happy Anniversary! Congratulations sa inyong lahat!

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches [of] Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008.[Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

Speech of President Arroyo during the 20th Anniversary of the Metro Manila Council of the Women
Balikatan Movement

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 20th Anniversary of the Metro Manila Council of the Women Balikatan Movement

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 8, 2008]

Thank you very much, Chairperson Myrna Yao, yung ating namumuno sa Konseho ng Kababaihan sa Pilipinas.

Mrs. Leonarda Camacho, ang moving spirit ng Balikatan; kayong lahat, mga kaibigan; our friends, you may sit down.

Maligayang ika-dalawampung anibersaryo ng inyong kilusan! Sabi nga ni Narda, taun-taon nandito kayo pero espesyal ito, 20th Anniversary Jubilee. Congratulations!

Kanina, ipinakilala ni Narda yung bumibili nung basura at talagang kilala kayo sa inyong ginagawang pangunguna sa pagbubukod ng basura or garbage segregation para mabili. At sabi ni Narda, mula sa mga bahay-bahay, 1.8 million ang nabili noong isang taon. Congratulations!

Ngunit ‘tong taon, dahil 20 years, pwede nating irepaso yung mga ginagawa niyo sa maraming nakaraang taon. Isa rin kayo sa pagkaintindi ko sa naunang kumilos upang alagaan ang ating kapaligiran. Kaya itong pagbibili ng basura at recycling, isa na lamang sa inyong maraming ginagawa sa nakaraang dalawampung taon at higit pa.

Noong 1980, hindi pa mainit ang isyu tungkol sa environment, sinimulan na ninyo ang kampanya sa pagtatanim ng punongkahoy, di ba Narda? At sa pag-organisa ninyo ng mga kooperatibang pangkababaihan mula sa Cagayan Valley, hanggang sa Mindanao, marami ang natutulungang magkaroon ng hanapbuhay.

At ngayon naman, sa pagkaintindi ko, nakatuon naman ang inyong pansin sa pagpapasimula ng mga kooperatiba at pagtuturo ng kasanayang panghanapbuhay at wastong pagkain sa kababaihan. Kaya congratulations sa Women’s Balikatan.

At mula noong kayo ay nagsimula ng inyong kilusan 20 years ago, marami na ang nagbago magmula nuon sa kababaihan dito sa Pilipinas. We are proud of the gains in gender equality in the Philippines. Ito’y isa sa pinakamahalagang tagumpay natin sa ilalim ng United Nations Millennium Development Goals. Nasabi ko na yata sa inyo noon, we are among the top six in the world and the top in Asia in terms of gender parity. We are number one in the world in terms of gender parity in literacy and in health. Sa katunayan, nahihigitan ng mga Pilipina ang mga lalaki sa larangan ng simple and functional literacy.

We’re also number one in gender equality in terms of enrollment in primary, secondary and tertiary education. In fact, more females enroll in schools than males, and fewer females drop out.

But as we face the most significant global economic and financial crisis in a generation in the world, women take a harder hit. A disproportionate number of women are single heads of households living in poverty and receive low-quality maternal care.

Salamat na lamang at bumabagal na ang ating inflation rate. Because with the soaring prices of food and oil, yung mga mahihirap na kababaihan are on the frontlines of managing the strains that these uncertain world economic ties are placing on families and community.

Ang Women's Balikatan Movement ay maaaring maging kampiyon ng kababaihan nitong oras ng pandaigdigang pangangailangan. Higit kailanman, ngayon kailangan marinig ang boses ng kababaihan upang ipagtanggol ang mga karapatan at mga oportunidad ng mga babae, na yun naman ay ipinapakita ng Women's Balikatan Movement.

Kaya ipagpatuloy natin ang laban para sa katarungan, karangalan at pagkakapantaypantay para sa kababaihan. Siguruhin natin na ang bigat na dala ng sumisikip na pandaigdigang ekonomiya ay hindi magdudulot ng karagdagang pagdurusa sa mga kababaihan.

Malaki na ang natulong ng inyong Movement sa kababaihan. At malaki rin ang naitulong ninyo, gaya ng sabi ni Narda, sa mga programa ng ating administrasyon, ang tinatawag nating 3 E's — Ekonomiya, Edukasyon at Environment.

We came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippine economy. Matibay at lumalagong ekonomiya ang pinakahaliging sinikap nating maipundar upang tumulong sa pagtamo ng kapayapaan, katiwasayan at katatagan sa ating bansa.

Walang humpay tayong nagtatrabaho upang tugunan ang mga hamong dala ng paghina ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya na sinamahan pa ng pagtaas ng presyo ng langis at pagkain. But the fact is, ito'y nangyayari sa buong mundo. Ang mga pangyayari sa Estados Unidos at sa paghina ng ekonomiya ng mundo ay tunay na nagpapahirap sa bansa sa buong mundo. And we are not insulated from them.

Ngunit ang ating ekonomiya ay higit na matatag ngayon kaysa kailanman. Ang mga repormang pang-ekonomiya't para sa pananalapi — huwag nating kalimutan yung mga economic and fiscal reforms natin sa ating administrasyon ay sinimulan ng anak ni Narda, si dating Secretary of Finance Lito Camacho — at ipinatutupad natin hanggang ngayon nitong mga huling taon sa pakikipagtulungan ng Kongreso. Ito ang nagpalakas ng ating macroeconomic fundamentals at ng ating sistema ng mga bangko o financial system. Our economy is strong enough to withstand the external turmoil.

We have created almost seven million jobs in seven years. Investments continue to come in despite continued volatility in global markets. Yung isang anak ni Narda, si Boy, may dalang investors ngayon. Congratulations! Welcome, our investors!

As a result of our economic turnaround, nagawa rin nating mamuhunan sa pinakamahahalagang sektor upang maginhawaan ang mabagsik na hagupit sa ating mahihirap ng pagtaas ng presyo ng pagkain at langis na tumama nitong taon. Bukod dito, namumuhunan tayo sa pinakamalawak sa kasaysayan na pagmoderno ng imprastraktura gaya ng kalsada at tulay. Di ba yung mga galing sa Isabela, ang gandaganda na ng ating North Expressway at iba pang mga kalsadang dinadaan doon.

Inaayos natin yung bandang... meron akong... nung nag-kotse ako patungong Quirino, merong bahagi doon sa bandang Nueva Vizcaya, di ba? Doon malubak so pinapaayos natin yun. Ewan ko kung nandoon yung mga... ewan ko kung nandoon na yung mga bulldozer ngayon. Nandoon na ba? Very good. See. At least pag nakakautos tayo, nagagawa kasi meron tayong salapi para doon.

Namumuhunan din tayo sa mas pinalaking edukasyon, kalinga sa kalusugan at ibang panlipunang serbisyo. Samantala, binabalanse natin itong mga kinakailangang pamumuhunan with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations. Kaya bumababa rin ang utang ng ating bansa.

We have been working hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures. Kaya gaya ng sabi ko kanina, salamat na lamang kahapon maganda ang ating balita, nagle-level off na ang inflation. Inflation this past month was lower than the month before. We have also been working hard to provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global events. Most notably, nagsisipag tayo upang matiyak na matatag ang supply ng pagkain at upang may pagkain sa bawat mesa.

Doon nga sa Millennium Development Goals, yung goal, yung to cut down hunger by one-half by 2015, ayon sa mga pagsusukat ng U.N., kayang-kaya natin. Ipinasok din natin ang mga programa to lift the burden of high fuel price off our people.

And though we are hoping that the U.S. will not slide into recession, I have directed our economic team to draw up a contingency plan to cushion the impact of such a possible recession on the ordinary people of the Philippines.

Marami pa ang dapat gawin. Nagsisikap tayo upang makamit ang ating Philippine Reform Agenda. Patuloy nating ipagtatangol ang ekonomiya, edukasyon, environment, gaya ng sinabi ko kanina. And we will work to fix the corruption that has unfortunately long plagued our nation.

Kaya sa kabila ng unos sa pangdaigdigang ekonomiya, malaki ang paniniwala natin sa ating bansa. Malakas ang pag-asa na mararating natin ang magandang bukas. We are deeply committed to being a force for good. Kung kaya't sa nakaraang ilang taon, tauntaon dito kayo nagdiriwang ng inyong anibersaryo. Ito ay dahil mahal ko ang Women's Balikatan Movement. At kailanpaman, ako ay nagpapasalamat na tayo ay magkabalikat sa paglingkod sa ating bansang Pilipinas.

Happy Anniversary!

Congratulations sa inyong lahat!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 20th Anniversary of the Metro Manila Council of the Women Balikatan Movement. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135140/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1759&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening ceremonies of the Agrilink/Foodlink/Aqualink 2008

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the opening ceremonies of the Agrilink/Foodlink/Aqualink 2008

[Delivered at the World Trade Center, Roxas Blvd., Pasay City, October 9, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Artie Yap for your introduction. And thank you for reminding everybody about how we were among the first in the party, that's how we got party favors.

Senator Ed Angara, thank you and please convey to all the senators who ratified the JPEPA last night, our heartfelt thanks. Yes. One of the biggest winners of the JPEPA is our agriculture, food and aquaculture industry, kaya sa lahat nang nagtataguyod nitong Agrilink, Foodlink at Aqualink Exhibits na nagkaroon ng bagong palengke, congratulations sa ratification!

Congresswoman Nelly Chavez who represents the Farmers' Party of the Philippines na ang kanyang Tagalog translation ay nagkaroon ng acronym BUTIL Party List; ang ating mga host dito sa Pasay City, si Congressman Jun Roxas at saka si Mayor Peewee Trinidad; si Mrs. Dulce Gozun at saka si Lyndon Tan; His Excellency Ambassador Chesnel and our French delegation, which is one of the biggest delegations in this exhibit, benvenuto!

This event is timely because a whole new market has opened up for the Philippine agribusiness through the JPEPA ratification. This event is also a venue to remind ourselves that four years ago, we resolved to develop one million hectares of agribusiness land and water to make them productive and to transport their products to the markets efficiently.

“Sustaining Agricultural Growth through Niche Markets” is indeed the way to go in a globally competitive world.

While we may know how to grow rice well, our productivity per hectare is very high. Topography doesn't always cooperate. Nature did not gift us with a mighty Mekong-like Thailand and Vietnam, with their vast and naturally fertile plains. Nature instead put our islands ahead of our neighbors in the path of the typhoons from the Pacific. Thus, instead of producing 100 percent of our needs, the last ten percent of the rice we consume is imported because it had been more expensive to produce them on marginal land. And we earn the foreign exchange to buy the rice by exporting our own niche commodities like primary products, call center services, niche tourism, and as the theme of this exhibit, “niche agribusiness”.

However, at the price levels reached last year even if the Philippines is a rocky, densely populated archipelago with relatively few resources of fresh water, in one of our meetings with Congress and the industry we all agreed that it is now desirable to become self-sufficient in rice while still increasing our production of other plants, fruits, fish and livestock for the markets.

Therefore, the global credit crunch should be an opportunity, not a crisis, for Philippine agribusiness.

The U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated. Any slowdown or even recession in the U.S. is not good for the global economy. That said, the Philippines appears in relatively good shape, thanks to our fiscal reforms — again, thanks to Congress and the Senate. Ed and Nelly were very active in our fiscal reforms — that manifested a seven percent plus GDP growth last year. Our debt-to-GDP ratio has gone down, and our credit ratings reflect it.

We came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippine economy. Matibay at lumalagong ekonomiya ang pinakahaliging sinikap nating maipundar upang tumulong sa pagtamo ng kapayapaan, katiwasayan, at katatagan sa ating bansa. Walang humpay tayong nagtatrabaho upang tugunan ang mga hamong dala ng paghina ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya na sinamahan ng pagtaas ng presyo ng langis at pagkain.

Notwithstanding all that, we have created almost 7 million jobs in 7 years, many of them in agribusiness. Investments continue to come in despite continued volatility in the global markets.

And I am pleased to see here that in this exhibit, we have a wide range of non-mainstream products like mangosteen and papaya pastes, yogurt, civet coffee, goat's milk soaps, the golden "Dory" fish, black tiger prawns, low-fat salad dressings, palm sugar, indigenous plant and unconventional cutflowers. Mayroon pang bagong produktong organic fertilizer — di ba organic fertilizer yun, Artie? — na ilulunsad ngayon sa kanilang booth pagkatapos nitong programa na tinatawag "Nutrisphere". All of these will all appeal to different segments of local and foreign markets.

I am also pleased to hear about the use of nutritious indigenous vegetables like malunggay — which we are using extensively for our school feeding program — alughati, saluyot, katuray and pako or fern. These are not only promising niche crops that translate into more incomes for the planters, they are also excellent sources of the vitamins and minerals we all need.

In fisheries, the profitability of mariculture has been demonstrated. Growing fish in the seas has proven to be one of the best methods to increase fish production and meet demand without significantly reducing the volume of fish outside the cages. We now have 34 mariculture farms throughout the country.

We have diversified our economy not only in terms of niche agri products and aqua products and food products but also in terms of markets. So that the U.S. is no longer our top export market; that now is China. And now Japan will open up with the JPEPA ratified. And with our French ambassador here and the French delegation, we also look at the European market.

As a result of our economic turnaround, nagawa rin nating mamuhunan sa pinakamahahalagang sektor gaya ng agrikultura, pagkain at pangingisda upang maginhawahan ang mabagsik na hagupit sa ating mahihirap ng matataas na presyo ng pagkain at langis na tumama nitong taon. Bukod dito, namumuhunan tayo sa pinakamalawak sa kasaysayan na pagmoderno ng imprastraktura gaya ng kalsada kasama ang farm-to-market roads, tulay at pantalan.

Namumuhunan din tayo sa mas pinalaking edukasyon, kasama na ang enrollment sa agriculture na binibigyan natin ng maraming scholarship, kasama na ang kalinga sa kalusugan at ibang panlipunang serbisyo. Samantala, binabalanse natin itong mga kinakailangang pamumuhunan with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations.

And as we have done this, our part, the production is actually to be done by the private sector, by the business community, by the agribusiness community. And therefore, we encourage continued activity by the agriculture, food and aquaculture business groups. This also means the government continues to promote privatization, including the Food Terminal, Incorporated, as a counterpoint for our own pump-priming.

To the fiscally strong, this is a time of opportunity. To the likes of the oil-producing countries, for instance, this is a time to fill up the financial vacuum. Similarly, in the private sector, this is the time for agribusiness to exploit the financial liquidity of our strong banking sector to expand your role in your respective niche markets.

Sabi ko, strong banking sector, dahil napapatunayan natin ito dito sa global credit crunch. The potential exposure of our banking sector to the asset deflation triggered by the sub-prime mortgage losses in the U.S. accounts for less than one percent of their total system assets here in the Philippines. This exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well-capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudence of our regulators.

At magpasalamat tayo sa mga bangko, kagaya ng mga cooperative bank na itinataguyod ni Congresswoman ng BUTIL, dahil yung kanilang bangko ang pautang ay apat... four percent at hindi dinidiscunt. Kaya makinabang sana ang agrikultura doon. At sabi ko nga kay Nelly, inaasahan nating magiging mas madali ang proseso ng paghiram sa bangko kapag natutupad na ang malapit nang pipirmahan kong Credit Information System Act na isang pet bill ni Senator Angara. Maraming salamat, Ed. Pipirmahan natin yun pagkabalik ni Ed Angara mula sa World Bank conference.

Of equal importance to sheer financial capacity is the ability to decide and move quickly — the road between the decision to buy and the actual placement of the order is fraught with uncertainty. Sa ating bansa, ang mabilis kumilos yung mga SME pero mabilis din kumilos yung mga higanteng negosyante sa agribusiness.

Internationally, the bastions of wealth with both financial capacity and quick execution are the Middle East powers, given their oil-driven wealth and their unitary government apparatus. The fact that the Philippines has a Mindanao close to the hearts of powers such as Saudi, the UAE and Libya opens up opportunities for niche marketing of products especially from Agribusiness Mindanao.

Kaya kanina masaya ako noong dumadaan diyaan sa red carpet, maraming bumati sa akin na mga delegates galing sa Mindanao. Ito ay pagkakataon dahil mahal kayo ng mga Middle East countries na andami-daming pera ngayon para bumili ng ating produkto.

We have been working hard on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures. Salamat naman at naglevel off na ang inflation. Mas mababa ang inflation noong Setyembre kaysa Oktubre.

We've also been working hard to provide a safety net to those hit hardest by these global events. Most notably, nagsisipag tayo upang matiyak na matatag ang supply ng pagkain at upang may pagkain sa bawat mesa.

Kaya napakalaki ang importansya nitong Agrilink, Foodlink at Aqualink. Malaki ang naitutulong upang paramihin ang ani at palawakin ang mga merkado ng mga produkto natin mula sa bukid at sa dagat. Regular na idinaraos ang exhibit na ito sapagkat buo ang samahan ng mga kasapi ng sektor ng agrikultura, pagkain at pangangisda. At gusto kong batiin kareng cabalen ko queta king Clark dahil meron ng permanent Agrilink doon sa Clark na ginagawa. Lagi kayong nagtutulungan upang tiyakin ang pagkakaroon ng pagkain sa bawat mesa.

From the day we took office, we have been focused on our economy and modernizing every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the Philippines. This includes agribusiness, from development of new hybrids, to unprecedented investments in irrigation, to dramatic increases in loans to help our farmers, among other activities. Again, Senator Angara is here because of his love for agriculture. And we are carrying out his Agricultural and Fisheries Modernization Act.

What happened this year with rice and global prices notwithstanding our preparation is a once-in-a-millennium global crisis.

Sa harap ng unos sa pandaigdigang ekonomiya, lalo nating kailangan ang magpakatatag, magtulong-tulong, at magsumikap na iligtas ang ating mga kababayan sa gutom at pagkakabaon sa kahirapan.

Sa kabila nitong unos, malaki ang ating paniniwala sa ating bansa. Malakas ang pag-asa na mararating natin ang magandang bukas kaya magbuong loob tayo lahat na maging pwersa para sa kinabubuti, at itong Agrilink, Foodlink at Aqualink ay napakaimportanteng pwersa sa kinabubuti ng ating magsasaka, mangingisda at karaniwang mamamayan na kailangan magkaroon ng pagkain sa bawat mesa.

So to all of you, on this occasion of this exhibit, mabuhay kayong lahat at maraming salamat.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135119/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1757&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Economist Conferences Business Roundtable Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Economist Conferences Business Roundtable

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Dusit Thani Hotel, Makati City, October 10, 2008]

There is no doubt that we live in unsettled times today. The world is at a tipping point.

The U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated.

Just a week ago, the U.S. government approved an unprecedented bailout worth 700 billion dollars for a large section of its financial services industry. But despite the obvious concern and commitment showed by the U.S. Congress, the markets barely reacted.

The setbacks from the global shocks of the past year and the past weeks are real and profound. It will take time and perseverance to put the pieces back together.

Against this backdrop, the Philippines is in relatively good shape. Thanks to our fiscal reforms that manifested in the more than 7.0 percent GDP growth last year.

The potential exposure of our banks to the asset inflation triggered by sub-prime mortgage losses account for less than one percent of total system assets. This exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well-capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators.

Our Central Bank governor who is independent of the Philippine government, is in Washington together with our secretaries of finance and budget and our planning secretary for the IMF World Bank Meeting, but we have with us our secretary of Trade and Industry, who is the national government's representative to the Monetary Board.

We are proving the value of a new paradigm for self-reliance through the use of: first, a targeted strategy with a set of precise prescriptions to ease the price challenges we are facing; second, rice self-sufficiency and more energy independence; and third, long-term reforms.

To ease our price challenges, since the volatile global economic situation became apparent many months ago, we have increased and stabilized the supply of rice. We've delivered targeted subsidies to the poor. We have reached out to our neighbors in the Mekong region to ensure a stable supply. We've clamped down on price gouging and corruption in the rice trade, and invested more and more billions in planting and agricultural modernization.

The Central Bank, through all these periods in several tranches increased the rate base's points by 100 base's points. And this is an example of what our economic team has been doing to work tirelessly on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures, provide a safety net to those members of our society who are hit hardest by these global developments, and deliver the economic growth that will continue to generate jobs and the tax revenues that are fueling the investment in our future, including the infrastructure that can visibly be seen and that was referred to by Mr. Goddard.

I am pleased at the downturn in the consumer price growth last month. While no one can predict the future during these uncertain global economic times, it seems that our measures at home are seeing us through the toughest times. We hope the worst is behind us in the Philippines and that we have weathered the worst of the global storm.

On rice self-sufficiency, from the day we took office, we have been focused on modernizing our economy, modernizing every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the economy. This includes agriculture, from development of new hybrids, to unprecedented investments in irrigation, to dramatic increases in loans to help our farmers, among other activities.

But, while we have achieved a high productivity of rice per hectare, nature did not gift us with a mighty Mekong and a vast and naturally-fertile plain. Nature instead, as we can see today from the rain, put our islands ahead of our neighbors in the path of typhoons from the Pacific. Therefore, it had been more economical to import 10 percent of the rice that we consume rather than produce that 10 percent on marginal lands.

But with what happened this year with the rice and global prices notwithstanding our preparation, we reached a consensus with the Legislature — and I'm glad that we have two members of the Legislature here with us, Congressman Puentevella and Congressman Mercado — and with the business community — and I'm glad we have members of the business community here with us — we reached a consensus altogether that even if the Philippines is a densely-populated, rocky archipelago with relatively few sources of fresh water, it has become desirable to be self-sufficient in rice.

The centerpiece of our drive towards self-sufficiency in rice is a multi-billion package for agricultural modernization that we have nicknamed F.I.E.L.D.S.: an acronym that stands for Fertilizers; Irrigation and farm Infrastructure; Education and agricultural extension work; Loans; Dryers and other post-harvest facilities; and Seeds, especially hybrid and certified seeds.

On energy independence. It's auspicious that we have this meeting today because yesterday, our new Galoc Oil Field started pumping oil to what we believe will redouble our crude oil production in our country. This is part of what we have done to increase energy independence during our administration from 41 percent to 58 percent — the highest in our history — through the greater use not only of oil exploration but of geothermal, biofuels and renewables. And with the Galoc Oil Field starting its production yesterday, we expect to attain 60 percent energy independence in two years. But you will hear more about that this afternoon, I understand, at 4:00 o'clock p.m., because as I was coming here in my car, I was talking to our Secretary of Energy, getting the figures correct. And he told me that he is on board to speak before you at 4:00 o'clock this afternoon.

On long-term reforms. I came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippine economy. A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability.

Our gains in the last seven years were hard-earned. We made tough and sometimes painful reforms to reset our economy: tax increases, again, I thank Congress for helping me do those very painful measures; banking reforms, that's why our exposure to the sub-prime crisis is minimal; crackdown on smugglers and tough fiscal discipline, to name a few as part of our anti-corruption efforts.

It is paying off. Our economy is more resilient today than ever before. We have created almost 7 million jobs in 7 years. Our international reserves cover six months of imports. And the reforms have given us some running room to weather the wave of global price shocks that reverberated across the world this year.

It hasn't been easy, but Filipinos are tough and resilient and that is one of our sources of competitiveness. We have pulled together. We have been able to draw on additional revenues to provide targeted investments in food and fuel to keep our poor afloat until a better day.

We are doing everything in our power to focus on the fundamentals, keep the economy steady, and to provide relief for those most in need.

In addition, as has been mentioned earlier, we are investing in modernizing infrastructure like roads and bridges, but what makes it different is that it is now on an unprecedented scale because now, we can afford it with our tax reforms. Incidentally, our secretary of education was the chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means that led us through these tax reforms.

We are also investing in expanded education, healthcare, and other social services. ICT is a major element of our education reform program. We expect it to continue taking on an increasingly significant role in improving the access and quality of education to the people. And that is why, I have asked our Secretary of Education Jesli Lapus, to join us here not only to banner him as the author of our tax reforms, but also, that he can talk more about ICT in education later on in our open forum.

We encourage continued activity by business groups such as those represented in this audience today. And business groups such as those who read your very prestigious publication. This also means the government continues to promote privatization as a counterpoint to our own pump priming.

Privatizing our economy is a top priority. It is moving forward well, from power and energy, to our stake in jointly owned assets with private investors. Our philosophy is that, "the marketplace performs better than government". We want to reap the rewards of our investment and use these rewards when we divest to invest in the people of the nation.

And notwithstanding some of the constraints mentioned by Mr. Goddard, I'm glad that investments continue to come despite continued volatility in the global markets. Mr. Goddard talked about our neighbors.

We view the ASEAN community and our other neighbors like China and India as partners in economic development. We are working together to build a more cohesive regional community, that will strengthen the economic clout of all our nations in our rapidly growing region. Intra-ASEAN trade has already become one of the major drivers of our respective economies. And to ensure that, we remain a competitive player within the region and are able to attract investment not only from outside ASEAN but also within. We have invested heavily in improving the quality of the country's human resources, lowering transaction flows and the cost of doing business, which includes fighting corruption. And we have Secretary Favila here, as the Chairman of our Anti-Red Tape Task Force, developing efficient access to financing. In a few days time, I will be signing a bill into law on a Credit Information System, that will reduce the paper requirements for accessing financing and building a seamless infrastructure network, as you are seeing, from the expressways to the North, all the way up to Clark-Subic; beyond that, to Tarlac, and our expressways to the South, all the way to Batangas Port. We are also focusing on developing our strongest sectors, including commodities, business process outsourcing and niche tourism, where we have, as Mr. Goddard says, unique competitive advantages, and where we can offer significant value for foreign investors. These and other measures we are taking, will ensure that we will continue to attract the investments that we need to create jobs.

And so, we are glad that efforts to improve our competitiveness have been recognized globally, with the Philippines moving up five notches this year in the World Competitiveness Rankings.

We will continue on the path of economic reform, including reforms to improve transparency in our governance system. Our reforms have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy will withstand these external shocks. We will continue to be vigilant against further challenges to our economy. We will maintain the fiscally prudent policies that have given us the strength to weather this global storm.

Even as some external challenges are letting up, we will continue to focus on reining in inflation, bringing down prices of the basic commodities including rice and oil and power, increasing targeted investments to our poor, taking care of our environment and, we have our secretary of Environment and Natural Resources here, also to answer questions regarding mining and getting our economic engine moving in a higher gear. We will also work hard to further strengthen the banking system, which has shown itself to be quite strong during this crisis of the world so far. Encourage investment again as I said in our most promising growth sectors that was mentioned earlier, but also expand the field of our potential sectors.

So, we can see that all these measures do require strong actions internally, even if the challenge we face are broadly external. They require decisive and targeted action internally, and, we have done that. We repeat that the best buffer we have to external vulnerability is our own domestic internal strength. Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment and relying less on external markets for things like food, things like energy, is what our reform agenda is all about. Also things like foreign loans that we used to need to finance our infrastructure, not anymore now, we can finance it by our own resources.

These are the things that are keeping our economy on the path to long-term sustainable growth.

To the fiscally strong, the global credit crunch is a time of opportunity, not crisis. To the likes of oil-producing countries, the Singapores of the world and others of such fiscal strength, this has been a time to exploit the financial vacuum, as we have seen there purchases into the world financial institutions earlier this year. Similarly, in the private sector, this is the time for the businessmen who have the financial liquidity to expand their role in their respective markets. And in the Philippines, we have quite a few of those businessmen who have that financial clout.

Of equal importance to sheer financial capacity is the ability to decide and move quickly, the road between a decision to invest and the actual writing of the check is fraught with uncertainty. And from my experience, the bastions of wealth with both financial capacity and quick execution are the Middle East powers, given their oil-driven wealth and their unitary government status. The fact that the Philippines has a Mindanao, close to the hearts of Middle East powers opens up such opportunities for us, and we have been mobilizing these opportunities not only in Mindanao but in our urban beltway as well.

Our investment offer is excellent. It includes a government committed not only to continuing infrastructure expansion and, as I said, we can afford it now on our own steam, but also to working with individual companies to ensure that their needs are met. It includes one of the most productive and competitive work forces in the region, and a strong macroeconomic environment. If there is any doubt that we don't value any particular company's investment, including a company experiencing some attempts to make illegal money out of them, we want to know about it. Secretary Favila will take care of your problems and crack the whip. We can assure you that we will do anything we can to address your concerns. So, we thank you for your interest in the Philippines.

We will work hard to help you expand your presence in what we are determined to be the best investment location in Asia.

Thank you.

*Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches [of] Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

Speech of President Arroyo during the Economist Conferences Business Roundtable with the Government of the Philippines

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Economist Conferences Business Roundtable with the Government of the Philippines

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Dusit Tithani Hotel, Makati City, October 10, 2008]

Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Goddard.

Ladies and gentlemen, good morning.

There is no doubt that we live in unsettled times today.

The world is at a tipping point.

The U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated.

Just a week ago, the U.S. government approved an unprecedented bailout worth 700 billion dollars for a large section of its financial services industry. But despite the obvious concern and commitment showed by the U.S. Congress, the markets barely reacted.

The setbacks from the global shocks of the past year and the past weeks are real and profound. It will take time and perseverance to put the pieces back together.

Against this backdrop, the Philippines is in relatively good shape. Thanks to our fiscal reforms that manifested in the more than 7.0 percent GDP growth last year.

The potential exposure of our banks to the asset inflation triggered by sub-prime mortgage losses account for less than one percent of total system assets. This exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well-capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators.

Our Central Bank governor who is independent of the Philippine government, is in Washington together with our secretaries of finance and budget and our planning secretary for the IMF World Bank Meeting, but we have with us our secretary of Trade and Industry, who is the national government's representative to the Monetary Board.

We are proving the value of a new paradigm for self-reliance through the use of: first, a targeted strategy with a set of precise prescriptions to ease the price challenges we are facing; second, rice self-sufficiency and more energy independence; and third, long-term reforms.

To ease our price challenges, since the volatile global economic situation became apparent many months ago, we have increased and stabilized the supply of rice. We've delivered targeted subsidies to the poor. We have reached out to our neighbors in the Mekong region to ensure a stable supply. We've clamped down on price gouging and corruption in the rice trade, and invested more and more billions in planting and agricultural modernization.

The Central Bank, through all these periods in several tranches increased the rate base's points by 100 base's points. And this is an example of what our economic team has been doing to work tirelessly on all fronts to manage inflationary pressures, provide a safety net to those members of our society who are hit hardest by these global developments, and deliver the economic growth that will continue to generate jobs and the tax revenues that are fueling the investment in our future, including the infrastructure that can visibly be seen and that was referred to by Mr. Goddard.

I am pleased at the downturn in the consumer price growth last month. While no one can predict the future during these uncertain global economic times, it seems that our measures at home are seeing us through the toughest times. We hope the worst is behind us in the Philippines and that we have weathered the worst of the global storm.

On rice self-sufficiency, from the day we took office, we have been focused on modernizing our economy, modernizing every aspect of the economic underpinnings of the economy. This includes agriculture, from development of new hybrids, to unprecedented investments in irrigation, to dramatic increases in loans to help our farmers, among other activities.

But while we have achieved a high productivity of rice per hectare, nature did not gift us with a mighty Mekong and a vast and naturally-fertile plain. Nature instead, as we can see today from the rain, put our islands ahead of our neighbors in the path of typhoons from the Pacific. Therefore, it had been more economical to import 10 percent of the rice that we consume rather than produce that 10 percent on marginal lands.

But with what happened this year with the rice and global prices notwithstanding our preparation, we reached a consensus with the Legislature — and I'm glad that we have two members of the Legislature here with us, Congressman Puentevella and Congressman Mercado — and with the business community — and I'm glad we have members of the business community here with us — we reached a consensus altogether that even if the Philippines is a densely-populated, rocky archipelago with relatively few sources of fresh water, it has become desirable to be self-sufficient in rice.

The centerpiece of our drive towards self-sufficiency in rice is a multi-billion package for agricultural modernization that we have nicknamed F.I.E.L.D.S. — an acronym that stands for Fertilizers; Irrigation and farm infrastructure; Education and agricultural extension work; Loans; Dryers and other post-harvest facilities; and Seeds, especially hybrid and certified seeds.

On energy independence. It's auspicious that we have this meeting today because yesterday, our new Galoc Oil Field started pumping oil to what we believe will redouble our crude oil production in our country. This is part of what we have done to increase energy independence during our administration from 41 percent to 58 percent — the highest in our history — through the greater use not only of oil exploration but of geothermal, biofuels and renewables. And with the Galoc Oil Field starting its production yesterday we expect to attain 60 percent energy independence in two years. But you will hear more about that this afternoon, I understand, at 4:00 o'clock p.m., because as I was coming here in my car, I was talking to our Secretary of Energy, getting the figures correct. And he told me that he is on board to speak before you at 4:00 o'clock this afternoon.

On long-term reforms. I came to office determined to change the strategic paradigm for the Philippine economy. A strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create to help guarantee peace, order and stability.

Our gains in the last seven years were hard-earned. We made tough and sometimes painful reforms to reset our economy: tax increases — again, I thank Congress for helping me do those very painful measures, banking reforms — that's why our exposure to the sub-prime crisis is minimal; crackdown on smugglers and tough fiscal discipline, to name a few as part of our anti-corruption efforts.

It is paying off. Our economy is more resilient today than ever before. We have created almost 7 million jobs in 7 years. Our international reserves cover six months of imports. And the reforms have given us some running room to weather the wave of global price shocks that reverberated across the world this year.

It hasn't been easy, but Filipinos are tough and resilient and that is one of our sources of competitiveness. We have pulled together. We have been able to draw on additional revenues to provide targeted investments in food and fuel to keep our poor afloat until a better day.

We are doing everything in our power to focus on the fundamentals, keep the economy steady, and to provide relief for those most in need.

In addition, as has been mentioned earlier, we are investing in modernizing infrastructure like roads and bridges but what makes it different is that it is now on an unprecedented scale because now we can afford it with our tax reforms. Incidentally, our secretary of education was the chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means that led us through these tax reforms.

We are also investing in expanded education, healthcare, and other social services. ICT is a major element of our education reform program. We expect it to continue taking on an increasingly significant role in improving the access and quality of education to the people. And that's why I've asked our Secretary of Education Jesli Lapus to join us here not only to banner him as the author of our tax reforms but also that he can talk more about ICT in education later on in our open forum.

We encourage continued activity by business groups such as those represented in this audience today. And business groups such as those who read your very prestigious publication. This also means the government continues to promote privatization as a counterpoint to our own pump priming.

Privatizing our economy is a top priority. It is moving forward well, from power and energy to our stake in jointly owned assets with private investors. Our philosophy is that, "the marketplace performs better than government". We want to reap the rewards of our investment and use these rewards when we divest to invest in the people of the nation.

And notwithstanding some of the constraints mentioned by Mr. Goddard, I'm glad that investments continue to come despite continued volatility in the global markets. Mr. Goddard talked about our neighbors.

We view the ASEAN community and our other neighbors like China and India as partners in economic development. We are working together to build a more cohesive regional community that will strengthen the economic clout of all our nations in our rapidly growing region. Intra-ASEAN trade has already become one of the major drivers of our respective economies. And to ensure that we remain a competitive player within the region and are able to attract investment not only from outside ASEAN but also within. We have invested heavily in improving the quality of the country's human resources, lowering transaction flows and the cost of doing business — which includes fighting corruption. And we have Secretary Favila here as the chairman of our Anti-Red Tape Task Force — developing efficient access to financing. In a few days time, I will be signing a bill into law on a Credit Information System that will reduce the paper requirements for accessing financing — and building a seamless infrastructure network, as you are seeing, from the expressways to the North, all the way up to Clark-Subic; beyond that, to Tarlac, and our expressways to the South, all the way to Batangas Port. We are also focusing on developing our strongest sectors, including commodities, business process outsourcing and niche tourism, where we have, as Mr. Goddard says, unique competitive advantages, and where we can offer significant value for foreign investors. These and other measures we are taking will ensure that we will continue to attract the investments that we need to create jobs.

And so we are glad that efforts to improve our competitiveness have been recognized globally, with the Philippines moving up five notches this year in the World Competitiveness Rankings.

We will continue on the path of economic reform, including reforms to improve transparency in our governance system. Our reforms have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy will withstand these external shocks. We will continue to be vigilant against further challenges to our economy. We will maintain the fiscally prudent policies that have given us the strength to weather this global storm.

Even as some external challenges are letting up, we will continue to focus on reining in inflation, bringing down prices of the basic commodities including rice and oil and power, increasing targeted investments to our poor, taking care of our environment — and we have our secretary of Environment and Natural Resources here also to answer questions regarding mining — and getting our economic engine moving in a higher gear. We will also work hard to further strengthen the banking system which has shown itself to be quite strong during this crisis of the world so far. Encourage investment again as I said in our most promising growth sectors that was mentioned earlier but also expand the field of our potential sectors.

So we can see that all these measures do require strong actions internally even if the challenge we face are broadly external. They require decisive and targeted action internally, and we have done that. We repeat that the best buffer we have to external vulnerability is our own domestic internal strength. Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment and relying less on external markets for things like food, things like energy is what our reform agenda is all about. Also things like foreign loans that we used to need to finance our infrastructure, not anymore now, we can finance it by our own resources.

These are the things that are keeping our economy on the path to long-term sustainable growth.

To the fiscally strong, the global credit crunch is a time of opportunity, not crisis. To the likes of oil-producing countries, the Singapores of the world and others of such fiscal strength, this has been a time to exploit the financial vacuum, as we have seen there purchases into the world financial institutions earlier this year. Similarly, in the private sector, this is the time for the businessmen who have the financial liquidity to expand their role in their respective markets. And in the Philippines, we have quite a few of those businessmen who have that financial clout.

Of equal importance to sheer financial capacity is the ability to decide and move quickly — the road between a decision to invest and the actual writing of the check is fraught with uncertainty. And from my experience, the bastions of wealth with both financial capacity and quick execution are the Middle East powers, given their oil-driven wealth and their unitary government status. The fact that the Philippines has a Mindanao close to the hearts of Middle East powers opens up such opportunities for us, and we have been mobilizing these opportunities not only in Mindanao but in our urban beltway as well.

Our investment offer is excellent. It includes a government committed not only to continuing infrastructure expansion — and, as I said, we can afford it now on our own steam — but also to working with individual companies to ensure that their needs are met. It includes one of the most productive and competitive work forces in the region, and a strong macroeconomic environment. If there is any doubt that we don't value any particular company's investment, including a company experiencing some attempts to make illegal money out of them, we want to know about it. Secretary Favila will take care of your problems and crack the whip. We can assure you that we will do anything we can to address your concerns.

So, we thank you for your interest in the Philippines.

We will work hard to help you expand your presence in what we are determined to be the best investment location in Asia.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Economist Conferences Business Roundtable with the Government of the Philippines. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135109/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1756&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the rededication ceremony of the RFM flour mill and launching of the RFM pasta plant in celebration of RFM Food Corporation's 50th anniversary

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the rededication ceremony of the RFM flour mill and launching of the RFM pasta plant in celebration of RFM Food Corporation's 50th anniversary

[Delivered at the RFM Industrial Compound, Pioneer St., Mandaluyong City, Metro Manila, October 13, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Remonde.

If you think I'm such a hard working president, you can blame my slave driver boss in the Department of Trade and Industry, Joe Concepcion, for training me to be hard working. (Applause) Chairman and Mrs. Concepcion, Joey, Marie and the other members of the Concepcion family, Peter Favila, officials of RFM, ladies and gentlemen.

To the RFM family, happy golden anniversary! (Applause) And congratulations on your new Fiesta Pasta Plant, the largest pasta factory in the whole of Asia! (Applause) Joey was telling us in his speech about what happened fifty years ago in the founding of RFM. But, while we were listening to Joey, Marivic was also telling us how a lot of eyebrows were raised — even the government was against it at that time — when Mr. Jose Concepcion, Sr., Don Salvador Araneta, Mr. Server, Mr. Alvino Sycip and other partners put up a flour mill because they said we don't grow wheat. What will you do putting up a flour mill, and you're going to have to aircondition the whole plant? But today, that pioneering company has grown into a huge, diversified conglomerate, steered successively by three able generations of Jose Concepcions. (Applause)

Under the leadership of my boss, JoeCon, Jr., RFM strengthened its forward and backward linkages, venturing to feed milling, hog and poultry raising, and meat processing. And as he pushed his flagship company into new frontiers, JoeCon kept reminding his people, his consumers, and the Filipino public that — “Yes, the Filipino Can!” (Applause) He brought this motto with him when he joined the Department of Trade and Industry. And I guess, that's where I learned from him not only the value of very very hard work because we use to start our days with breakfast meetings and work well into the night. But one time he told me, “You know, you're married so you should have some family life, so you can go home after dinner.” He used to tell me that.

But today even outside of government and back in business, JoeCon continues to play a leading role in public affairs especially in the ASEAN Business Advisory Council which is so important for our country. (Applause)

And when his turn at the helm came, Joey III held on, as he said earlier, to his grandfather's vision and his father's philosophy as he further expanded into other products that are now household brands like Selecta, Sarsi, and now Fiesta, to name just a few. Joey is even at my request producing vegetable-based noodles that is called “Proud Harvest” and aptly so. (Applause) We were not embarrassed to ask Joey to help our farmers in the Cordilleras and also to help our consumers look for a cheaper substitute for flour or wheat-based noodles because Joey is supporting the government's program for entrepreneurs by helping them become good managers under the “Go Negosyo!” (Applause)

This is truly a partnership with our government program to establish a deep foundation for a broad middle class. Thank you for your support, Joey, for “Go Negosyo!” and also for Proud Harvest. (Applause)

I am sure that during this third generation of Jose Concepcion's leadership, RFM will continue to be a giant in food processing in our country and even abroad, in foreign shores in the next 50 years. For instance, Peter told me that these spaghetti products are going to be exported to Vietnam. See, hindi ba sabi nila ang Vietnam ang ating kumpetensya, pero nagbebenta tayo sa Vietnam dahil sa competitiveness ng RFM. Congratulations! (Applause)

We encourage continued activity by big and sturdy business groups like RFM. This also means we hope RFM will participate in the bidding in the privatization that government continues to promote, as a counterpoint to our own pump priming. The global credit crunch can be an opportunity, not a crisis for sturdy giants like RFM. Indeed, this is a time of opportunity to the fiscally strong. On the side of economies, to the likes of oil-producing countries, the Singapores of the world and other fiscally strong economies, this is a time to exploit the financial vacuum, as they did earlier this year by buying into large financial institutions. Similarly, on the part of corporations in the private sector, this is the time for the business group like RFM who have the financial liquidity to expand their role in their respective markets. And I am glad Fiesta is a symbol of their response to that challenge. Congratulations! (Applause)

Of equal importance to sheer financial capacity is the ability to decide and move quickly — the road between a decision to do business and the actual writing of the check is fraught with uncertainty. But Peter told me that this plant was put up in 80 days so RFM has the financial clout and also the decisiveness to be a major player in this globally competitive world. (Applause)

Going to nations again, the bastions of wealth with both financial capacity and quick execution are the Middle East powers, given their oil-driven wealth and their unitary government apparatus. The fact that the Philippines has a Mindanao close to the hearts of Middle East powers opens up such opportunities. I hope that a large and sturdy and decisive company like RFM will avail of these opportunities and do business with the Middle East soon.

Because the U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated; Fortunately, on the home front, the Philippines appears in relatively good shape. Thanks to our fiscal reforms — that manifested in seven percent plus GDP growth last year. The impact of the current world financial turmoil on the Philippine banking system is limited. Local banks are generally domestically-oriented and still focusing on the traditional banking business of accepting deposits and granting loans to creditworthy companies like RFM.

Therefore, the exposure of Philippine banks to distressed banks is minimal. When the crunch burst into a crisis, our banks exposure was only two-fifths of one percent of the total asset of the banking system when Lehman Brothers declared bankruptcy. After that, our banking systems have frequently reduced this exposure to one-third of one percent, and this exposure is fully reserved.

The solvency position of the Philippine banking system is adequate to whether the present world financial crunch. The innate conservatism of our banks is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators. The reforms that the Central Bank instituted in the past years in terms of capital buildup, enhanced risk management, and adherence to good governance are serving us in good stead. These reforms have resulted in a stronger banking system, well-capitalized and improved asset quality including holding the loans of sturdy companies like RFM.

I count on JoeCon's help, not as the head of RFM because that's Joey now, but to the ASEAN Business Advisory Council, as during these important times, I have proposed for ASEAN Plus 3 to convene on the sidelines of the ASEM Summit in Beijing next week to tackle the impact of the current credit crunch.

I am asking developing and emerging economies to unite and come up with a coordinated approach to cushion the impact of a collapse of highly developed economies. I'm urging the developed countries or G7 to consider the interest of developing countries in their plan to prevent a worldwide economic meltdown.

As part of our initiative, on my instruction — Secretary Gary Teves, who is now in Washington — convened a meeting of the ASEAN Economic Ministers and they have come up with some common actions in order to prepare for any contingencies that may happen in ASEAN. And I will be sharing this with you in the next few days. For the moment, I can say, quoting what our boss Joe Concepcion used to say almost everyday in our meetings at the Department of Trade and Industry — “Yes, the Filipino Can!” (Applause)

The Filipino can withstand the global credit crunch and soon arrive at a better day to achieve our dream of reaching the threshold of first-world in 20 years.

Yes, the Filipino can because we have companies like RFM. Yes, RFM can maintain the quality of its products, increase its growth and sustain its commitment to social responsibility to help our less fortunate stand on their own.

And so on this day, as we celebrate what the Filipino can, let us say, “Mabuhay RFM!”

More power in the next fifty years.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the rededication ceremony of the RFM flour mill and launching of the RFM pasta plant in celebration of RFM Food Corporation’s 50th anniversary. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135058/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1753&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during dinner with delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During Dinner with delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum

[Delivered at Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 15, 2008]

Welcome to the Philippines! And welcome to the Palace of the people — Malacañang!

Again, everybody says in the beginning that this is a very important time, auspicious time, historic time for this meeting.

Every week brings a new chapter in the financial drama that is gripping the world. Some might say the recent chapters read like a horror novel. Two weeks ago, the U.S. government approved, as we know, an unprecedented bailout worth 700 billion dollars that many thought would calm the waters. Last week, those waters were roiling across the globe as Asian and European markets and governments scrambled to respond in kind.

Today, markets around the world have swung back in a positive direction again. Who knows where they will be next week? One thing is sure: we must not lose sight of the impact on real people who bear the brunt of these market fluctuations. We must not revert to complacency just because the markets swing to the positive.

The last few weeks have revealed that confidence is important, but confidence alone is not enough. We need fundamental structural reform and global cooperation. This is why I have proposed a meeting of ASEAN+3 next week in Beijing on the sidelines of the ASEM, the Asia-Europe Meeting. This meeting should aim at preventing the financial firestorm from engulfing our markets and at putting in place solid stabilization measures.

Along the same line, this past week, I instructed our Finance Secretary Gary Teves to meet with the ASEAN+3 Finance Ministers and their representatives together with the World Bank, IMF and ADB senior officials in Washington, to hammer out a deal to aid our region if it should become necessary. As a result, they reached an understanding to establish a standby facility to assist ASEAN countries who would need to cope with severe liquidity problems.

I keep talking about the subjunctive because we don't have an ASEAN economy in that condition yet, but it's always important to be prepared. The facility can also be used to purchase toxic assets and recapitalize troubled financial institutions and private companies. The World Bank indicated that it can initially commit to 10 billion dollars as its contribution to the facility. Hopefully, the IMF, ADB, Japan and China, and the rest of ASEAN will contribute at least the same. In addition, we should aim for viable binding market monitoring and regulation. How to do that, through what institution, that is something we all have to think about.

I have also called, and I continue to call on the G-7 countries, to include the emerging economies in the bold actions and extraordinary measures that they plan to undertake to ease the global crunch. The emerging countries should not be isolated from the grand plan. The systemic failures that are sweeping the globe from the tropics to the arctic and therefore they should lead to a universal solution, not merely a patchwork of regional remedies.

Now, to talk about the Philippines. The Philippines appears in relatively good shape — thanks to our fiscal reforms that manifested in, as Dato Timothy pointed out, 7 percent plus GDP growth last year. We took decisive action few years ago to fundamentally alter our economic fortunes. When some governments were cutting taxes, we raised them. When some governments were deregulating, we were bringing more discipline and order to our financial regulatory environment. When some governments were going deeper into debt, we were fiscally prudent, building up our reserves, investing in our infrastructure, and yet paying our debts.

These were not easy decisions. But they built for us a stronger economic foundation. To quote Standard and Poor's, and I quote: "Yes, the Philippines is 'lucky' because they have made the necessary adjustments and reforms when times were still good. So they are facing the global market problems and economic slowdown from a considerably improved position compared to what they were in 3 to 4 years ago."

To continue the quote: "The Philippines is an 'island of calm' currently, while there is turmoil in the higher rated and previously stable countries."

Nonetheless, I have directed our economic managers to draw up a contingency plan, to cushion the impact of a possible U.S. economic recession on the ordinary Filipinos. The plan includes strategies to pump-prime growth, to upgrade the country's infrastructure and social services, and to protect labor. But it is imperative that we all find real community in this global credit crunch that we can find common solutions to our shared problems.

The upheaval in the global economy this past year has clearly had a significant and painful impact on the whole world, including ASEAN through higher prices of food, fuel and rice. This has led to greater pressures on our peoples, especially the very poor and the working poor.

S&P recently said in a report that the epicenter of the financial crisis that is now taking place is much farther away from our region compared to 1997. Yet, Asia is not entirely insulated from developments in advanced financial markets. Growth has eased all around the region. However, our region has thus far proven to be resilient and resourceful in dealing with the latest round of challenges, more so than ever before.

For the Philippines, our macroeconomic fundamentals remain. Inflation has moderated, but we still remain vigilant. Over the past several months in different crunches, our Central Bank where our Secretary of Trade and Industry Peter Favila is our national government representative to the independent Central Bank, the Central Bank raised policy rates a hundred basis points total.

The potential exposure of our banks to the asset deflation triggered by the U.S. financial losses accounts for less than one-third of one percent of total system assets. And this very, very small exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators.

Nonetheless, in the Philippines as well as in the rest of the world, 2008 is certain to go down in the history books as one that confounded all manner of economic assumptions and expectations. We were all surprised by the heights to which oil and other commodity prices soared earlier this year. The U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated. In these unsettling times, the best buffer we can have against external vulnerabilities has been and will continue to be our own domestic internal strength. By that, I mean, both within our own respective economies and as an increasingly integrated regional economy.

Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment and relying less on external markets is exactly what our reform agenda and ASEAN's vision and charter are all about. For the Philippines, investors recognize that this is one of the key contributors to our renewed economic strength and stability in recent years.

For the region, it is exactly because of such uncertainties in the world economy that are now taking place that we, as a region need to take a bold step forward in creating a self-sufficient, self-reliant region that is insulated from global volatilities.

We as individual economies and as a region need to continue to focus on reining in inflation, increasing targeted investments to our poor, and getting our economic engines moving in a higher gear. We need to work hard to further strengthen our banking systems, to continue to improve our fiscal health, and to encourage investment in our booming industries.

For the Philippines, we will continue on the path of economic reform. Our reforms to date have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy can withstand these external shocks. By creating a stronger economy, the Philippines will be in a better position to contribute to the development of our region.

However, no matter what actions we take, this is a global problem. We must work together to resolve these issues, to see any significant recovery in the global economy.

The global financial and economic system is indeed, as we all know, under deep stress. You might even say, the current system isn't working, or at least it hasn't proved to work yet to adjust to what is happening every day to markets and economies, and more important to people the world over.

The answers to these questions are not evident, as I mentioned earlier, where do you find a mechanism for a binding monitoring and regulating system. And the answers will not come easily, but we can be sure that the events of this year will prompt, perhaps for the first time, a serious and thorough-going reconsideration of the policy alternatives.

Notwithstanding the challenges of the global economy, I remain optimistic about our fortunes here in the Philippines. We are a tough, resilient and hardworking people, as most of you, as Dato Timothy says, most of you who have come in contact with our Filipino expatriates know — we love our nation, we love our friends and neighbors in the world.

This is why I'm truly honored to see so many members of our ASEAN family, especially our future leaders, come together in unity. For being with us tonight, I thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches [of] Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

Speech of President Arroyo during a dinner with the delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a dinner with the delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 15, 2008]

Thank you very much Mr. Ryan.

Dato Timothy, all our guests, ASEAN business leaders, members of governments, ladies and gentlemen.

Welcome to the Philippines! And welcome to the Palace of the people — Malacañang!

Again, everybody says in the beginning that this is a very important time, auspicious time, historic time for this meeting.

Every week brings a new chapter in the financial drama that is gripping the world. Some might say the recent chapters read like a horror novel. Two weeks ago, the U.S. government approved, as we know, an unprecedented bailout worth 700 billion dollars that many thought would calm the waters. Last week, those waters were roiling across the globe as Asian and European markets and governments scrambled to respond in kind.

Today, markets around the world have swung back in a positive direction again. Who knows where they will be next week? One thing is sure: we must not lose sight of the impact on real people who bear the brunt of these market fluctuations. We must not revert to complacency just because the markets swing to the positive.

The last few weeks have revealed that confidence is important, but confidence alone is not enough. We need fundamental structural reform and global cooperation. This is why I have proposed a meeting of ASEAN+3 next week in Beijing on the sidelines of the ASEM, the Asia-Europe Meeting. This meeting should aim at preventing the financial firestorm from engulfing our markets and at putting in place solid stabilization measures.

Along the same line, this past week, I instructed our Finance Secretary Gary Teves to meet with the ASEAN+3 Finance Ministers and their representatives together with the World Bank, IMF and ADB senior officials in Washington, to hammer out a deal to aid our region if it should become necessary. As a result, they reached an understanding to establish a standby facility to assist ASEAN countries who would need to cope with severe liquidity problems.

I keep talking about the subjunctive because we don't have an ASEAN economy in that condition yet, but it's always important to be prepared. The facility can also be used to purchase toxic assets and recapitalize troubled financial institutions and private companies. The World Bank indicated that it can initially commit to 10 billion dollars as its contribution to the facility. Hopefully, the IMF, ADB, Japan and China, and the rest of ASEAN will contribute at least the same. In addition, we should aim for viable binding market monitoring and regulation. How to do that, through what institution, that is something we all have to think about.

I have also called, and I continue to call on the G-7 countries, to include the emerging economies in the bold actions and extraordinary measures that they plan to undertake to ease the global crunch. The emerging countries should not be isolated from the grand plan. The systemic failures that are sweeping the globe from the tropics to the arctic and therefore they should lead to a universal solution, not merely a patchwork of regional remedies.

Now, to talk about the Philippines. The Philippines appears in relatively good shape — thanks to our fiscal reforms that manifested in — as Dato Timothy pointed out, 7 percent plus GDP growth last year. We took decisive action a few years ago to fundamentally alter our economic fortunes. When some governments were cutting taxes, we raised them. When some governments were deregulating, we were bringing more discipline and order to our financial regulatory environment. When some governments were going deeper into debt, we were fiscally prudent, building up our reserves, investing in our infrastructure, and yet paying our debts.

These were not easy decisions. But they built for us a stronger economic foundation.

To quote Standard and Poor's, and I quote: "Yes, the Philippines is 'lucky' because they have made the necessary adjustments and reforms when times were still good. So they are facing the global market problems and economic slowdown from a considerably improved position compared to what they were in 3 to 4 years ago."

To continue the quote: "The Philippines is an 'island of calm' currently, while there is turmoil in the higher rated and previously stable countries."

Nonetheless, I have directed our economic managers to draw up a contingency plan to cushion the impact of a possible U.S. economic recession on the ordinary Filipinos.

The plan includes strategies to pump-prime growth, to upgrade the country's infrastructure and social services, and to protect labor. But it is imperative that we all find real community in this global credit crunch that we can find common solutions to our shared problems.

The upheaval in the global economy this past year has clearly had a significant and painful impact on the whole world including ASEAN through higher prices of food, fuel and rice. This has led to greater pressures on our peoples, especially the very poor and the working poor.

S&P recently said in a report that the epicenter of the financial crisis that is now taking place is much farther away from our region compared to 1997. Yet Asia is not entirely insulated from developments in advanced financial markets. Growth has eased all around the region. However, our region has thus far proven to be resilient and resourceful in dealing with the latest round of challenges, more so than ever before.

For the Philippines, our macroeconomic fundamentals remain. Inflation has moderated, but we still remain vigilant. Over the past several months in different crunches, our Central Bank where our Secretary of Trade and Industry Peter Favila is our national government representative to the independent Central Bank, the Central Bank raised policy rates a hundred basis points total.

The potential exposure of our banks to the asset deflation triggered by the U.S. financial losses accounts for less than one-third of one percent of total system assets. And this very, very small exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators.

Nonetheless, in the Philippines as well as in the rest of the world, 2008 is certain to go down in the history books as one that confounded all manner of economic assumptions and expectations. We were all surprised by the heights to which oil and other commodity prices soared earlier this year. The U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated. In these unsettling times, the best buffer we can have against external vulnerabilities has been and will continue to be our own domestic internal strength. By that, I mean, both within our own respective economies and as an increasingly integrated regional economy.

Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment and relying less on external markets is exactly what our reform agenda and ASEAN's vision and charter are all about. For the Philippines, investors recognize that this is one of the key contributors to our renewed economic strength and stability in recent years.

For the region, it is exactly because of such uncertainties in the world economy that are now taking place that we as a region need to take a bold step forward in creating a self-sufficient, self-reliant region that is insulated from global volatilities.

We as individual economies and as a region need to continue to focus on reining in inflation, increasing targeted investments to our poor, and getting our economic engines moving in a higher gear. We need to work hard to further strengthen our banking systems, to continue to improve our fiscal health, and to encourage investment in our booming industries.

For the Philippines, we will continue on the path of economic reform. Our reforms to date have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy can withstand these external shocks. By creating a stronger economy, the Philippines will be in a better position to contribute to the development of our region.

However, no matter what actions we take, this is a global problem. We must work together to resolve these issues to see any significant recovery in the global economy.

The global financial and economic system is indeed, as we all know, under deep stress. You might even say, the current system isn't working, or at least it hasn't proved to work yet to adjust to what is happening every day to markets and economies, and more important to people the world over.

The answers to these questions are not evident, as I mentioned earlier, where do you find a mechanism for a binding monitoring and regulating system. And the answers will not come easily, but we can be sure that the events of this year will prompt, perhaps for the first time, a serious and thorough-going reconsideration of the policy alternatives.

Notwithstanding the challenges of the global economy, I remain optimistic about our fortunes here in the Philippines. We are a tough, resilient and hardworking people, as most of you, as Dato Timothy says, most of you who have come in contact with our Filipino expatriates know — we love our nation, we love our friends and neighbors in the world.

This is why I'm truly honored to see so many members of our ASEAN family, especially our future leaders, come together in unity. For being with us tonight, I thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a dinner with the delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134921/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=14&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Oath Taking of the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines (ULAP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Oath Taking of the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines (ULAP)

[Delivered at the Heroes Hall, Malacañang, October 15, 2008]

Thank you Secretary Claudio for your introduction.

At una sa lahat gusto ko mag-congratulate sa ating mga bagong halal na officials ng ULAP sa pamumuno ni Chairman Governor Leo Ocampos and President Benhur Abalos. And also to thank immediate past President Monching Guico for the work he did as interim president for a year and to greet the elder statesman of ULAP, Governor Aumentado, and thank you for the beautiful Loboc Youth Ambassadors' performance today. (Applause)

I want to congratulate not only the presidents of the leagues who are here on the platform but also the other leagues who are on the front row. To all of you, congratulations! And most of all, congratulations sa inyong pagkakaisa. Yung mga diskurso ni Leo at saka ni Benhur ay tungkol sa pagkakaisa. At ipinakita ng ULAP ang pagkakaisa. Maraming salamat and congratulations! (Applause)

Ang inyong pagkakabalikat ay sa ikabubuti ng bansa at ng taong bayan. Salamat sa inyong malasakit at sa sakripisyo lalo na sa harap ng binabanggit niyong hamon ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya, mga ligalig sa ilang sulok ng bansa, at mga tangkang manggulo na naman sa katatagan ng pamamahala.

Malakas ang aking pagsanib sa inyong mga pinunong local. Kayo ang haligi ng ating pamahalaan. Nagpapasalamat ako na nakikipagtulungan kayo sa isa't-isa pati na rin sa akin sa pagsisikap na lumikha ng malakas at lumalagong ekonomiya upang makatulong matiyak ang kapayapaan, katiwasayan at katatagan ng ating bansa. Kayo ang nasa bungad ng kaunlaran, kapayapaan at katatagan, di tulad ng ilang gusto pa ring manggulo sa ating bansa.

Salamat at kasangga ko kayo kontra sa mga ilang nakakapit pa rin sa pulitika ng kaguluhan. At salamat at kabalikat ko kayo sa reporma at pag-angat ng ekonomiya. Salamat sa inyong panawagan na tigilin na ang tagisan sa pulitika at ituloy ang bansa sa landas ng higit pang trabaho, kapital, kapayapaan at seguridad.

Salamat at magkabalikat ang lahat ng panig ng ULAP. Sama-sama nating ihahatid ang sambayanan, hindi paurong gaya nang gusto ng ilan, kundi pasulong gaya ng inyong mga resolusyon. Salamat sa tulong ninyo sa ating pinagsisikapang masiguro ang katatagan ng pulitika at ekonomiya.

This is a great time for the regular election of our officers of ULAP or the election of our regular officers of ULAP, the unified ULAP. This is a crucial time for our local government executives to be united.

The U.S financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated. But the Philippines is in relatively good shape — thanks to the fiscal reforms that ULAP supported that manifested in 7 percent plus GDP growth last year.

We have thus far been able to withstand the full force of the global contagion. We had mentioned earlier of the meltdown in Iceland. Imagine, a developed country declaring itself bankrupt, but we have been able to withstand that because with your support we took decisive action a few years ago to fundamentally alter our economic fortunes. When some governments were cutting taxes, we raised them. But we couldn't do that without your support. When some governments were deregulating, we were bringing more discipline and order to our financial regulatory environment. When some governments were going deeper into debt, we were fiscally prudent, building up our reserves and investing in our infrastructure and also giving out the IRA in full. And even paying the debts of previous administrations to you. (Applause)

These were not easy decisions and I paid a steep political price in terms of popularity. But I could still do it because you were there for me through thick and thin. Maraming salamat. (Applause)

You recognized that what we did was what needed to be done. And now these actions have allowed us to build a stronger economic foundation which is serving us well during this time.

The potential exposure of our banks to the asset deflation triggered by the U.S. financial crisis accounts only for one-third of one percent of total system assets. This exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators.

In fact, Standard & Poor's has said in a now quite well quoted statement and I quote: "Yes, the Philippines is 'lucky' because they have made the necessary adjustments and reforms when times were still good. So, they are facing the global market problems and economic slowdown from a considerably improved position, compared to what they were in 3 to 4 years ago." And Standard & Poor's continues and I quote again: "The Philippines is an 'island of calm' currently while there is turmoil in the highly rated and previously stable countries such as Malaysia, Thailand, India, etc."

Against this background anyway, I directed our economic managers — when this is one of the recommendations I should acknowledge of Governor Ben Evardone who is our LGU adviser for public affairs — I directed our economic managers to draw up a contingency plan on the impact to respond to the impact of a possible U.S. economic recession on the ordinary people of the Philippines.

In yesterday's Cabinet meeting, the economic managers and DOLE came up with these contingency plans. The plans include strategies — well, they'll be presented in greater detail maybe in the Philippine Business Forum on the 22nd of October — but in general may I say the plans include strategies to pump prime growth, to upgrade the country's infrastructure, to protect labor, and to expand social services.

Now let me talk about the infrastructure spending, the accelerated infrastructure spending provided for in that contingency plan. It includes greater participation by the GFIs, GOCCs, the private sector and the LGUs in infrastructure projects. Our economic managers have come up with a Comprehensive and Integrated Infrastructure Program. This is an expanded version of the infrastructure portion of the Medium-Term Public Investment Program. The financing scheme comes from public and private sector sources: ODA loans, the GAA, the public-private partnership or joint venture, corporate funds, proceeds accruing from those mandated by law like EPIRA and NG-LGU cost-sharing.

Thus, our contingency measures involved you the LGUs. Kaya yung sinabi ni Benhur kanina, yung resolution ninyo tungkol sa census... Nonoy Andaya is still abroad, on the way back from the IMF World Bank meeting in Washington. And I understand the IMF also had very good words for our, you know, for our being able to weather the global credit crunch relatively well. But he's a lawyer so it's good, I'll take it up in good time and ask him if it can be done.

Samantala, tuloy-tuloy na naibibigay nang buo ang inyong mga IRA. At aasahan nating gagamitin ninyo ito upang maibsan ang kahirapan. At sana, although we will not touch any purely locally government funded project because you have local autonomy, sana yung inyong development fund ay magamit para sa imprastruktura na pinag-uusapan natin — yung NG-LGU partnership.

Part of the contingency plan is a labor contingency plan and this includes "Expatriate Livelihood Support Fund". Kasi sabi nung isang kilalang OFW, hindi naman, si Jun Palafox 'no? One of the top architects in the world who does a lot of work in Dubai, sabi niya dapat tinatawag na ang ating OFW hindi OFW kung 'di "expats" because the bulk of them are professionals and skilled workers. They shouldn't be called OFW because that gives them a lower salary. But when you call them "expat", psychologically they get a higher salary. So, we have this "Expat Livelihood Support Fund” to serve as buffer fund that Filipino expats that may be displaced by the global economic meltdown, can access. It can serve as a counterpart fund for returning expats’ livelihood progress. The details will be fleshed out by DOLE and will be presented in another event.

The last few weeks have revealed that the world needs more than confidence. Just as we had structural reform when times were better, the world also needs structural reform and global cooperation. That’s why I have called for a meeting of the ASEAN+3 next week when we have our ASEM, the Asia-Europe Meeting in Beijing. It’s a parallel initiative to what the leaders of the G-7 have undertaken.

President Sarkozy, he was able to call that meeting because he is the president of the European Union. Now we are no longer chairman of ASEAN this year, the chairman is Thailand, so I have made a proposal to Thailand to call a parallel meeting in Beijing. Per my instruction also, in Washington last October 11, Secretary Gary Teves, who is there with Nonoy Andaya in the World Bank Meeting, met the ASEAN+3 Finance Ministers and their representatives together with the World Bank, the IMF and the ADB senior officials. And they — this is a very important result — they reached an understanding to establish a standby facility to assist ASEAN countries who have severe liquidity problems — thank God we’re not of them yet. The facility can also be used to purchase what the bankers call toxic assets and recapitalize troubled financial institutions and private companies. The ASEAN+3 members and the multilaterals welcomed our initiative not only in providing access to financing but also more importantly in boosting confidence in the ASEAN economies.

The World Bank and the IMF will draft the implementing mechanism as soon as possible, in consultation with ASEAN Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors.

Immediately thereafter, they will convene another meeting to discuss the guidelines for the facility which we suggested should be quick disbursing with minimal conditionalities. And another very important element here, the World Bank indicated that it could initially commit to 10 billion dollars as its contribution to the standby facility. Hopefully, the IMF, ADB, Japan, China, and the rest of ASEAN will contribute an equivalent or even larger amounts. I’m also calling on the G-7 countries when we meet together with them in Beijing next week to consider the emerging economies in the bold actions and extraordinary measures that they plan to undertake to ease the crisis in the global financial system.

At sa gitna nitong unos sa pandaigdigang ekonomiya, dito naman sa ating bansa ipagpapatuloy natin ang mga programang pinakamabisa sa paglaban sa kahirapan at kagutuman, sapagkat ito rin ang magsisilbing kalasag natin sa pandaigdigang krisis.

So, I thank you again for pointing out in your discussions that political grandstanding as you said in your resolution should take a back seat to the pressing tasks we must carry out in order to reduce the impact of the global credit crunch.

And I thank you once again for leading by example in setting aside political bickering and posturing and uniting to make our country and your jurisdictions move forward.

I’d like to congratulate Mayor Lawrence Cruz and Vice Mayor Henry Lim for the Supreme Court decision on the case that you filed. We respect the position of the Supreme Court on that matter, after all — and I think Lawrence knows this – many times I have publicly announced that no matter what the Supreme Court ultimately decides, the government will not sign the proposed MOA.

And I have also announced many times in public that we have refocused our peace talks from one centered on dialogues whose with rebels to one of authentic dialogues with the communities. And that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration is the context of our engagements with all armed groups.

Our LGUs are the frontlines of the communities. So, I ask our LGEs with jurisdiction over communities covered by the dialogues to help us. I also ask you to help us ensure that no one will take undue advantage of the verdict that would lead to the deterioration of the situation on the ground and that would pull the nation further apart. And as you have united I know you have the capability to help unite our country as a whole.

In the light of everything we need to do, I look to you, our local government executives, to be the frontline examples of good governance, and I look to you to continue to be a bastion of support.

Once again, congratulations to our newly-inducted officers!

At maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Oath Taking of the Union of Local Authorities of the Philippines (ULAP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134929/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=13&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a dinner with the delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a dinner with the delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 15, 2008]

Thank you very much Mr. Ryan.

Dato Timothy, all our guests, ASEAN business leaders, members of governments, ladies and gentlemen.

Welcome to the Philippines! And welcome to the Palace of the people — Malacañang!

Again, everybody says in the beginning that this is a very important time, auspicious time, historic time for this meeting.

Every week brings a new chapter in the financial drama that is gripping the world. Some might say the recent chapters read like a horror novel. Two weeks ago, the U.S. government approved, as we know, an unprecedented bailout worth 700 billion dollars that many thought would calm the waters. Last week, those waters were roiling across the globe as Asian and European markets and governments scrambled to respond in kind.

Today, markets around the world have swung back in a positive direction again. Who knows where they will be next week? One thing is sure: we must not lose sight of the impact on real people who bear the brunt of these market fluctuations. We must not revert to complacency just because the markets swing to the positive.

The last few weeks have revealed that confidence is important, but confidence alone is not enough. We need fundamental structural reform and global cooperation. This is why I have proposed a meeting of ASEAN+3 next week in Beijing on the sidelines of the ASEM, the Asia-Europe Meeting. This meeting should aim at preventing the financial firestorm from engulfing our markets and at putting in place solid stabilization measures.

Along the same line, this past week, I instructed our Finance Secretary Gary Teves to meet with the ASEAN+3 Finance Ministers and their representatives together with the World Bank, IMF and ADB senior officials in Washington, to hammer out a deal to aid our region if it should become necessary. As a result, they reached an understanding to establish a standby facility to assist ASEAN countries who would need to cope with severe liquidity problems.

I keep talking about the subjunctive because we don't have an ASEAN economy in that condition yet, but it's always important to be prepared. The facility can also be used to purchase toxic assets and recapitalize troubled financial institutions and private companies. The World Bank indicated that it can initially commit to 10 billion dollars as its contribution to the facility. Hopefully, the IMF, ADB, Japan and China, and the rest of ASEAN will contribute at least the same. In addition, we should aim for viable binding market monitoring and regulation. How to do that, through what institution, that is something we all have to think about.

I have also called, and I continue to call on the G-7 countries, to include the emerging economies in the bold actions and extraordinary measures that they plan to undertake to ease the global crunch. The emerging countries should not be isolated from the grand plan. The systemic failures that are sweeping the globe from the tropics to the arctic and therefore they should lead to a universal solution, not merely a patchwork of regional remedies.

Now, to talk about the Philippines. The Philippines appears in relatively good shape — thanks to our fiscal reforms that manifested in — as Dato Timothy pointed out, 7 percent plus GDP growth last year. We took decisive action a few years ago to fundamentally alter our economic fortunes. When some governments were cutting taxes, we raised them. When some governments were deregulating, we were bringing more discipline and order to our financial regulatory environment. When some governments were going deeper into debt, we were fiscally prudent, building up our reserves, investing in our infrastructure, and yet paying our debts.

These were not easy decisions. But they built for us a stronger economic foundation.

To quote Standard and Poor's, and I quote: "Yes, the Philippines is 'lucky' because they have made the necessary adjustments and reforms when times were still good. So they are facing the global market problems and economic slowdown from a considerably improved position compared to what they were in 3 to 4 years ago."

To continue the quote: "The Philippines is an 'island of calm' currently, while there is turmoil in the higher rated and previously stable countries."

Nonetheless, I have directed our economic managers to draw up a contingency plan to cushion the impact of a possible U.S. economic recession on the ordinary Filipinos.

The plan includes strategies to pump-prime growth, to upgrade the country's infrastructure and social services, and to protect labor. But it is imperative that we all find real community in this global credit crunch that we can find common solutions to our shared problems.

The upheaval in the global economy this past year has clearly had a significant and painful impact on the whole world including ASEAN through higher prices of food, fuel and rice. This has led to greater pressures on our peoples, especially the very poor and the working poor.

S&P recently said in a report that the epicenter of the financial crisis that is now taking place is much farther away from our region compared to 1997. Yet Asia is not entirely insulated from developments in advanced financial markets. Growth has eased all around the region. However, our region has thus far proven to be resilient and resourceful in dealing with the latest round of challenges, more so than ever before.

For the Philippines, our macroeconomic fundamentals remain. Inflation has moderated, but we still remain vigilant. Over the past several months in different crunches, our Central Bank where our Secretary of Trade and Industry Peter Favila is our national government representative to the independent Central Bank, the Central Bank raised policy rates a hundred basis points total.

The potential exposure of our banks to the asset deflation triggered by the U.S. financial losses accounts for less than one-third of one percent of total system assets. And this very, very small exposure is fully reserved, our banks are well capitalized, and the innate conservatism of our bankers is matched by the prudential foresight of our regulators.

Nonetheless, in the Philippines as well as in the rest of the world, 2008 is certain to go down in the history books as one that confounded all manner of economic assumptions and expectations. We were all surprised by the heights to which oil and other commodity prices soared earlier this year. The U.S. financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated. In these unsettling times, the best buffer we can have against external vulnerabilities has been and will continue to be our own domestic internal strength. By that, I mean, both within our own respective economies and as an increasingly integrated regional economy.

Building a stronger, healthier economy driven by domestic consumption and investment and relying less on external markets is exactly what our reform agenda and ASEAN's vision and charter are all about. For the Philippines, investors recognize that this is one of the key contributors to our renewed economic strength and stability in recent years.

For the region, it is exactly because of such uncertainties in the world economy that are now taking place that we as a region need to take a bold step forward in creating a self-sufficient, self-reliant region that is insulated from global volatilities.

We as individual economies and as a region need to continue to focus on reining in inflation, increasing targeted investments to our poor, and getting our economic engines moving in a higher gear. We need to work hard to further strengthen our banking systems, to continue to improve our fiscal health, and to encourage investment in our booming industries.

For the Philippines, we will continue on the path of economic reform. Our reforms to date have helped us in this time of global economic upheaval. Without them, we would not be as confident as we are that our economy can withstand these external shocks. By creating a stronger economy, the Philippines will be in a better position to contribute to the development of our region.

However, no matter what actions we take, this is a global problem. We must work together to resolve these issues to see any significant recovery in the global economy.

The global financial and economic system is indeed, as we all know, under deep stress. You might even say, the current system isn't working, or at least it hasn't proved to work yet to adjust to what is happening every day to markets and economies, and more important to people the world over.

The answers to these questions are not evident, as I mentioned earlier, where do you find a mechanism for a binding monitoring and regulating system. And the answers will not come easily, but we can be sure that the events of this year will prompt, perhaps for the first time, a serious and thorough-going reconsideration of the policy alternatives.

Notwithstanding the challenges of the global economy, I remain optimistic about our fortunes here in the Philippines. We are a tough, resilient and hardworking people, as most of you, as Dato Timothy says, most of you who have come in contact with our Filipino expatriates know — we love our nation, we love our friends and neighbors in the world.

This is why I'm truly honored to see so many members of our ASEAN family, especially our future leaders, come together in unity. For being with us tonight, I thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a dinner with the delegates of the 5th ASEAN 100 Leadership Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134921/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=14&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Local Peace and Security Assembly (LPSA) in MIMAROPA Region

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Local Peace and Security Assembly (LPSA) in MIMAROPA Region

[Delivered at the La Filipiniana Hotel, Calapan City, Oriental Mindoro, October 16, 2008]

Maraming salamat Secretary... ay, Secretary... tama Secretary nga siya ng HUDCC pero Vice-President de Castro at anak ng Mindoro Oriental sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin. (Applause) Noli Boy ang tawag sa kanya dito pala.

Maraming salamat din Governor Arnan Panaligan sa iyong welcome remarks. At maraming salamat sa ating dalawang congressman at deputy speaker sa Mindoro Island na narito si Girlie Villarosa, si Rod Valencia, na “RGV” ang tawag dito, at saka si Boy Umali. At salamat din na sa ating mga gobernador si Nene Sato at saka si Bong Carreon sa pagpunta rito sa ating importanteng meeting. Honorable Bishop, thank you for being here, the church is so important to our peace efforts. (Applause) And Mayor, thank you, and the different mayors of the region for being here, siyempre kayo ang nasa frontline ng ating pagsisikap sa kapayapaan. Kasama natin dito hindi lang ang aking mister na hindi usually sumasama sa akin pero gusto niyang makita ang Mindoro Oriental. (Applause) Ang ating mga Cabinet members, ang ating mga matataas na opisyal ng military at saka pulis, at pati matataas na opisyal ng ilang mga importanteng department na may kinalaman lalo na dito sa MIMAROPA.

Kaya ako ay nasisiyahan sa inyo at salamat sa inyong patuloy na suporta sa ating peace process. Kayo ang unang LPSA na nagtatalakay kung papano magagapi ang mga rebeldeng komunista alinsunod sa bagong sukatan ng ating prosesong kapayapaan. So, paumanhin at itong ating bagong proseso ay isasummarize ko sa Inges kasi siguro it's about the first time we talk about this in greater length.

The new premise of our peace efforts focuses our peace process not on negotiating with armed groups only but more importantly on authentic dialogues with the people in the communities. At maganda na yung inyong resolution ay kasama doon sa mga pag-uusap sa mga stakeholders.

These dialogues with the communities will be centered on ending all forms of armed rebellion in the country. By talking directly with the people, we hope to generate a national consensus against armed struggle as a means of achieving political and social change.

Ang ating pangkabuuang pag-uusap naman sa mga armadong grupo ay DDR or Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration. Ito ang ating framework ngayon sa ating pakikipagharap sa mga alinmang armadong grupo sa mga peace talks. DDR, as espoused by the communities, should be a notice to armed groups that the communities reject armed struggle; it should be a way of showing that the force of arms does not entitle them to represent our people.

Through these engagements, we hope that our people will make all armed groups accountable to them and to the government for all their actions. So, eto ang ating mga layunin sa ating mga pag-uusap na pangkapayapaan ngayon sa mga komunidad mismo.

Ang kapayapaan ay katuwang ng kaunlaran. At gaya nang sabi ni Arnan sa kanyang diskurso napakaimportante ang pag-uusap ng kaunlaran gawa ng sitwasyon sa buong mundo ngayon.

There is, as Arnan says, a global economic crisis that is responsible for driving up the prices of food, fuel and rice in the Philippines and around the world. We are not in crisis here at home, but we are facing strong challenges. During these troubled times, papel ng pamahalaan to help insulate the Filipino people from these price shocks and economic pressures.

Ang inyong pamahalaan ay ginagawa ang lahat sa kapangyarihan para maglagay ng pagkain sa bawat mesa at proteksyunan ang inyong mga kinikita mula sa matataas na presyo at mataas na inflation. At malaki ang pagpapasalamat ng buong bansang Pilipinas sa Mindoro Island dahil kayo ay nagtatanim ng palay at nagpapakain sa Pilipinas. (Applause) We are also continuing to invest in the nation's system of healthcare, education and social services.

Sa harap ng krisis sa Amerika, the Philippines appears in relatively good shape. Thanks to the fiscal reforms that our congressmen enacted that manifested in 7 plus percent GDP growth last year. Were it not for the painful reforms of the past seven years, the impact of the global crisis would have been much worse as it is in fact in other developing countries. Instead, as the credit rating agency Standard & Poor's says, "The Philippine economy is a relative 'island of calm' in a very stormy sea of global uncertainty." (Applause)

But this relative strength and resilience of our people on our economy, ito ay hindi pa rin konsuelo sa mga Pilipino na nagbabayad ng mas mataas na presyo para sa mga batayang mga bilihin. At we are aware of the pressures that you face mula sa matataas na presyo at matataas na inflation. At alam natin na nag-aabala kayo sa katiyakan ng trabaho at kung ano ang mabibili ng inyong kinikita. We are also concerned with that kaya nagsisikap tayo, nagtatrabaho ng masipag para manatiling bumaba ang presyo ng bigas, pagkain at gasolina at diesel, at upang dumami ang bilang ng mga trabaho at mga pamumuhunan na tutuloy na maglikha ng oportunidad sa trabaho para mas marami, mas nahihigit sa ating mga kababayan lalo na dito sa MIMAROPA. At congratulations for being the fastest growing economy of 2007! (Applause)

The government has made sure that we now have a solid supply of rice for the foreseeable future. At siyempre nagpapasalamat muli sa Mindoro Island, and I hope that distribution of rice is working. I hope that people are getting the rice that they need. One reason why I go to the provinces is I want to hear if it is not so.

And our farmers are getting the investments they need. Maganda yung isa sa inyong mga resolusyon, and may I say that your resolutions are very well taken. I could say that almost all of them can be adopted immediately; some will be discussed with appropriate departments. Pero yung isang resolusyon ninyo tungkol sa sana ma-repair ang mga irrigation facilities — iyan ay pwede kong i-commit sa inyo. (Applause)

At dahil kayo... kasi kinekwento ni Noli na okay pa rin sa Mindoro Oriental, I believe your rice production is up. Pero doon daw sa Mindoro Occidental ay lumilipat sa mais. Eh hindi naman natin pwedeng pilitin ang magsasaka na manatili sa bigas kung mas mataas ang kita niya sa mais. Kaya ang magagawa lang natin ay magdagdag pa ng lupain pwedeng taniman. At ang paraan doon ay yung mga matatagal nang natayo na irrigation facilities na — in fact, this is true of the whole country — yung mga tinayo ng previous... yung mga unang panahon never, never ni-repair. Sa panahon lang ng ating administrasyon rinerepair at andaming nadadagdag na lupa para doon. (Applause)

At salamat nga dahil sa magandang ani ng Mindoro Oriental, na major rice-producing province, inflation has started to come down. Salamat sa inyo. The price of rice has started to come down from the heights they had last summer. And thanks to other conditions in the world the price of fuel has also started to come down. At kung bumababa ang presyo ng bigas at bumababa ang presyo ng krudo, we expect the earning power of your salaries or your income from business to increase.

Our economic team is working to rein in inflation, to monitor prices and to put price gougers out of business. Si Artie Yap wala dito ngayon dahil marami siyang ginagawa para sa katiyakan ng bigas at pagkain. Kausap ko lang siya kanina at pina-follow up ko sa kanya, "O, Artie yung mga nahuli natin nung araw na nagsasamantala sa presyo ng bigas." So, magbibigay siya ng report kung ilan na yung na-cancel na lisensya dahil doon para pagdating muli ng next lean months sana may leksyon na yung mga ginawang halimbawa nitong nakaraang lean month.

But we will continue to make spot checks in the markets to make sure that no one is taking advantage of their fellow citizens during this extraordinarily challenging time.

Si Vice-President Noli de Castro ang ginawa nating chairman or co-chairman sa DTI ng Price Coordinating Council, di ba Noli? At yun ang isang mga ginagawa niya, nagbabantay sa mga presyo ng bilingin doon sa mga palengke.

October na nung minsan lumabas ako ng Malakanyang, dumaan ako doon sa South Super Highway, nakita ko na yung mga Christmas lanterns binebenta na. Naku! We are now coming into the holiday season, we should all count our blessings and we should look to the future with greater hope, confidence and optimism.

Yung... magaling ang ating mga sundalo sa paglaban kontra sa insurgency, at nagpapasalamat tayo doon. (Applause) Magaling din ang ating mga pulis dahil sa ating executive order kabalikat ang pulis at ang mga sundalo sa paglaban sa mga rebelde. At marami pang kailangang gawin para sa kapayapaan. Doon sa resolution ninyo yung mga pagpoproteksyun sa kalikasan, sa mga dagat, eh nung ako ay papunta rito yung isang environmentalist kwinto sa akin may mga nagbabantay ng Apo Reef kung saan kami ni Girlie at saka ni Nene ay nag-diving at nag-snorkeling ng ilang araw nuon, summer, nakita nila may mga barkong parang PSG boat, akala nila nung una PSG boats na binabantayan, I mean, na hinahanda itong pagbisita namin ngayon. Pero sabi nila hindi mukhang PSG boat kasi yung PSG boat dalawang motor lang, ito tatlong motor, so mas advanced. Tapos nung lumalapit sila doon para malaman kung sino yun, aba umalis, pumunta patungong Palawan. At sa pag examine, pag interview sa kanila parang iba ang lengwahe hindi Tagalog. Kaya sabi ko eh yun, halimbawa yun, mabuti nakita ng mga taga Apo Reef, yung mga nagbabantay ng Apo Reef. Dapat ngayon hanapin sila, kung pumunta patungo sa Palawan hanapin sila. Eh akala ko muna baka Abu Sayyaf, pero hindi ano eh hindi Tagalog ang salita eh, so baka dayuhan. Naman maging Abu Sayyaf sila o dayuhan silang poacher kailangan habulin sila at hulihin. So, yun ang isang kailangang gawin para sa kapayapaan.

Pero the fact na yung nagbabantay ng Apo Reef nakita sila, linalapitan sila, tumakbo sila, tuloy maganda ang pagbabantay at magpasalamat tayo sa lahat ng mga 'Bantay Dagat,' all the forces — government, civilian, military, non-government — na nagbabantay sa mga dagat ng MIMAROPA. Maraming salamat sa lahat. (Applause)

Yung amnesty, salamat uli sa mga congressmen at deputy speaker na napasa na sa House of Representatives. Yes, (applause) kulang na lamang sa Senado. Kaya sana etong resolution ay ipapadala ng ating secretariat doon sa Senado para malaman nila na ang taong bayan ng MIMAROPA ay gustong pumasa na yung amnesty para mas maraming magbalik-loob na ating mga nanduon sa labas.

Our people must come together this holiday season to celebrate faith and families. Our communities must pull together and set aside personal feuds, political differences, and focus instead on what positive things we can do to improve our lives.

I am optimistic about our future and the hope, optimism and resilience of the Filipino people. I am optimistic about MIMAROPA's growth prospects. I remember there was a time — kasi hindi ba ako yung gumawa ng MIMAROPA — nung araw kasama kayo sa Region IV kaya lang tuwing nagkakaroon ng RDC meeting parating tungkol doon sa mga CALABARZON ang pinag-uusapan. So, nag-decide ako ihiwalay na lang yung MIMAROPA para may sariling mga patakaran, kasi iba naman ang patakaran para sa mga industrialized areas, iba naman ang patakaran sa MIMAROPA na mas mahirap. But there was a time I was regretting what I did, kasi parang nakikita ko eh you're only trading... because, because you have different regional directors and different planning, para you're ending up just interacting with one another, baka naman you're just reinforcing each others' poverty rather than being able to benefit from the wealth that is in Region IV-A. Pero the fact that you're the fastest growing region hindi pala nagkamali yung inyong panukala magkaron ng sarili. (Applause)

And what the MIMAROPA Regional Director should do as the representative to the government here is to be vigilant in bringing government services to the people. Isang problema ng MIMAROPA ay kalat-kalat yung mga regional offices, meron pang nandoon pa sa Maynila kaya meron tayong bagong secretary or Presidential Adviser for New Government Centers, yun dati kong kasama sa Department of Trade and Industry, si Vic Domingo at talagang marami na siyang, I mean, he's right now on vacation leave bago siya pumasok sa kanyang trabaho pero nakipag-usap na siya sa mga kinauukulan. And I think he's already had his dialogue with you para nga mapabilis yung paglipat talaga ng Regional Center dito sa Calapan na pinili bilang kapitolyo ng MIMAROPA Region.

It is important that your government works for you; it's important that you can expect the government to deliver the services you deserve. Kaya kailangan nandito silang malapit. At higit na kailangan ngayon itong ginagawa nating LPSA, higit na kailangan ngayon ang seguridad at kapayapaan. But, as I said, under the leadership of my former PSG head, who was with me in Malacañang and as Vice-President for eight years, si Del Bangit, pati na rin our commander of the Western Command, I am optimistic about peace and security in MIMAROPA. Pati si Louie nga inaanak ko, hindi ba sa anibersaryo. So, I'm very optimistic because these are handpicked officers to help bring about peace and security in the region. So, let's all work together because we know that peace is a very, very meaningful and real prospect. I would even say it's here already in Mindoro except for a few of the influenced barangays, but in the whole MIMAROPA, it's already here.

Let's use this peace that we are enjoying to bring economic opportunities and human dignity to every man, woman and child in MIMAROPA. Yung mabilis na pag-iral ng kapayapaan, yung mabilis na pag-angat ng ekonomiya ng MIMAROPA napakalaking puhunan yun para higit na gumanda ang buhay ng bawat mamamayan ng MIMAROPA. Kaya sa inyong lahat, congratulations and good luck and more power in the future!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Local Peace and Security Assembly (LPSA) In MIMAROPA Region. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135024/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1749&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Inauguration of the Building and Studio Facilities of the GMA Network Center Annex

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Inauguration of the Building and Studio Facilities of the GMA Network Center Annex

[Delivered in Jamboree St., Diliman, Quezon City, October 17, 2008]

Thank you.

Thank you very much, Atty. Gozon.

Mrs. Gozon and the other members of the Gozon clan; former Congressman Bebit Duavit and the other members of the Duavit family; Vice-President de Castro and the other officials who are here tonight; Dr. Laya and the other members of the corporate family of GMA; ladies and gentlemen.

First of all, congratulations to GMA — my tokayo — (laughter) in your inauguration of your GMA studios. Well, we saw your leadership in the broadcasting industry in your audio-visual presentation, and indeed your leadership in this industry is a testament to your company's visionary leadership as well as the talent, hard work and dedication of the men and women who make up the Kapuso family. Imagine a one billion-peso expansion without any loans, that's really leadership. (Applause)

From your early years as radio station DZBB in 1950, you have grown into a media giant and diversified into a wide range of related industries, from movie making to post production services to film syndication, music, video recording, and of course, the exciting world of new media.

I understand that GMA Network now owns about 49 TV stations and 24 radio stations nationwide. And as Henry said, you have gone global through your two international channels, GMA Pinoy TV and GMA Live, both of which are available in the United States, Canada, Singapore, Japan, and many other countries.

GMA Network truly has much to be proud of. You inform, update, entertain and educate our people daily. You are with them in their everyday lives — workdays, weekdays and holidays. Your pervasive influence opens windows for them into the lives of their neighbors and the workings of the world, enlisting them as a virtual community in the everyday tasks of building the national community.

Media plays a large role, and you can never repeat this enough, in the public life of our nation. People rely on it for news and understanding. So owners and reporters, like public officials, have a deep obligation to upholding the public good.

As Atty. Gozon said, you did this huge expansion as evidence of your faith in the resiliency of our economy, I'm also counting on the media to sustain our people's hope in their future.

There is a global economic crisis that's responsible for driving up the prices of food, fuel and rice in the Philippines and around the world. Fortunately, we're not in a crisis here at home, but we are facing strong challenges. During these troubled times, it's the role of government to help insulate the Filipino people from these price shocks and economic pressure.

Government is doing everything in its power to put food on the table and to protect the wages of the GMA employees — and I'm glad there'll be more with this expansion — and all other workers from high prices and high inflation. And we are continuing to invest in the nation's system of healthcare, education and social services.

Sa harap ng krisis sa Amerika, the Philippines appears in relatively good shape, thanks to the fiscal reforms that manifested in 7%+ GDP growth last year. Were it not for the painful reforms of the past seven years — and I should thank Bebitson and the members of the family like... of the Kapuso family like Bong Revilla, a son-in-law, and Miriam Defensor-Santiago, without the reforms that they legislated, the impact would be much worse as it is in other developing countries. Instead, as the credit rating agency Standard & Poor's says, "In a very stormy sea of global uncertainty, the Philippine economy is a relative island of calm."

But this relative strength and resilience of our people and our economy is still no consolation to the average Filipino who is paying higher prices for basic commodities. We are aware of the pressures that the average Filipino faces from high prices and high rates of inflation. We know the average Filipino is concerned about job security and the buying power of his or her wages. We are concerned, too. That is why we are working hard to keep down the prices of rice, fuel and food, and to increase the number of jobs and the investments that will continue to generate employment opportunities for more of our people.

That's why, I congratulate GMA Network Studios, not only because of the important role of media but because you will give more jobs and you are investing, and that is what we need. And of course, we must dedicate ourselves to the poor and unfortunate among us. And your tagline "kapuso" signifies your corporate social responsibility as carried out by the GMA Kapuso Foundation through your umbrella programs of health and disaster relief, education, and values formation. These programs provide much-needed succor to our poor and marginalized countrymen.

Napakahalaga ang maging kapuso, ang magbukas-puso sa isa't-isa; magdamayan, magtapatan, at magmalasakit sa kapwa; at hanapin kung saan tayo maaaring magsama-sama't magkaisa. Ito ang dakilang hangaring inaasa natin na patuloy na itaguyod ng GMA Network.

As we start seeing Christmas lanterns for sale in the streets and move into the holiday season, we should all count our blessings and look to the future with greater hope, confidence and optimism. Our people must come together this holiday season to celebrate faith and families. Our communities must pull together and set aside personal feuds and political differences and focus instead on positive things we can all do together to improve our lives.

The challenges of the future are truly enormous. We will need to come together as a people in order to meet them. The need for more information to manage our lives will also continue to grow, as technology brings new and profound changes in the way we live and work. And also in the way that news and entertainment are brought to the listener and the viewer, and that those new ways are exemplified in this new studio.

So, for responding aggressively and confidently to these challenges, as symbolized by the new GMA Network Studios to the GMA Kapuso family, congratulations!

Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Inauguration of the Building and Studio Facilities of the GMA Network Center Annex. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135015/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1743&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a Visit to the 6th Infantry Division and Awarding Ceremony of Soldiers Involved in the Maguindanao Operation against MILF Rogue Leader Kumander Kato

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a Visit to the 6th Infantry Division and Awarding Ceremony of Soldiers Involved in the Maguindanao Operation against MILF Rogue Leader Kumander Kato

[Delivered at the Camp Siongco Grandstand, Awang, Datu Odin Sinsuat, Shariff Kabunsuan, October 18, 2008]

General Yano, Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces and the other officials of the Armed Forces; Secretary of Social Welfare, Secretary Cabral and the other members of the National Government; ARMM Regional Director Zaldy Ampatuan and the other officials of ARMM in the provinces herein; Bishop Bacatorio and our other community leaders; ladies and gentlemen.

Unang-una sa lahat, my salute and congratulations to you, our valiant soldiers! (Applause) The government and the Filipino people appreciate and recognize your sacrifices in the pursuit of justice for the victims of the lawless MILF Groups.

And together, we thank the civic spirited citizens of Mindanao, most especially those from General Santos and Davao, for their generous donations. We also give thanks for the resolutions and manifestos of support from the LGUs, NGOs, PO's and other civic organizations nationwide. These expressions of support, both material and moral, to the Armed Forces is, I'm sure, morale boosting. They indicate the people's faith and support and the unity of the government, the AFP and the peace-loving citizens in bringing peace.

Congratulations to you for succeeding in constricting the movement of the LMGs. Your law enforcement operations prevent them from committing further terrorism.

But even as we pursue these criminals, we remain committed to peace. We must all work to bring peace in Mindanao in a way that is open and transparent and represents the true will of the people.

There is no alternative to peace. So I count on you, our soldiers, to work to isolate the renegades as we listen to the local communities and await responsible elements in the MILF to regain control.

I remind our troops that in the performance of your mandate against the LMGs and other lawless elements, the strictest observance of human rights of the civilians and non-combatants is paramount.

Your operations having characterized by a high moral ground. You have tempered and adjusted your operations to allow our brethren Muslims unimpeded observance of their religious practices, especially during the last Ramadan. It was the LMGs who continued committing atrocities despite Ramadan.

We fully support your sacrifices. Because of your sacrifices, I am optimistic that we will have peace in Mindanao. As I said earlier, war brings no good to anyone. And as I said earlier, it is essential that we bring the violent renegades to justice and receive assurances from responsible MILF leaders that violence will never again mar the peace.

Our gallant soldiers, to boost your morale and the welfare, your welfare and that of your families, you saw some... you read the announcement of some of the support, additional support we are giving you, and let me repeat them.

Issuance of sleeping bags for the more or less 7,000 troops of the 6th ID, including the 102nd Infantry Brigade operating in Sarangani. (Applause) Kasi doon sa mga... pag umaakyat na kayo sa bundok, maginaw sa gabi lalo na palapit na yung panahon ng kalamigan. So kailangan talaga niyo ang sleeping bags.

Cellphone loads worth 300 pesos for each soldier, (applause) para naman ma-contact ninyo ang inyong pamilya paminsan-minsan.

Expedited processing and release of the Special Assistance for the families of our soldiers killed in action and for the wounded with major injuries. And we have set aside funds totaling one million pesos in loans or scholarships for your children who because of your special service in the Mindanao campaign. This is part of our “Pantawid Pag-aral” program. We also have set aside a fund of one million pesos for your parents who are not beneficiaries of SSS, GSIS or Philhealth, as part of our program “Tulong para kay Lolo at Lola.” (Applause)

Many of you are still confined; some of you who went up the stage, so we are upgrading the Camp Siongco Station Hospital to better cater to the medical requirements of our soldiers and your dependents, most especially to our battle casualties. (Applause) These are but a few gestures to let you know that the Filipino people are grateful and I lead the greater Filipino people in saluting each and everyone of you.

Mabuhay! (Applause)

*Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during a Visit to the 6th Infantry Division and Awarding Ceremony of Soldiers Involved in the Maguindanao Operation against MILF Rogue Leader Kumander Kato. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135004/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1736&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 29th Camiguin Lanzones Festival

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 29th Camiguin Lanzones Festival

[Delivered at the Camiguin Tourism Center, Mambajao, Camiguin, October 18, 2008]

Daghan salamat, Secretary Durano, murag idol sa mga teenager diri sa Camiguin, (Applause) sa inyong pagpaila.

Ang atong padre de pamilya, Congressman Loloy Romualdo, salamat sa imong kanunay na suporta kanako sa Camiguin ug sa Kongreso; (Applause) Governor JJ Romualdo ug tanan opisyal sa probinsiya; Mayor Romualdo ug tanan opisyal dinhi sa capital town; ang akong kauban nga dinapit, si Congressman Pancrudo na enjoy sab diri sa inyong fiesta; tanan aton mga kaigsuonan, mga Camiguinon, congratulations sa Lanzones Festival gihapon! (Applause)

Ingon ko gihapon, tungod kay murag ingon ni Secretary Durano, diri la sa inyong fiesta na ang presidente kada tuig naanhi. (Applause) Sa mi-aging tuig, ang Camiguin maoy ika-duhang paborito adtuan dinhi sa Northern Mindanao. Gibantog na ang inyong lugar, mao nga niadtong tuig 2007, hapit duha ka gatos ka porsiyento ang pagdako sa inyong turismo. Congratulations! (Applause)

Ang mga hinungdan kun nganong gusto mobalik-balik dinhi ang mga turista, kauban sa inyong ‘buaan’ nga labing tamis sa tibuok kalibutan, (Applause) mao ang halos walay krimen dinhi, almost zero crime rate ug 100 percent ang crime rate solution, congratulations! (Applause) Ug daghan kaayo ang mga laing-laing nga klase nga tourist spots ug labi na karon agi sa... paagi sa RORO, mas barato na ang makabiyahang dinhi gikan sa laing-laing lugar sa Pilipinas ug siyempre usa ka importante nga rason, the warmth of the people of Camiguin. (Applause)

Kining mga positives gipun-an pa ug quality basic services nga gihatag ug inyong mga lokal nga lider, nga gipangunahan ni Mr. Camiguin mismo, si Congressman Loy Romualdo; (Applause) ug ang iyang anak, si Gov. JJ; ug ang uban pang inyong mga officials. Congratulations kaninyong tanan! (Applause)

Murag ingon ni Congressman, kahibalo kamo nga dunay krisis sa ekonomiya sa tibuok kalibutan nga maoy gapataas sa presyo sa pagkaon, lana ug bugas dinhi sa Pilipinas ug sa ubang parte sa kalibutan. Kita, murag ingon sab ang atong mga opisyal, wala pa’y krisis apan gi-atubang nato ang mga kusog nga hagit. Sa mga panahon sama ni-ini, katungdanan sa gobyerno nga tabangan ang katawhan aron dili kamo malisdan kaayo sa mga epekto sa price shocks ug economic pressures.

Gibuhat sa inyong gobyerno ang tanang mahimo aron dunay kanunay pagkaon sa tanang mesa, ug ingon gyud ni Governor Romualdo ni anhi gyud ug aron hatagan ug proteksiyon ang inyong kita ni-iniing panahon nga mahal ang palaliton ug taas ang inflation. Padayon sab ang atong pagpamuhunan sa aton mga sistema sa maayong panglawas, sa edukasyon ug sa uban pang mga serbisyo sosyal. Ug gi-report ni JJ sab kaganina nga katong aton mga katas ng VAT nakaabot dinhi sa Camiguin.

And so, ang Pilipinas appears in relatively good shape, salamat sa aton mga reporma sa buwis ug pondo sa gobyerno nga gisuportahan ni JJ niadtong congressman pa siya. (Applause) Kining kapag-on nato nakit-an niadtong nabaton nato sa mi-aging tuig na 7%+ nga pagtubo sa GDP. Kauban na ang 200 percent increase sa tourism dinhi sa Camiguin. Kung wala nahiluna kadtong mga mabug-at nga reporma sa milabay nga pito ka tuig, mas kusog pa gyud unta ang bunal kanato ni-ining problema sa kalibutang ekonomiya sama sa gi-antos sa ubang nasod karon. Mi-ingon ang Standard & Poor, usa ka importante nga credit rating agency nga ingon nila, “In a very stormy sea of global economic uncertainty, the Philippine economy is a relative island of calm.” And I must add, because we have islands like Camiguin. (Applause)

Apan bisan pa ug kusgan ang katawhan ug ang ekonomiya ug ang duna kita’y kasarong aron magpahi-ayon sa bisan unsang mahitabo, dili kini makahatag ug kunswelo sa Pilipino nga ordinaryo nga ga-antos sa taas nga presyo sa mga palaliton. Nahibalo sila sa kabug-at nga inyong gipas-an gikan sa taas nga bili sa mga palaliton ug paspas nga pagbukad or inflation. Nahibalo kita sa... nabalaka kamo alang sa inyong mga trabaho ug kung mo-igo pa ang inyong pangabuhi, ang inyong kita. Nabalaka sab ako alang kaninyo. Busa, kusog gyud ang atong paningkamot aron pakubsan ang presyo sa bugas, uban pang pagkaon ug lana aron magpadayon kita sa paggama ug bag-ong trabaho ug aron sab modaghan ang mga mamuhunan nga maoy mohatag ug labaw pang daghang trabaho alang sa atong katawhan.

Ug diri sa Camiguin ang kaugmaun gyud ang turismo. Gisiguro sa gobyerno nga dunay igong bigas alang sa tanan hangtod sa umaabot nga mga bulan. Epektibo murag ang sistema nato sa pag-apod-apod sa bugas. Dunay bugas alang sa katawhan bisan kanusa kamo manginahanglan.

Gibaton sa aton mga mang-uuma ang puhunan nga ginakinahanglan nila ug kauban diri sa inyong lugar. Midako ang aton produksyon sa humay. Salamat sa ginoo ug sa aton mga investments sa agrikultura. Tungod ni-ini, mihinay na ang inflation. Mi-ubos na ang presyo sa bugas ug sa gasolina. Gadahum kita nga modaghan na sab ang inyong mapalit sa inyong kita.

Ang aton economic team galihog aron pahinayon ang inflation, mobantay sa mga presyo and put the price manipulators out of business. Magpadayon kita sa pag-inspeksyon sa mga merkado aron masiguro nga walay manikas sa ilang isip ka-Pilipino sa panahon sa pagkapi-ot sama ni-ini.

Ug karon, naka-celebrate kita sa Lanzones Festival. Unya, hapit na ang Pasko. Samtang nagkaduol ang panahon sa Kapaskuhan, angay kitang malipay sa atong mga dinawat nga mga grasya. We should look to the future with greater hope, confidence and optimism. (Applause) Kinahanglan nga magtipon-tipon ang katawhan sa atong Holiday Season. Diri sa Camiguin nasugdan na ang holiday Season sukad sa Lanzones Festival dayon diretso sa Pasko. Ug kining holiday season, let us celebrate faith and families. Angay nga mangihiusa ang mga komunidad.

Para kanako, sukad pa sa akong una nga pagkandidato sa senador sa 1992, nataw-an ko na ang unity sa Camiguin. Kay ako naka benefit sa inyong unity kay sukad pa sa 1992 dako na ang akong pagdaog dinhi sa Camiguin. Salamat kaninyong tanan. (Applause) Ug murag ingon ko, si Cong ug si Governor, sa congressman pa siya, kanunay ang suporta sa Kongreso kanako. (Applause) Gapasalamat ako sa kanunay ninyong pagduyog kanako. Kung kanunay kitang na naghiusa, magmalampuson ang pag-atubang nato sa bagyo sa ekonomiya sa kalibutan, ug dali ra makadayon ang kusog nga pag-uswag sa Camiguin. Kay dili ko makalimot nga sa dili pa ako presidente ang Camiguin number what? Six sa mga poorest provinces sa atong nasud. Karon, kamo mga middleclass na kay number 36 na, layo na gikan sa ten poorest provinces.

So, maayo ang kinabuhi dinhi sa Camiguin. (Applause) Ug gusto nato na padayon kining inyong pag-uswag, kay kun mauswag ang Camiguin dako sab ang matawang sa kauswagan sa tibuok nasod.

Busa sa kaninyong tanan, congratulations gihapon and more power to the people of Camiguin! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the 29th Camiguin Lanzones Festival. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134951/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1740&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo at the Kongreso ng Tricycle Drivers Associations

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
At the Kongreso ng Tricycle Drivers Associations

[Delivered at the Mall of Asia, October 20, 2008]

Nagagalak ako na makasama kayo muli.

Ang tricycle ang paboritong pampasaherong sasakyan sa maraming probinsiya, pati na rin dito sa Kamaynilaan, lalo na sa mga lugar na hindi abot ng rota ng jeep at bus at sa makikipot ang kalsada.

Nuong minsan tayong magsama, naikwento ko nuon ang aking karanasan, noong Senador pa ako at napilitang mag-emergency landing sa Romblon ang sakay kong eroplano. Sa tricycle ako sumakay mula sa airport para pumunta sa bahay ng mayor. Kaya naiintindihan ko ang inyong halaga.

Nitong huling Kongreso n'yo na sinalihan ko, nabanggit ko na dapat magtulong-tulong ang lahat upang labanan ang kahirapan sa ating bayan, at upang i-angat ang kabuhatan ng karamihan. Pinag-usapan natin kung papaano natin palalakihin ang inyong kinikita bilang tricycle drivers at operators, kung maaalala ninyo.

Marami na rin ang nangyari mula noon. Ang ilang mga drayber sa inyo ay nagsumikap ng husto at nakapagpundar ng kanilang sariling tricycle. May iba naman na nakapag-ipon at nakapagtayo ng munting negosyo, at ang iba naman ay nakapagpaaral ng mga anak.

Ngayon, iba naman klaseng hamon ang kaharap natin. There is a global economic crisis that is responsible sa pagtaas ng presyo ng langis at bigas sa pandaigdigan. We are not in a crisis here at home, but we are facing strong challenges. During these troubled times, tungkulin ng pamahalaan na pagaanin ang pabigat sa taong bayang Pilipino na dala nitong mga biglang pagtaas ng presyo at mga pahirap ng pangmundong ekonomiya.

Ginagawa ng inyong pamahalaan ang lahat sa abot ng kakayahan upang makapaghain ng pagkain sa bawat mesa, at upang mabigyan ng proteksyon ang inyong kinikita laban sa matataas na presyo at mataas na inflation. Patuloy ring pinalalakas ng pamahalaan ang sistema ng serbisyong pangkalusugan, edukasyon at social services.

Kasama sa serbisyong pangkalusugan, bibigyan ang isang libo ninyong drayber, operator at pamilya ng PhilHealth Cards.

Sa edukasyon, bibigyan kayo ng mga scholarship sa technical at vocational training na tinatawag TEKBOOK. Matutulungan kayong magkaroon ng kasanayang magagamit sa hanapbuhay, tulad ng pag-aayos ng buhok, pagmamaneicure at pedicure, pagmemekaniko at pagmasahe. Ang kabuuang halaga nitong mga scholarships para sa inyo ay P2 milyon.

Para naman sa inyong may mga anak sa kolehiyo, inatasan ko na ang DOE na makipag-ugnayan sa mga kinauukulang ahensiya nang maturuan kayo kung papaano magkaroon ng scholarship or pautang sa pag-aaral ng inyong mga anak. Inatasan ko rin ang DOE na makipag-ugnayan sa kinauukulang ahensiya kung papaano kayo matutulungan mabigyan ng diskwento sa drug-testing fee.

Kumpara sa iba, medyo magaan ang sitwasyon ng Pilipinas, thanks to our fiscal reforms that manifested in 7%+ GDP growth last year. Were it not for the painful reforms of the past seven years, the impact would be much worse as it is in other developing countries. Instead, ayon sa mga dalubhasang ekonomista, in a very stormy sea of global economic uncertainty, the Philippine economy is a relative island of calm.

Nagpapasalamat tayo sa Shell na nagtayo ng kanilang programang Pepeng Pasada Club. Ang mga nagta-tricycle na miyembro ay bibigyan ng diskwento na isang piso bawat litro para sa regular Mogas at iba pang uri ng gasolinang ginagamit ninyo, dalawang piso para sa gasolinang 2T, at limang piso bawat litro para sa Advance na ginagamit ng mga scooter. Salamat, Ginoong Ed Chua.

Tinatapos naman ng DOE ang mga detalye ng programang Palit Makina, upang mapautangan ang mga drayber at operator ng jeep ng pamalit-makina sa LPG na mas mura kaysa sa gasolina. Habang tinatapos ang mga plano para sa jeep, sinisimulan din ng DOE ang pakikipag-usap sa mga ahensiya para malaman kung ano dapat ang mga patakaran sa conversion ng mga makina ng tricycle, at nang makagamit din kayo rito ng LPG at iba pang alternative fuels. Kailangan ng masinsinang usapan upang masigurong maayos ang pagkabit ng tangke ng LPG at matiyak ang kaligtasan ng pasahero at drayber.

Ibababa ng LTO P 40.00 ang bayad para sa emission testing.

May moratorium sa MMDA Ordinance No. 6 nila, kaya pinayagan kayong tumawid ng EDSA. Nakita naman ninyo na todo-suporta sa inyong kongreso. Dinig ko, mayroon pang motorcycle escort sa mga tricycle na pumunta rito mula pa sa Quezon City, Pasay, at iba pang malalayong siyudad ng Metro Manila.

At magbibigay tayo sa TODA ng isang milyong piso bilang pambayad sa bigas.

Sa araw na ito, TODA-BIGAY tayo, tulad ng isinasaad ng inyong tema, sapagkat kayo rin ay toda-bigay sa pagsulong ng ekonomiya. Mabuhay at salamat!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech: Kongreso ng Tricycle Drivers Associations. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134916/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1731&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Closing Ceremony of the 34th Philippine Business Conference and ExpositionSpeech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Closing Ceremony of the 34th Philippine Business Conference and Exposition

[Delivered at the Fiesta Pavilion, Manila Hotel, October 22, 2008]

Thank you.

Thank you Mike for your introduction. And I'd like to thank you and your fellow hosts — Don Emilio Yap and Jimmy — Laya for being such gracious hosts to this event.

Secretary Favila and the other officials of the Philippine government who are here today; Freddie Yao, chairman of the conference; President Lacson; the other officials of PCCI; Francis Chua, who was last year's chairman who led the awardees, and the other very well-deserving awardees, star-studded awardees that we have today; officers and members of the Chamber; movers and shakers of Philippine Business and Industry; ladies and gentlemen.

Every week brings a new chapter in the financial drama that is gripping the world. Three weeks ago, the U.S. government approved an unprecedented bailout that many thought would calm the waters. Last week, those waters were roiling across the globe as Asian and European markets and governments scrambled to respond in kind. Then markets around the world swung back again in a positive direction again.

Who knows where they will be for the rest of this week and next week. One thing is sure: we must not lose sight of the impact on the ordinary Filipino who bears the brunt of these market fluctuations. The global economic crisis as you businessmen and women all know is responsible for driving up the prices of food, fuel and rice in the Philippines and around the world. During these times, it is the role of government to help insulate the citizens from price shocks and economic pressures.

Therefore, today, let me present a proposed contingency plan to cushion the impact on the average Filipino of a possible recession of the U.S. economy. We hope that recession will not happen. But if the worst comes to pass, what happens?

First, the Philippine economy has certain shock absorbers. We have a solid banking system. A global slowdown will result in lower oil prices. The projected expatriate inflows was 10 percent growth; actual growth so far is 18 percent. Even if the U.S. economy sank, expatriates there are in sectors less sensitive to recession, i.e. teachers, nurses, IT-related workers, caregivers.

The Arab engine is up due to the past five years of costly oil. This has led to construction booms in the Middle East and a surge in remittances. In addition, the fact that the Philippines has a Mindanao close to the hearts of the Middle East, opens up opportunities not only for Mindanao but for the entire country.

The slowdown in merchandise exports is countered by strong growth in service exports, especially the BPO sector, and it's so fitting and timely that we've given an award to Andrew Tan, the first landlord of all these BPOs.

The corporate income tax falls from 35 percent to 30 percent in 2009, providing relief to your firms.

The programmed NG deficit for the year is 75 billion pesos, one-half of one percent of GDP, right Peter? So far, as of the end of September 2008, it is P53.4 billion which we can extrapolate to P71.2 by the end of the year, and privatizing Petron will provide additional headroom of P25.7 billion.

Our Dubai oil assumption was a 115-125 dollars per barrel. The average so far is only 107 dollars. Inflation is at the lower end of the forecast band.

Nonetheless, in order to pump-prime growth, we present some of our key strategies.

The government shall continue its support for agriculture via the FIELDS program. Our farmers will be getting the investments they need. Last year, NFA procured from our farmers less than 100,000 metric tons. Starting this season, NFA will procure one million metric tons from our farmers (applause). So, that is compared to less than 100,000 last year.

We will give renewed emphasis to housing.

We will market Philippine BPO as the cost-cutting solution for U.S. firms.

In the meanwhile, you also have a role to do — we encourage our exporting firms to diversify, innovate and technologically upgrade.

We will provide more lending support for the SMEs.

We will expand our trade, investment and tourism with our giant neighbor, China.

We will attract more investments from the Arab nations awash with oil revenues.

And to pump-prime more next year, to do all these things, we will improve our revenue capacity.

On infrastructure, we will improve the absorptive capacity of government agencies. So, we direct the infra agencies to prepare their engineering plans now for the projects in the proposed 2009 budget which we hope will be passed in time. We will promote greater participation by GFIs, GOCCs, LGUs and the private sector — you the private sector — in our infrastructure projects.

That is why to upgrade the country's infrastructure; we have now the Comprehensive Integrated Investment Program (CIIP) which is an expanded infrastructure portion of the Medium-Term Public Investment Program. As differentiated from the MTPIP, the CIIP contains projects funded by both public and private sector sources, such as ODA loans, GAA, NG-LGU cost-sharing, Private-Public Partnership and Joint Venture, corporate funds, and proceeds accruing from those mandated by law while excluding purely LGU funds.

Under the 2008-2010 CIIP, the transport sector has the highest investment share at 38 percent or 755 billion pesos out of the two trillion pesos total investment requirement that we would want to put up in case of a recession in the U.S. economy.

And Roads and Bridge projects are being pursued in support of the Government's thrust of linking the entire country through an effective transport network that would open up new economic opportunities, reduce logistics costs, and increase access to social services. Roads are being linked, as you know, with the Roll-on Roll-off or RORO projects.

But given the huge investment associated with transport projects, 755 billion pesos, the government will increasingly tap the private sector in the development of priority projects under the BOT law. Projects like the Tarlac-Pangasinan-La Union Toll Expressway, C-6, Manila-Cavite Coastal Road, the North Metro Manila Skyway, Southern Luzon Expressway (SLEX), Southern Luzon Arterial Road (STAR) — these are underlined in the slide — among others are proposed for private sector financing.

But if the U.S. recession happens, we would need more private financing and BOT so that we can realign some of our infrastructure money to strengthen programs that promote human capital formation. The Pantawid Pamilya Program of conditional cash transfers, measures to optimize market opportunities from JPEPA, scholarships, palay procurement and Philhealth. That is why I welcome the proposal that was given to me on the platform today by Donald, while Ed was making his speech, that perhaps we shall have a 100 billion-peso fund, private-public, 50 billion from the GFIs and 50 billion from the private banks and financial institutions.

We have Peter Favila here, head of NDC. Rey David of DBP has already said yes to Donald. Donald is a member of the Board of SSS and we hope the private banking sector will join in this. And that way, we can put our money in human capital formation which will provide direct income and services to the poor during the coming period.

We will strengthen financial sector supervision. We have asked Congressman Joseph Violago to file a bill to increase deposit insurance from 250,000 pesos to one million pesos (applause).

We now look at how we can safeguard our workers amidst the global storm. As a starting point, the DOLE Philippine Overseas Labor Office reports that so far, there has been no displacement of expatriates related to the financial crisis; The employment of the two million expats in the Middle East remains secure; The employment of 500,000 expats in Europe is also secure and stable so far.

And aside from the booming Middle East market, overseas employment opportunities are emerging in other expatriate markets: Canada, 30,000 in the next 2 years; Australia, another 30,000; New Zealand, 10,000 in the next 2 years; and Guam, 20,000 starting 2010 when the base in Okinawa begins to move to Guam.

Nonetheless, what is our contingency agenda for expatriates?

- 24/7 heightened monitoring of overseas labor-market displacements;
- Monitoring of job orders for any decrease in overseas labor demand;
- We will register our workers so we can get track of them;
- And we will redeploy them to emerging labor markets;
- We continue to identify and develop new market niches;
- And we assist in repatriation.

For returning expatriates, should there be, we will have:

- Constant monitoring of job orders of foreign principals;
- We will have an expanded livelihood and business formation program, with a 250 million livelihood fund through NLSF and the Reintegration Center which has business counseling;
- And we will strengthen the reintegration services;
- We are also, as I said, registering workers who will be displaced.

So, we will need, if there should be a recession in the U.S., a massive skills upgrading and retooling service. And we will continue to facilitate the mobilization of expatriates. But all of these need strengthened partnership with you — the private sector.

Your theme says, “One Global Filipino” — which has been your theme. In addition you say, sustaining growth — and that’s a challenge. But I’m glad you’re going beyond the challenge, sustaining growth and surging ahead, for indeed, for the fiscally strong, the global credit crunch can be an opportunity rather than a crisis. On the part of countries, to the likes of the oil-producing countries, for instance, and other fiscally strong economies, this is the time to fill the financial vacuum.

Similarly, in the private sector — your world — this is the time for the business groups to take advantage of the strength and financial liquidity of our banking system to expand your role in your respective markets. Equally important to financial strength is the ability to decide and move quickly — the road between a decision to invest and the actual writing of the check is fraught with uncertainty.

On the part of countries — the Middle East powers — are the bastions of wealth with both financial capacity and decisiveness. They have oil and they have governments with unified commands.

On the part of business, therefore, I call on you to also decide, be decisive and avail — or not just avail — seize the opportunities provided by the closeness of the Middle East to Mindanao and to our Filipino workers.

I hope you will send a delegation to our Middle East trip, which we will be doing before Christmas. Because if we're going to be one Filipino — we should work together.

Let us work together to bring economic opportunities and human dignity to our people during this special holiday season and — this special Holiday Season of hope, love and faith — because Christmas is just around the corner. We're already seeing the Christmas lanterns being sold in the streets. So, this early, may I not just congratulate you on this conference, but also wish you a Merry Christmas and a New Year wherein we will continue our growth and surge ahead.

Congratulations and thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Closing Ceremony of the 34th Philippine Business Conference and Exposition. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134900/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1727&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the UN-WTO 6th International Tourism Forum for Parliamentarians and Local Authorities

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the UN-WTO 6th International Tourism Forum for Parliamentarians and Local Authorities

[Delivered in Cebu, October 22, 2008]

Welcome to the Philippines and to the island of Cebu.

We meet in the midst of a global economic crisis that has been responsible for driving up the prices of food, fuel and rice around the world.

Every week brings a new chapter in the financial drama that is gripping the world. Some might say the recent chapters read like a horror novel. Three weeks ago, the US government approved a bailout worth $700 billion that many thought would calm the waters. Last week, those waters were roiling across the globe as Asian and European markets and governments scrambled to respond in kind. Then, markets around the world swung back again in a positive direction.

Who knows where they will be at the end of this week and next week. One thing is sure: we must not lose sight of its impact on the ordinary people who bear the brunt of these fluctuations. We must not revert to complacency just because the markets swing to the positive.

Costly commodity imports like oil and rice should be offset by commodity exports, hard commodities like primary products, and soft ones like leisure, eco, and medical tourism.

After all, in the past, tourism has shown its strong resilience in the face of global problems. The financial crisis in 1997 came and went with barely a dent on the volume of tourist arrivals. Bali and the rest of ASEAN have suffered terrorist attacks, and most of ASEAN has endured the SARS scare, but the numbers of inbound visitors to our region have continued to increase.

Let us therefore look beyond the difficulties posed by the current global economic slowdown. Let us address the major issues which will continue to influence the strategic directions of global tourism. Issues like climate change, the role of women, and the relationship between tourism and poverty alleviation.

On climate change, protecting the environment is one of our top priorities. An example of our efforts to preserve the “Green Philippines” is our support for the Coral Triangle Initiative. This is a program that will seek to protect the rich coral areas which abound in six countries in our region, most especially the Philippines. Preserving the Coral Triangle will maintain our reputation as the best diving destination in the world. It is also part of the responsibility of our six countries to future generations.

On a broader scale, we have also begun the “Green Philippines” plan. This is a blueprint for mapping our environment and economic policies that will allow for sustainable development. Sustainable growth should not fall on the backs of the poor or erode our environment. Yes, there is a price to make the Green Philippines come to life. But the cost is greater without the investment in our people and our environment.

On the role of women, the tourism industry is a major creator of wholesome jobs for women. As theme of last year’s World Tourism Day said, “Tourism Opens Doors to Women.” Indeed, product development like souvenir handicrafts and spa therapy, conservation efforts like mangrove protection and clean-up dives, and marketing and promotion are areas that lend themselves well to gender parity.

On fighting poverty, tourism is a major creator of jobs and livelihood. Throughout Asia, we have models of strategies that have successfully integrated poverty alleviation with the growth of tourism.

For example, we have a community-based tourism initiative in the Philippines, GREET, G-R-E-E-T, or Grassroots Entrepreneurship in Eco-Tourism. With the help of financial and technical grants, GREET has benefited almost 4,000 households in 15 Philippine tourism destinations.

Our concept is based on transforming attitudes, such that individuals who used to unwittingly damage the environment have successfully become the protectors of environmentally fragile sites. Slash and burn farmers have become mountain and forest trail guides for hikers and wilderness trips. Boatmen who used to hunt our whale sharks are now ecoguides for tourist interaction with those beautiful creatures. Alan Amanse, 40-year-old college undergraduate and father of two, was earning P100 a day from driving a tricycle and fishing in our whaleshark sanctuary in Donsol in Central Philippines. Now, as whaleshark-watching officer, he earns P1,000 a day, ten times his former income, and he is building his dream house.

Global economic realities threaten the fight to reduce poverty worldwide. But we must stay hopeful. Let us keep our faith in tourism as a powerful instrument to alleviate poverty. As you discuss how to do it, may every participant enjoy the natural wonders of our country and the natural warmth of our people.

Once again, mabuhay and welcome. Maraming salamat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the UN-WTO 6th International Tourism Forum for Parliamentarians and Local Authorities. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134908/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1721&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Opening Session of the 2nd Global Forum on Migration and Development

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Opening Session of the 2nd Global Forum on Migration and Development

[Delivered at the Plenary Hall, PICC, Pasay City, October 29, 2008]

His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki Moon, thank you for coming to the Philippines and showing how important this Global Forum on Migration and Development is for the United Nations and the peoples of the worlds.

Thank you all for coming together for a cause that is important to my country and to yours, namely, the nexus between migration and development.

This is a cause especially dear to the hearts of millions of Filipinos, here and overseas, who are interconnected through a vast diaspora of expatriate workers.

Migrant workers are honored by the government and the people for their sacrifice and dedication to their work, their family and the nation. We welcome their contribution.

But we long for the day when going abroad for a job is a career option, not the only choice, for a Filipino worker. Our economic plans are designed to allow the Philippines to break out of this cycle. That is why we remain so stubbornly focused on the economy. We need to create and spread the wealth and keep the people working here at home. We are working to create appealing employment opportunities by focusing on the development of certain priority sectors that give high-income jobs, for instance, business process outsourcing which has created about 400,000 jobs in the last seven years.

All in all, we have created almost 7 million jobs in the last 7 years. By continuing down this path, we hope to increasingly be keeping our best and brightest right here in the Philippines, closer to friends and families, helping to build our communities and providing the next generation of leadership.

For the Philippines and for any country, for your countries, people are our biggest national asset at any time in the course of our economic, social and political development. Development cannot occur in the economy without human development, that is, without human beings who are healthy, educated, employed, and able to care for their families.

As both His Excellency Secretary General Bank Ki Moon and Foreign Secretary Romulo have said, today some 200 million people live outside of their nations of birth, many of them working. This number rises every year, keeping pace with the advance of globalization. Indeed, migration is one of the dynamic forces behind the globalization that draws our world ever closer together.

We inhabit a world where people, countries, businesses, cultures and economies are so closely interconnected, that we all catch cold if one of us sneezes hard enough. It is at one of those interconnections — the interface between migration and development, that we confront some of the most serious challenges to us to work together.

As people migrate, they draw more than one country into their lives. Their work, their family, the gains they make from migration, and their need for personal security and well-being become matters of import that cross national boundaries.

These movements occur in all directions, not just south-to-north, but also south-to-south, north-to-north, and in every other conceivable direction. It is this ceaseless and restless movement of people that truly links our respective countries, not just the capital or goods that economists love to build their growth models on. It is people who stimulate the trade, business and economic exchanges that keep the global economy moving along.

But, unfortunately, countries are less equipped often to protect their people abroad in times of trouble than they are, their money or businesses. The global financial crisis currently taking place challenges us again to gather our forces, within government and in partnership with other countries, to better protect our people abroad against financial and economic shocks, and the side effects of such shocks like exploitation, abuse, and other forms of ill treatment.

All eyes may be glued on the stock market, but we must never lose sight of the often unseen impact of the global credit crunch on the long-term needs of the poor, including the migrant poor.

It is the duty of our governments, of the United Nations, and I thank His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki Moon for his attention to the world's poor, especially during this time of the financial crisis. It is the duty of all international organizations and global civil society to gather our collective will, our joint resources, and our common efforts to raise them up.

We can draw encouragement from the fact that governments, the United Nations, international organizations and civil society are now increasingly focused on all aspects of migration.

In the United Nations and throughout the international development community, growing attention is devoted to research, studies, projects and programs on migration and development. And we thank His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki Moon, for recounting some of them. Of course, more remains to be done, but this is a good start. The Philippines stands ready to champion the cause of migrant workers.

We have established what is considered one of the best-regulated expatriate worker programs in the world. On the basis of their contributions and of the nation's humanitarian responsibilities to its people wherever they are, our government works doubly hard to strengthen migrant workers' protection — protection from the depredations of domestic recruiters as well as of overseas employers, agents and officials, and protection from physical harm.

Our comprehensive and multi-dimensional "life-cycle" strategy covers all facets of the overseas employment process, from pre-departure orientation to post-return reintegration and retraining. The effectiveness of this approach in terms of protecting workers has been repeatedly acknowledged by international bodies.

However, the full protection and empowerment of migrants is a task that goes far beyond what individual countries of origin can do on their own.

During our ASEAN chairmanship in 2006, the Philippines led in formulating the ASEAN Declaration on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights of Migrant Workers and commencing the establishment of an implementing committee.

We also hosted the International Conference on Gender, Migration and Development in Manila last month. There, the delegates discussed the gender dimension of the social costs and benefits of migration, the upholding of the rights of women migrant workers, and seizing opportunities for enhanced gender equality and benefits of migration for women and their families.

And now, we are honored to be the first developing nation and the first Asian country to host the GFMD.

For the Philippines, which is at the forefront of the global migration issue, hosting this meeting represents a high point in our efforts to assist migrants through intensified global dialogue and networks for consultation and cooperation.

It is good that the leaders of the nations of migrant origin and those nations hosting migrant have come together in our Global Forum to seek common ground on ways to coordinate assistance to our economies and protection to our workers. We must do so in a way that puts the interests of the poor and dispossessed ahead of the rich and powerful. We must do this in a way that offers a global solution to a global challenge. Indeed, we call for fundamental global reform. And to that end, we look upon the United Nations for leadership. And may I say, we are grateful we are getting that leadership in the person of Secretary General Ban Ki Moon.

We urge all countries, which have not yet done so, to ratify the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families.

We are having this global forum. Meanwhile, as we campaign for that, we are having this global forum because coordinated action among nations is the better path than going it alone.

It is essential that the major economies of the world along with strong representation from emerging economies, who are the source of migrant workers be part of the global consultations to resolve challenges in the global financial system and its impact on migrant workers.

And as Secretary General said, whether there's a financial crisis or not, instead of viewing migrants as depersonalized movable components of globalization, or worse, as inconvenient necessities, we must embrace them as human beings who contribute to our essential well-being in this age of vast movement and change. We must prepare them for and make them full partners in our world of developmental, demographic and democratic transformation.

This must be our commitment in the Global Forum for Migration and Development. We must work together for that transformation to a better world by ensuring the globalization is for everyone and not just for the strong and the fittest, by valuing the real contribution of all workers, migrants and non-migrants, a world where we are all equally and without discrimination part of a caring and sharing global community. We must work together to protect our migrant workers in times of financial and economic stress as the world is experiencing now. But as Secretary General said, even if it is not a time of financial stress.

Our Global Forum offers us a community space to explore those challenges together and to find the best policies, the best practices to meet the challenges of migration in mutually beneficial ways.

As Secretary Romulo said, many of your governments support and invest in this practical consultative approach. We are truly grateful for the contributions you have made and your engagement with the practical preparations of this meeting. Without your belief in this Global Forum and in our decision this year to examine the migration-development complex from the human angle, we could never have nurtured this tender process thus far. You have helped the GFMD come of age.

In being here to discuss migration and development, ladies and gentlemen, distinguished delegates, may you get the chance to taste the hospitality that we traditionally extend to friends and family, many of you may have already experienced with our expatriates abroad.

My best wishes to all of you on the proceedings of the Global Forum on Migration and Development!

Maraming salamat.

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches [of] Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during a State Dinner in Honor of U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon and Madame Ban Soon-Taek with Conferment of the Order of Sikatuna, Rank of Raja to U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a State Dinner in Honor of U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon and Madame Ban Soon-Taek with Conferment of the Order of Sikatuna, Rank of Raja to U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 29, 2008]

Your Excellency Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon and Madame Ban Soon-Taek, Vice-President de Castro, Senate President Villar, Deputy Speaker Villarosa, Secretary and Mrs. Romulo, Senator and Mrs. Angara, His Excellency the Papal Nuncio, members of the Secretary-General's delegation, members of the Diplomatic Corps, members of the Cabinet, members of the House of Representatives, members of the private sector, ladies and gentlemen.

Your Excellency, welcome to the Philippines!

We're happy to have you here, not only because you honor us by being able to have the Secretary-General of the United Nations be here in the Philippines, but also because you are an old friend of the Philippines. When you were Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Korea you were already a valuable partner in the development of our country, and now all the more.

Our history of friendship and cooperation motivates us to give you our unstinting support in your work in the United Nations — in your work to institute far-reaching reforms, for instance, in the United Nations and in your work to search for peace and to keep peace all over the world. We are very proud of the signing of the agreement earlier for a standby arrangement for our peacekeeping forces. We are very proud that our peacekeeping forces especially the police force is one of the largest contingents to the U.N. Peacekeeping Operations.

Your Excellency, we also thank you for your support in our efforts to bring peace to Mindanao. It will be recalled that the government canceled the proposed Memorandum of Agreement on Ancestral Domain with the MILF even before the injunction of the Supreme Court. We have embarked, as we've explained to you earlier, on a new paradigm for the peace process focusing on authentic dialogues with the communities. We want to bring peace to Mindanao in a way that is open and transparent and represents the true will of the people.

Our negotiations with the armed groups shall now be within the framework of Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration — a U.N. accepted process for resolving armed conflicts. The number of persons displaced by the attacks of renegade elements of the MILF and the law enforcement operations that followed has now been reduced by half, as has been reported to you earlier.

We thank the U.N. for your assistance which enables us to assist more internally displaced persons inside and outside evacuation centers.

Excellency, your visit is an opportunity to reintegrate our search for a lasting peace in Mindanao. There is no alternative to peace. And as you have been quoted earlier, there is no alternative to dialogue. So, we are working to isolate the renegades. Listen to the local communities. And count on responsible elements in the MILF to regain control.

In continuation of this effort, we will cooperate with the Alliance of Civilizations especially on interfaith dialogue which is also one of your areas of great interest.

Your Excellency, in the midst of the global credit crunch, you have said that, and I quote, “We need to restore order to the international markets.” It is timely that you organized this year’s U.N. agenda around the impact of the global economy on the poor. We congratulate you for your many actions towards this including your comprehensive framework for action on the global food crisis.

The world is fortunate that in Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon, we have a man of stature, vision, energy and leadership, who will be with us as we manage these momentous issues that affect us all.

Your Excellency also said in your recent address at Harvard, your Alma Mater – and we have several Harvard alumni here with us tonight to greet you — you said and I quote, “We need to think more about those people with no street — Wall Street, Main Street — no street; the solutions must be devised for all.”

We share the Secretary-General’s belief that global solidarity is a necessity to achieve the common good.

On this note, ladies and gentlemen, I invite you to rise and join me in a toast to His Excellency Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon and Madame Ban Soon-Taek.

Mabuhay! Madame, Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during a State Dinner in Honor of U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon and Madame Ban Soon-Taek with Conferment of the Order of Sikatuna, Rank of Raja to U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615135133/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1713&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Opening Session of the 2nd Global Forum on Migration and Development

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Opening Session of the 2nd Global Forum on Migration and Development

[Delivered at the Plenary Hall, PICC, Pasay City, October 29, 2008]

Thank you very much, Secretary Romulo.

His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki Moon, thank you for coming to the Philippines and showing how important this Global Forum on Migration and Development is for the United Nations and the peoples of the world; Vice-President de Castro and the other officials of the Philippine government; Excellencies of the Diplomatic Corps, distinguished delegates:

Thank you all for coming together for a cause that is important to my country and to yours, namely, the nexus between migration and development.

This is a cause especially dear to the hearts of millions of Filipinos, here and overseas, who are interconnected through a vast diaspora of expatriate workers.

Migrant workers are honored by the government and the people for their sacrifice and dedication to their work, their family and the nation. We welcome their contribution.

But we long for the day when going abroad for a job is a career option, not the only choice, for a Filipino worker. Our economic plans are designed to allow the Philippines to break out of this cycle. That is why we remain so stubbornly focused on the economy. We need to create and spread the wealth and keep the people working here at home. We are working to create appealing employment opportunities by focusing on the development of certain priority sectors that give high-income jobs, for instance, business process outsourcing which has created about 400,000 jobs in the last seven years.

All in all, we have created almost 7 million jobs in the last 7 years. By continuing down this path, we hope to increasingly be keeping our best and brightest right here in the Philippines, closer to friends and families, helping to build our communities and providing the next generation of leadership.

For the Philippines and for any country, for your countries, people are our biggest national asset at any time in the course of our economic, social and political development. Development cannot occur in the economy without human development — that is, without human beings who are healthy, educated, employed, and able to care for their families.

As both His Excellency Secretary General Bank Ki Moon and Foreign Secretary Romulo have said, today some 200 million people live outside of their nations of birth, many of them working. This number rises every year, keeping pace with the advance of globalization. Indeed, migration is one of the dynamic forces behind the globalization that draws our world ever closer together.

We inhabit a world where people, countries, businesses, cultures and economies are so closely interconnected that we all catch cold if one of us sneezes hard enough. It is at one of those interconnections — the interface between migration and development—that we confront some of the most serious challenges to us to work together.

As people migrate, they draw more than one country into their lives. Their work, their family, the gains they make from migration, and their need for personal security and well-being become matters of import that cross national boundaries.

These movements occur in all directions, not just south-to-north, but also south-to-south, north-to-north, and in every other conceivable direction. It is this ceaseless and restless movement of people that truly links our respective countries, not just the capital or goods that economists love to build their growth models on. It is people who stimulate the trade, business and economic exchanges that keep the global economy moving along.

But, unfortunately, countries are less equipped often to protect their people abroad in times of trouble than they are, their money or businesses. The global financial crisis currently taking place challenges us again to gather our forces, within government and in partnership with other countries, to better protect our people abroad against financial and economic shocks, and the side effects of such shocks — exploitation, abuse, and other forms of ill treatment.

All eyes may be glued on the stock market, but we must never lose sight of the often unseen impact of the global credit crunch on the long-term needs of the poor, including the migrant poor.

It is the duty of our governments, of the United Nations, and I thank His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki Moon for his attention to the world's poor especially during this time of the financial crisis. It is the duty of all international organizations and global civil society to gather our collective will, our joint resources, and our common efforts to raise them up.

We can draw encouragement from the fact that governments, the United Nations, international organizations and civil society are now increasingly focused on all aspects of migration.

In the United Nations and throughout the international development community, growing attention is devoted to research, studies, projects and programs on migration and development. And we thank His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki Moon for recounting some of them. Of course, more remains to be done, but this is a good start. The Philippines stands ready to champion the cause of migrant workers.

We have established what is considered one of the best-regulated expatriate worker programs in the world. On the basis of their contributions and of the nation's humanitarian responsibilities to its people wherever they are, our government works doubly hard to strengthen migrant workers' protection — protection from the depredations of domestic recruiters as well as of overseas employers, agents and officials, and protection from physical harm.

Our comprehensive and multi-dimensional "life-cycle" strategy covers all facets of the overseas employment process, from pre-departure orientation to post-return reintegration and retraining. The effectiveness of this approach in terms of protecting workers has been repeatedly acknowledged by international bodies.

However, the full protection and empowerment of migrants is a task that goes far beyond what individual countries of origin can do on their own.

During our ASEAN chairmanship in 2006, the Philippines led in formulating the ASEAN Declaration on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights of Migrant Workers and commencing the establishment of an implementing committee.

We also hosted the International Conference on Gender, Migration and Development in Manila last month. There, the delegates discussed the gender dimension of the social costs and benefits of migration, the upholding of the rights of women migrant workers, and seizing opportunities for enhanced gender equality and benefits of migration for women and their families.

And now, we are honored to be the first developing nation and the first Asian country to host the GFMD.

For the Philippines, which is at the forefront of the global migration issue, hosting this meeting represents a high point in our efforts to assist migrants through intensified global dialogue and networks for consultation and cooperation.

It is good that the leaders of the nations of migrant origin and those nations hosting migrant have come together in our Global Forum to seek common ground on ways to coordinate assistance to our economies and protection to our workers. We must do so in a way that puts the interests of the poor and dispossessed ahead of the rich and powerful. We must do this in a way that offers a global solution to a global challenge. Indeed, we call for fundamental global reform. And to that end, we look upon the United Nations for leadership. And may I say, we are grateful we are getting that leadership in the person of Secretary General Ban Ki Moon.

We urge all countries, which have not yet done so, to ratify the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families.

We are having this global... (applause) Meanwhile, as we campaign for that, we are having this global forum because coordinated action among nations is the better path than going it alone.

It is essential that the major economies of the world along with strong representation from emerging economies who are the source of migrant workers be part of the global consultations to resolve challenges in the global financial system and its impact on migrant workers.

And as Secretary General said, whether there's a financial crisis or not, instead of viewing migrants as depersonalized movable components of globalization, or worse, as inconvenient necessities, we must embrace them as human beings who contribute to our essential well-being in this age of vast movement and change. We must prepare them for and make them full partners in our world of developmental, demographic and democratic transformation.

This must be our commitment in the Global Forum for Migration and Development. We must work together for that transformation to a better world by ensuring the globalization is for everyone and not just for the strong and the fittest, by valuing the real contribution of all workers, migrants and non-migrants, a world where we're all equally and without discrimination part of a caring and sharing global community. We must work together to protect our migrant workers in times of financial and economic stress as the world is experiencing now. But as Secretary General said, even if it is not a time of financial stress.

Our Global Forum offers us a community space to explore those challenges together and to find the best policies, the best practices to meet the challenges of migration in mutually beneficial ways.

As Secretary Romulo said, many of your governments support and invest in this practical consultative approach. We are truly grateful for the contributions you have made and your engagement with the practical preparations of this meeting. Without your belief in this Global Forum and in our decision this year to examine the migration-development complex from the human angle, we could never have nurtured this tender process thus far. You have helped the GFMD come of age.

In being here to discuss migration and development, ladies and gentlemen, distinguished delegates, may you get the chance to taste the hospitality that we traditionally extend to friends and family, many of you may have already experienced with our expatriates abroad.

My best wishes to all of you on the proceedings of the Global Forum on Migration and Development!

Salamat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Opening Session of the 2nd Global Forum on Migration and Development. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134836/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1716&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2008 Sangguniang Kabataan National Congress

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2008 Sangguniang Kabataan National Congress

[Delivered at Waterfront Cebu City Hotel, Lahug District, Cebu City, Cebu, October 30, 2008]

Thank you so much Jane, for your introduction and thank you so much to all of you—leaders and members of the SK who are here today.

Congratulations on the best attended SK Convention in history! And thank you to all who signed your manifesto of support for our administration.

We have here with us today leading officials of the Philippine government and the Cebu government: we have Secretary Cerge Remonde, who is our Cabinet Officer for Regional Development of Region VII; we have one you can identify with, very young acting mayor of Cebu City, Mike Rama; we have Raul del Mar, who is the host congressman of this district where you're having your convention; and we have Secretary Gabby Claudio, my adviser for Political Affairs, the SK relations are part of his jurisdiction; and we have our NYC Chairman Richard Nalupta, himself an SK alumnus.

And we should have a special welcome for the biggest delegation, the delegation of Pangasinan. And a special congratulations for all those who organized this event because Jane said that you did not get a professional event organizer. This event was organized by youth leaders from different parts of the country, congratulations!

Indeed, the way you have organized this event reflects your choice of the conference theme: "Transform Leadership, Transpire Action, Transcend Competence." And indeed, times call for strong decisive leadership.

We have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with high oil and food prices. We have succeeded in ensuring that our country's food supplies remain stable and we put food on the table for every Filipino.

In terms of oil, the high price of gasoline and everyday commodities hits our poor the hardest. While the price of oil is a global issue and outside the control of government—when oil was going high up in the world market in price, we introduced measures to lift the burden off our people. Several months ago, we cut the tariff from three percent to two percent when the crude price went to 86 dollars, to one percent when it went down to 92 dollars, and to zero percent when it went up to 104 dollars. We have also been providing targeted cash payments to the poorest of the poor to help them cope with their electric bills.

Now that the price of oil is going down in the world market, on my way here upon landing, I talked to Secretary Angie Reyes of Energy, who just arrived from a conference abroad. I said, Angie, the price of oil is going down. We must do something to convince — since we have a free enterprise economy and we can't force businessmen to make decisions unless there's an emergency — we must find a way to convince the oil companies and the gasoline stations to bring down the price of gasoline faster, and that's what he is going to work on. But many things are left to be done.

We work hard to fulfill our Philippine Reform Agenda. We fight for the Economy, Education and the Environment.

And you the SK are important to this agenda because you represent the young, and we are in fact a young nation. Our people are young — you represent those who are under 30 years of age and you make up more than half of the population. We are a young nation — our democracy is just 60 years old. The growing pains are still with us. We are a young nation — our heart is young. We love life. We sing. We dance. We love sports but our minds are also young. We love innovation and technology. We are young because we are true citizens of the world. We can keep up with change. We're part of the rapid pace of change that is taking place around the globe. In fact, we are on the cutting edge of the global workforce.

And so, on this occasion — of the best attended SK Congress in our history, organized by you yourselves not by any professional — I call for a Vision for a Young Nation. It is you, the youth of this nation who have the energy to make your dreams come true. And as SK, you have a share in the internal revenue allotment so you have the means to make your dreams come true.

It is now time for you, the young generation to get involved in civic life, as the SK is involved in civic life, and to take action and take responsibility for your own fortunes. You belong to the SK system. You can work within the system to make a better world. Use the tools afforded to you by government; meaning, your budget and the local government. The tools accorded you by your family; meaning, your education. The tools afforded you by the nation. On the tools afforded to you by your family (your income, your family incomes), the tools afforded to you by your nation (the educational and career opportunities) use these tools to become doctors, lawyers, farmers, healthcare workers, leaders in high tech and clean tech and many other noble professions.

The vision we have of a young nation must include creating high-paying jobs right here at home, not just abroad. We love and value our expatriates. We honor their service and their sacrifice. Yet, we must work for a day, a day when you will be at your peak when a job abroad is a career choice and not the only option available to a hardworking Filipino. In addition to jobs at home, we must build a new quality of life that keeps you our young people here that keeps our nation young and beautiful like you the majority of its people.

So, it is to you, the next generation that I ask to join me in a 'Green Philippines' campaign. What is the meaning of this 'Green Philippines' especially for our young? We must take back our forests and replenish fallen trees with new, protected forests to protect our land and our people. That is for you who live in the mountain areas of the country. We must reforest that land and bring back the beauty of the Philippines we all love and want. We want to tap the enthusiasm of young and old alike to clean our environment. For you who come from areas with no forest because you're in the urban areas — we need to beautify our trashy barangays and cities. We need to build more urban parks and recreation areas. We need to purify our water. We need to clean up unhealthy and eyesore industrial sites. Some of these need to be done by the national government and the regulators but some of them can be done by the youth especially the SK.

As part of our 'Green Philippines,' we want an energy-efficient nation, free from reliance on costly and exhaust-spewing cars and smokestacks — that is for our regulators. We can harness our sun, wind and geothermal resources and produce our own clean fuels. Again, to do geothermal power, solar power, wind power — that is for the business community. But we can also produce clean fuel through biofuels and rely less on foreign suppliers. And SK can plant the materials for biofuels. We need the will of the people to encourage the political leaders to embrace this new clean, green Philippines. And you represent the majority of our people.

This is a perfect time to devote ourselves to 'Green Philippines' programs because Congress has passed legislation on the development and promotion of renewable energy sources, which I will soon sign into law.

We want to turn our coral reefs and beaches, the wonder of the world, into national parks and international sanctuaries for eco-tourism and scientific research. The proclamation will be done by the national government. The scientific research will be done by the science professionals, but promoting eco-tourism is something that can be done by the young in the SK.

We have the chance to develop our nation right from the start: clean, healthy, productive and beautiful. And I hope you, our young people today, you our SK will be part of this 'Green Philippines.' And your terms are... what? How long is it going to be, three years, five years? Three years. Let's try to make this happen within the three years of your term. These are just a few ideas, because you the SK can provide your own ideas when you start thinking of what projects you should do. But I call on you our youth to respond to this call to bring to action new innovative thinking on land management, on care for our environment and ways to create jobs and have a clean, socially responsible environment policy.

We need to get beyond the era of “either/or thinking” on the environment. We must embrace change and be bold in creating a ‘Green Philippines’, that is both green and economically successful. The Philippines can become a model of environmental stewardship within ten years. In ten years you will be at your prime — you will be the leaders not only of your communities but of the nation. And if you begin this ‘Green Philippines’ now, you will have a much easier time being a leader of the nation in ten years from now. That is why we need your help to move that vision forward.

I have strong faith in our youth. I have strong faith in our SK. I know you will not shirk from these challenges. I know you will not neglect your country and abandon your future.

And so, what I would like to do in order to encourage you to be able to allocate your SK funds into this ‘Green Philippines’ campaign, some of which I have already given examples of, I will give a fund to the SK of 10 million pesos as equity in the projects that will be approved by your council.

To all of you, congratulations! Best wishes on your National Congress! Thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches of Her Excellency President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

Speech of President Arroyo during the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act No. 9510 or the Credit Information System Act

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act No. 9510 or the Credit Information System Act

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, October 31, 2008]

Congratulations to everybody who made this bill a reality.

The Credit Information System is a very welcome addition to the legislation to strengthen our financial system by improving the regulatory environment. Amidst the global economic storm, we have thus been able to withstand the full force of this global contagion because Congress, the Executive and the Central Bank have been taking decisive action for several years to fundamentally alter our economic fortunes.

When some governments were cutting taxes, we raised them. When some governments were giving free rein to easy money adventures, we were bringing more discipline and order to our financial regulatory environment.

When some governments were going deeper into debt, we were fiscally prudent, building up our reserves, investing in our infrastructure, but paying our debts. These were not easy decisions. Together we did it because it needed to be done; but we must not become complacent.

Our country has been hit with high food and fuel prices, and we are aware of the severe impact on the poorest among us. Our government has been doing everything in our power to ease the impact of this global crisis on the Philippines, and our measures at home including congressmen and congresswomen and senators, your valuable and timely legislation are seeing us through this period of tremendous change as we prepare for the lower global fuel and food prices that are now beginning to come down. We remain vigilant to uncertainties in the global market. We must monitor closely the global developments so that we can continue to respond with the right policies to sustain the gains we have made. And those policies include the law we signed a few weeks ago to facilitate the restructuring of socialized and low-cost housing loans, and now our bill today.

As Bernie Sayo said, a credible and comprehensive Credit Information System run by the Credit Information Corporation will cut credit processing time; will lower transaction cost; will reduce the risk of defaults because of better credit information; will reduce the credit premium charged by lenders; and will increase lending volumes. It will expand the reach of credit to small and medium enterprises.

Of course, all eyes are glued on the stock markets. We acknowledge the proposals of the Philippine Stock Exchange to strengthen our equity markets as well aside from the credit markets that we are strengthening today.

We ask Congress to look closely at their suggestions that require legislation. For instance, they have been asking to extend the documentary stamp tax exemption through next year for shares traded to the Exchange. They're asking for reducing by half the stock transaction tax in order to make the Philippine Exchange more competitive.

The challenge is how to do this in a revenue neutral way.

Congress has given our people an early Christmas gift through this Credit Information System bill we will soon pass into law and to the restructuring of low-cost housing loans. We look forward to Congress adding even more gifts to better protect our people. We cannot waste time on political intrigues and grandstanding. Remaining reforms await our common action.

Let us continue to endeavor to help the ordinary Filipino stretch his paycheck.

So, to all the principal sponsors, principal authors, the co-authors who are here with us today, congratulations and thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches of Her Excellency President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

Speech of President Arroyo during the 1st Laguna Investment and Business Expo

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 1st Laguna Investment and Business Expo

[Delivered at the Event Center, SM Sta. Rosa, Sta. Rosa City, Laguna, November 04, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Lazaro. Maraming salamat sa pagpakilala mo sa akin at maraming salamat sa inyong pag-imbata sa akin at sa mga Cabinet members na dumalo dito.

Mayor Arcillas Nazareno, congratulations din! Congressman Dan Fernandez, Congressman Evie Arago, siyempre si President Mamon ng Laguna Chamber otherwise known as Mr. Enchanted Kingdom, (applause) at ang ating mga Cabinet members na napakaraming narito and the national agencies. Congratulations on this Investment and Business Expo! (Applause)

This Expo demonstrates a vibrant private-public sector partnership. And held in the midst of the global economic storm, it also demonstrates that the Philippines is in relatively good shape. Gaya nga nang sabi ni Ning Lazaro kanina nung kami ay nakaupo, “Eh tignan niyo naman ang Laguna parang walang global crisis.” Congratulations sa Laguna! (Applause)

Laguna has carved out a name as the industrial area with perhaps the widest array of investment venues in what we call the Luzon Urban Beltway. And it is also part of the Cyber Corridor. In fact, one reason why Rey Chua is here, our ICT chair, together with Larry and Peter, is that we are proud to congratulate Metro Laguna, made up of Sta. Rosa, Calamba, San Pablo, Cabuyao and Los Baños, as having been selected by the Business Process Outsourcing Association as the next wave city’s, number one after Metro Manila. (Applause) So, it is indeed a part of the Cyber Corridor as well.

And it is also one of the nation’s major rice producing provinces. So, talagang microcosm ang Laguna ng buong bansang Pilipinas.

But today, we’re talking about the Luzon Urban Beltway, the Cyber Corridor — dalawa sa ating limang natural sub-economies or “super regions” of the Philippines kung saan gumagastos tayo ng daan-daang bilyon sa ilalim ng ating Medium-Term Public Investment Program.

The Luzon Urban Beltway consists of most of Central Luzon, Metro Manila, CALABARZON, Mindoro and Marinduque. And if it has to be a good urban beltway, it must be globally competitive for urban service and industrial sectors with a high quality of life for its people. And indeed, this Luzon Urban Beltway produces more than one-half of the country’s Gross Domestic Product.

To be globally competitive in our Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan we invest in five strategic measures:

1. Make food plentiful at reasonable prices to make our labor cost competitive.
2. Reduce the cost of electricity to make the cost of running our machines and our manufacturing processes regionally competitive.
3. Modernize the physical infrastructure and logistics system at least cost to ensure efficient movement of goods and people.

Eh kita naman niyo yung SLEX inaayos natin at pagkatapos nito yung SLEX ikakabit sa STAR. At yung SLEX nakakabit sa C-5 ay ikakabit sa NLEX. So, lahat nito ay pag-uusapan mamaya sa ating Cabinet meeting which we are holding here in Sta. Rosa, Laguna. (Applause)

Yung logistic is movement of people and goods. So, kasama dito yung gastos sa pagbiyahe at kasalukuyan, sabi ni Secretary Larry Mendoza sa akin, ay may hearing na ginaganap ang LTFRB para pag-usapan kung papano bumaba ang pasahe dahil bumababa ang presyo ng langis.

4. From competitiveness, mobilize and disseminate knowledge to upgrade our technologies and increase our people's productivity. Nandiyan ang U.P. Los Baños — nandito, nandito pa nga sa ating Expo ngayon – at napakaraming mga eskwelahan at mga VOCTECH centers. So, productivity is very high in CALABARZON.
5. Reduce red tape in all government agencies to reduce transaction costs. Ako ay nasisiyahan na meron na kayong NERBAC dito sa CALABARZON (applause) at inaasahan ko rin ang mga local government units gaya ni Governor, yung mga city mayor, mga municipal mayors para ayusin yung mga ilang kusot na mga investors kasama na rin yung mga investors ng Build-Operate-and-Transfer para sa ating mga importanteng expressway.

Pero ang gusto kong pag-usapan ngayon to reduce the cost of electricity in the urban beltway, PEZA now offers reduced rates for the locators. And the implementation of open access awaits the consummation of the Calaca investment in the power sector. Inaasahan natin na ito ay matapos ng Nobyembre. At ang hinihintay naman ng Calaca ay yung desisyon ng Energy Regulatory Commission tungkol sa pwedeng ma-icharge na mga power generating plants.

Earlier than this, we began the “Time of Use” method of computing power rates along with the Wholesale Electricity Spot Market and MERALCO's Customer Choice Program and High Load Factor Discounts for consumers that are consuming at least 5 megawatts. Loans of electric cooperatives have been condoned. And recently, the ERC ruled that the system's loss recovery cannot be more than 8 percent.

Mamaya sa ating Cabinet meeting ay pag-uusapan rin kung papano pa tayo makakababa ng ating energy cost lalo na para sa SME at para sa karaniwang Pilipino.

Your government is doing everything in its power to put food on the table, dahil ang busog na empleyado ay hindi parating hihingi ng omento sa kanyang sweldo. And to protect the paycheck therefore from high prices and high inflation, we are also continuing to invest in our nation's system of healthcare, education and social services.

Because the relative strength and resilience of our people and our economy is still no consolation to the Filipino who has to pay higher prices for basic commodities, we are aware of the pressures you face from high prices and high rates of inflation. We know that you, especially those employees and professionals, are concerned about job security and the buying power of your wages and salaries. We are also concerned.

That is why we are working hard to keep down the prices of rice, food and fuel, and to increase the number of jobs and investments that will continue to generate high-paying employment opportunities for more of our countrymen. Kaya kami ng Cabinet ay nagpunta dito dahil itong Expo ay malaking kontribusyon dito sa paghanap ng marami pang investment.

Yung mga magsasaka naman, they're getting the investments they need. The government will continue its unprecedented support for agriculture via the F.I.E.L.D.S. program. NFA will buy one million metric tons from Filipino farmers compared to last year's less than 100,000 metric tons. In fact, sabi ni Arty Yap sa akin, to date 330,000 metric tons na ang nabili ng NFA compared to 30,000 the last time around. Sana ang ating magsasaka, dahil marami sa kanila maganda ang presyong natatanggap mula sa NFA, ay magtanim pa ng higit pang palay.

And with this, we expect inflation, which has started to come down, to come down even more. And the price of rice, which has started to come down, should go down even more. And with that, we expect the earning power of your workers and officers' paycheck to increase.

Our economic team, eto si Peter, is working to rein in inflation — kasi Peter is a member of the Monetary Board — and to monitor prices. Yun nga ang trabaho niya kasama ng local government bilang DTI Secretary and put the price manipulators out of business.

He and we will continue to make spot checks in markets to make sure no one is taking advantage of their fellow citizens during this challenging time. Pero itong challenging time na ito ay nakakapag Expo pa rin ang Laguna.

This Expo — Congratulations to all of you! — (applause) this Expo makes me optimistic about our future. It makes me optimistic about the hope—optimism and resilience of the people of Laguna.

Mahalagang layunin nitong Expo na patunayan ang kagalingan ng probinsiyang Laguna bilang sentro ng pamumuhunan at negosyo. Nagsisilbi din siyang patunay ng kahusayan, kagandahan, kahandaan at tibay ng loob ng mga taga-Laguna sa pagsulong ng kaunlaran.

So, for playing such an important role in our country's economy, maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 1st Laguna Investment and Business Expo. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134804/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=1766&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 1st Founding Anniversary of the Bulacan Polytechnic College and Groundbreaking Ceremony of its proposed 2-Hectare New San Jose Del Monte Campus

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 1st Founding Anniversary of the Bulacan Polytechnic College and Groundbreaking Ceremony of its proposed 2-Hectare New San Jose Del Monte Campus

[Delivered in Bulacan Polytechnic College, Brgy. Graceville, San Jose del Monte City, Bulacan, November 05, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Congressman Robes. (Applause) Salamat sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin at salamat rin sa iyong imbitasyon na ako ay pumunta rito. At salamat din sa pakipagkakasundo mo sa Parliamentang Victoria upang mabigyan ng trabaho doon yung mga kwalipikadong taga-rito na sang-ayon sa mga standards ng Australia.

Salamat din kay Governor Jonjon Mendoza sa iyong napakagandang mga sinabi at salamat sa mga congressmen. Salamat sa ipinasa niyong malaking budget, pinakamalaki sa kasaysayan: 1.4 trillion pesos para sa 2009. Kaya salamat kay Congresswoman Ning. (Applause) Salamat kay Congresswoman Chavez at salamat kay Congressman Pancho at salamat kay Congresswoman Lorna dahil yung pinakamalaking budget sa buong kasaysayan na pinasa nila ay yun ang makakapondo ng ating mga pangangailangan sa economy, sa environment at saka sa edukasyon kasama ang Bulacan Polytechnic College. (Applause)

At dito ay binabati rin natin yung dating congressman, si Mayor Roquero (applause) at marami tayong mga senior statesmen ng Bulacan na narito. Nandito si former Governor Josie Mendoza at narito si former Congressman Lito Sarmiento. So lahat-lahat, lahat-lahat nagkakasundo sa kinabukasan ng ating susunod na henerasyon. Congratulations sa inyong lahat! At sa mga opisyal ng Bulacan Polytechnic, congratulations sa first anniversary ng inyong campus sa San Jose del Monte! Nawa'y mabigyan niyo ng tamang kasanayan! Halimbawa para sa Victoria ang inyong mga estudyante. And we welcome the representative from the Parliament of Victoria, Mr. Smith to our shores in the Philippines. (Applause)

We hope that this campus will be able to prepare students for the things that Congressman Robes arranged with the Parliament of Victoria. But, of course, we also long for the day when going abroad is a career option, and not the only choice for a hardworking Filipino. Itong ating mga plano sa ekonomiya. These are designed to allow the Philippines to break out of that cycle. That is why we remain so stubbornly focused on the economy. We need to spread the wealth and keep the people working here at home. So, we are creating appealing employment opportunities by focusing on the development of priority sectors. Halimbawa, diyan sa Metro Manila na katabi lamang nitong barangay ninyo maraming mga call center doon. Nawa'y may mga kurso dito sa Bulacan Polytechnic San Jose para sa mga kursong ganun na magaganda ang sweldo.

We have created almost 7 million jobs in the last 7 years. Kung hindi dahil sa mga repormang ipinatupad natin sa mga nakaraang pitong taon — at yung mga congressmen natin ngayon at dating congressman natin ay lahat sila ay tumulong para sa mga repormang ito — 'di sana naging mas malala ang kalagayan natin ngayon gaya ng ibang mga bansa na lubos ang pagdudusa nila ngayon dito sa global credit crunch. Sa halip, sabi nga ng dalubhasang ahensiyang Standard & Poor: "The Philippine economy is a relative island of calm in a very stormy sea of global uncertainty."

Pandaigdigang krisis sa ekonomiya ang siyang tumulak sa pagtaas ng presyo ng pagkain, bigas at langis dito sa atin at maging sa buong mundo. During these troubled times, papel ng pamahalaan is to help insulate the Filipino people from these price shocks and economic pressures.

Subalit yung kalakasan, dahil yung kalakasan at katatagan ng ating taongbayan at ng ating ekonomiya haming sa iba ay hindi pa rin sapat na konswelo para sa bawat Pilipinong nagbabayad ng mataas na presyo para sa mga pangunahing bilingin. Batid ko ang pasanin na hinaharap ninyo mula sa matataas na presyo at mataas na inflation. Batid ko nag-aalala kayo tungkol sa katiyakan ng trabaho at kung ano ang mabibili sa inyong sweldo. We are also concerned. Kaya naman kumikilos tayo ng masipag upang mababa ang presyo ng pagkain at gasolina — na salamat ay bumababa na ang presyo – at upang tuloy ang pagdami ng trabaho at mga pamumuhunan tuloy-tuloy na dadagdagan ng pagkakataon ang trabaho para sa higit pa sa ating mamamayan.

At sana itong eskwelahang ito, itong campus ay makakatulong na ihanda ang ating kabataan sa mga trabaho. Ginagawa ng inyong pamahalaan ang lahat upang tiyakin na palaging may pagkain sa bawat mesa, at upang proteksyunan ang inyong kinikita mula sa pagtaas ng presyo ng bilingin. Inaalagaan natin din ang inyong kalusugan, ang mga serbisyong publiko at ang edukasyon, kasama na nga ang Bulacan Polytechnic. (Applause)

Bukod sa importanteng sentro ng industriya ang Bulacan pinanggagalingan pa rin ng bigas. Our farmers are getting the investments they need. Patuloy ang suporta ng pamahalaan sa agrikultura, pinakamalaking suporta sa kasaysayan natin. Kung dati kulang sa 100,000 tonelada ng palay ang binibili ng pamahalaan mula sa ating mga magsasaka, ngayon ay ginagawa na itong isang milyong tonelada. Yun ang binibili ng pamahalaan ngayon sa ating magsasaka. Kaya nawa'y ma-engganyo silang itaas ang produksyon ng bigas para kayo lahat dito ay hindi magkukulang ng bigas at mabibili sa tamang presyo. Bunga nito, umaasa tayo na ang inflation ay bumababa na at bababa pa. Ang presyo ng bigas na nagsimula nang bumbaba nawa'y bababa pa. At inaasahan natin sa ganung paraan lalaki ang kayang bilhin ng inyong mga sweldo. And by continuing down this path, we will increasingly be keeping our best and brightest, not having to go abroad but having the option to go abroad or to stay right here in the Philippines if they want. Mas malapit sa mga pamilya, mas malapit sa mga kaibigan, tumutulong itayo ang pamayanan, kagaya nitong pamayanang ito, and providing the next generation of leadership.

Napakahalaga para i-angat ang ating bansa at ihanda ito para sa susunod na henerasyon ang ekonomiya, environment at edukasyon.

Kanina nang dumating ako marami sa reception mga kabataan. Tanong ko nga, “kayo ba’y mga estudyante sa Bulacan Polytechnic?” “Opo,” sabi nila. Magtatapos ako sa mensahe para sa kanila. Sa kabataan nakasalalay ang enerhiya upang pagsasakatuparan ang mga panaginip, panahon na para sa susunod na henerasyon na makialam sa buhay ng pamayanan — Ay, sorry. Hintay muna, mabanggit ko pala si Vice Governor Alvarado na nandito hindi lamang sa kanyang sarili kinakatawan din si Congresswoman Marivic Alvarado. (Applause)

Anyway, yung ating mga bata panahon na rin para magsalita, kumilos at maging responsable para sa ating kapalaran. Magtrabaho sa loob ng sistema upang ipabuti ang mundo. Gamitin ang mga oportunidad kagaya nitong Polytechnic College na binibigay ng pamahalaan, pamilya at bansa upang maging doktor, abogado, magsasaka, mga nagtatrabaho sa kalinga ng kalusugan, at maging lider sa high tech at sa malinis na teknolohiya at marami pang ibang mga maginoong propesyon. (Applause)

Tinatawagan natin ang mga kabataan, ang susunod na henerasyon ng Bulacan na makikinabang sa ituturo ng Bulacan Polytechnic sa San Jose at pati na mga kabataan ng buong bansa. Tinatawagan kayo makilahok sa pagtunggali laban sa kahirapan na dala ng pandaigdigang unos. Mag-aral nang mabuti. Tapusin ang mga kurso agad sa takdang panahon, at nawa'y makatrabaho agad, abroad kung gusto ninyo pero dito rin kung gusto ninyo. Nawa'y meron kayong career choice. Huwag sasayangin ang pagkakataon sapagkat ang magiging matibay na sandalan sa oras ng kagipitan ay ang edukasyon.

Kailangan ng bansa ang tulong ng susunod na henerasyon, pati na rin ang kasalukuyang henerasyon. Sa pagtutulongan ng lahat, maitatawid natin ang kasalukuyang pandaigdigang unos. Muli tayong makakabalik sa dating landas ng mabilis na pag-unlad.

Sa inyong lahat, salamat at narito lahat-lahat ng panig ng Bulacan.

Nagkakaisa tayo sa pag-alay ng ating sarili sa edukasyon ng kabataan ng Bulacan.

Sa inyong lahat, Mabuhay! at maraming salamat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 1st Founding Anniversary of the Bulacan Polytechnic College and Groundbreaking Ceremony of its proposed 2-Hectare New San Jose Del Monte Campus. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134757/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=4546&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Local Peace and Security Assembly in Region III

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Local Peace and Security Assembly in Region III

[Delivered at the El Centro Convention Center – Legenda, Waterfront Road, Subic Freeport Zone, Zambales, November 07, 2008]

Maraming salamat Secretary Gilbert Teodoro, secretary ng National Defense at anak ng Tarlac.

Our political leaders in the region: we have here the governor of Zambales, Governor Amor Deloso; Congresswoman Mila Magsaysay of this district where we are now; Mayor Bong Gordon, our host mayor because a part of Subic is from Olongapo City but we have also Mayor Khonghun on the other side because a part is also from Subic town; and then, Congresswoman Iyay Coscolluela of Buhay Party List is very familiar with Subic having worked here for such a long time; and Congressman Violago from Nueva Ecija, thank you for being here.

We have Governor Tet Garcia with us and his son Congressman Abet and we have Congresswoman Herminia Roman with us. So, we thank all of them for being here at lahat ng mga local officials na nakita ko, nabati ko, mga punongbayan ng ibat-ibang mga lungsod at bayan dito sa Central Luzon, very happy to see all of you.

Mga sundalo at pulis na narito ngayon, we're very happy that you are here and participated in this very important assembly. At mga kinakatawan ng simbahan, nakita ko nga ay halos lahat ng workshop leaders ay mga leader ng tinatawag nating Christian churches. At mga grupong sibilyan, salamat sa mga resolusyon; at itong mga resolusyon na ito ay hihimayin ng grupo ni Secretary Bert Gonzales, na wala ngayon bagama't siya ang namamahala sa mga asembliyang ito dahil meron siyang importanteng meeting doon sa Davao sa Mindanao at hindi naman natin makansel itong buong assembly para lang hintayin siya. Pero yung kanyang grupo, itong mga nakaupo dito sa ating front table, hihimayin ang mga resolusyon ninyo lalong-lalo na yung mga bahagi ng resolusyon na lumalabas din doon sa resolusyon ng ibang mga assembly. Kasi yun ang pinakaimportante na sagutin or harapin ng ating pamahalaan nasyonal, at yung mga pamahalaang lokal naman ninyo ay sana asikasuhin yung mga probisyon ng resolusyon that are specific to your region. Salamat sa binigay ninyong tulong sa prosesong pangkapayapaan dito sa Region III.

Tungkulin ng pamahalaan na siguruhing ligtas ang mamamayan sa mga kuko ng kaaway, rebelde man o kriminal. At nagagalak tayo na nabawasan na ang mga aktibong rebelde dito. Halos kalahati na lang sila kung ihahambing natin doon sa 1998, at malaki rin ang nabawas sa kanilang mga armas. Tagumpay ito ng pinagsanib na pagsisikap ng military, ng kapulisan at ng taumbayan. Kaya congratulations sa inyong lahat! (Applause)

Humina man ang pwersa ng mga rebeldeng ito, kailangan pa rin nating maging masigasig upang tuluyan nang matigil ang mga engkwentro at mabawi mula sa impluwensya ng kaliwa ang 111 barangays na marami dito ay nasa Bataan, Aurora at Pampanga. Sa alam ko dahil ako ay Kapampangan parati kong sinusubaybayan yun, I think we have no more influenced barangays, tama ba ito? But there are many barangays that are threatened barangays. Kailangan matigil na ang pagsabotahe ng mga rebelde sa mga cell sites. Kailangan matigil na ang kanilang pananakot, pangingikil at pagre-recruit ng mga bagong kasapi. Sa nakikita natin sa inyong resolusyon may mga underlying conclusions na nagbibigay daan sa inyong mga resolusyon. At isang importanteng conclusion palagay ko sa inyong workshops: kawalan ng trabaho, problema sa reporma sa lupa, maging sa sakahan o sa indigenous peoples, at isyu ng katarungang panlipunan ang naging mga sanhi ng paglakas ng rebelyon at ito rin ang problema noong dekadang singkuenta at muli noong dekada setenta. At lahat ng ito'y naka-ugat sa kahirapan na sinusubukan naman tugunan ng mga ibatibang administrasyon.

Here in our administration, a strong and growing economy has been the central pillar we have labored to create precisely to help ensure peace, order and stability in our country. And it's paying off: our economy is more resilient today than ever before, thanks to our fiscal reforms at andami sa mga congressmen dito o kaya yung kanilang mga predecessor gaya ni Tony Roman, predecessor ni Herminia at saka si Tet, predecessor ni Abet, marami silang tumulong sa masasabi nating mga repormang ginawa sa Kongreso that manifested in a 7 plus percent GDP growth last year. (Applause) At kasama ditto sa GDP growth last year, every year, every quarter kahit na nagkakaroon ng recession doon sa ibang bansa — noong 2001 may recession sa Singapore, sa Korea at kung saan pa yun — we were still growing. So, for the last seven years, we've created almost 7 million jobs in 7 years.

Subalit yung kalakasan at katatagan ng ating taumbayan at ng ating ekonomiya haming sa iba ay alam ko hindi pa rin kunswelo para sa karaniwang Pilipinong nagbabayad ng mas mataas na presyo para sa pangunahing bilihan.

Before the U.S. financial crisis, which we are weathering quite well so far, we were hit by a dramatic rise in the global price of rice, food and fuel. This hit all Filipinos; and it hurt us. It hit us where it hurts — at the kitchen table and in our daily lives. So even though we have created almost seven million jobs in seven years and provided a remarkable amount of human and physical infrastructure, at the end of the day, this remains a price-sensitive nation. When prices rise, people naturally feel the pain. And we don't think in terms of overall macroeconomic conditions, we just think whether we can put food on the table.

Sa ganitong mga panahong nakakaabala, papel ng pamahalaan is to help insulate the people from these price shocks and economic pressures. Batid ko ang pasanin na hinaharap ninyo mula sa matataas na presyo at mataas na inflation, na salamat naka-headline kanina ay malaki na ang ibinaba. Batid kong nag-aalala kayo tungkol sa katiyakan ng trabaho at kung ano ang mabibili ninyo sa inyong sweldo. Nag-aalala rin ako. Kaya naman kumikilos tayo ng masipag upang mababa ang presyo ng pagkain at gasolina, at upang tuloy ang pagdami ng trabaho at mga pamumuhunan tuloy-tuloy na dagdagan ng pagkakataon para sa trabaho para sa higit sa ating mga mamamayan.

Salamat na lang at investments continue to come in despite continued volatility in the global markets. Halimbawa kanina, yung mga nasa entablado, halos lahat ay kasama natin doon sa inauguration ng Petron Fuel Blending Plant. Ano itong "fuel blending plant" na ito? Eto yung isa sa produkto nito ay yung ethanol na sinasama na sa kanilang gasolina para pag kayo ay pupunta sa isang Petron gasoline station pwede kayong pumili, pwede niyong bilhin yung gasolina purong gasoline o pwede niyong bilhin yung gasolinang blended with ethanol and the price of the blended gasoline ethanol is four pesos cheaper than the price of ordinary gasoline. Yan ang importansya nung investment na pinanggalingan namin kanina.

At mula naman doon sa planta patungo dito, si Armand Arreza, ang ating administrator ng SBMA ay pinapakita yung ibat-ibang lupa na kinukuha na ng ibat-ibang mga investments na parating dito sa Subic, kaya marami tayong mahihintay na bagong investments dito sa Subic. At salamat na lamang nalaman ko na 85,000 na pala ang nagtratrabaho dito sa Subic. Kaya yan ang pinakaimportanteng biyaya na maibibigay ng mga economic zones sa ating mga karaniwang mamamayan — trabaho, trabaho, trabaho.

As a result of our economic turnaround, we are also able to invest in key sectors to cushion the harsh impact of high prices for food and fuel on the poor. We are investing in modernizing infrastructure — alam naman nating lahat, 'yang Subic-Clark-Tarlac Expressway and other roads and bridges on an unprecedented scale. Kanina nakita ko may listahan ng mga kinakailangang farm-to-market roads from the point of view of security and peace. Kaya inaatasan ko ang ating mga heneral dito na isama yung mga farm-to-market roads sa inyong program "Kalayaan Barangay." (Applause)

We are also investing in education, healthcare and other social services. Pinalawak natin ang sakop ng reporma sa lupa. At sana ang ating mga congressmen ay ipapasa ang extension ng CARP. (Applause) At anuman ang mga sabihin nating shortcomings ng implementasyon ng land reform na higitan ang target nating magmudmod ng dalawang daang libong ektarya tauntaon.

We have exceeded the target. Mas marami ang nagkakaroon ng sariling lupa, pati na rin ang mga indigenous peoples ng Region III na ngayon lang nabigyan ng titulo para sa Ancestral Domain. Meron pa ngang naiwan, gaya nang sinasabi niyo, at talaga naman dahil bago ako naging pangulo wala naming nagbibigay ng Ancestral Domain titles. Nagsimula lang sa ating administrasyon. So, itong mga linagay dito sa Regional Peace and Security Assembly na mga areas ay hihingin ko rin sa ating National Security Council o kaya sa ating P.A. for Region III, kay Relei Fajardo na i-follow up doon sa NCIP kung bakit hindi pa nagagawa. At tignan natin kung papano natin madagdagan ang pondo. Although as I said, yung target na binigay natin para sa Ancestral Domain titles ay nakamit na natin, dahil hindi naman natin sinabing 100 percent nating gagawin sa ating administrasyon. Ganunpaman, sisikapin nating dadagdagan pa ang pondo para magkaron pa ng mga bago. (Applause)

And all the while, we are balancing these investments with a commitment to meet our fiscal obligations. Dahil kung sumobra naman ang gastos ng pamahalaan over and above our taxes sasama naman ang credit rating natin. Tataas naman ang interest rate, hihina naman ang ating piso. Mas lalong mahihirapan naman ang mga taong-bayan dahil tataas na naman ang presyo ng bilihin. Yan ang balancing act na kailangan gawin sa economic management.

We cannot predict the full impact of the current global financial crisis on the Philippines or any country next year. However, we can do our best to plan for any and all contingencies, which we have done. At ito nga ay in-unveil natin doon sa annual conference ng Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry. But indeed, we can say that our economy is stronger than it has been in generations. It has demonstrated that the hard choices we made regarding economic reforms — and I again congratulate either our congressmen now or their predecessors for helping us here — because these reforms have allowed us to have the resources to mitigate the impact of the global financial crisis and the high prices for food and fuel on all Filipinos. These efforts have served us well.

These actions are seeing us through this period of tremendous change as we prepare for the day which we see has already started to come with lower global and food prices. We are not insulated from events taking place internationally, so we will have to monitor developments closely and take action where for necessary to ensure that any impact will be minimal and short-lived.

Now more than ever, in this time of global economic turmoil, it is essential that we stay focused on meeting the challenges and helping our people. We would hope that our opponents would join us in putting the people first. Unfortunately, some will opt to put politics and even obsolete ideology ahead of the people. But for us, we will continue to protect the poor and move the nation forward during this challenging time.

Our priority is implementing the pro-poor and economic reform agendas that have given our country the strongest and most resilient economy in decades. This is a time when our nation's leadership must give all its attention to managing the impact of the global financial crisis on our own economy, and part of that is addressing the insurgency.

The communist rebels have spend years as a low-level threat. But even if they are low-level, they impede the progress and development of a number of rural areas. If we want to become a first-world country in 20 years, meaning, when poverty has been marginalized or the marginal have entered the middle-class and institutions become strong if we are to achieve that we have to put a stop to the ideological nonsense once and for all. And the reason why we're having all these Local Peace and Security Assemblies is that together with the citizens, we have to get rid of the insurgency now by 2010.

I thank the resolution for recognizing the new premise on our peace efforts. It focuses our peace processes no longer on mainly negotiating with armed groups but more importantly on authentic dialogues with the people in the communities.

These dialogues will be centered on ending all forms of armed rebellion in the country by talking directly with the people; and you are the first conversation in Region III on the part of the national government, and we hope to bring this all the way down to the grassroots. We aim to generate a national consensus against armed struggle as a means of achieving political and social change. Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR), ang ating pangkabuuhang framework ngayon sa ating pakikipagharap sa alinmang armadong grupo sa mga peace talks. DDR, as espoused by you, hopefully, by the communities will be a notice to armed groups of your rejection of armed struggle; and a way of showing that the force of arms does not entitle anyone to representing our people.

Through these engagements, you, our people will necessarily make all armed groups accountable to the people and the government for all their actions. At habang tayo ay nagkakaroon nitong ating assembly at pinag-usapan niyo kung papano magkaroon ng kapayapaan. Limampung araw na lang at Pasko na. As we move into this holiday season, we should count all our blessings and look to the future with greater hope, confidence and optimism. Our people must come together this holiday season to celebrate faith and families. Our communities must pull together and set aside personal feuds and political differences. We must focus instead on what positive things we can all do together to improve the lives of the people.

I, for one, am optimistic about our future and the hope — optimism and resilience of the Filipino people. We will make sure our government is vigilant in bringing government services to the people. It is important that your government work for you. It is important that your government deliver the services you deserve. We must dedicate ourselves to the poor and unfortunate amongst us everyday, but even more so during the holiday season. We must work to bring economic opportunities and human dignity to every Filipino man, woman and child during this coming holiday season of hope, love and faith.

Mabuti na lang na marami sa ating workshop leaders ay nanggagaling sa ating mga faith-based groups. At sana nga dito sa darating na Pasko, habang hinahanap natin ang pagmamahal at pananampalataya, ipagsama na natin sa ating paghanap ng pagmamahal at pananampalataya ang paghanap ng kapayapaan at katatagan ng seguridad ng ating minamahal na Central Luzon.

Sa inyong lahat, mabuhay at maraming salamat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Local Peace and Security Assembly in Region III. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134747/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=4553&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a Dinner in Honor of H.E. Prime Minister Somchai Wongsawat of the Kingdom of Thailand

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a Dinner in Honor of H.E. Prime Minister Somchai Wongsawat of the Kingdom of Thailand

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, November 10, 2008]

His Excellency Prime Minister Somchai Wongsawat, members of his delegation, Vice-President de Castro, Secretary Romulo, Congressman Cuenco, other members of Congress, the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps His Excellency Edward Joseph Adams and other members of the Diplomatic Corps, members of the business and private sector, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen.

Your Excellency Prime Minister, welcome to the Philippines! And congratulations on your election as Prime Minister of Thailand and on your assumption as Chairman of ASEAN!

All eyes may be glued to the world's stock market but under your leadership, ASEAN does not lose sight of the often unseen impact of the global economic crisis on the long-term needs of the poor.

Last month, you called the leaders of the nations of ASEAN to come together to seek common ground on ways to coordinate assistance to our economies just as our countries have done so on so many other important issues. And we are doing this in a way that puts the interest of the poor and dispossessed ahead of the rich and the powerful. And we are doing this in a way that offers a global solution to a global challenge.

We all agree that we must instill confidence in our market economies, but we must also take action to provide hope for those who need it most. And it is clear to us, under your leadership the coordinated action among nations is the better path than going it alone.

Our global financial system must learn from its mistakes and embrace fundamental reforms so that this global storm does not turn into a tidal wave of despair. We count on Thailand as chairman of ASEAN to champion the cry of the poor as we work together to solve the global financial crisis. And we are very pleased Your Excellency, that under your leadership, we are strengthening the Chang Mai initiative into a large and quick disbursing fund for liquidity.

Thailand and the Philippines — were among the five founding countries of ASEAN 41 years ago. Bilaterally, we've a longer history of kinship and cooperation.

Next year, we mark the 60th anniversary of our diplomatic relations. As the second largest economy in ASEAN in terms of Gross Domestic Product, Thailand is a key player in the region and in the Philippines. Thai companies including Siam Cement, Dusit Hotel, Bumrungrad and many others whose local CEOs are here with us tonight are among the foreign direct investors in our country. And the CP Group, one of the largest food companies in the world, we hope will be expanding their presence in the Philippines soon.

Several Filipino companies including San Miguel, Universal Robina and Oishi have made their presence as investors in Thailand. Thailand also plays host to 10,000 Filipino expatriates in the kingdom, many of whom are teachers, executives and musicians. We are happy with the development of our relations.

In the Philippines, we have been working tirelessly to address challenges arising from the slowdown in the global economy combined with high oil and food prices which thankfully are beginning to calm down. But we would like to take this opportunity to thank Thailand for your support, being one of the great rice-exporting countries of the world which are vast and naturally fertile Mekong Delta and having no typhoons. You have helped us succeed in ensuring that our country's food supplies remain stable and we put food on the Filipino table. No matter what actions we take, however, we must work together to resolve the global economic issues surrounding the world today if we are to see any significant recovery in the world economy. This is what the ASEM Meeting last month — where we met each other — the ASEAN + 3 Meeting convened by Your Excellency, and the forthcoming G20 Summit aimed for.

On this note, I ask everyone to join me in a toast to the health and happiness of Their Majesties the King and Queen of Thailand, and to the success of Thailand's chairmanship of ASEAN.

Mabuhay! Congratulations! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a Dinner in Honor of H.E. Prime Minister Somchai Wongsawat of the Kingdom of Thailand. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134738/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=4557&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Meeting with the Filipino-American elected officials and community leaders

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Meeting with the Filipino-American elected officials and community leaders

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Hyatt Regency O'Hare, Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A, November 11, 2008]

Thank you, Ambassador Gaa, for your kind introduction; and thank you for organizing this meeting of the Filipino-American community in Chicago, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and the other parts of the Midwest.

Consul General Cabrera, thank you for your warm words of welcome. And, of course, to our veterans, happy Veterans' Day to you!

I'm very happy also to be here with all of you. Dr. Jose Evangelista and the other leaders of the Filipino-American community here, thank you for being here tonight. And I'd like to also greet the Chicago Committee for Chicago City's bid for the 2016 Olympics.

I don't know if you've met them earlier but we have here several members of Congress and the Cabinet: We have, to the right of Ambassador Gaa, our Deputy Speaker of the House of Representatives, Girlie Villarosa from Mindoro Occidental; to her right is our representative from the BAHAY Party List, Congresswoman Iyay Coscolluela; and to her right is our congressman from Leyte, Martin Romualdez; and to his right is our Press Secretary, Jess Dureza; to the left of Consul General Cabrera is our congresswoman from Manila, Zenaida Angpin; to her left is our cabalen, congressman from Pampanga, Dong Gonzales; and to his left is Secretary Peter Favila.

To all of you, ang unang gusto kong sabihin, nagalak ako na magkasama tayo ngayong gabi. Ating dactal a capampangan keti mayap a bengi kekongan. Matula kung kayabe dakongan ngening bengi, karing kabalen kung capampangan. And I would imagine that we have some Ilocanos here tonight, dagiti kailay ti bangir ni mamang ko naimbag nga rabii kadakayo amin. And I am sure, well, I know that, for a fact, I saw already one of my cousins from Mindanao, so sa aton kaiguonan gikan sa Visayas ug Mindanao, maayong gabii kaninyong tanan. Sa mga kasimanwa, maayong gab-i sa inyo nga tanan.

I'm really very happy to be here with all of you tonight. And, of course, on the election of your senator from Illinois as President of the United States, congratulations! And to our delegation of Ohio on the election of Philippine-American Steve Austria, congratulations also! You have a new congressman and together with Bob Scott, we now have two Filipino-Americans in the U.S. House of Representatives.

We are here on a very quick trip to the United Nations. The King of Saudi Arabia – which, by the way, hosts the second biggest Filipino community abroad next only to the United States — invited us to participate in the United Nations General Assembly Session on a Culture of Peace. This meeting aims to promote interfaith dialogue, which means that we talk to each other whether we are Jews, Muslims, Christians, Hindus, Buddhists or from any other religion to promote understanding and tolerance in the interest of peace.

But, of course, that is for New York. Here, I'm sure you'd like to know about what's happening at home.

While no one can predict the full impact of the current global financial crisis on the Philippines, our economy is stronger than it has been in generations. Because tough choices were made, we've been able to build a firewall around the Philippines, our economy that has slowed down and somewhat softened the effects on the Philippines of the global crisis.

You must have heard of the VAT, the Value-Added Tax, its result has been, on the one hand, more unpopularity for me, but on the other, to save the day for our country now that there is a global economic crisis. That was designed to address several historic challenges: first, it enabled us to have more investments in infrastructure and in people so that we can create an environment in which businesses feel confident to expand and give more jobs; second, it has provided money to advance our pro-poor agenda; and third, it has provided revenues to pay down our national debt and shore up our fiscal independence.

On that first use of VAT – infrastructure. We are investing in modernizing infrastructure like roads and bridges on an unprecedented scale. For instance, your Fil-Am from San Francisco, Lupita Kashiwahara, who is with us tonight, told me that it took her only an hour and a half from Clark to Ayala, Alabang using the North Luzon-Clark Expressway. And Carissa Coscolluela, who was working in Subic for a long time before she became congresswoman, used to have to travel three hours to Subic. Now that trip has been cut in half because of our expressway. And next time you go to the Philippines, we invite you not only to travel to Clark, to Subic, to Baguio on this nice new expressway but also you can travel by car from Aparri to Sulu through our Roll-on/Roll-off Ferry Nautical Highway System.

You, I understand that you had a presentation, a video presentation about tourism in the Philippines. And, in fact, that is one of our biggest dollar-earners and employers today. So, next time you go to the Philippines, you can also visit the different resorts that we now have like Boracay, Cebu, Bohol, Palawan; or see for real the Apo Island that is featured in the Shedd Aquarium of Chicago. Actually, there are two Apo Islands, and both of them have beautiful reefs. The one that I think is depicted here in Chicago is the Apo Island in Negros Oriental. But there is also another Apo Island in the Apo Reef in the province of Congresswoman Girlie Villarosa and is really a contest on which of the two is the more beautiful reef. But there's so many of them, you should go and tell us yourselves which one is more beautiful for you.

The reason why we are so strong in tourism is not only because we have so many beautiful beaches, so many beautiful reefs, so many beautiful mountain vistas but also because aside from our beautiful beaches, we have the beautiful smiles of our people, and you bring those beautiful smiles here also to the mid-west United States.

Our strongest advantage indeed is our people, and that is also opening doors for us in medical tourism and retirement villages. So, I hope that next time you have a general check up, you will do it in the Philippines. I think, it will cost you less. Or when it's time for you to retire, instead of going to an old age care center here in the United States, you can also do it right in the Philippines. These are all made possible because we have provided the infrastructure for private investors to put up these facilities that serve you and other people all over the world.

In our pro-poor agenda, we are investing in expanded education, healthcare, and other social services.

But of course we know that the relative strength and resilience of our people and our economy is still no consolation to a Filipino who is paying higher prices for basic commodities. We are aware of the pressures your families back home face from inflation. Prior to the global economic crisis, our inflation in the Philippines was only 2.8 percent and then it went up to 12 percent, but, thank goodness, it's going down again. Nonetheless, it's still not back to 2.8 percent. So, we know that your relatives back home are as concerned as you are here about job security, and they are as concerned as you are here about the buying power of wages and the remittances that you send them. We are concerned as well. That is why we are working hard to keep the prices of rice, food and fuel down and to increase the number of jobs through investments.

In a time of global tensions and economic uncertainty, the U.S. and the Philippines remain steadfast allies and friends.

The Philippines will continue to be friends and allies with the administration of President-elect Obama, just as we have under President Bush. Before the election, I received a letter from Senator Obama which reassured us of a strong U.S.-Philippine relation.

In his letter, he acknowledged the long history and alliance that has bound our two countries together for decades. He recalled that we fought together against fascism in World War II and stood up successfully against a common adversary during the cold war. And that today we find ourselves shoulder-to-shoulder in a common struggle against terrorism and extremism. And he enumerated several issues that are of future concern to us: climate change, food security, poverty reduction, the future of ASEAN, human rights in Burma, and defense reform. So these are issues that he recognizes as the Philippines and the U.S. sharing common interests, just as we share a common faith in democracy.

And now that it's Veterans' Day, I should also recall that when I spoke with him last June, Senator Obama expressed his support for Veterans' Equity. But I think we should not wait for the bill to be refiled in the next Congress. There's still something we can do in this present Congress. So, on this day, Veterans' Day, I gave my instructions to Ambassador Willy Gaa — and let's all do it, Filipino-Americans here in the United States — let us urge the U.S. Congress to act now to organize the Bicameral Committee to reconcile Senate Bill 1315 and House Bill 6897 so it can become a Veterans' Equity Law.

So, I thank you for your plaque, our veterans. And let us continue to work for Veterans' Equity. You see, this is the first time in the history of our advocacy that the bill finally passed both Houses of Congress. Let's not waste that and have to go back to first base again in the next Congress. We've got to convince them that this is the time to have a Bicameral Conference Committee.

Yes, the two versions are very different, but that's the way it is in all bicameral democracies. Our congressmen and congresswomen can tell you, in the Philippines, very often on a specific subject matter the bill passed by the House, the bill passed by the Senate are as different as night and day. But, that's the reason why our institutions provide for a Bicameral Conference Committee to reconcile the conflicting provisions and that should be our mission for this coming month and the next month. So, let's all work for that.

Senator Obama also proudly made special mention of you, his Filipino-American constituents. And in his letter, he wrote that the special bond of the Philippines with the U.S. is enriched by the vibrant and successful Filipino-American community that has made such enormous contributions to this country. Indeed, that is so true. You, our Filipino-Americans, especially here in the Midwest, in Chicago and surrounding areas, are successful in your chosen professions. And you are successful in your chosen businesses when you choose to be entrepreneurs in restaurants, in forwarding, in remittance businesses, whatever. And as a recognition of how important you are to the community, there are Philippine landmarks and community centers in strategic locations all around Chicago and the nearby states. These are evidence that indeed you are honored by America. Of course, you are honored by the Philippines as well.

Our overseas Filipinos are honored by our government and our people for your sacrifice and dedication to your work, your family and your nation. We welcome your contribution. You know, 10 percent of Filipinos live abroad, and that includes the four million Fil-Ams here in the United States.

In New Zealand, they were telling me that 25 percent of the New Zealanders also live abroad. But the difference is that, mom and pop back home in New Zealand send additional allowance to their yuppies who are working abroad. In your case, even if your whole family is already here, you still send money back to grandchildren, nieces, nephews, communities, so indeed, you really never left the Philippines. In your heart, you are truly Filipino as you are American.

But we long for the day when going abroad for a job is a career option, not the only choice for a Filipino worker. That is why we remain stubbornly focused on the economy. And so I thank you all, our beloved Filipino-Americans, because you make us proud, you have a tremendous contribution to the American economy and the American society. And therefore, it's not only Willy Gaa who is our ambassador to the United States. It's each and every one of you, four million Fil-Ams who are living here and giving such a good name to what you call the Filipino. Thank you so much for that.

So, in conclusion, sa inyong malasakit sa trabaho, sa pamilya at sa bayan, at sa inyong kontribusyon sa ating ekonomiya, maraming, maraming salamat at mabuhay ang Filipino-American!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Thank you, thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Meeting with the Filipino-American elected officials and community leaders. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134727/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=6071&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 63rd United Nations General Assembly Meeting: Culture of Peace
Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 63rd United Nations General Assembly Meeting: Culture of Peace

[Delivered at the General Assembly Hall, UN Headquarters, New York City, November 12, 2008]

Thank you very much, Mr. President, Your Majesties, Your Excellencies, Mr. Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Mr. President, thank you for convening this high level meeting of the General Assembly. And congratulations to His Majesty, the Custodian of Two Holy Mosques, for drawing attention to the World Conference on Dialogue held in Madrid last May.

In that conference, Their Majesties, the King of Saudi Arabia and the King of Spain, brought together Jews, Muslims, Christians, Hindus, Buddhists and representatives of other religions, in the hope of promoting understanding and tolerance among followers of the world's faiths. This is also the hope for this meeting here in New York.

The Philippines fully supports this initiative, because we take a great interest in promoting world peace and in encouraging greater cross-religion exchange.

Allow me at the outset to introduce Draft Resolution No. A/63/L24 entitled "Promotion of Inter-religious and Intercultural Dialogue, Understanding and Cooperation for Peace," tabled jointly by the Philippines and Pakistan and co-sponsored by about 60 states. This draft resolution emerged as a consensus text after a series of consultations.

Among the salient points of the resolution is the affirmation that mutual understanding and inter-religious dialogue constitute an important part of the alliance of civilizations and of a culture of peace.

The resolution encourages the promotion of dialogue among the media from all cultures and civilizations. It emphasizes that everyone has the right to freedom of expression. It also affirms that the exercise of this right carries with it duties and responsibilities necessary for respect of the rights or reputations of others, protection of national security or of public order, or of public health or morals.

The resolution also requests for the proclamation of a UN decade for inter-religious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace.

I commend the resolution for adoption, at the close of our plenary meeting tomorrow. This will demonstrate once again our solidarity for the promotion of interfaith dialogue, as a powerful aid to ensure durable peace worldwide.

The resolution is especially relevant to the United Nations under the leadership of His Excellency Ban Ki-Moon, because for the first time in UN history, the Secretary-General has issued a report on interreligious and intercultural activities.

Likewise, the UNESCO works on interreligious dialogue, Mr. President: Regrettably, the story of faith has too often been twisted into a source of despair and destruction among peoples and nations. There are those who wish to instigate religious war. There are those who use faith to divide, rather than unite us. They camouflage their evil designs by invoking religious prejudice, in the hope of heightening a clash of civilizations.

In this era of propaganda on the clash of civilizations, we must especially pursue broader interfaith dialogue to promote solidarity. Our challenge is to redeem the true meaning of our faith, if we are to truly bring peace and prosperity to the world. We must make this challenge, an opportunity to forge religious understanding but we must not mistake tolerance and understanding of other faiths and belief systems as a blank check for abuse. We will never accept violence cloaked in religion by anyone at anytime.

Mr. President, the Philippines has actively advocated interfaith dialogue.

Interfaith dialogue is an official policy of the Philippine government. It is also a historical truth among our diverse peoples and beliefs. Faith is ingrained in the lives of our people. It is the primordial seed of humanity. It offers hope, confidence, courage and commitment to make a better global neighborhood.

As we integrate interfaith understanding in development policy, it becomes more effective in resolving conflict.

Our archipelago of more than 7,000 islands has had its share of religious strife, ethnic tension and violence.

For years, we have worked to achieve peace in Mindanao in Southern Philippines. The Peace Process was recently dealt a setback by violence carried out by lawless renegade elements of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front. But we are fully committed to the peace process. There is no alternative to peace. We are working to reach as much progress as possible on peace within the parameters set out by authentic dialogues with communities. However, before we can actively and effectively reactivate the peace process again in earnest, we must first bring stability back to the island, restore order and be able to trust that responsible elements of the MILF have regained control.

Religious leaders can speed up dialogue and reconciliation. They are our partners in the peace-making process.

The historic divide between Christians and Muslims in our country is narrowing dramatically. This is in no small part due to our focus on interfaith dialogue and a willingness to accept the sincerity of those who differ with us in faith.

The Bishop and Ulama Conference is our format for interfaith dialogue. It is a movement of Catholic and Christian bishops and Muslim ulamas organized to promote mutual understanding of faiths and religions for peace.

We all want to see peace and prosperity in the Philippines. Through interfaith dialogue under the leadership of the Bishop and Ulama Conference, through global engagement with the largest possible international involvement, including the UN, Saudi Arabia, Brunei, Indonesia, Libya, Malaysia and others in the Organization of the Islamic Conference, Spain, Sweden and the EU, the US, Japan, Australia and other bilateral ODA partners; and, through economic assistance at the community level, we are confident that peace will happen.

Mr. President: three years ago, we had the honor of chairing the first Summit on Interfaith Dialogue here in the UN.

At the regional level, we are one of the convenors of an ongoing series of Asia-Pacific interfaith dialogues that began in Indonesia in 2004. Subsequent dialogues were held in the Philippines in 2006, New Zealand in 2007 and Cambodia in 2008.

Presently, we are preparing to host the Special Non-Aligned Movement Ministerial Meeting on Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace and Development, scheduled in May 2009.

Our participation today in this initiative on culture of peace advances our relationship with Middle Eastern and Islamic nations. Their support in carrying out our interfaith dialogues has been critical to our progress in promoting peace in southern Philippines.

What we are doing together here today and tomorrow is every bit more powerful than bullets, military tanks and armaments to fight those who bring misery and violence to people at home or across the globe.

We must follow our faith and have faith in each other if we are to truly lift up the poor, transform war into peace and stamp down the intolerance and hatred wrought by a false reading of the divine message.

We maintain high hopes in inter-faith dialogue as a means for building bridges, to replace barriers between communities of different cultures and ethnicity.

We are here today united by our faith and determined to bridge the valley that unnecessarily divides us, whether we live across the street, across rivers, or across oceans and continents. We can and must bridge the divide through the alliance of civilizations so that we can advance the common good of humanity.

Let us embrace the power of dialogue here today and tomorrow for peace, development and human dignity.

Let us adopt Draft Resolution No. A/63/L24 Revision One, on the “Promotion of Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue, Understanding and Cooperation for Peace.”

I thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches of Her Excellency President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 63rd United Nations General Assembly Meeting: Culture of Peace

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 63rd United Nations General Assembly Meeting: Culture of Peace

[Delivered at the General Assembly Hall, UN Headquarters, New York City, November 12, 2008]

Thank you very much, Mr. President, Your Majesties, Your Excellencies, Mr. Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Mr. President, thank you for convening this high level meeting of the General Assembly. And congratulations to His Majesty, the Custodian of Two Holy Mosques, for drawing attention to the World Conference on Dialogue held in Madrid last May.

In that conference, Their Majesties, the King of Saudi Arabia and the King of Spain, brought together Jews, Muslims, Christians, Hindus, Buddhists and representatives of other religions in the hope of promoting understanding and tolerance among followers of the world's faiths. This is also the hope for this meeting here in New York.

The Philippines fully supports this initiative because we take a great interest in promoting world peace and in encouraging greater cross-religion exchange.

Allow me at the outset to introduce Draft Resolution No. A/63/L24 entitled "Promotion of Inter-religious and Intercultural Dialogue, Understanding and Cooperation for Peace," tabled jointly by the Philippines and Pakistan and co-sponsored by about 60 states. This draft resolution emerged as a consensus text after a series of consultations.

Among the salient points of the resolution is the affirmation that mutual understanding and inter-religious dialogue constitute an important part of the alliance of civilizations and of a culture of peace.

The resolution encourages the promotion of dialogue among the media from all cultures and civilizations. It emphasizes that everyone has the right to freedom of expression. It also affirms that the exercise of this right carries with it duties and responsibilities necessary for respect of the rights or reputations of others, protection of national security or of public order, or of public health or morals.

The resolution also requests for the proclamation of a UN decade for inter-religious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace.

I commend the resolution for adoption at the close of our plenary meeting tomorrow. This will demonstrate once again our solidarity for the promotion of interfaith dialogue as a powerful aid to ensure durable peace worldwide.

The resolution is especially relevant to the United Nations under the leadership of His Excellency Ban Ki-Moon because, for the first time in UN history, the Secretary-General has issued a report on interreligious and intercultural activities.

Likewise, the UNESCO works on interreligious dialogue...

Mr. President:

Regrettably, the story of faith has too often been twisted into a source of despair and destruction among peoples and nations. There are those who wish to instigate religious war. There are those who use faith to divide rather than unite us. They camouflage their evil designs by invoking religious prejudice in the hope of heightening a clash of civilizations.

In this era of propaganda on the clash of civilizations, we must especially pursue broader interfaith dialogue to promote solidarity. Our challenge is to redeem the true meaning of our faith if we are to truly bring peace and prosperity to the world. We must make this challenge, an opportunity to forge religious understanding but we must not mistake tolerance and understanding of other faiths and belief systems as a blank check for abuse. We will never accept violence cloaked in religion by anyone at anytime.

Mr. President:

The Philippines has actively advocated interfaith dialogue.

Interfaith dialogue is an official policy of the Philippine government. It is also a historical truth among our diverse peoples and beliefs. Faith is ingrained in the lives of our people. It is the primordial seed of humanity. It offers hope, confidence, courage and commitment to make a better global neighborhood.

As we integrate interfaith understanding in development policy, it becomes more effective in resolving conflict.

Our archipelago of more than 7,000 islands has had its share of religious strife, ethnic tension and violence.

For years, we have worked to achieve peace in Mindanao in Southern Philippines.

The Peace Process was recently dealt a setback by violence carried out by lawless renegade elements of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front. But we are fully committed to the peace process. There is no alternative to peace. We are working to reach as much progress as possible on peace within the parameters set out by authentic dialogues with communities. However, before we can actively and effectively reactivate the peace process again in earnest, we must first bring stability back to the island, restore order and be able to trust that responsible elements of the MILF have regained control.

Religious leaders can speed up dialogue and reconciliation. They are our partners in the peace-making process.

The historic divide between Christians and Muslims in our country is narrowing dramatically. This is in no small part due to our focus on interfaith dialogue and a willingness to accept the sincerity of those who differ with us in faith.

The Bishop and Ulama Conference is our format for interfaith dialogue. It is a movement of Catholic and Christian bishops and Muslim ulamas organized to promote mutual understanding of faiths and religions for peace.

We all want to see peace and prosperity in the Philippines. Through interfaith dialogue under the leadership of the Bishop and Ulama Conference; through global engagement with the largest possible international involvement, including the UN, Saudi Arabia, Brunei, Indonesia, Libya, Malaysia and others in the Organization of the Islamic Conference, Spain, Sweden and the EU, the US, Japan, Australia and other bilateral ODA partners; and through economic assistance at the community level, we are confident that peace will happen.

Mr. President:

Three years ago, we had the honor of chairing the first Summit on Interfaith Dialogue here in the UN.

At the regional level, we are one of the convenors of an ongoing series of Asia-Pacific interfaith dialogues that began in Indonesia in 2004. Subsequent dialogues were held in the Philippines in 2006, New Zealand in 2007 and Cambodia in 2008.

Presently, we are preparing to host the Special Non-Aligned Movement Ministerial Meeting on Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace and Development scheduled in May 2009.

Our participation today in this initiative on culture of peace advances our relationship with Middle Eastern and Islamic nations. Their support in carrying out our interfaith dialogues has been critical to our progress in promoting peace in southern Philippines.

What we are doing together here today and tomorrow is every bit more powerful than bullets, military tanks and armaments to fight those who bring misery and violence to people at home or across the globe.

We must follow our faith and have faith in each other if we are to truly lift up the poor, transform war into peace and stamp down the intolerance and hatred wrought by a false reading of the divine message.

We maintain high hopes in inter-faith dialogue as a means for building bridges to replace barriers between communities of different cultures and ethnicity.

We are here today united by our faith and determined to bridge the valley that unnecessarily divides us, whether we live across the street, across rivers, or across oceans and continents. We can and must bridge the divide through the alliance of civilizations so that we can advance the common good of humanity.

Let us embrace the power of dialogue here today and tomorrow—for peace, development and human dignity.

Let us adopt Draft Resolution No. A/63/L24 Revision One on the “Promotion of Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue, Understanding and Cooperation for Peace.”

I thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the 63rd United Nations General Assembly Meeting: Culture of Peace. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134707/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=6075&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of the Busuanga Airport [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa inagurasyon ng Busuanga Airport

[Ipinahayag sa Brgy. Ecalachao, Coron, Palawan, ika 17 ng Nobyembre, 2008]

Thank you very much Secretary Mendoza at congratulations sa iyo at lahat ng mga officials ng DOTC dito sa ating napakagandang bagong airport. Congratulations! (Applause)

Governor Joel Reyes, thank you very much for your kind remarks, at thank you for the recollections of the time when I came here to your fiesta and this was just a dirt airport and it was nice to see it now as a real holiday airport. Congratulations! (Applause)

Our Congressmen Tony Alvarez and Baham Mitra, Congratulations also! (Applause) And congratulations to Tony for your new airport also in San Vicente which was finished last October 31st and to Baham, congratulations on your forthcoming terminal which will be finished in May in 2009. (Applause)

Ambassador Choi Choong Kyung, thank you for this airport which was funded by a grant from KOICA. (Applause) Thank you for the friendship between the people of the Philippines and the people of Korea. I'm glad that you talked about your early struggles when the Philippines sent a contingent to Korea to help you in your fight against communism, and I'm very honored that at that time, the one who signed... who authored that resolution to send troops to Korea was Congressman Diosdado Macapagal, my father. (Applause)

Mayor Mario Reyes and all the officials of Coron in Busuanga, I say that because people get confused. They said, you know, we wanted to go to Busuanga Airport but they send us to Coron instead, so we have to tell everybody that it's one and the same airport, it's Coron, "comma" Busuanga. So, congratulations to you! (Applause) And may you be therefore now the hub of tourism in the Calamianes Islands.

Tamang-tama ang pagbukas nitong airport para sa Christmas holidays. Sabi nga ni Secretary Larry Mendoza punong-puno na raw, three times bigger na raw ang traffic dito sa Coron, Busuanga mula noong nagsimula itong pag-ayos ng airport na ito. At by the end of the year, sabi ni Larry, baka makaabot na ang full capacity ng airport baka kailangan mag-expand na naman tayo para sa GAA starting next year. (Applause)

At tamang-tama nga, we're opening this airport as we open the start of the holiday season. Habang papalapit ang Kapaskuhan, dapat nating bilangan ang ating mga grasya at higit na pag-asa at kumpiyansa, harapin ang kinabukasan. Sabi ng mga dalubhasa, "in a very stormy sea of global economic uncertainty, the Philippine economy is a relative island of calm."

Nitong Kapaskuhan, dapat magkasama-sama ang ating taong-bayan upang ipagdiwang ang pananampalataya at pamilya. Dapat magkaisa ang ating mga komunidad at isantabi ang mga personal na banggaan at mga alitan sa pulitika. Kaya ako'y nasisiyahan sa narinig ko sinabi ni Joel (applause) lahat ng kanyang mga kasamahan dito na nagtatrabaho sabay-sabay, sama-sama para sa kaunlaran ng Palawan. (Applause)

Dapat talaga ito ang ating paningin sa mga positibong bagay na kaya nating gawin sama-sama upang ma-ibayo ang ating mga buhay. Naniniwala tayo na magiging maganda ang ating kinabukasan, lalo na ang kinabukasan ng Calamianes Islands. (Applause)

Naniniwala ako sa pag-asa, pananalig at katatagan ng taong-bayang Pilipino. Titiyakin nating matyag ang pamahalaan sa paghatid ng mga serbisyo sa taong-bayan. Mahalagang pinagsisilbihan kayo ng pamahalaan at naibibigay sa inyo ang mga nararapat na serbisyo.

Ginagawa ng inyong pamahalaan ang lahat sa abot ng kakayahan upang maglagay ng pagkain sa bawat mesa at protektahan ang inyong kita mula sa mataas na presyo ng bilihin at mataas na inflation. Tuloy din nating pinamumuhunan ang sistema ng kalinga sa kalusugan, edukasyon at serbisyong panlipunan ng bansa.

Nagsisikap tayong pababain ang presyo ng gasolina, ng bigas, ng pagkain at patuloy na paramihin ang mga trabaho at ang pamumuhunan na patuloy na lilikha ng mga pagkakataong trabaho para sa higit pa nating mga kababayan. Kaya sabi nga ni Joel kanina, eto na yung mga nagsimula ng Boracay Boat Station 1 ay maglalagay na dito sa Calamianes. (Applause) At yung Banyan Tree na nagsimula ng Phuket ay magsisimula na rin ng construction doon sa isang pulo dito sa Busuanga. (Applause) Kaya kasama sa mga importanteng pamumuhunan na naglilikha ng maraming trabaho ang turismo.

Sa una nating State of the Nation Address nung 2001, sinabi natin na higit itutulak ang mga industriyang mabilis lumago at kung saan pinakamarami ang trabahong may matataas na kita. Isa rito ang “Information and Communication Technology”, at bukod doon isa pa rin na malaki ang lamang natin ay turismo.

Malaki ang lamang natin sa magagandang natural na tanawin sa ating bansa, at sa likas na kabaitan ng ating taong-bayan. Sinasabi nga nila — eto ha, hindi nanggagaling sa akin ito — sinasabi nga nila ang pinakamagandang probinsya raw sa buong Pilipinas ay ang Palawan. (Applause) Eh mabuti sabihin ko na hindi nanggagaling sa akin, narinig ko ito sa ibang tao. Sinabi nating gagawin natin ang mga kalsada at mga pasilidad upang maka-abot ang mga turista doon sa mga magagandang tanawin, at yan ang pinagdidiwang natin ngayon. Nararapat na pambansang prayoridad ang turismo dahil sa epekto nito sa panlipunang kaunlaran. Sa trabaho, matatawag natin isang “big tent” industry ang turismo. Ano ang ibig sabihin ng “big tent”? Ibig sabihin noon lumilikha ito ng maraming trabaho, maging skilled o unskilled. Maglilikha ito ng trabaho saan man may potensyal ang turismo, hindi kailangang sa siyudad. At bawat dayuhang bisita, sabi ni Secretary Ace Durano, ay lumilikha ng isang trabaho. At dahil personal ang pag-asikaso dito, personal ang serbisyo, hindi napapalitan ng makina ang tao kaya makakabigay ng katiyakan sa trabaho, yun ang kabutihan ng turismo.

Sa ating State of the Nation Address noong 2006, pinakilala natin ang superregion na tinatawag na “Central Philippines”. Itong malaking rehiyon ay sinasakop ang Palawan at Romblon, Visayas at Bohol, hanggang sa mga hilagang isla ng Mindanao na Camiguin at Siargao. At isang dahilan kung bakit inimbiba ko si Governor Carrion ng Marinduque ay titignan natin kung ano ang magagawa natin para maisama rin ang Marinduque sa Central Philippines.

Sa pangunguna ng Boracay, Cebu, Bohol at Palawan, itong apat na probinsyang ito, humahatak ito sa mahigit kalahati sa mga turistang dumadayo sa Pilipinas, kaya Congratulations sa inyo! Kaya naman ang prayoridad dito ay pamumuhunan sa turismo.

Kailangan ng turismo ng Palawan, gaya nang sabi ko kanina, na ayusin ang airport ng Puerto Princesa, Busuanga at San Vicente, yun ang sinabi ko noong 2006. At kailangan magtayo ng bagong airport sa Balabac, at kailangan makumpleto ang kalsadang El Nido-Bataraza na nagsisilbing backbone ng buong Palawan.

Gaya nang sabi ko, tapos na yung upgrade ng San Vicente noong Halloween, holiday din. At yung Puerto Princesa inaayos ang terminal matatapos sa Mayo at sabi nga ni Baham, para naman maging full development lang bagamat ngayon kaya na ang mga eroplano galing sa ibang bansang malalapit ay gusto rin ni Baham — ito siguro masyadong malaki baka hindi tayo makakuha ng grant sa KOICA — but Ambassador, according to Congressman Baham Mitra we will try to have a loan from the Korean Exim Bank for the airport development of Puerto Princesa. (Applause)

Ang Balabac naman, inaasahan natin na pribadong sektor ang gagawa pero halos tapos na ang feasibility study para hindi na sila ang gumastos para sa feasibility study. At marami na ring bahaging natapos sa El Nido-Bataraza Highway. At upang mapabilis ito sinabi ko kay Secretary Ebdane na kunin ang pondo sa Malampaya funds. (Applause) At narito tayo ngayon sa pagtutupad ng pangako tungkol sa airport sa bayan ng Coron sa isla ng Busuanga. Inuulit ko, kagaya ng sabi ko, maraming nalilito, akala dalawang airport ang Coron at Busuanga. Hindi nga dalawang airport isa lamang pero napakaganda na. (Applause)

At sinabi ni Governor Reyes na ipapangalan itong airport ng Francisco B. Reyes Coron, Busuanga Airport bilang parangal sa Mayor ng Coron noong 1936 hanggang 1939 na siyang nagbigay ng donasyong lupa na tinatayuan nitong airport ngayon. (Applause)

Bukod sa turismo, ang Palawan rin ay isa sa mga pangunahing probinsiyang nagtatanim ng palay na inuunang bigyan ng pamahalaan ng pangangailangan sa pagtanim, pag-ani at pagbenta dahil malaki ang potensyal na mapalago ang ani dito. And our farmers are getting the investments they need. Patuloy ang suporta ng pamahalaan sa agrikultura, pinakamalaki sa kasaysayan. Kung nitong nakaraang taon ay kulang sa 100,000 metric tons na palay ang binili sa mga Pilipinong magsasaka, ngayon gagawin natin itong...ginagawa natin itong isang milyong tonelada, upang ma-engganyo ang pagtaas ng produksyon ng bigas. At bunga nito, umaasa tayo na patuloy bababa ang inflation rate at dapat patuloy ring bumaba ang presyo ng bigas. Inaasahan nating lalaki ang kakayahan ng inyong paycheck o kinikita. Kaya sa mga magsasaka ng Palawan at sa iba pang probinsiyang nakapag-ani ng surplus, maraming maraming salamat sa inyo. (Applause)

Sa araw-araw, dapat nating ihandog ang ating sarili sa pagtulong sa ating mga kababayang mahihirap at kapuspalad, ngunit lalung-lalo na sa panahon ng Kapaskuhan. Sa panahong ito ng pag-asa, pagmamahalan at pananalig, dapat magtrabaho tayo upang mabigyan ng oportunidad at pangkabuhayan at pantaong dignidad ang bawat Pilipino.

At itong airport na ito, na magpapalago ng turismo, yun nga ang kanyang magagawa dito sa Northern Palawan.

Ang pagsisikap ng mga magsasaka sa Palawan at ang bagong airport na ito ay nagpapalakas ng tiwala natin sa ating kinabukasan at sa pag-asa at katatagan ng mga Palaweño at ng taong-bayang Pilipino.

Kaya sa inyong lahat mga taga-Coron, congratulations! Mga taga-Busuanga, congratulations! Mga taga Northern Palawan at buong probinsya ng Palawan, congratulations sa inyong lahat!

Maraming salamat! (Applause)

May you have many more tourists to come.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the inauguration of the Busuanga Airport. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134654/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=8829&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2008 General Assembly of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP) and Gawad Saka 2007-2008 Awarding Ceremonies

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2008 General Assembly of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP) and Gawad Saka
2007-2008 Awarding Ceremonies

[Delivered on November 19, 2008]

Maraming salamat Secretary Yap sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin at maraming salamat na ipinagsama natin yung pagbibigay ng parangal sa ating mga magsasaka dito sa harap ng ating mga punong-bayan.

Sa napakasipag na pangulo ng League of Municipalities, Mayor Monching Guico, at sa lahat ng mga ibat-ibang mayor na narito itong araw na ito, magandang hapon sa inyong lahat, Mabuhay kayo! (Applause)

City Mayor Lim, thank you for welcoming all of us and I also like to greet Mayor Escalante of Negros Occidental and all of the other officials of the different municipalities coming from all over the Philippines to be here today.

I'd also like to greet the members of the House of Representatives who are here today and also the members of the Diplomatic Corps who are here with us today, thank you very much for being with our mayors.

At sa ating mga binigyan ng parangal ng Gawad Saka, congratulations sa inyo, ating mga outstanding farmers! (Applause)

Hiningi kong magsama ang LMP at Gawad Saka sa isang okasyon upang bigyan diin ang isa sa mga importanteng trabaho ng mga punong-bayan ngayon — food security o tiyakin ang supply at pagmudmod ng bigas.

Maliwanag na patunay ng layuning ng LMP para sa kaunlaran ang tema ng inyong Kongreso ngayon: “LMP Achieving Greater Heights, Strengthening Local Governance Through Collective Action to Address Issues on Food Security, Climate Change, Local Economic Development and Peace and Security”; And we are all engaged in battles on all these fronts.

Pag-uusapan din niyo lahat ng mga araw na ito. Ngunit pinag-uusapan niyo lahat ito but at this point in time, it is very obvious to everybody that we continue to battle hunger. As Artie said, “The global spike in the price of rice, food and fuel has put a tremendous strain on all Filipinos.” And obviously as public servants, you and I — our main concern, our first concern is for the people particularly the poor. The high prices have put more pressure on our people kaya isa sa ginagawa ng pamahalaan ay tumulong upang itong pressure sa sweldo o kita ng mamamayan ay magkaroon ng ginhawa. One of the things that we try to do in spite of the increase in the price of gasoline and world oil in the past months we try to keep the cost of transportation down. And we thank the transport sector for having been so cooperative.

Ngunit sinabi naman natin sa kanila ay tutulungan natin sila pati yung mga nagsusweldo sa kanila, mga driver, mga konduktor. Kaya kanina ay nagbigay tayo ng mga unang microfinance checks sa ilalim ng programang D.R.I.V.E. Eto yung dagdag sa kita ng mga tsuper at konduktor ng bus at jeepney sa pamamagitan ng pagpahiram ng microfinance saka yung mga maybahay at kanilang mga pamilya, mga kaanak. That's one of the things that we are doing to help ease the pressure on the paycheck.

During the particularly difficult times earlier this year, with a huge spike in prices on a global level, we work extra hard to keep prices in check like the price of transportation and to ensure the supply of basic food, fuel and rice for people continues.

We had to respond to this global challenge in a swift, measured and targeted manner. Our first priority was to stabilize the supply of rice as harvested. Batid naman natin na mula pa noong panahon ng Kastila, ten percent ng ating kinakain ay nanggagaling sa ibang bansa dahil ang ating bansa ay bulubundukin, konti lang yung malalaking ilog kagaya ng Mekong. And so, we saw early on that rice prices would climb; so we went to the rice exporter such as Vietnam and put in early bids to buy rice before the major rice surge hit. And once we secured the needed supply, we needed to make sure we had a distribution mechanism in the right place to get the rice to the right people at the right price. And we achieved this by working through churches, schools, civic organizations and you, the municipal chief executives.

Salamat sa tulong ninyo nakaabot ang pagkain sa mesa ng mahihirap.

(Applause)

We also needed to ensure that no price gouging occurred. We have done that by prosecuting unscrupulous vendors and the officials conniving with them. And Artie Yap had to file cases against officials within his own attached agencies.

We will continue to work tirelessly in cooperating with the NGOs, the faith-based groups, the farmers organizations and our municipal chief executives to make sure that our people don't go hungry. It is important that the poorest among us continue to receive assistance with the rice they purchase. It is part of our commitment to share the results of economic success with all Filipinos.

As a matter of good public policy, we must target those who need it most and not get in the business of a general subsidy that hurts the true marketplace and allows for free riders who can afford market rate rice or to take advantage of subsidized rice that should only go to the poor. Kaya napakalaki ang papel ng local governments para sigurado na yung mga maykaya naman hindi sila yung bumibili ng subsidized rice. So the local chief executives remain an important part of our rice distribution program. But this is as far as the situation this year is concerned, and we don't want this to happen again, so that what happened will not be repeated. The most important measure taken by our administration with your support and the support of our model farmers is to move to rice self-sufficiency.

To that end, we are investing heavily in our farmers. Kaya yung sinabi ni Monching Guico na dapat gawin sa budget ng DA at yung technology transfer ng DA ay sabi ni Artie, "Yun ay tutuparin niya, yung hiling ng ating mga LMP."

(Applause)

Kung matatandaan din ninyo nung Hulyo tinaas natin mula sa 11 pesos ginawa nating 17 pesos — hindi ba, congresswoman ng BUTIL? — yung binibili nating palay sa NFA, ngunit noon ay less than 100,000 metric tons ang binili natin. Kaya upang maging mas masigasig ang pagtanim ng palay sa mga magsasaka, itong mataas na presyong 17 pesos na binibili sa magsasaka, inutos natin sa NFA na hindi 33,000 metric tons ang bilhin kung hindi one million metric tons mula sa ating magsasaka.

Kaya yun, we hope by continuing to provide this financial support to our farmers we hope to be rice self-sufficient within five years. But remember, agriculture is a devolved department kaya napakalaki ang papel ng mga mayor because at the end of the day, your IRA is supposed to include agricultural services. So therefore, food security in your jurisdiction must be addressed by the local chief executives.

And I thank you that you recognize that responsibility based on your program of showing best practices in agricultural productivity. But I am also glad that you have not placed your obligation to the environment and to peace and security in the backseat.

Let me speak about peace and security. War is never the answer. We must provide security and order and protect the people especially in Mindanao from renegade violence. At the same time, in Mindanao, we must reach out in authentic dialogues with the people in the communities to move forward with the peace process.

Our new peace policy for dealing with armed groups is the framework of “Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration” which is in fact part of the Hague Convention. And as espoused by the communities, your communities, the DDR will be a notice to armed groups that the force of arms does not entitle them to representing our people. Sino ba ang kumakatawan ng ating taongbayan, yung bang may armas o yung hinalal nila kagaya ng ating mga punongbayan? Kaya kayo ang tunay na kinatawan ng taong-bayan, hindi yung mga may armas.

We hope that this new policy will restart the peace process and move our country closer to lasting peace. In the search for peace, it is really essential that the voices of our people, your people be heard. Armed groups claim to speak for the people when in fact they only speak for themselves. In the authentic dialogue to the people in the communities, the government is not even the one taking the lead— the national government anyway. We’re assuming a supporting role and we are letting credible non-government institutions that are supporting the peace effort spearhead the discussions and consultations on the problematic concerns. We hope that this will strengthen the final outline of a peace agreement which I hope, and I’m optimistic, we can achieve with the support of the local governments.

Indeed, we long for the day when we finally have lasting peace in Mindanao, when we are self-sufficient in rice, when our children are sure that we have preserved our resources for their use as well. And when going abroad for a job is not the only choice for a Filipino worker. Yun ang kailangan. Kaya kayo rin ay inaasikaso niyo ang local development.

To hope that Filipinos no longer need to go abroad for a job is a tall order because it is a longstanding problem. But let us together through your governance, through your local development try to break a cycle that has been part of our economic situation for so many generations. We are making progress.

The first thing we needed to do was to acknowledge the problem that we cannot continue to send our people abroad as the only choice for employment. It is essential to create good high-paying jobs here at home so that going abroad is a career choice and not the only option. It will take maybe another 10 to 15 years to break this offshore cycle but it is happening. Itong walong milyong Pilipino na nasa ibang bansa hindi na lumaki yung numero sa ating administrasyon, habang may lumalabas may pumapasok, andito rin, so dumoble na ang kanilang kita. So, it is now more for going abroad for a good salary as a career choice, not those who have to go abroad for starvation wages there.

And I am pleased that the progress, the progress we have made in establishing the Business Process Outsourcing sector and in successfully competing for value-added BPO business is a good example of our ability to address this challenge. Gusto natin na magkaroon ng maraming call center sa buong bansa. Hindi natin kayang maglagay sa lahat ng inyong mga bayan pero sana naman lahat ng inyong probinsya. So, I have instructed the Commission on ICT to make a technical study on the resources needed to transform every province in the country into an ICT-enabler.

In addressing these issues of most concerned to you, you are not without armor nor artillery. Etong mga panukalang batas na sinabi ni Monching Guico na sana ay i-certify as urgent dahil mas gaganda ang inyong kakayahan pagka lumabas ito sa mga Committee, Monching, we will certify them as urgent. (Applause)

In the meantime, siguro kung naaalala ninyo sa lahat ng mga pangulo itong ating administrasyon ang nagtiyak that you get your IRA in full. (Applause) In fact, we’re even paying what previous administrations owed you. (Applause) O, naalala ko si Joey Lina nung... and Joey and Don Emilio nung siya ay DILG secretary dahil gobernador siya yun ang parating nina-nag niya sa akin, tanggalin na natin yung — ano ang tawag doon, yung LGSEF? — at ibigay na natin buong-buo sa mga punong-bayan at mga gobernador gaya nina Governor Cerilles at saka si Governor Sally, who is here today.

The national government strives harder so that you will get your IRA in full and on time. And I know that you have been following up the IRA differentials for the years 2001 and 2004 when we were on a reenacted budget, and so I signed EO 723 last May to give the LGUs a choice between monetizing your differentials in advance at a discounted rate or receiving them in full spread over seven years. We have fast-tracked the EO so that the IRA differential could be used as an additional shield against inflationary pressures, and majority of the LGUs committed to their differentials to increase agricultural production. And we hold you to your promise. You can really play pivotal roles to ensure supply and distribution of rice in your own municipalities.

During the LMP Assembly last year, I directed the PMS — if some of you remember — to make sure that the best high school students from every municipality will be assured of a college education. And to allocate at least one ambulance, fire truck or patrol car to every chapter for a town that does not have any ambulance, patrol car or fire truck, you remember that? (Applause) So, the PMS informs me that based on the choices you have made, seven fire trucks and eight patrol cars have been distributed, and 67 ambulances shall be distributed within sixty days. (Applause) In the course of serving which towns have no ambulance, we came across the information that there are many municipalities that have ambulances but they are no longer serviceable. So many, about 2,000. Well,... and so what we are doing for these towns, you already have an ambulance but it's in an advanced state of disrepair, with bridge financing from the Land Bank, the PCSO shall make available to every municipality without a serviceable ambulance, on a cost-sharing basis, one ambulance each. So yun ang gagawin natin — LMP, PCSO and Land Bank para makuha ninyo kaagad.

As for the town scholars, PMS shall convene the CHED, DepEd and DBM to implement the program starting this summer session. Kaya andami-dami nating pwedeng gawin magkasama tayo, magkaroon ng pagkain sa bawat mesa, magkaroon ng edukasyon sa pinakamatalinong mga bata, at maayos ang kalusugan ng mga mamamayan lalo na pag may emergency. Andaming kailangang gawin para ngayon o kinabukasan kaya pati ang ating kalikasan ay inaalaan ng mga local governments.

So, I thank you for all of these, and I thank what Monching Guico said in his speech that you the mayors are not affected by the noise prematurely generated by the 2010 elections. (Applause)

Thank you for being focused on your jobs. Thank you for realizing that effective governing is not a popularity contest. (Applause) Thank you for understanding that, the people deserve for their leaders to deliver results. (Applause) And finally, thank you because you stand up and deliver.

Maraming salamat. Congratulations sa inyong lahat! (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the 2008 General Assembly of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP) and Gawad Saka 2007-2008 Awarding Ceremonies. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134644/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=8903&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of U.P.-Ayala Land Techno Hub

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the inauguration of U.P.-Ayala Land Techno Hub

[Delivered at Commonwealth Ave., Diliman, Quezon City, November 21, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Alabastro for your introduction. And thank you for helping me so much make Science and Technology the foundation of Philippine Economic Development.

Fernando Zobel de Ayala, Jimmy Ayala and the other officials of the Ayala Land; Dr. Roman, CHED Chair Angeles and the other members of the Board of Regents and the whole U.P. family; Mayor Belmonte; our Congresspersons from Quezon City: Nanette Daza and Annie Susano; Vice-Mayor Herbert Bautista and everybody from Quezon City, to all of you, congratulations!

The U.P.-Ayala Land Techno Hub is one giant step to bring our country closer to the goal we declared in 2001 of making technology the foundation of our economic development. This is an important step together with the three billion pesos that the government is investing, has been investing in R&D manpower development, and the one billion pesos that was mentioned by President Roman that we put in the national budget for U.P. to build its own Science and Technology Complex.

And now here we are, we have the S&T Park of the U.P., with the Techno Hub as indeed its hub. And as Jim Ayala said, we can now create our own version of Stanford University's Silicon Valley and MIT's Route 128, the birthplace of so much research that has changed lives and lifestyles. The numerous applications of the research from these two cradles of modern technology today define the way people all over the world do business, work and spend their leisure. And we hope this U.P. -Ayala Techno Park will do the same. With this Science and Technology Park, of which this hub is a central portion, we hope that U.P., the country's premier academic institution, will ignite a new technological revolution that will upgrade our total science and technology capability and bring our country to the threshold of the first-world in 20 years.

This Park will serve as our country's foremost IT laboratory, training ground and incubator of new and high value-adding products and services. Together with the Science and Technology Complex and the Science and Technology Park, it will provide the nurturing environment for new IT-based businesses that transform new technologies into useful and commercially viable services.

We must make sure that it has the physical infrastructure to support the academic, scientific and technological pursuits of noted U.P.-based specialists. And as Jim said earlier, this community-like environment, campus-like environment will strengthen the synergy between the academics in R&D and the technology-based entrepreneurs. The closeness to U.P. will offer the academics a better appreciation of the needs and risks of businesses, and the entrepreneurs located so close to U.P. here in the hub and in the entire Science and Technology Park will give the entrepreneurs valuable information about R&D.

As the pioneer academically-based IT Park, U.P.- Ayala Land Techno Hub plays a central role in the future of the bigger U.P. Science and Technology Park.

Techno Hub will set the standard against which future S&T Parks and locators will be measured. And that is the same for the country as a whole. Even in the face of new challenges brought about by the financial asset meltdown and the deepening recession abroad, our priority projects such as technology and R&D development will continue.

We all know, that there is a global economic crisis that has been responsible for driving up the prices of food, fuel and rice in the Philippines and around the world. In the country, we are not in crisis, thank God. But, we are facing strong challenges like all other countries. During these troubled times, it is the role of the government to help insulate the Filipino people from these price shocks and economic pressure. That is why the government is doing everything in its power to put food on the table, and protect the paycheck from high prices and inflation. And one way by which we are protecting the U.P.'s paycheck is to increase the paycheck. That is why we have exempted you from salary standardization and we've also given (applause) the power to the Board of Regents to increase your salaries. We are also continuing to invest not only in education like U.P. but in the nation's system of healthcare and social services.

Were it not for the painful reforms of the past seven years — and we thank our Congresspersons for helping much make those fiscal reforms — the impact on our country of the global meltdown would be much worst as it is in many other developing countries. Instead, the credit rating agency Standard & Poor says that, "the Philippine economy— in a very stormy sea of economic global uncertainty, the Philippine economy is an island of relative calm." (Applause) But this relative strength and resilience of our people and our economy is still no consolation to the average Filipino who is paying higher prices for basic commodities. We are very aware of the pressures the average Filipino faces from high prices and high rates of inflation. We know the average Filipino is concerned about job security and the buying power of his wages. We are also concerned. That is why we are working hard to keep the prices of rice, food and fuel down and to continue to increase the number of jobs and the investments that will continue to generate employment opportunities for more of our countrymen.

What we are inaugurating today is one of those investments. We are dealing with the effects of the worldwide financial crisis through a comprehensive program that creates emergency jobs through pump priming measures, ensures food on every table, delivers targeted relief to the most vulnerable sectors, and encourages investments like this in industries with high resistance to the economic crisis.

Right now, the ICT sector is one of the areas where growth is robust, employment generation is on the rise, and investors are excited and placing money to back up that excitement.

Yesterday, we were very alarmed to read the news that one of the call centers supposedly laid off 700 workers. So we checked with that center, ACS, and they totally denied it. In fact, they are looking for more workers. And they were even telling us the story that when other call centers like Teletech and others read the news, they called up ACS and said, where are the workers you're laying off, we want to absorb them right away. But ACS says we're not laying off anyone. We're looking for more.

And so because of this robustness of ICT, I have instructed the Commission on ICT to make a technical study on the resources needed to transform not just Sonny Belmonte's hub but also every province in the country not necessarily a hub like this but to be an ICT-enabler.

After completing the technical studies, the national government through the CICT, shall guide the LGUs concerned on how to pursue the technology programs with these twin objectives:

1. Develop a technology hub — a small one, not one like this — in each of the country's provinces with the hub capable of hosting, at the very least, contact center operations; and
2. Expand the capabilities of provinces that are already currently ICT-enablers so that they can increase their absorptive capacities and expand into hardcore ICT operations.

The national government will merely provide guidance and advice on a menu of pathways and strategies towards these objectives. It will be the LGU leaders who will decide on the level of technology and development they want; each to its own need. And Sonny has decided that this city will have the highest level of ICT; each to his own need. And this is what we can do, given that we have not been able to put together a national broadband. This is a good second best.

In the ICT jargon, we need to “wire” the entire country to attract more BPO and hardcore technology companies and help train young Filipinos into world-class workers in programming, embedded technologies and network engineering.

There is a wealth of technical and created talent from where to draw this world-class pool of technology workers and there is the U.P. Science and Technology Complex to develop their potentials.

Let us direct the talent of the young away from hacking and other disruptive undertakings into productive ones. The CICT can utilize the National Computer Center and seek the support of state colleges and universities specializing on courses in ICT, like the U.P. We cannot let this window of opportunity close.

Technology has also helped the government make sure that we now have a solid supply of rice for the foreseeable future. Furthermore, we are happy that distribution of rice is working. The people are getting the rice they need.

Our farmers are getting the investments they need. Instead of buying only 30,000 metric tons of rice from our farmers as before, this harvest season government is buying one million metric tons. This should encourage rice production to go up. With this, inflation has started to come down. The price of rice together with fuel has come down. And we expect the earning power of U.P. employees and others’ paychecks to increase. We want to harness the wonders of technology to produce more food, create more jobs — as what will be created here — and improve our productivity. The U.P.-Ayala Techno Hub and the whole S&T Park and the U.P. S&T Complex will help achieve all these objectives.

So, I thank Ayala Land. I thank the early locators, who are already here, sounds like a nice place to spend an afternoon having coffee and spaghetti here. I thank you all for your continuing faith in the nation’s ability to stand up to any challenge.

Our people are as optimistic as you, and as eager to work harder to get our country back on the growth track.

This afternoon, we leave for the APEC Leaders Meeting in Peru. We are optimistic as we leave about our future and the hope, optimism and resilience of the Filipino people, because we are revitalized by what we see here.

We will express to the other leaders of APEC the hope of our people that in seeking common ground on ways to coordinate assistance to our economies, we must do so in a way that puts the interests of the poor and the dispossessed ahead of the rich and the powerful.

As we inaugurate a symbol of a new age of technology in the Philippines, let us continue to be hopeful that the global storm will soon subside.

Let us wish the whole world the best. And here within our country, let us resolve to work even harder to keep our economy resilient.

To Ayala Land and U.P. for your contribution to these important goals, congratulations and thank you. (Applause)

* * *

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s speech during the Inauguration of U.P.-Ayala Land Techno Hub. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134635/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=9493&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Handog ni Pangulong Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo para sa Economically-Displaced Overseas Filipino Workers

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Handog ni Pangulong Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo para sa Economically-Displaced Overseas Filipino Workers

[Delivered in Malacañang, Manila, December 5, 2008]

Ang pagtulong ng mga Pilipinong nagtatrabaho sa ibang bansa na nangangailangan ng suporta ng pamahalaan ay patakarang di lalabagin ng ating pamahalaan. Kahit kailan, hindi tayo tumatalikod na gawin ang lahat ng makakaya upang matulungan ang expatriate Filipino workers na dumaranas ng hirap.

Sa ngayong mga sumusubok na panahon para sa expatriate Filipino worker, hindi dapat nagpapabaya ang pamahalaan. Dapat suklian ang ating expatriate Filipino workers, sa kabayanihang ipinapakita nila. Moral na tungkulin ng pamahalaan at inisyatibo ng patakaran ang mabilisang pagtugon sa agarang pangangailangan nila.

Sa ngayon, it is only a trickle of our overseas Filipino workers or expatriate Filipino workers that have lost their jobs because of the world financial crisis. In fact, some of these have already found new jobs. We have 200 Filipino workers on shipping companies coming back but they have left again or are leaving again because they have found new employment.

Nakikipagtulungan tayo ngayon sa ilan, 100 plus, na nawalaan ng trabaho doon sa Taiwan upang mabigyan ng mga sumusunod na tulong; Nandito ang ating presidente ng PhilHealth dahil binibigyan sila ng PhilHealth card para sa medical insurance; nandito ang vice president ng SSS dahil nagbibigay rin tayo ng SSS cards; at, nandito ang ating Chairman and Director-General ng TESDA, si Buboy Syjuco, na malaking-malaki ang approval rating, second to the highest, only a few points behind the highest sa TESDA. Congratulations, Buboy! At ang kanyang dala, na nandoon sa baskets ninyo, ay scholarship mula sa TESDA upang magkamit kayo ng mga bagong kasanayan at mahahasa ang inyong kagalingan, at nang maaari kayong makipagsabayan saan man sa mundo.

Ngayon yung mga tseke na binigay natin ay tseke para lang bayaran yung mga materials ng Technology and Resource Center o TRC, nandito naman yung ating head ng TRC na magbibigay ng ensayo sa inyo. Hindi pa ito yung livelihood, iba pa ang livelihood check, at yun naman pagkatapos ay ia-assess kung ano ang balak niyong gawin para matulungan kayo sa inyong bagong livelihood. At yung tsekeng yun, yung susunod na tseke, yun ang magagamit sa pagsimula ng mga gustong mag-negosyo sa ilalim ng ating Emergency Livelihood Program.

Ang mga ito ay nagsisilbing programa na nagbibigay ng panandaliang tulong sa mga expatriate Filipino workers na nawalan ng trabaho. Napakahalaga ng nai-ambag ninyo sa ating bansa, kaya't nararapat lang na maibigay sa inyo ang buo at walang aliniangang suporta ng pamahalaan. Habang isinasagawa natin ang mabilisang pagresponde sa inyong agarang pangangailangan, nagtatrabaho tayo sa mga patakarang mas malaki at may mas malawak na sinasakupan upang tulungan ang ating mga bagong bayani.

Mag-papairal tayo ng buong programang pagtanaw ng utang na loob sa ating mga expatriate Filipino workers, para tulungan yung mga napipilitang umuwi dahil ang mga bansa kung saan nagtatrabaho ay kasalukuyang hinahagupit sa krisis sa ekonomiya na ang tindi at sakop ay hindi pa maarok.

Ang Department of Labor and Employment at ang OWWA ang mangunguna sa pagpapatupad nitong payback program ng gobyerno para sa mga expatriate Filipino workers. Ang unang bahagi nitong programang pagsusukli ay ang pagtatag ng Filipino Expatriate Livelihood Support Fund sa halagang 250 million pesos mula sa OWWA, at kung kailangan suportado ng mga ahensiya ng gobyerno na magpapahiram ng pera. Ang mga expatriate Filipino workers na nawalan ng trabaho ay makakakuha sa pondong ito, pautang para tumulong sa pagsisimula ng negosyo, pagpapatuloy ng pag-aaral o pagkamit ng kasanayan, o sa panimulang kapital sa anumang gawaing pangkabuhayan.

Dapat gawin agad ng DOLE ang Implementing Guidelines.

Kailangan simple lang ang mga alituntuning dapat upang makapangutang kaagad. Ang mga nagbabalik na expatriate workers ay hindi dapat mapapasa-ilalim sa mga masalimuot at walang katuturang regulasyon or red tape.

Inatasan ko ang DOLE at OWWA na makipag-ugnayan sa mga ahensya ng pamahalaan, kaya nga nakipag-ugnayan sa TRC para sa ekonomiya at pamumuhunan upang matukoy ang mga negosyong maaaring pasukin ng mga nagbabalik na expatriates.

Ang ikalawang bahagi nitong reciprocity program ay ang suporta ng pamahalaan, na ibibigay ng buong-buo, upang tulungan ang mga nagbabalik na manggagawang Pilipino sa paghahanap ng mga trabahong kumikita ng maganda. Dalawang patakaran ang nakapaloob sa bahaging ito:

Una, ang paglikha ng mga trabaho dito sa ating bansa na makakapagbigay ng maganda ng kita. Meron ilan sa inyo, sabi niyo naghahanap kayo ng trabaho dito.

Pangalawa, ang puspusang paghahanap ng mga bagong merkado sa ibang bansa para sa ating manggagawa, pati na ang mga nagtatrabaho sa mga barko.

At kanina, masayang ni-report ni Secretary Nitoy Roque sa akin, 100 plus ang nawalan ng trabaho doon sa isang pabrika sa Taiwan, pero sabi ni Nitoy Roque, may 1,000 jobs available sa hotel and restaurant industry ng Bulgaria, kaya kaagad four times ang jobs available sa nawalaan ninyo.

So, upang makakuha ng mga serbisyong ito, inatasan ko ang DOLE at OWWA na maglagay ng mga opisina sa lahat ng probinsiya o desk, na magbabagay ng trabaho sa kagalingan, kakayahan at experience ng nagbabalik na manggagawa. Dapat din magkaroon ng palagiang online information tungkol sa mga bakanteng trabaho, at dapat libre itong information sa mga nagbabalik na expatriates.

At para sa ating bumabalik na expatriate Filipino workers na gustong lumipat ng ibang mga bansa kung saan kailangan ang inyong kaalaman at kagalingan, inatasan ko — bukod pa dito sa Bulgaria na 1,000 jobs available kaagad sa hotel and restaurant industry — gumawa ako ng Administrative Order na ang Philippine Overseas Employment Administration ay dapat magpatupad ng isangmarketing blitz upang lumawak ang merkado para sa Filipino expatriates.

So again, the government, even if it's only a trickle of our workforce that's coming back, the government will not sit idly and do nothing for our modern-day heroes in this time of great economic uncertainty.

Hindi pababayaang ng pamahalaan ang ating mga bagong bayani sa panahong ito na walang katiyakan sa ekonomiya.

We assure you of full and unequivocal support.

Sa inyong lahat, ating returning expatriate Filipino workers, good luck sa inyong bagong hakbang ng inyong career path!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches of Her Excellency President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the walk-through of EDSA-Quezon Avenue loading and unloading provincial stations and connecting footbridges [Filipino]

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the walk-through of EDSA-Quezon Avenue loading and unloading provincial stations and connecting footbridges

[Delivered on December 5, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Mayor Sonny Belmonte, at maraming salamat sa ginagamit mo yung pondo ng Quezon City para tumulong gumawa ng mga kalsadang kinakailangan ng national government. Maraming salamat doon.

Chairman Bayani Fernando, maraming salamat din sa iyong malasakit sa kalagayan ng mga commuters mula sa probinsya at patungong probinsya. Gusto ko rin batiin yung ating mga congresspersons ng Quezon City: si Mat Defensor, si Annie Susano, si Nanette Daza; yung ating mga gobernador mula sa Central and Southern Luzon: si Governor Tet Garcia, Governor Mendoza, Governor Umali, Governor Lazaro at Governor Yap. At nandito rin yung mga mayor ng Metro Manila na si Mayor Fernando saka si Mayor Ureta, si Vice Mayor Bautista, ating mga opisyal ng DOTC at saka ng MMDA, ating mga members ng transport sector, congratulations sa ating lahat!

Dumaranas ang daigdig ng isang krisis sa ekonomiya na naging dahilan ng pagtataas ng presyo ng pagkain, langis at bigas dito sa Pilipinas at sa buong mundo. Dito sa Pilipinas wala tayong krisis, ngunit humaharap tayo sa mga malalakas na hamon. Sa maproblemanag panahon tulad nito, tungkulin ng pamahalaan na tulungan mabigyan ng pananggalang ang sambayanang Pilipino laban sa nakakagulat na pagtaas ng presyo at mga pagbigat.

Ginagawa ng pamahalaan ang lahat ng makakaya upang makapaglagay ng pagkain sa bawat mesa at upang proteksiyunan ang inyong kita laban sa matataas na presyo at inflation. That is why, yesterday, the LTFRB under the chairmanship of Tom Lantion approved the rollback of transport fares. Tama ba ito Tom, ikorek mo sa akin, mag raise ka ng kamay mo kung mali ha?

– For taxis, it removed the 10 pesos add-on rate.

– For jeeps, it further reduced the fare by 50 centavos for the first four kilometers and 10 centavos for succeeding kilometers. So, the new rate is P7.50 for the first four kilometers and P1.40 for the succeeding kilometers.

– Metro Manila ordinary buses have a reduction of 50 centavos for the first five kilometers and 10 centavos for succeeding kilometers. The new rate is 9 pesos for the first five kilometers and P1.85 for the succeeding kilometers.

– For airconditioned Metro Manila buses, the fare reduction is 15 centavos for the succeeding kilometers. So, the new rate is 11 pesos for the first five kilometers and P2.20 for the succeeding kilometers for the airconditioned buses.

– Provincial buses reduction is 5 centavos per kilometer both ordinary and airconditioned. For ordinary buses, it used to be P1.40 per kilometer, now it's P1.35. For airconditioned buses, it used to be P1.60, now it's P1.55.

The effectivity is December 15. Congratulations sa DOTC at LTFRB! Ngunit maraming, maraming salamat sa ating transport sector sa inyong malasakit.

Ang modernisasyon naman ng ating mga kalsada ay naglikha ng bagong uri ng mga commuters — mga taong bumabiyahе araw-araw sa pamamagitan ng Kamaynilaan at mga probinsiya ng Central Luzon at pamamagitan ng Kamaynilaan at probinsiya ng Southern Luzon.

Ang mga probinsiya ng Central at Southern Luzon na malalapit sa Metro Manila ay pwede na nating tawaging exurbs imbes na bagong satellite areas na namumulaklak dahil sa mabilis at maginhawang pagbiyahe na sanhi naman ng ating modernong road network — yung mga expressway natin.

Itong mga estudyanteng nag-aaral sa iba't-ibang unibersidad at kolehiyo; mga negosyante, mga aplikante ng trabaho sa ibang bansa na nagdadala ng papeles sa POEA o sa mga employment agencies; mga empleyado ng mga BPO sa iba't-ibang lungsod ng Kamaynilaan, at pati na rin ang mga mamamayan ng aking probinsiya na araw-araw nagbabiyahе sa Metro Manila upang magdala ng iba't-ibang maipagbibili.

Malaking pakinabang ang naidulot sa Kamaynilaan ng araw-araw na pagko-commute. Nababawasan ang mga saligang amenities na kinakailangan ihandog kung dumadayo lamang. Pinasisigla din nitong mga commuters ang negosyo ng transportasyon at serbisyo sa Metro Manila at kanilang probinsiya.

But without bus stops, imagine that a senior citizen from Zambales who wants to go to Megamall will have to stop at the terminal of Victory in Pasay, then take a Metro Manila bus or MRT to reach Megamall. Kaya gumawa si Bayani ng bus stop sa Megamall, di ba Bayani? Tapos na. Maraming salamat.

An employee from Rustan's, from say, San Fernando will have to disembark either at Pasay or Cubao provincial bus stations, then take the MRT or Metro Manila bus again to Makati. This is an additional expense. Kaya upang matulungan itong army ng commuters, dinadagdagan natin ang bilang ng mga provincial bus stop sa EDSA. At yun ang ginawang presentation kanina ni Bayani.

Inaasahan nating inayos ang mga paraan para sa mabilisang pag-akyat at pagbaba ng mga pasahero sa mga itinalagang ligtas na mga lugar. Bayani, hindi ba, penalty shall be imposed on buses that stray off from these bus stops.

The designation of the bus stops will end the “guerrilla” practice of picking up and unloading passengers along EDSA. And it will address the legitimate economic and safety imperatives that have been raised by provincial commuters and by the governors who have told us that their constituents were having a hard time. Kaya inimbita natin sila ngayon para maikwento nila sa mga commuters nila na nakita nila yung mga bus stop.

We will make sure our government is vigilant in bringing government services to the people. Nawa'y makapagdulot sa ating kapwa Pilipino ang proyektong ito ng pangkabuhayang pagkakataon at makataong dignidad lalo na ngayong Kapaskuhan.

Kaya sa ating transport sector, salamat sa Christmas gift ninyo sa mamamayan. At sa MMDA, salamat rin sa Christmas gift ninyo sa mga taga Central Luzon at Southern Luzon.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the walk-through of EDSA-Quezon Avenue loading and unloading provincial stations and connecting footbridges. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100609071541/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=13708&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Handog ni Pangulong Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo Para sa Economically-Displaced Overseas Filipino Workers [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa Handog ni Pangulong Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo Para sa Economically-Displaced Overseas Filipino Workers

[Ipinahayag noong ika 5 ng Disyembre, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Nitoy Roque sa iyong pagpakilala.

Ating mga iba't-ibang opisyal ng pamahalaan na tumutulong sa ating mga bumabalik na expatriate Filipino workers; ating mga manggagawang bumabalik.

Ang pagtulong ng mga Pilipinong nagtatrabaho sa ibang bansa na nangangailangan ng suporta ng pamahalaan ay patakarang di lalabagin ng ating pamahalaan. Kahit kailan, 'di tayo tumatalikod na gawin ang lahat ng makakaya upang matulungan ang expatriate Filipino workers na dumaranas ng hirap.

Sa ngayong mga sumusubok na panahong para sa expatriate Filipino worker, hindi dapat nagpapabaya ang pamahalaan. Dapat suklian ang ating expatriate Filipino workers sa kabayanihang ipinapakita nila. Moral na tungkulin ng pamahalaan at inisyatiba ng patakaran ang mabilisang pagtugon sa agarang pangangailangan nila.

Sa ngayon, it is only a trickle of our overseas Filipino workers or expatriate Filipino workers that have lost their jobs because of the world financial crisis. In fact, some of these have already found new jobs. We have 200 Filipino workers on shipping companies coming back but they have left again or are leaving again because they have found new employment.

Nakikipagtulong tayo ngayon sa ilan, 100 plus, na nawalaan ng trabaho doon sa Taiwan upang mabigyan ng mga sumusunod na tulong. Nandito ang ating presidente ng PhilHealth dahil binibigyan sila ng PhilHealth card para sa medical insurance. Nandito ang vice president ng SSS dahil nagbibigay rin tayo ng SSS cards. At nandito ang ating chairman and director general ng TESDA, si Buboy Syjoco, na malaking-malaki ang approval rating, second to the highest, only a few points behind the highest sa TESDA. Congratulations, Buboy! At ang kanyang dala, na nandoon sa baskets ninyo, ay scholarship mula sa TESDA upang magkamit kayo ng bagong kasanayan at mahahasa ang inyong kagalingan, at nang maaari kayong makipagsabayan saan man sa mundo.

Ngayon yung mga tseke na binigay natin ay tseke para lang bayaran yung mga materials ng TRC — nandito naman yung ating head ng TRC na magbibigay ng ensayo sa inyo. Hindi pa ito yung livelihood, iba pa ang livelihood check, at yun naman pagkatapos ay ia-assess kung ano ang balak niyong gawin para ganun matulungan kayo sa inyong bagong livelihood. At yung tsekeng yun, yung susunod na tseke, yun ang magagamit sa pagsimula ng mga gustong magnegosyo sa ilalim ng ating Emergency Livelihood Program.

Ang mga ito ay nagsisilbing programa na nagbibigay ng panandaliang tulong sa mga expatriate Filipino workers na nawalan ng trabaho. Napakahalaga ng nai-ambag ninyo sa ating bansa, kaya't narapat lang na maibigay sa inyo ang buo at walang alinlanang suporta ng pamahalaan. Habang isinasagawa natin ang mabilisang pagresponde sa inyong agarang pangangailangan, nagtatrabaho tayo sa mga patakarang mas malaki at may mas malawak na sinasakupan upang tulungan ang ating mga bagong bayani.

Mag-iiral tayo ng buong programang pagtanaw ng utang na loob sa expatriate Filipino workers para tulungan yung mga napipilitang umuwi dahil ang mga bansa kung saan nagtatrabaho ay kasalukuyang hinahagupit sa krisis sa ekonomiya na ang tindi at sakop ay hindi pa maarok.

Ang Department of Labor and Employment at ang OWWA ang mangunguna sa pagpapatupad nitong payback program ng gobyerno para sa mga expatriate Filipino workers. Ang unang bahagi nitong programang pagsusukli ay ang pagtatag ng Filipino Expatriate Livelihood Support Fund sa halagang 250 million pesos mula sa OWWA at kung kailangan suportado ng mga ahensiya ng gobyerno na magpapahiram ng pera. Ang mga expatriate Filipino workers na nawalan ng trabaho ay makakakuha sa pondong ito — pautang para tumulong sa pagsisimula ng negosyo, pagpapatuloy ng pag-aaral o pagkamit ng kasanayan, o sa panimulang kapital sa anumang gawaing pangkabuhayan.

Dapat gawin agad ng DOLE ang Implementing Guidelines.

Kailangan simple lang ang mga alituntuning dapat upang makapangutang kaagad. Ang mga nagbabalik na expatriate workers ay hindi dapat mapapasa-ilalim sa mga masalimuot at walang katuturang regulasyon or red tape.

Inatasan ko ang DOLE at OWWA na makipag-ugnayan sa mga ahensya ng pamahalaan, kaya nga nakipag-ugnayan sa TRC para sa ekonomiya at pamumuhunan upang matukoy ang mga negosyo maaaring pasukin ng mga nagbabalik na expatriates.

Ang ikalawang bahagi nitong reciprocity program ay ang suporta ng pamahalaan, na ibibigay ng buong-buo, upang tulungan ang mga nagbabalik na manggagawang Pilipino sa paghahanap ng mga trabahong kumikita ng maganda. Dalawang patakaran ang nakapaloob sa bahaging ito:

Una, ang paglikha ng mga trabaho dito sa ating bansa na makakapagbigay ng magandang kita. Meron ilan sa inyo, sabi niyo naghahanap kayo ng trabaho dito.

Pangalawa, ang puspulang paghahanap ng mga bagong merkado sa ibang bansa para sa ating manggagawa, pati na ang mga nagtatrabaho sa mga barko.

At kanina masayang ni-report ni Secretary Nitoy Roque sa akin, 100 plus ang nawalaan ng trabaho doon sa... itong pabrika sa Taiwan, pero sabi ni Nitoy Roque, may 1,000 jobs available sa hotel and restaurant industry ng Bulgaria, kaya kaagad four times ang jobs available sa nawalaan ninyo.

So, upang makakuha ang mga serbisyong ito, inatasan ko ang DOLE at OWWA na maglagay ng mga opisina sa lahat ng probinsiya o desk, na magbabagay ng trabaho sa kagalingan, kakayahan at experience ng nagbabalik na manggagawa. Dapat din magkaroon ng palagiang online information tungkol sa mga bakanteng trabaho, at dapat libre itong information sa mga nagbabalik na expatriates.

At para sa ating bumabalik na expatriate Filipino workers na gustong lumipat ng ibang mga bansa kung saan kailangan ang inyong kaalaman at kagalingan, inatasan ko — bukod pa dito sa Bulgaria na 1,000 jobs available kaagad sa hotel and restaurant industry — inatasan ko, gumawa ako ng Administrative Order na ang Philippine Overseas Employment Administration ay dapat magtupad ng isang marketing blitz upang lumawak ang merkado para sa Filipino expatriates.

So again, the government, even if it's only a trickle of our workforce that's coming back, the government will not sit idly and do nothing for our modern-day heroes in this time of great economic uncertainty.

Hindi pababayaan ng pamahalaan ang ating mga bagong bayani sa panahong ito na walang katiyakan sa ekonomiya.

We assure you of full and unequivocal support.

Sa inyong lahat, ating returning expatriate Filipino workers, good luck sa inyong bagong hakbang ng inyong career path!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the Handog ni Pangulong Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo Para sa Economically-Displaced Overseas Filipino Workers. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134612/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=13697&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of AMOR Village

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the inauguration of AMOR Village

[Delivered at the AMOR Village, Brgy. San Francisco East, Anao, Tarlac, December 9, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Gilbert Teodoro sa iyong napakagandang pagpakilala sa akin. And I'm also very proud to have you as my Secretary of National Defense. (applause)

Congresswoman Nikki Teodoro, Gilbert and Nikki, on the occasion of your wedding anniversary, congratulations! Happy Anniversary! (applause)

Our cabinet members who are here with us today; officials of Tarlac headed by Governor Victor Yap and including his father, Apeng Yap and also Jesli Lapus; kareng aliwa kung cabalen a Capampangan queti king Tarlac; (applause) dagiti kakailyak nga Ilocano, naimbag nga malem yo amin Apo; (applause) mayap gatpanapon kekongan.

And first and foremost... ah, Bishop Senense. Very happy to have you here (applause); and Mayor Felipe and all the other mayors and board members who are here with us today, and the barangay captains, teachers, everybody, our military and police officials, members of the Cojuangco-Teodoro family, members of the Lopez-Prieto family, all of you, Merry Christmas to all of you because this is a Christmas party as well. (applause)

First of all, Nikki, thank you for AMOR Village. It's such a wonderful Christmas gift to the needy children of your district and province. And the name is so appropriate — Amor. It's appropriate because we're celebrating the amor of Nikki and Gilbert. (laughter/applause)

In fact, Nikki calls Gilbert "Amor". (applause) Amor because Christmas is a time of love and AMOR which stands for Accelerating Minors' Opportunity for Recovery. And that expresses the commitment of its sponsors, and Nikki tells me there are so many sponsors, not only DSWD and Espie, and everybody here from DSWD but also our various NGOs.

It shows their commitment to love and nurture the children under their care. And it reminds us that the spirit of Christmas is all about love for others, it's all about AMOR.

Inaldaw nga masapul nga ited iti bagbagi tayo kadagiti napanglaw and the unfortunate among us, ngem aglalo no panawen iti Pasko. Rebbeng nga agtrabaho tayo tapno makaited iti gundaway iti ekonomiya ken dignidad para iti tunggal nga Pilipino nga lallaki, babbai ken ubbing tatta nga panawen ti nama, panagayat ken pammati. (applause)

Iti panangpili ti Anao para iti AMOR Village ket maibagay unay. Iti AMOR ket ammo nga maysa iti Most Child-Friendly Municipalities iti pagilyan, (applause) isu nga kabaawan tayo iti gobyerno nga lokal ken umili. Congratulations! To Anao. (applause)

Thank you, Nikki for acknowledging Anao as a very child-friendly municipality even though, as Victor Yap confirmed, it is the smallest municipality of Tarlac. And thank you, Nikki for continuing the advocacy you started for children while you were still a congressional spouse. Children all over the country have benefited, not just in Tarlac. Because today Congress has a permanent committee that looks after matters and issues relating to the welfare of Filipino children and that is chaired by no less than Congresswoman Nikki Prieto Teodoro. (applause)

Tamang-tama na ginawa natin itong okasyong ito, dahil bukas ang ika-animnapung anibersaryo ng U.N. Declaration of Human Rights. Kaya bukas at ngayon tinatawagan ko ang bansa na itaon ang ating pinagsamang lakas tungo sa pagpapalakas at pagpapalago ng mga karapatang pantao ng mga batang Pilipino, ang ating mga anak. (applause)

Apat ang kategoriya na nakapaloob sa U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child para sa karapatan ng mga bata:

1. Survival. Ang karapatan ng bata na mabuhay. Ang ibig sabihin nito ay pagtitiyak na mabibigyan ng pagkain, serbisyong pangkalusugan, masisilungan at damit ang bata.
2. Development. Ang karapatan ng bata na makamit ang kanyang buong potensiyal. Sakop nito ang edukasyon, karapatang makapagpahinga at makapaglaro, makasali sa gawaing ispirituwal, at tumanggap ng pag-aalaga.
3. Protection. Sakop ng karapatan tungkol sa proteksiyon ang pananggalang laban sa pang-aabusong pisikal, and we congratulate Nikki for filing the bill. And as chairwoman of the committee, she will be the one to move it forward until it passes before 2009 ends, the bill against Corporal Punishment of Children. (applause)

Pero sabi ni Nikki hindi lamang yung mga pinipingot o yung nilalatigong mga bata ang magiging laman ng batas, also verbal abuse in the schools because part of the rights of the children is protection against mental abuse at kontra rin sa pang-aabusong sekswal. At kasama na rin ang panangga laban sa pagpabaya at eksploytasyon ng mga bata. Kailangan magbigay ng higit na suporta sa mga bata sa kategoriyang ito. So to Nikki, for being a champion of the protection of children, with this AMOR Village as symbol but also with your work in your committee in Congress, congratulations! and thank you. (applause)

4. Pang-apat na karapatang pantao ng mga bata — Participation. Ito'y nagtitiyak na ang bata ay mabibigyan ng karapatan upang sabihin kung ano ang iniisip o nararamdaman at makasali sa mga gawain ng kanyang mga kapwa-bata. Kabilang dito ang karapatang mabigyan ng pangalan at maging kabilang ng isang bansa at karapatang kilalanin bilang miyembro ng isang pamilya, isang komunidad o lipunan.

Amin dagitoy ket maysa nga rason no apay nga patuloy nga ag-invest tayo maipanggep ti salung-at, panagadal ken social services. Inikkan tayo iti ad-adu nga atensyon iti salun-at ken panagadal iti ubbing. AMOR Village and similar other children shelters assist government in looking after the mental health and emotional rehabilitation of handicapped children or those who were abandoned and victims of domestic abuse. These are the neediest ones. They should always receive our preferential attention and care. Tatta nga papaserrek ti Pasko, rebheng nga agyaman tayo amin dagiti grasya.

kadatayo ken kitaen iti masakbayan nga ad-adu nga nama ken talek ken optimism.

Dapat magsama-sama ang taumbayan ngayong Kapaskuhan upang ipagdiwang ang ating pananalig sa Diyos at ang pagkakaisa ng mga pamilya. Tamang-tama ang ating selebrasyon ngayon. (applause) AMOR, Amor ng Pasko because it's a Christmas party, Amor sa mga bata because of AMOR Village, at ang Amor ni Gilbert at Nikki. Amor din natin silang dalawa. (applause)

Dios ti agngina kadakayo amin, Apo. Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the inauguration of AMOR Village. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100609062628/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=14683&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 60th anniversary celebration of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights with awarding of the 2008 Ten Outstanding Policewomen of the Philippines

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 60th anniversary celebration of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights with Awarding of the 2008 Ten Outstanding Policewomen of the Philippines

[Delivered at the Heroes Hall, Malacañang, December 10, 2008]

Thank you Secretary Ermita for your introduction.

Secretary Ermita is, as our Master of Ceremonies said, the Chairman of the Presidential Committee on Human Rights; and the Chairman of the Human Rights Commission, Leila De Lima; the other members of the Commission and the other officers of CHR: Thank you for being here with us in our separate celebration aside from the one you had this morning because I wanted to highlight the independence of the Commission on Human Rights.

Our members of the Diplomatic Corps headed by no less than His Excellency the Papal Nuncio, Secretary Puno and the officers of the DILG and the police who we incorporated in to this event in order to highlight the commitment of the police to the promotion of human rights.

Our officers of ZONTA led by Lieutenant Governor Beng Puyat, thank you for honoring our Ten Outstanding Policewomen every year for the last seven years now.

Our awardees; the different guests who are here today: NGOs, our friends in UNICEF whom I invited specifically today because you will see why when I give my speech; and of course, our members of Congress who are here with us today; ladies and gentlemen.

I greet the Filipino people on our celebration today of the 60th Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. On this day 60 years ago, our young Republic signed a U.N. declaration that embodied man and society's deepest quest from time immemorial — the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights.

We can draw vivid images on what transpired on December 10th 1948. A Republic barely one year old, still clearing the rubble of a terrible war, standing foursquare behind one of the greatest declarations ever made by the U.N. that human beings are born free and equal, and entitled to all the human rights.

We thank our speakers whom we invited here today, the chair of the CHR, Leila De Lima and the deputy commissioner of the UNICEF for your observations on the challenges on human rights in the Philippines. And may we add among those challenges the many human rights violations of the New People's Army and the blatant human rights violations of the three renegade MILF commanders who brazenly murdered and pillaged innocent civilian communities. And if we talk about unsolved crimes, may we also point out and help seek a solution to the murder of Popoy Lagman way back in 2001.

We have made major inroads on promoting the rights of individuals in the past few years. The institutions that used to be the targets of criticism for alleged human rights abuses have undergone a significant transformation that has been noted and praised by both local people and the international community. For instance, in a remote part of Central Philippines, a newly-installed religious leader there told me that the people had shifted their support from the insurgents to our soldiers because they had observed how the soldiers worked hard to protect their rights from the human rights violations of the NPA.

Our efforts to improve our human rights record has earned us a seat in the Human Rights Council in the U.N. in 2006 and enabled us to be reelected to the same council and Secretary Ermita was applauded by the reviewers when he underwent in behalf of the Philippine government the U.N. Human Rights Council's Universal Periodic Review.

We are committed to further refining our procedures for the promotion and protection of human rights. That's why to this end today, I signed an administrative order further strengthening government policies and programs for human rights with at least one provision in the administrative order for each of the human rights in the U.N. Declaration on Human Rights.

And today, and this is the reason why I asked UNICEF to be part of our program, I also ask the nation to focus its collective effort on enhancing and promoting the human rights of a precious, valuable but vulnerable sector — this is the Filipino child, our children. The future of the nation; Jose Rizal's hope of the fatherland.

The U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child, which the Philippines ratified in 1990, spells out four broad categories under which the rights of children are clustered:

1. Survival. Like humans in general, as pointed out by Chairperson De Lima, the rights of a child to live. And by this, we include provisions for food, health care, shelter and clothing.
2. Development. The rights of a child to attain his or her full potential. These cover education, rest and recreation, spiritual activity, love and care.
3. Protection. The rights that cover protection from physical, mental and sexual abuse, and from neglect and exploitation. Support for the children is also imperative under this broad category.
4. Participation. The rights that enable a child to express his or her thoughts and feelings, to speak his or her opinion and to be with his or her own peers. Under these rights fall the right to a name and nationality, the right to be identified as a member of family, community or society.

The U.N. CRC has a bedrock principle. Whatever the decisions of societies and governments are the "best interests of children" should be a primary consideration. And that is why we share the concern of UNICEF about the rights of children in a situation of conflict especially the use of child combatants by the insurgents. We were the first country to launch a formal campaign against child abuse when I proclaimed the observance of Child Abuse Prevention Year from October 2006 to 2007.

We have been religiously working on the U.N. Millennium Development Goals, which include preparing a better future and protecting the rights of children. We have passed many laws in behalf of our children, including those that protect them from abuse including the Juvenile Justice and Welfare Act, including the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, including the Anti-Violence Against Women and Children Act.

These laws are complementary to the concrete, ground-level work to provide the best for our children, to act according to the best of their interests, to prepare them for adulthood via a seamless transition.

To carry out these laws, we have launched various programs such as the PNP's program which today has its own Women's and Children's Desk. And today, I decided to add a dimension in the celebrations with the awarding of the Ten Most Outstanding Policewomen of the year. My congratulations to all the honorees! You bring pride not only to the PNP but to every Filipina. And I am pleased particularly with your handling of the rights of disadvantaged sectors especially the children. And I decided to put your awarding in today's event because so many of you are receiving awards because of your work for the children and on sensitivity to vulnerable sectors. Congratulations! (applause)

We are very religious about the U.N. Development Goals. In fact, six out of eight goals are already assured of being achieved by 2015. Of the remaining two, the one is on maternal mortality which we are working on and the other as mentioned by the deputy commissioner is on Universal Primary Education. And indeed, we are working very hard on that.

We are breaking through the usual investment threshold in order to give our children a first-world education and health care within the medium-term. The education sector will get some 200 billion pesos budget in 2009. Of course, we count on our congressmen to pass this budget for us. And the health sector including services for maternal health led by the Department of Health and the Philippine Health Insurance Corporation will be given P36 billion in 2009. And in addition, government hospitals continue to retain and use their income.

To move the enhancement of children's rights to a higher level, I talked to the secretary of social welfare this morning and I said that I am directing her and the Council for the Welfare of Children to craft the pooling of a Children Defense Fund, which shall document and help prosecute cases of child abuse and exploitation everywhere.

Our goal is a child-centered human rights agenda. This shall be built on training, preparing and equipping our children to be global citizens in a changing world. And protecting them with an intensity and fierceness that was practiced in ancient times to shield children against abusers and predators.

But even as we work to increase awareness and promotion of human rights, we are similarly focused on a particular basic right of individuals — the right to earn a decent living. The pursuit of one's economic rights is fundamental in enabling the exercise of most other rights.

Our country can expect that the government will do everything in its power to protect our people from the global crisis that is sweeping the world. But we will do everything in our power to prevent the global crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis.

We are aiming for easing inflation — which we have been achieving — easing price in fuel, easing price in food and rice. At the same time, we will continue to grow our economy. And most importantly, as deputy commissioner mentioned, like Manny Pacquiao, we are fighters. We will prevail even in the toughest of times.

The toughest of global times requires no less than the concerted effort of every Filipino. In celebration of Human Rights Day, I call on everyone to make our human rights programs and our economic programs a successful shield not only against those who would violate these rights but also against the storm winds of the global economic hurricane. With all of us working together, we will weather the global storm. We will see the bright light of a day when we will be ready to join the ranks of the first-world, when poverty shall have been marginalized, and when we will have achieved all the hallmarks of a modern society where institutions are strong especially the institutions of human rights.

To all of you, happy anniversary on the Declaration of the U.N. Human Rights!

Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 60th Anniversary Celebration of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights with Awarding of the 2008 Ten Outstanding Policewomen of the Philippines. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100609071533/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=14684&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act 9513 or the Renewable Energy Act of 2008

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act 9513 or the Renewable Energy Act of 2008

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, December 16, 2008]

Thank you Secretary Ermita for your introduction.

Other members of the Cabinet with special mention to the DOE family; Senate President Enrile and Senator Angara and Senator Zubiri; Speaker Nograles; members of the House of Representatives especially the members of the Senate Energy Committee; my son Congressman Mikey (applause) and Congressman Villafuerte; (applause) and the other members of the House Energy Committee; our Deputy Speakers: Raul Del Mar and Girlie Villarosa; Majority Leader Art Defensor; Monico Puentevella and the other congressmen and congresswomen who worked so hard and supported this first and most comprehensive Energy Law in Southeast Asia. Congratulations and thank you. (Applause)

Members of the Diplomatic Corps, environment NGOs and private companies, committed private companies for your support and for highlighting the effects of climate change and the benefits of Renewable Energy, thank you. And as I said to the Secretary of the DOE Angie Reyes and to the whole DOE Family, congratulations! (Applause)

The global spike in the price of rice food and fuel a few months ago put tremendous pressure on Filipinos, but we responded to this challenge in a swift, measured and targeted manner. We assisted the transport sector, so that transport fare hikes would be minimal and rolled back when fuel prices went down again.

There is indeed a global economic crisis, but fortunately, through a mix of careful planning, congressional economic reforms and the hard work of many people, including Congress, we were able to prevent the global crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis.

The fact that we have avoided the crisis that is plaguing the rest of the world is a testament to the tough choices we made together with Congress several years ago. Economic reform has been the central pillar of our coalition administration. It is because we took the politically unpopular move to raise new revenue that we have been able to generate additional resources and invest in physical and human infrastructure, roads, bridges, ports and expanded access to healthcare, improved education and social services, including targeted subsidies to help the poor and the ordinary Filipinos from price shocks and economic pressures.

These are helping to provide a social safety net at a time when it is most needed. And these actions taken by Congress where there even before the hint of a global crisis –they are now serving us so well.

We are fortunate because through these congressional actions, we have a cushion in place to help the poor. But new revenue measures are only part of the equation. We have also focused on building up new industries like the biofuels industry, encouraged by last January's Biofuels Act, and now the renewable energy industry through our bill signing today.

The Biofuels Act made a significant contribution to our energy self-sufficiency program. And it will make our country one of the 15 most attractive destinations for biofuels investment. From 45 percent before our administration, we have become 57 percent self-sufficient in energy, and we aim to reach 60 percent by 2010.

Thanks in part to previous legislation and also in part to industries developing our renewable energy resources. We are the second largest geothermal power producer in the world. We have the highest wind potential power in the world. We also have high solar power penetration and abundant hydropower and biomass resources.

So now with our Renewable Energy Act we can move aggressively to develop these resources. In fact, there have been big leaps in renewable energy throughout the world in recent years.

Last year when renewable energy reaped a milestone — 71 billion dollars in investments — even oil giants like Abu Dhabi put up a special renewable energy corporation.

So our new Renewable Energy Act will enable us to capture a part of this investment inflow through what you have given: tax holidays, tax credits and other incentives for companies engaged in renewable energy development and distribution. And this is also timely because it mitigates climate change.

There are efforts... all of these efforts are working to improve the overall quality of life of the Filipino people. But we must continue on a path of fiscal discipline, targeted investments and targeted relief to the poor as we weather this global storm. And that gives us the legislative agenda for our new Senate President, Senator Juan Ponce Enrile and the Speaker Nograles and all of our congressman and senators.

This dawn, we arrived from Doha and Abu Dhabi. And it is important to underscore that; thus, far employment abroad remains strong. Very few of our expatriates have lost their jobs. In fact, employment overseas has held steady. Some jobs have gone, about a little more than a thousand, but new jobs are being created like the 37,000 needed in Qatar. So at this point, there is no need to panic. That said, we never want even one of our hardworking Filipinos to lose a job.

So, we are closely monitoring the impact of the global economic situation on our workers. We will not hesitate to take any action required to help them wherever they may be, abroad or at home. We are also developing retraining programs that can prepare our workers for employment in the Philippines should that be required. We are also taking our professional licensure examinations, particularly engineering license examinations to selected international locations where large expat worker populations are present so they can move up the career ladder there or in the Philippines should they need to do so or should they wish to do so.

So, during this holiday season, as we sign this bill into law, let us thank Congress for giving a wonderful gift to the Filipino people and let us congratulate our great Filipino worker because from what I have seen they are the first to be hired and the last to be retrenched.

But we long for the day when we will have enough jobs in the Philippines, so that work abroad will only be a career choice — you know, like Vince, it's a career choice — and not the only option for a hardworking Filipino. That is economic independence and part of economic independence is also energy independence.

So we thank Congress for providing us yet another great milestone in our aspiration for energy independence. Congratulations, Congress! (Applause)

And to all of you, Merry Christmas!

Maraming Salamat. (Applause)

* * *

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act 9513 or the Renewable Energy Act of 2008. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134602/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=15645&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo During the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act No. 9513 or the Renewable Energy Act of 2008 Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Signing Ceremony of Republic Act No. 9513 or the Renewable Energy Act of 2008

[Delivered at Rizal Hall, Malacañang, December 16, 2008]

Thank you very much to all of you who worked so hard and supported this first and most comprehensive Energy Law in Southeast Asia. Congratulations!

The global spike in the price of rice, food and fuel a few months ago put tremendous pressure on Filipinos, but, we responded to this challenge in a swift, measured and targeted manner. We assisted the transport sector, so that transport fare hikes would be minimal and rolled back when fuel prices went down again.

There is indeed a global economic crisis, but fortunately, through a mix of careful planning, congressional economic reforms and the hard work of many people, including Congress, we were able to prevent the global crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis.

The fact that we have avoided the crisis that is plaguing the rest of the world, is a testament to the tough choices we made together with Congress several years ago. Economic reform has been the central pillar of our coalition administration. It is because, we took the politically unpopular move to raise new revenues that we have been able to generate additional resources and invest in physical and human infrastructure, roads, bridges, ports and expanded access to healthcare, improved education and social services, including targeted subsidies to help the poor and the ordinary Filipinos from price shocks and economic pressures.

These are helps to provide a social safety net at a time when it is most needed. And these actions taken by congress where there, even before the hint of a global crisis and they are now serving us so well.

We are fortunate because through these congressional actions, we have a cushion in place to help the poor. But new revenue measures are only part of the equation. We have also focused on building up new industries like the biofuels industry, encouraged by last January's Biofuels Act, and now the renewable energy industry through our bill Signing today.

The Biofuels Act made a significant contribution to our energy self-sufficiency program. And it will make our country one of the 15 most attractive destinations for biofuels investment. From 45 percent before our administration, we have become 57 percent self-sufficient in energy, and we aim to reach 60 percent by 2010.

Thanks in part to previous legislation and also in part to industries developing our renewable energy resources. We are the second largest geothermal power producer in the world. We have the highest wind potential power in the world. We also have high solar power penetration and abundant hydropower and biomass resources.

So now with our Renewable Energy Act, we can move aggressively to develop these resources. In fact, there have been big leaps in renewable energy throughout the world in recent years.

Last year, when renewable energy reaped a milestone — 71 billion dollars in investments — even oil giants like Abu Dhabi put up a special renewable energy corporation.

So our new Renewable Energy Act will enable us to capture a part of this investment inflow through what you have given: tax holidays, tax credits and other incentives for companies engaged in renewable energy development and distribution. And this is also timely because it mitigates climate change.

All of these efforts are working to improve the overall quality of life of the Filipino people. But, we must continue on a path of fiscal discipline, targeted investments and targeted relief to the poor, as we weather this global storm. And that gives us the legislative agenda for our new Senate President, Senator Juan Ponce Enrile and the House Speaker Nograles and all of our congressman and senators.

This dawn, we arrived from Doha and Abu Dhabi. And it is important to underscore that; thus, far employment abroad remains strong. Very few of our expatriates have lost their jobs. In fact, employment overseas has held steady. Some jobs have gone, about a little more than a thousand, but new jobs are being created like the 37,000 needed in Qatar. So at this point, there is no need to panic. That said, we never want even one of our hardworking Filipinos to lose a job.

So, we are closely monitoring the impact of the global economic situation on our workers. We will not hesitate to take any action required to help them wherever they may be, abroad or at home. We are also developing retraining programs that can prepare our workers for employment in the Philippines should that be required. We are also taking our professional licensure examinations, particularly engineering license examinations to selected international locations where large expat worker populations are present, so they can move up the career ladder there or in the Philippines should they need to do so or should they wish to do so.

So, during this holiday season, as we sign this bill into law, let us thank Congress, for giving a wonderful gift to the Filipino people and let us congratulate our great Filipino worker because from what I have seen they are the first to be hired and the last to be retrenched.

But, we long for the day when we will have enough jobs in the Philippines, so that work abroad will only be a career choice — you know, like Vince, it's a career choice — and not the only option for a hardworking Filipino. That is economic independence, and part of economic independence is also energy independence.

So, we thank Congress for providing us yet another great milestone in our aspiration for energy independence. Congratulations, Congress!

And to all of you, Merry Christmas!

Source: Adamson University Library

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). A Compilation of selected presidential speeches of Her Excellency President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, 2008. [Manila : Office of the Press Secretary, Bureau of Communications Services].

Speech of President Arroyo at the launching of LPG Conversion Program for tricycles [Filipino] Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa paglulunsad ng LPG Conversion Program para sa mga traysikel

[Ipinahayag noong ika 20 ng Disyembre, 2008]

Maraming salamat, Mayor Sonny Belmonte, sa iyong pagpakilala, at maraming salamat sa laging suporta mo sa ating pamahalaang national.

Congresswoman Nannete Daza, congratulations sa iyong mga initiative gaya nito.

Mga officials ng national government sa transportation at energy, mga local officials ng Quezon City, sa inyong lahat, mga local official ng Quezon City, at sa ating mga tricycle drivers, maligayang Pasko.

Maaga ang ating Pasko – five days early. Maligayang Pasko sa inyong lahat, at ngayong nagsisimbang gabi na tayo, dapat bilangin natin lahat ng mga biyaya natin at tingnan natin ang kinabukasan na mas malaki ang ating pag asa, ang ating kumpiyansa, ating optimism.

Gaya ng sabi ni Sonny Belmonte, nakakagulat! Ang Philippine economy had an added kick for the last quarter, at itong added kick ay sa kabila ng kahirapan sa mundo. Two-thirds of the globe is now in recession pero ang Pilipinas, hindi.

Kaya kailangan magsama-sama ang taungbayan nitong pasko, magdiriwang ng pananampalataya at pamilya at ang ating pamayanan ay dapat magsama-sama at isantabi na yung pag-aalitan at pagkakaiba sa pulitika. At itukoy natin kung ano ang magandang positibong magagawa nating lahat magkasama para pag-ibayuhin ang ating mga buhay.

Napag-usapan ni Sonny yung nakakagulat, dahil sa gitna ng krisis — hindi mapagkakaila na may krisis ang pandaigdigang ekonomiya — ang hamon sa atin ay huwag maging krisis sa Pilipinas ang krisis ng daigdig.

At ang panahon tulad nito, tungkulin ng pamahalaan na tulungan ang taungbayan na makaraos sa mga pahirap na dala ng inflation at humihinang ekonomiya ng ibang bayan.

And during this troubled time, it is the role of government to help insulate the Filipino people from shocks and economic pressures. Kaya ginagawa ng inyong pamahalaan — executive, legislative, national, city — ang lahat na makakaya upang may pagkain sa bawat mesa, at bigyan proteksyon ang kinikita ninyo, pati mga tricycle drivers, to put food on the table and protect your earnings.

At ituloy-tuloy natin ang ating pamumuhunan sa ating sistema ng kalinga sa kalusugan, edukasyon, serbisyo sosyal.

At yung sinasabi na suwerte. Siguro suwerte tayo dahil nagsikap tayo para maging suwerte.

Kasi kundi dahil sa mga masasakit na reporma na ginawa natin sa nakaraang pitong taon — at salamat, si Nannete ay isang malaking bahagi nung mga repormang yun sa Kongreso — the global crisis would have become a Philippine crisis as well.

Sa halip sa magulong-magulong kapaligiran sa mundo, sabi ng mga eksperto ng mundo, ang Pilipinas ay parang isla ng mapayapang ekonomiya. Ngunit itong ating kalakasan at katatagan ng taungbayan at ekonomiya ay hindi pa rin sapat na konsuwelo sa karaniwang Filipino kung siya kailangang magbayad ng mas mataas na presyo para sa mga saligang pangangailangan.

At alam natin ang mga pressures ninyo, sumasakay sa pasahe, mga namamasada. Hindi pa natin makalimutan yung inyong pressures na hinarap ninyo ilang buwan lang nakaraan.

Hindi natin nakakalimutan yung matataas na presyo, yung matataas na inflation; at kahit na bumababa na ngayon ang mga presyo nito, siyempre alam natin na nagulat kayo at nag aalala sa seguridad ng trabaho at kung ano ang mabibili ng inyong kinikita.

Lahat tayo ay nag aabala dito, kaya tayo nagtatrabaho, nagsisikap para manatiling mababa ang presyo ng bigas, ng pagkain at ng ating fuel, lalo na sa mga tricycle drivers at operators.

At ito na nga ang pakay ng programa ni Congressman Nannete Daza na kinuwento niya sa akin nung kami ay nag-dinner doon sa Malakanyang. Kinuwento niya itong proyektong ito — at siyempre si Nannete, talagang aggressive yan, at kumuha siya ng tulong sa ating national government na idadaan natin yung pondo at salamat naman at pumayag si Mayor Sonny Belmonte sa Quezon City government.

At tama naman na ipinaglalaman kayong mga tri-cycle ni Nannete dahil malaki ang papel ng mga tri-cycle sa pang-araw-araw na pamumuhay ng Filipino – multipurpose nakakapasok sa mga lugar na hindi napapasukan ng jeep o kotse, at marami pa rin sa dako ng lungsod na tanging tri-cycle lamang ang ginagamit na pampasaherong sasakyan.

Kaya mahalaga na tulungan natin ang mga nagta-tri-cycle upang hindi na kailangan magsingil pa ng pataas na pataas na pamasaha ang napakaraming sumasakay sa inyo sa mga liblib na barangay.

Kaya ito isang magandang halimbawa ng pagtulong — na tulungan ang mga tri-cycle drivers na magpalit ng makina upang makagamit ng LPG.

Gaano na kahalaga ang mas mura ngayon, Nannete? Hindi ba 50 percent na ng gasolina ang LPG? Ang sabi nga ni Sonny Belmonte, 80 percent na ng taxi ay nag-LPG. Kaya sabi ni Nannete, tulungan nga natin yung mga tri-cycle na magkaroon din ng savings sa pamamagitan ng LPG.

Inaangkat natin halos lahat ang ating pangangailangan ng krudo kaya yun ang isang problema, ngunit tayo may kaunting natural gas mula sa tinatawag na malampaya project.

At itong natural gas na ito ay nakakatulong upang mabawasan ang dami ng inaangkat na langis, kaya ang LPG ay sagot sa krudo dahil meron tayong LPG na puwedeng manggaling sa sarili natin. Although marami pa rin tayong inaangkat, kaya't pumayag tayo na tulungan ang ilang mga tri-cycle drivers and operators na nandito ngayon na mabigyan ni Nannete ng LPG conversion kit at upang tulungan punduhan ito.

Kasi nung sinabi ko kay Nonoy Andaya, nagkakamot ng ulo, saan kukunin ang pondo nito, sabi niya. Sabi ko, isali sa programa ng pondo ng engine conversion mula sa katas ng VAT.

Kung naalala ng ating DOTC officials, kamakailan lang... Kasi nung tumaas ang krudo, tumaas din ang collection ng buwis. Kaya yung itinaas na yun ay ginamit natin para tumulong sa mga naghihirap sa pagtaas ng krudo; at bahagi ng may ginamit natin para yung mga jeepney ba yun ay mag-convert sa LPG.

Kaya ngayon, itong pondong ito ay yun ang pagkukuhanan natin para tulungan ang project ni Nannete.

Pinadala lang ni Secretary Angie Reyes si USec Ampatuan para ipaalala na huwag kalimutan ikumpleto yung proseso ng safety approval ng DOE itong conversion kit na ito.

Itinatatag nga natin ito — program “katas ng VAT” — noong Hunyo, noong panahon na tumaas ang presyo ng gasolina at nagkaroon ang pamahalaan ng karagdagang pondo.

Kaya ito, ibinabalik natin sa mamamayan, binabalik natin sa mga jeepney driver, jeepney operator. At ito ay pang-sukli sa mga mamamayan ng kinita ng ating pag-angat bilang pamumuhunan sa taungbayan sa lahat ng programa nagtataguyod ng patuloy nating pag-unlad at sasagip sa pagdurusa ng mahihirap na sila ang unang tinatamaan pagtumatalon ang presyo, lalo na sa langis.

Ngayon bumaba na ang presyo ng gasoline, diesel at LPG, pero hindi natin alam kung ano ang mangyayari sa kinabukasan, kaya mabuting meron option na ito.

Pero ngayon at bumaba ang presyo ng LPG, gasolina at krudo, ayaw ko naman pabayaan ang pagkakataon na magpasalamat naman muli sa mga drivers ng bus at jeep ng Central Luzon, Southern Luzon at Kamaynilaan, dahil nung bumaba ang presyo ng langis, krudo at LPG, itong mga bus at jeep ay pumayag agad na bumaba ang pasahe mula noong ika-15 ng Disyembre.

Pasalamatan natin lahat ang mga bus at mga jeepney. Ito na ang kilos ng taungbayan — ng private sector, ng transport sector — ay nagbibigay sa atin ng buong-loob tungkol sa ating kinabukasan, at tungkol sa pag-asa optimism, ang resilience ng taungbayan Filipino.

Sabi ng mga survey, 70 percent na mga Filipino ay tumatanaw sa kinabukasang buo ang pag asa. Tayo naman — executive, legislative, national, city — sisiguraduhin na matiyak ng pamahalaan na magdala ng serbisyong bayan sa ating taungbayan.

Kaya itong araw na ito, nagpapasalamat tayo kay Nannete sa napakagandang ideya, napakagandang aguing sa ating mga tricycle drivers at operators.

Sa inyo at sa lahat ng mga narito, maligayang pasko, salubungin natin ang darating na bagong taon na punong-puno ang puso ng pag asa, at pagtiwala sa ating kakayahan. Merry Christmas, congratulations and thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, Launching of LPG Conversion Program for Tricycles. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134547/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=16816&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo at the 73rd Anniversary of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
At the 73rd Anniversary of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP)

[Delivered at the GHQ Grandstand, Camp Aguinaldo, Quezon City, December 22, 2008]

Thank you, Secretary Teodoro.

Troop Commander, give “tikas pahinga.”

His Excellency President Ramos and the other former Chiefs-of-Staff of the Armed Forces; General Yano and the other officers of the Armed Forces of the Philippines; Archbishop Tumulak and our other friends of the Armed Forces from the civilian sector; members of the Diplomatic Corps; the family of 2nd Lt. Gutleng and the family of the other soldiers who gave their lives in defense of our nation; Sergeant Villar and the other combatants who have been awarded for their heroism during this past year; CAFGU Cabarles at yung ibang mga nasugatan maging sundalo o CAFGU doon sa mga panahon kung kinailangan sugpuin ang ating bansa; Don Emilio Yap and our other civilian awardees, thank you for your support to our soldiers; General Rommel Gomez and the other officers who have received awards for your exemplary leadership of our combat troops; our Presidential citation recipients, congratulations also for your distinguished service in your last assignments!

Men and women of the Armed Forces, Happy Anniversary to us all!

Another year marks the gallantry of the Filipino soldier performing the duty to advance peace, freedom, development and human security.

Ang ating mga sundalong inaasahan ng mamamayang Pilipino upang itigil ang pananakot ng mga terorista at ang panggugulo ng mga rebeldeng komunista, at upang dalhin ang kapayapaan sa Mindanao. The communist guerilla fronts have dropped to 63 from 107 in 2005. This year alone, our troops neutralized 15 of the most notorious communist insurgents, 58 Abu Sayyaf and Al Khobar operations and three foreign terrorists. Congratulations to all our soldiers!

And we congratulate our incumbent officers among the medalist of valor because by their leadership they had inspired many of these acts of valor in the battlefield. Mga sundalo rin ang una nating tinatawag tuwing may sakuna dahil sa bagyo, baha, at iba pang kalamidad. Noong na-trap yung mga maliliit na minero doon sa Benguet kaya meron tayong awardee mula doon sa pangyayaring yuon. Noong lumubog ang barkong Princess of the Stars sa Romblon. Noong kasagsagan ng bagyong Frank. Noong nagkaroon ng typhoid outbreak sa ilang bayan ng Quezon province at pati na rin sa pag-aayos ng mga kalsada, tulay at eskwelahan. At sa pagtulong sa mga pamilyang apektado ng bagyo’t mga kaguluhan sa Mindanao. Salamat sa lahat ng ating mga sundalo.

I will give my command guidance during our command conference on January 8th. For today, we focus on aspirations rather than orders. Peace is the only path for Mindanao and the nation. I was so glad to hear Genral Yano saying that our soldiers are not really fond of fighting, they want to have peace because war is never the final answer. We are committed to peace and restarting the peace process. And in order to do that, we count on our Armed Forces to bring stability to the island, to regain order, to bring the lawless renegade elements to justice. This is the way we can be confident that responsible elements regain control of the MILF so that we can effectively reactivate the peace process again in earnest. The peace process must proceed. And we are assembling the pieces to get the peace process started again in a way that upholds our commitment to peace, to the strong sentiments of the communities, and to the rule of law.

The key to resolving peace in Mindanao is for all sides to be committed to peace, progress and prosperity. This includes reaching out to all sides and hearing the voices in the communities. We must all be willing to put ourselves in each other's shoes and understand various points of views and be willing to give and take to bring permanent peace to the island. And that is the way that we can promote democracy and a strong republic.

We always support efforts to strengthen democracy. But we are not focused on politics. And I thank General Yano, and I congratulate the Armed Forces, that as General Yano says, "the enemy has been slain, the enemy that is called politics in the Armed Forces." Congratulations for that!

Our priority is implementing the pro-poor and economic reform agendas that have given our country the strongest and most resilient economy in decades. This is a time when our nation's leadership must give all its attention to managing the impact of the global crisis so that it does not become a Philippine crisis. The national leadership's attention must not be on politics but on the economy with our soldiers taking care of security in the background.

There is indeed a global economic crisis, but fortunately through a mix of careful planning, economic reforms and the hard work of many people, we have thus far prevented the global crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis.

Two-thirds of the globe is now in recession, but not the Philippines, which is growing 4.6 percent after growing 7.2 percent last year. The Bank of New York Mellon says, "The Philippines is inherently strong, a potential beneficiary of the financial woes."

JP Morgan says, "The Philippines is in a relatively strong position to weather the global downturn with the economy driven by private consumption and services, which are less vulnerable to external shocks."

Congratulations to all the Filipino people!

The fact that we have avoided the crisis that is plaguing the rest of the world is a testament to the tough choices we made several years ago. Economic reform has been at the center of my presidency. It is because we took the politically unpopular decision to raise unprecedented new revenue that we have been able to generate additional resources and invest in physical and human infrastructure: roads, bridges and ports — many of which were built by our soliders; expanded access to healthcare, including improved military hospitals; education and social services, including more housing for our soldiers and their families. And on top of all these the upgrading of our defense capabilities, including new helicopters, Squad Automatic Weapons, inflatable boats and other facilities and equipment. Upgrading will continue, particularly in training. We will make the Philippine Defense Reform work to stop the insurgency by 2010.

Kasama sa Philippine Defense Reform, at bilang pasasalamat sa kabayanihan ng AFP, noong isang taon, sa inyong hiling, dinagdagan ang subsistence pay at dinoble ang hazard pay ng ating mga sundalo. At itong taon dinagdagan naman ang inyong base pay.

Ito ay maliit na paraan kung papano ipaabot sa inyo ang napakalaking pasasalamat ng taong-bayang Pilipino. Itong ating pagdiriwang ng Armed Forces Day ay laging ginagawa ilang araw lang bago Pasko. Kaya sa Paskong ito, let us all count our blessings and look to the future with greater hope, confidence and optimism. At dahil sa napakagandang paglilingkod ng ating kawal Pilipino, inaasahan natin na maging lalong mapayapa itong darating na Pasko at lalong maging makabuluhan ang lahat nang ginagawa ng ating kawal Pilipino para sa taong-bayan.

To all of you once again, Happy Anniversary! Merry Christmas! and thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2008). Speech of President Arroyo at the 73rd Anniversary of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134530/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=17051&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 41st Founding Anniversary of Camiguin Province

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the 41st Founding Anniversary of Camiguin Province

[Delivered at the Camiguin Sports Center, Brgy. Poblacion, Mambajao, Camiguin, January 7, 2009]

Salamat, Secretary Arthur Yap for your introduction and for introducing yourself also to the people of Camiguin.

Aton halangdon nga host diri sa probinsya, Governor JJ Romualdo ug sa Vice Governor ug tanang mga opisyal sa probinsya. Ang akon higala sa Kongreso, si Congressman Loloy Romualdo (applause) kauban ang aton mga ginapid sab gikan sa Kongreso, Congressman Joeboy Aquino ug Congressman Anton Lagdameo, (applause) Mayor Romualdo, Vice Governor Lasacar, aton mga lainglaing mga kaigsuonan diri sa Camiguin, maayong hapon, malipayon bag-ong tuig ug happy anniversary kaninyong tanan. (applause)

Ang istorya sa Camiguin sama sa istorya kung unsay gihimo nato aron ang krisis sa kalibutan dili niabot kanato. Kining inyong probinsya maayo ehemplo kun unsay kausbang ang pag-abot kung ang mga bunga sa reporma gisuportahan sa katawhan ug apilan ug maayo mga plano ug maayong pagpasunod. And I'm very happy sa mga istorya ni JJ ug ni Congressman ang daghan nga first diri sa probinsya. Ug usa sa inyong first sa probinsya ang first water system nining region. Ug dili pa kamo probinsya naa na ang inyong water system, ug dako dungog kanako nga ang Presidente nakahatag sa inyong water system walay laing kundi ang akong amahan, si President Diosdado Macapagal. (applause)

Karon ma-post forward kita sa tuig 2000, ang Camiguin ika-unom sa listahan sa Ten Poorest Provinces sa nasod sa year 2000. Apan sa sulod lamang sang unom ka tuig, natangtang na kamo sa listahan sa pulo ka labing pobre. Ika-34 na kamo sa tunga nasa listahan tanang probinsiya. (applause) Tungod kay didto na kamo sa tunga sa lista, pwede na naton maingon nga middle-class na ang Camiguin. Congratulations! (applause) Salamat, DSW Poblacion.

Ug murag ingon ni JJ bisan gamay ra ang yuta nga katamnan dinhi, nakasaka pa kamo sa 11 percent sa inyong productivity, so mao ang rason ngano natangtang ang Camiguin sa ten poorest tungod sa kakugi sa katawhan dinhi sa Camiguin. (applause) Ug sa inyong 11 percent sa gamay nga yuta hibaw ninyo na dili angay mosalig lang sa agrikultura para sa inyong pag-usbaw. Nakita ninyo sab nga sa gamay ninyong yuta, daghan ug mga attraction sa mga turista sama sa labing tam-is nga lanzones sa tibuok kalibutan, (applause) ang bulkang Hibok-Hibok, ang ginikanan sa Camiguin kay kamo ang probinsyang 'Born of Fire,' the fire of Hibok-Hibok, busa naa kamo mga hot and cold na bukal, natural soda water, naa pa kamo ug sunken cemetery ug lain gwapong dive attractions.

Kanina nagikan mi sa Gingoog City, sa ubos sa helicopter nakita namo usa ka gwapo kaayo nga pulo. So sa akon pag-abot nangutana ako kay Congressman, "unsay kanang gwapo nga manindot nga pulo ng isla?" Ingon niya, ang Mantigui Island. (applause) Mao diay kay ang Mantigui usa sa labing famous karon nga dive site sa tibuok Pilipinas. (applause) Ug naa pa, dili lang dive site sa ubos, sa taas sab ang mga gwapo mga baybayon. Ug tanan kining mga tourist attraction gipuno pa gyud ang mga but-an ug mapinag... sa pagpalangga nga katawhan sa probinsiya sa Camiguin. (applause) Busa gikan sa tanan ninyong mga tourist attractions ug sa inyong natural hospitality, beautiful smiles to match the beautiful beaches, gihimo ninyo nga developed ang pag-anhi sa mga turista. Busa kamo usa sa aton mga favorite tourist destinations dinhi sa Pilipinas. (applause)

Busa ang national government ug ang local government, gisumpay nato ang Camiguin sa Central Nautical Highway, murag ingon ni JJ kanina, pina-agi sa mga pantalan sa RORO dinhi sa Mambajao paingon sa Jagna, ug katong usa nga daan na gikan sa Balingoan, gipa-ayo nato sab ang mga dalan nga galibot sa inyong probinsiya. Ug tungod kay ginpa-ayo nato ang imprastraktura, dali na sab ang pagbiyahe ug turista. Ug murag ingon sab ni JJ, dili lang ang turista kundili sab ang mga produkto. Ang mga produkto ug dala ug pagkaon dinhi gikan sa mainland Mindanao, gikan pa sa General Santos, ingon ni JJ, ug sa mga isla sa Visayas, busa kanunay bastante ang pagkaon bisan pa sa panahong daghan kaayo ang mga turista. Kining mga pantalan sa RORO ang hinungdan sab nga mi-abot nga presko ang matam-is ninyong lanzones sa lainlaing siyudad sa Luzon ug Visayas. And so, Artie Yap will assist you to make sure that this year the harvest of lanzones will be as productive as the harvest of your palay. (applause)

Apan kinahanglan nga mas kukugi kita sa Camiguin ug sa tibuok nasod aron dili moabot ang world economic crisis dinhi sa Camiguin ug dinhi sa Pilipinas. Misamot ang gahinay sa pagtubo sa kalibutan ug naa nay recession sa twothirds sa kalibutan apan wala sa Pilipinas, wala sa Camiguin ang recession. Salamat sa Ginoo. (applause)

Daghang ekonomista ang natingala ug midayeg kanato tungod sa pagtubo sa aton ekonomiya samtang mikunlod na ang uban. Just for the new year January 2, ang nagawas sa international television ang stable outlook sa China, Philippines ug Indonesia, the most resilient economies – strong currency, strong fiscal position. Ang aton strong fiscal position salamat sa tabang gikan sa aton mga congressmen sama ni JJ kaniadto ug ni Lolo karon.

Salamat sa ila. (applause) Tungod sa ilang suporta sa aton mga reporma sa Kongreso sa ekonomiya, we are among the few Asian economies that fared best in 2008 and that are projected to do well in 2009. Ug murag ingon ni JJ, na padayon nga P18.25 ra ang bugas diri sa Camiguin mao usa ka rason ngano Philippine inflation has gone down to 8 percent last December compared to double digit sa laing aton mga silingan nga ekonomiya.

Wala'y nakahibalo kun hangtod kanusa modugay kining hinay nga ekonomiya sa kalibutan. Apan gala-um ako nga paagi sa aton kumprehensibong economic resiliency programs, dili gyud mahimo'g Philippine crisis o Camiguin crisis ang world crisis.

Alang sa aton economic resiliency, padayon ang aton pagpamuhunan sa katawhan, sama sa aton tabang gikan sa mga katas ng VAT ug sa mga epektibong programang imprastraktura sama nini inyong bag-o nga oval ug sports complex (applause) nga ingon ni JJ sa pag-anhi ko sa kining tuiga nga lanzones festival mokumpleto na ug mga serbisyo sa katilingban. Mas dako ang gastuhon sa gobyerno alang sa edukasyon, serbisyong panglawas sama sa inyong upgrading sa ospital ug paghatag sa training sa mga nangita ug trabaho. Mas dako sab ang gastuhon sa pagpatindog ug dugang pang imprastraktura aron mosaka ang atong pakigkumpitensiya sa tibuok kalibutan labi na ang atong pagkumpetensiya sa turismo.

So, sa inyong birthday sa probinsya ang akong hangyo kaninyo nga ang katawhang Camiguinon nga ipadayon ang pagsalig sa atong kaugalingong kusog. Sige kita na naghiusa ug molantaw sa usa lang ka direksiyon – ang direksiyon sa stability ug pag-uswag. Gipakita na ug mga Camiguinon ang inyong abilidad sa pagsukol sa mga kalisod. Padayuna kining inyong kakugi na maoy hinungdan na nakalingwas kamo sa listahan sa ten poorest provinces ug nahimo kamo ug middle- class nga probinsya. (applause) Ipadayon nato ang pagkakugi, ang panaghiusa aron muanhi ang adlaw nga dili ra middle-class ang Camiguin kundili sab mahimo usa ka first-world sa within the next 20 anniversaries.

Daghan salamat ug salamat kanunay sa inyong suporta. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 41st Founding Anniversary of Camiguin Province. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105738/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=17566&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Vin D'Honneur

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Vin D'Honneur

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, January 20, 2009]

His Excellency, the Papal Nuncio; other members of the Diplomatic Corps; Vice-President De Castro; Senate President and Ambassador Enrile; Speaker and Mrs. Nograles; Secretary and Mrs. Romulo and other officials of the Philippine government; members of the Diplomatic Corps who are our main guests today; ladies and gentlemen.

Happy New Year to all of you!

2008 was a year for the history books. The global financial turmoil spread and jeopardized the well-being of billions of people across the globe. It was a crisis year for two-thirds of the world.

In the Philippines, we avoided the full brunt of the economic downturn. We kept our sights set on navigating the treacherous waters. We kept the crisis at bay — thanks to the fiscal, economic and structural reforms we implemented in the past — even while it was unpopular to do so.

As an economist, I also know that things can turn quickly. That is why we are planning for better days — even as we are developing contingency plans if things get worse. We have worked fervently — even before the crisis took root — to cushion the blow to our people.

We took the rice issue head on and wrestled it to the ground. We ensured supply for the foreseeable future and put in place a targeted distribution system to get subsidized rice to those who qualify for it. We stepped up enforcement to stop unscrupulous government and commercial interests from benefiting from the plight of the poor.

In addition to the food challenge, in 2008, we revitalized our agricultural modernization program and target self-sufficiency in rice within five years. We also strove for greater energy independence through intensified oil exploration and the greater use of geothermal, biofuel and renewable energy. We are nearing 100 percent self-sufficiency in using indigenous sources for electric power generation.

Moving forward: we are not complacent. An Economic Resiliency Plan in the amount of 300 billion pesos is in the offing to pump-prime the economy. The Plan aims to upgrade infrastructure, expand social protection and ensure sustainable growth in the midst of the global economic crisis.

We are upbeat that our sound economic management and our measures will see us through the tough global times. Nine out of ten Filipinos look forward with hope to the new year. The international financial community shares our confidence. Fitch underscored that our economy remains “reasonably healthy.” Credit Suisse announced that Philippine macroeconomic risk is lowest. Standard and Poor’s compared our country to an island of relative calm amid the stormy seas of global economic uncertainty. The Bank of New York Mellon said, “The Philippines is inherently strong, a potential beneficiary of these financial woes.” JP Morgan agreed, and I quote, “The Philippines is in a relatively strong position to weather the global downturn with the economy driven by private consumption and services, which are less vulnerable to external shocks.”

I assumed the Presidency in 2001 with no budget to spare. Our coffers were in the negative — I'd like to greet President Ramos, Happy New Year, Sir! — Because of our financial reforms and sound fiscal management since 2001, our economy has posted uninterrupted growth over 36 quarters — growth that has brought down the rate of poverty; growth that has brought up average annual new employment; growth that has supported seven million microentrepreneurs — and banker Chuching Tambunting told me that things are doing well for the SMEs — and revenue enhancement measures; growth and revenue enhancement measures that have given us 100 billion pesos more in financial resources each year.

Thus, we have been able to build the most roads, from highways to farm-to-market roads; the most ports, from modern airports to the RORO system spanning Mindanao to Luzon; the most barangays electrified; the most classrooms; three salary increases for teachers; the most scholarships by far for high school, college, and post-graduate degrees in science and engineering; billions of pesos for training — not just millions as in the past; the most land for our indigenous peoples; and decent homes for our workers at six percent interest — the lowest rate ever.

With the revenues from the expanded value-added tax and alcohol and tobacco excise tax, we have been able to expand access to healthcare as never before. Health insurance now covers 74 percent of the population, public hospitals are being upgraded, and the poor can buy their essential medicines at half the price of year 2000. Our social services now include a 10 billion-peso budget for targeted cash payments to the poorest of the poor, conditioned on their children going to school.

Likewise, local governments can avail of 40 percent of this new revenue as additional Internal Revenue Allotment.

Our efforts at maintaining a strong and growing economy always have one fundamental operating principle. We put the highest priority on eradicating poverty and ensuring that safety nets are in place for the most vulnerable.

New legislation — thanks to Congress — grants income tax exemption to annual earnings of as high as 150,000 pesos, a bonanza for wage earners and salaried workers. New legislation has also allowed Pag-Ibig, GSIS and SSS members to avail of longer loan terms and condoned penalties on delinquent loans. For our farmers, we have raised the buying price of palay from P11 to P17 per kilo and increased the volume purchased from 30,000 to a million metric tons.

We have new industries like BPO, a sunrise sector that will continue to boom as global cost-cutting is transformed into outsourcing and offshoring. Our increased budget for science and technology research and development is beginning to generate exportable products with high income potential when things get better for the world.

So far, overseas employment remains stable and strong. We are doing what we can to address the needs of those who have been displaced, but by no means has this become a crisis.

In 2001, I inherited a state of all-out war in Mindanao. Since then we made steady progress towards permanent peace until the setback of August 2008. I hope 2009 will be a comeback year for peace, progress and prosperity in Mindanao. The new government panel on the peace process is headed by Ambassador Rafael Seguis, who is familiar to most of you.

The panel has been directed to touch base with our facilitators and the MILF leaders to schedule the resumption of peace talks. The panel is poised and ready to embark on substantive discussions, including ceasefire-related issues, the International Monitoring Team, and accelerated development for Mindanao. We hope all parties are as committed as we are to resume negotiations soon.

Our new paradigm for peace includes interfaith dialogue, authentic consultation with communities, and the principle of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration for armed rebel groups.

To advance peace and progress in Mindanao, as in the past, we hope to be able to count on the support of our partners in the International Monitoring Team — Brunei, Japan and Libya — Malaysia who has been an ardent facilitator, our other friends in the OIC, in Europe, and the U.S.

The obligation and commitment of our government goes well beyond economic, security and global challenges. A civilized, democratic nation must also be vigilant in strengthening democracy and advancing human and civil rights.

Human dignity starts with alleviating poverty and it relies upon the sacred obligation of government to preserve, protect and defend the freedom of every Filipino to participate fully in society and politics without fear.

We are one of the vibrant democracies in our part of the world. Our commitment to human rights remains paramount even in the midst of active insurgencies and other threats to national security. Based on Task Force “Usig” data, there has been a marked decline in politically-motivated killings as a result of intensified government efforts in partnership with the community. In 2008, the number of cases dropped 90 percent compared to 2006.

Last year, the U.N. Human Rights Council conducted its periodic review of the situation here. The President of the Council lauded the Philippines as “outstanding” in our transparent, consultative and comprehensive report. The Council appreciated that our government frankly acknowledged the challenges, as well as outlined the steps it is taking, to address such areas as activist killings and the protection of women and children.

The positive review has not lulled us into complacency. There will be no let up in our campaign against human rights violations, including violence against women and children, human trafficking, abuses on Filipino workers abroad, and the killing of political activists and members of the media.

Finally, I would be remiss not to mention the installation of a new American President on the eve of his inauguration in Washington.

America plays a special role in the life and history of the Philippines. Our ties run deep. Over two and a half million Americans are of Filipino descent. We fought side by side with America in World War II and in virtually every other conflict since.

In my conversations with Senator Barack Obama before the elections, and President-elect Obama after his election, it was made clear that the special relationship between the U.S. and the Philippines will continue unabated. We look forward to working with the new President and we welcome him to the world stage.

Closer to home, the economy will be the central focus of our government, and advancing the peace process in Mindanao my personal commitment in 2009. I am cautiously optimistic about the new year, the way I heard many bankers say it in yesterday’s Central Bank reception.

I prefer to look to a brighter future for the Philippines, and indeed for the entire world. So please, join Atty. Arroyo and myself in a toast for more success in 2009.

Let us hope that this year finds all of us living in peace, prosperity and harmony.

Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s speech during the Vin D’Honneur. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105713/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=18681&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 18th anniversary of the Philippine National Police (PNP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 18th anniversary of the Philippine National Police (PNP)

[Delivered at the PNP Multi-Purpose Center, Camp Crame, Quezon City, January 26, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Puno for your introduction.

PNP Chief Versoza, Secretary Ebdane and the other former chiefs of the PNP; General Yano, members of the Diplomatic Corps, members of the House of Representatives, awardees, officers and members of the Philippine National Police; ladies and gentlemen: Happy Anniversary sa PNP! (applause)

In his remarks to which we listened very intently, the Chief PNP said this day belongs to the policemen and the policewomen. Indeed, it is a day for acknowledging the sacrifices of our policemen and women who conscientiously do their jobs manning the stations, responding to calls for help, and keeping order in our communities. It is a day for commiserating with the policemen and women wounded in action. It is a day for mourning those who have lost their lives in the line of duty.

Policemen and women of the Philippines, for your courage and dedication to duty, thank you. Thank you for assuring that the citizens can rest easy because the police will keep the peace for them.

We have seen the positive indicators like the crime solution efficiency climbing. We have seen negative indicators continue to go down like index crimes and street crimes and especially bank robbery, kidnapping and stolen vehicle incidents. And we have been reminded in the report of General Versoza that the outcome of incidents like the RCBC robbery shows PNP's efforts to uphold human rights and follow operational guidelines.

Years ago, when we started the PNP modernization, which you subsequently called "the PNP transformation," we were saddled by budgetary constraints. But we persevered, stretching our funds. We pushed on to boost the force's sagging morale in the beginning by implementing a pay increase in 2001 followed by 2002, followed by three other pay increases subsequently — five increases during our eight-year administration. (Applause)

As government revenues continue to go up, we increased recruitment, accelerated training, and boosted equipment and facilities. By the end of last year, we'd increased the force by over 12,000 men and women, so that General Versoza could speak in behalf of 125,000 members of the police force.

And I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you on the recent agreement the PNP has entered into with PDEA to fight the evil of drugs. And I enjoin you to cooperate with the PDEA, with the local government units and other agencies, as we crack down on the big drug lords.

Let us wage a fiercer war against them on the fronts of law enforcement, judicial action and policy-making. It is expected that you will tighten your intelligence network throughout the country, which is indeed very vast, and endeavor to eliminate the number of drug cases dismissed due to mere technicalities. The report of General Versoza showed an increase in drug cases filed. Let's make sure by building up a good case that they will go all the way to conviction.

As for Mindanao, in 2001, I inherited a state of all-out war. Since then, we made steady progress towards permanent peace until the setback of August 2008. With the PNP doing its share in keeping the peace and running after the renegade elements who have broken the law, I hope 2009 will be a come back year for peace, progress and prosperity in Mindanao.

The new Presidential Adviser on the Peace Progress is familiar to all of you, former Chief PNP Sonny Razon, who is here with us today. Congratulations, Sonny! (Applause)

Under Sonny's oversight, the peace panel has been directed to touch base with our facilitators and the MILF leaders to schedule the resumption of peace talks. The panel is poised and ready to embark on substantive discussions, including ceasefire-related issues, the International Monitoring Team, and accelerated development for Mindanao. We hope all parties are as committed as government to resume negotiations soon.

Our new paradigm for peace includes interfaith dialogue, authentic consultation with the communities, and the principle of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration for armed rebel groups. This approach gives the PNP a more active role in the peace process, for one thing, by helping to activate and strengthen local peace and order councils.

We saw in the report of General Versoza about the two directorates for integrated police operations in Western and Eastern Mindanao. This will be very helpful to General Razon. And these directorates after all were the ones directly responsible for the capture together with the AFP for the capture of JI terrorists and bomb experts as well as other notorious characters. So, to the PNP, congratulations for your fight against the JI and other terrorists! (Applause)

And as reported to us by General Versoza, though he did not say it verbally, we saw it in the screen about the MILF bombers being given... what is it, MILF bombers, right? Yeah, they are called MILF, right? Whatever they were... the notorious bombers were given life sentences. So, that is an important accomplishment because that's one example of a case that—with your good build up of the case—we're able to bring all the way to conviction. (Applause)

To advance peace and progress in Mindanao, as in the past, we hope to be able to count on the support of our partners in the International Monitoring Team (Brunei, Japan and Libya); Malaysia who has been an ardent facilitator, our other friends in the OIC, our friends in Europe, and the United States.

Our policemen and women have been valuable contributors to the peace in Mindanao and to the peace all over the country — in the countryside, in the streets — that has brought us uninterrupted economic growth for 36 successive quarters, which is a historical record. Never before did we have 36 quarters of uninterrupted growth. And this growth has brought down the rate of poverty; brought up the annual average new employment; supported seven million microentrepreneurs, some of whom I hope are your families because we have microfinance services just for the PNP. This growth and our revenue enhancement measures — thanks to our congressmen and women who are here with us today — forming the virtuous cycle that has given us the financial resources to increase your ranks and your benefits.

This virtuous cycle has given us the ability to build the most roads in history, from highways to farm-to-market roads; the most ports, from modern airports to the RORO system spanning Mindanao to Luzon; the most barangays electrified; the most classrooms; the most scholarships for high school, college and post-graduate degrees in science and engineering, some of which scholarships I hope are enjoyed by your children; billions of pesos for training, not just millions as in the past, some of which

I hope are enjoyed by your families; and the most land for our indigenous peoples, which I hope include members of the police; and decent homes for our policemen and women.

Para sa ating mga pulis, we have housing for the PNP such as in Camp Bagong Diwa, Bicutan; Camp Macabulos in Tarlac; Camp Castañeda in Silang; Camp Capistrano in Cagayan de Oro. And you have 400 hectares reserved for you in San Miguel, Bulacan.

In preparation for our celebration today, over the weekend, I talked to the Secretary of the DBM to allocate 300 million pesos for police housing. (Applause) And SILG will confirm to you that I instructed him to have the bidding for the whole amount done in the next few days. (Applause)

With the revenues from the expanded value-added tax and the alcohol and tobacco excise tax — again, thanks to our Congress — we have been able to expand healthcare as never before. Health insurance now covers 74 percent of the population, including policemen and women.

When a policeman or woman dies, the spouse becomes an automatic lifetime member of Philhealth, including the family.

Public hospitals are also being upgraded. I instructed SILG and the Secretary of DOH to include in the DOH upgrading program the upgrading of the PNP clinics serving the poorest provinces in ARMM, CAR and CARAGA, so that they will become not clinics but small hospitals. (Applause)

And today — again, thanks to the Cheaper Medicine Bill of Congress — the poor from whose ranks many policemen and women come, can buy their essential medicines at half the price of year 2000.

At inaatasan ko rin ang Kalihim ng Interior and Local Government na dagdagan kasama ng DOH ang bilang ng mga Botika sa Barangay na itatayo sa loob o malapit sa mga kampo ng PNP sa Tawi-Tawi, Zamboanga del Norte, Maguindanao, Apayao, Surigao del Norte, Dinagat Islands, Lanao del Sur, Northern Samar, Masbate, Abra, Misamis Occidental, Agusan del Sur, Kalinga at Surigao del Sur. In other words, the areas where you have the biggest populations and the most hungry... the biggest poor populations and the most hungry populations are located.

You interact a lot with local government officials. One of the good side effects of the tax legislation that we have had is that local governments can now avail of 40 percent of the new taxes as additional Internal Revenue Allotment. This enables them to support police operations more. I know how important it is for the police and the local governments to work together. Some of those who receive awards here for outstanding performance are also known to have received a lot of support for their local governments.

Ngunit lahat nito ay nangyari dahil sa mga repormang ginawa natin sa ekonomiya at pananalapi ng bayan. Kung hindi dahil sa mga repormang nailatag natin bago mangyari ang pandaigdigang krisis sa ekonomiya, malamang ay napabilang na tayo ngayon sa mga ekonomiyang naghihirap bumangon mula sa pandaigdigang krisis.

And we have legislation not only to do reforms but legislation to help the poor directly. We thank Congress for granting new legislation that provides income tax exemptions to annual earnings of as high as 150,000 pesos. This is a bonanza for wage-earners and salaried workers, including the police.

At binuo ng pamahalaan ngayon ang ating Economic Resiliency Plan na naghahalaga ng 300 billion pesos. Layunin ng malaking programang ito na lalo pang palaguin ang ekonomiya sa pagpatuloy ng ating reporma ng imprastraktura, alagaan ang pinakamahirap na sektor, at lumikha ng mga trabahong pang-emerhensiya.

Doon sa emergency employment, malaki ang tulong ng pulis. Mula pa noong 2001, inatasan ko na nasa ating Emergency Employment Program dapat ang chief of police ng bawat station ang magre-recruit ng out-of-school youth na bibigyan ng employment. Bakit sabi nila yung chief of police? Eh kasi yung out-of-school youth na walang trabaho yun ang mga siga-sigang kanto boy. So, ang tinitingala lang nila ay yung pulis kaya dapat yung pulis ang magre-recruit sa kanila, magdidisiplina sa kanila. At itong programang ito ngayon ay tinatawag na OYSTER. Many don't know what OYSTER stands for. Might as well because we have to give it a name for this particular period of the world economic history — Out-of-School Youth Serving Towards Economic Resiliency. Kaya ito ay isang malaking kontribusyon ng ating pulis sa ating Emergency Employment and Economic Resiliency Program.

Mga pulis, congratulations sa inyo! (Applause) Mga pulis gaya nga nang sabi ni Sonny Razon nung panahon niya, 'Mamang Pulis at Aling Pulis.' Ang hinihiling ko sa inyo sa araw ng anibersaryo, lalo pa niyong pag-igihan ang inyong paglilingkod. Kasi nagbago ang pananaw ng sambayanan sa mga pulis — kung dati may takot, may duda, ngayon bumalik ang pagtingin sa mga policemen at policewomen. In fact, our people cite the PNP as number six best performing government agency today. (Applause) And that is indeed cause for celebration especially on your anniversary.

So, sa inyong lahat, congratulations for your accomplishment! More power to our PNP!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the 18th anniversary of the Philippine National Police (PNP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105703/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=19021&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 3rd Annual Butil [Filipino] Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa Ikatlong Taunang Butil

[Ipinahayag sa Palayan City, Nueva Ecija, ika 30 ng Enero, 2009]

Maraming salamat at happy birthday Congresswoman Chavez. Bukas ang birthday mo, pero salamat na pinaaga mo dahil wala ako bukas. So, thank you very much, Nelly, na ginawa mo ito. Nagkaroon tayo ng pagkakataon magkasama tayong lahat.

At congratulations din doon sa mga nagwagi ng Gintong Butil awards pati na rin iyong mga nakatanggap ng mga iba't ibang biyaya na ipinamahagi ngayon. At binabati ko lahat ng mga kasapi ng Butil na narito mula sa iba't ibang bahagi ng buong Pilipinas. At siyempre ang ating mga host, lahat ng mga taga-Nueva Ecija sa pangunguna ni Governor Oyie Umali, binabati ko rin.

Binabati ko rin ang ating host congresswoman, si Cherry Umali, kasama niyang host congressman si Congressman Violago. At nandito dahil merong mga magsasaka galing sa kanilang probinsiya at hindi lamang iyon dahil sila'y barkada ni Congresswoman Chavez, nandito rin si Congresswoman Neneng Nicolas at saka si Congresswoman Vicky Alvarado; kaya binabati ko rin sila. Si Mayor Capinpin ng Palayan, magandang umaga. Thank you for hosting us. Si Butil SecGen, ang aking Kabalen, si SecGen Guanlao; iyong aking PA for Central Luzon na taga-Palayan, si Reli Fajardo; at iyong aking makakasama mamaya sa aming trabaho doon sa Fort Magsaysay, si Secretary of Environment, Lito Atienza.

Ang parangal ng Gintong Butil ay hinahandog ngayon sa gitna ng kasalukuyang dinaranas ng mundo na isang matinding krisis sa ekonomiya. Lahat ay naghahanap ng "magic wand" na magsasagip sa ekonomiya ng mundo. May mga nagsasabing hindi pala tamang economic system ang umiiral ngayon. Kailangan daw ay buwagin ang kasalukuyang sistema. Kailangan daw gumawa ng radikal na pagbabago. Ngunit may mga nakatayang buhay. It's arrogant to think that we can wipe the slate clean for the common good if large segments of our population are to suffer in the meantime.

Kaya bago tayo gumawa ng kung anumang radikal na pagbabago, we must be sure we don't inflict more damage, or neglect the hardships of those most hurt by the global downturn. Sa ganoon, bago tayo gumamit ng radikal na kilos sa ating ekonomiya, tiniyak muna natin na itukoy ang mga kakayahan ng pamahalaan sa mga programa para makaraos ang mahihirap sa panahon ng kakulangan. Oo, kailangan mag-adjust tayo, magbago ngunit hindi sa pasanin ng mga pinaka hindi makakaya ito.

Kaya ang programa ng ating administrasyon kasama nga si Nelly at iyong ibang mga congressman at congresswoman na nandito, kasama si Oyie at iyong ibang mga local government officials, ang programa natin ay pasiglahin ang ekonomiya. Kaya naglahad tayo ng pondo para sa mga prayoridad gaya ng paglikha ng trabaho at pagbawas ng kahirapan, negosyo sa sakahan at kaunlaran sa kanayunan, paggastos sa imprastraktura, reporma sa mga iba't ibang sektor, pagbawas ng gutom at panlipunang kaunlaran.

Ang mga kilos na ginagawa natin upang makamit ang Millennium Development Goals ng United Nations gaya ng pagbawas ng lubhang kahirapan, kapantayan para sa kababaihan, edukasyon para sa lahat, kalusugan ng mga ina, pag-aalaga ng kalikasan, pakikipag-ugnay sa buong mundo, ito rin at iyong mga ibang millennium development goals ang mga kilos na mabuti para sa kalusugan ng ating pambansang ekonomiya. At itong mga ito ang magsisilbi sa atin at nagsisilbi ng mabuti sa kasalukuyang pandaigdigang krisis. At inaasahan natin na mauunawaan ng developed world na ang patuloy na kontribusyon nila sa tulong sa mga developing world ay kailangang maging bahagi ng anumang pagsisikap na sagutin ang kasalukuyang krisis.

Sa ating kaso, mapalad pa tayo hanggang ngayon – iyon nga ang sinasabi ni Governor Oyie Umali kanina na nakaupo kami magkasama – at least tayo, hindi pa rin tayo gaanong bumagsak ang ekonomiya gaya ng ekonomiya ng kabagsakan ng two thirds ng buong mundo.

We took our medicine – our economic medicine – years ago through fundamental economic reform that included raising taxes. Salamat sa suporta ng Butil at iyong mga congressman at congresswoman dito. Ikaw pa ba ang congressman noon, Oyie? Also cutting down on smuggling. At ito ay isang malaking programa natin kasama ng mga magsasaka ng Nueva Ecija lalo na iyong mga onion growers, mga poultry, di ba? Reforming our tax collection system and improving our banking laws. At ito naman ay sinuklian ng mga bagong kita para sa pamumuhunan sa human and physical infrastructure. At sa ating performance ng ekonomiya na every quarter mula noong pumasok ang ating administrasyon, 36 consecutive quarters of growth. Well, hindi pa nangyari iyon sa buong kasaysayan ng ating henerasyon. Including our GNP growth of 8% in 2007 and 6% in 2008.

Pero nagawa natin itong growth na ito dahil maganda ang ani ng ating magsasaka. Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. Pero hindig-hindi tayo kampante; buong kinikilala natin na ang ating kaunlaran ay hindi mahihiwalay doon sa ibang bansa ng mundo, doon sa mga bansang mayayaman. Kinikilala rin natin na bahagi sa solusyon ng pandaigdigang krisis na ito ay nakasalalay sa mas malawak na kooperasyon sa rehiyon.

Ngayon, kakagaling ko lang sa Malakanyang gawa nang bisita natin ngayon ang Sultan of Brunei. Pero nasagot ko na si Nelly na pupunta ako sa kanyang birthday party. In fact, inurong pa nga niya ngayon kaya nandito ako. Kasangga natin ang ating mga kapit-bansa sa ASEAN. Kasangga natin ang mga dialogue partners ng ASEAN – China, Japan at Korea. Alam naman ninyo dito sa Nueva Ecija, ang daming mga proyekto ng China dito sa agrikultura. Nagtatrabaho tayo magkasama upang iangat ang kooperasyon at koordinasyon sa ating rehiyon. At kasama dito ang pinapanukala ng Pilipinas na magkaroon sa ASEAN pati na rin kasama iyong tatlong dialogue partners natin, Japan, Korea at saka Tsina na magkaroon ng pangagalingang suporta ang mga bansang may hamon sa cash flow.

Alam ninyo, iyong Credit-Suisse, naglabas sila ng credit worthiness for equity investments ng mga iba't ibang bansa. Siguro tatlong dosena ang rinanggo nila. Nandoon, number one ang Pilipinas; doon sa kahuli-hulihan iyong Iceland dahil buong bansa ang naging bangkarote. Kaya ayaw nating mangyari iyon sa ating rehiyon. Kaya ito ang pinapanukala ng Pilipinas dito sa ASEAN. At kanina sinabi ng Sultan of Brunei na susuportahan niya itong panukala ng Pilipinas doon sa ASEAN meeting.

Itong krisis na ito na dinaranas ng mundo walang kapantay sa kasaysayan maging sa kalakihan ng krisis or kalaliman ng krisis o maging sa kalawakan ng krisis. Pero ang mundo ay marami na ring natuto mula sa mga nakaraang pandaigdigang hamon sa ekonomiya. Halimbawa, iyong Great Depression wala pa tayo, di pa tayo pinanganak. Ah, wala si Nelly, pinanganak na ba noon? Pero karamihan sa atin hindi pa noong 1930s. Pero natuto na ang mundo, marami na ang ginawang mga patakaran na wala noon. Iyong mga fiscal stimulus wala pa noon, noong panahon ng Great Depression, ngayon mayroon na. At para sa atin naman sa Asia, natuto rin tayo ng mahalagang leksiyon mula doon sa Asian financial crisis noong 1997 at 1998. So, ginagamit natin iyong mga leksiyon na iyon. Ganumpaman, iyong nagsasabing kailangan may radical na pagbabago, totoo pagkat siguraduhin natin na tutulungan na natin ang mahihirap, puwede na nating pag-isipan iyong mga radical na pag-iisip. Ano itong mga radical na pag-iisip na kailangan?

Una, kailangan ng saligang pagbabago ang global financial regulation. Di ba bumagsak ang ekonomiya dahil bumagsak iyong sub prime, iyong mga umuutang sa Amerika na bumibii ng bahay 10 percent lang babayaran tapos iyon pala hindi naman masyadong maganda ang kanilang credit rating? Eh kasi sa dami ng mga papeles, papeles, hindi na nakikita iyong mga saligang credit worthiness. So iyon, kailangan ang mga pagbabago doon. At bago pa naman tayo madamay, kailangan tayo rin – hindi man pagbabago kasi umuubra naman ang sistema, in general — pag-iibayo. Kaya itong si Nelly, mula noong umupo ako dito, walang tigil na pag-uusap tungkol sa cooperative bank, at iyon ay isang kailangang pag-ibayuhin natin. At salamat sa Butil at sa inyong cooperative bank, kayo ay pioneer sa pag-iibayo ng ating cooperative banking system.

Pangalawang radical na paiisip ay hindi na puwedeng magdikta iyong mga mayayamang bansa sa pandaigdigang patakaran sa ekonomiya para sa mundo. Eh, sila nga ang bumabagsak tayo ay nakatindig pa. kaya ang leksiyon doon, umasa tayo sa ating sariling pondo, umasa tayo sa ating sariling mga patakaran. At iyon din ang ginagawa ng Butil. Kaya tinuloy ninyo at ginawa ninyo itong mga cooperative banking system, at binigyan natin ng mga halimbawa iyong mga outstanding cooperatives, cooperative bank at mga beneficiary ng cooperative banking. So, itong sistemang tinatayo ninyo ay malaking tulong para makaasa tayo sa ating sariling sikap. Iyan ang pangalawang leksiyon, iyan ang radical thinking.

Ngunit panghuli, kailangan tuloy ang pangangalakal. Huwag nating isarado ang ating mga pintuan sa isa't isa sa mundo. Kasi kung hindi tayo mangangalakal, liliit ng liliit ang bawat ekonomiya. Iyon ang nangyari noong Great Depression, eh mas lalong babagsak, pati tayo babagsak. At tayo naman, gaya ng halimbawang binigay ko, iyong ginagawa ninyo sa cooperative banking system, iyong iba't ibang mga binanggit ni Nelly na ginawa ng aking administrasyon, iyong ibat ibang mga tulong kanina, iyong ginawa ng mga huwarang nakakuha ng gantimpala, iyong mga ginagawa ng mga nakatanggap na beneficiary, ginagawa natin ang lahat ng makakaya natin alang-alang sa sambayanan. At nagalakal akong makita na karamihan sa inyo mga Butil ay kumikilos para sa kapakanan ng nakararami. At nakikita ko ito sa sipag ninyo, sa sipag ng ating mga magsasaka. Sabi ni Oyie, pinakamagandang magsasaka sa Kongreso raw nandito.

So, sa pagsisikap ng ating pinakamagandang magsasaka sa Kongreso at kayong iba't ibang mga magsasaka na kinakatawan ninyo na nagsisikap na maparami ang ani upang may sapat na pagkain ang mga Filipino, iyan ang isang sinasabi kong radical thinking. Umasa tayo sa ating sarili. Hindi na tayo dapat sa loob ng limang taon bibili pa ng bigas sa iba; tayo na lamang ang magtanim ng ating sariling bigas. Kaya ngayon bumibili tayo ng palay sa ating magsasaka, hindi 30,000 metric tons kung hindi one million metric tons mula sa ating sarili.

Nakikita ko rin ang inyong malasakit sa sipag ng ibat ibang mga manggagawa dito sa Nueva Ecija, pati na rin sa ibang bahagi ng Pilipinas, pati na rin sa mga sektor. Salamat naman at nauunawaan ninyo na sa pinagsama nating sipag at lakas, buong tatag nating mahaharap kung anuman ang hamon na dadalhin sa atin ng buong mundo.

Kaya sa araw na ito, bisperas ng birthday ng ating pinakamagandang magsasaka sa Kongreso at sa araw ng pagdiriwang ng magsasaka "Farmers Day", ang aking mensahe sa inyo, saludo ang Pilipinas sa ating magsasaka. Salamat pinapakain ninyo ang buong bansa at kumikita pa kayo para sa ganoon umangat ang buong bansa.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the 3rd Annual Butil. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105634/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=19408&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo before the Filipino Community in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa komunidad ng mga Pilipino sa Riyadh, Saudi Arabia

[Ipinahayag noong ika 2 ng Pebrero, 2009]

I am so happy to be with all of you... matula da kong kayabe, kaluguran kung kabalen...naragsakanak nga kakadwa tayo amin, kakailiak ti bangir ni mamang ko...nalipay ako nga kauban kita tanan, mga kaigsuonan gikan sa bisayas ug Mindanao...malikliketak ya wadia ed sikayon amin.

Nagagalak ako na magkasama tayo, mga minamahal kong kababayan. Labis akong humahanga sa walang sawang malasakit ninyo sa inyong pamilya, trabaho, at bansa.

Itong nakaraang taon, 2008, napakamakasaysayan. Kumalat ang kaguluhan ng ekonomiya ng mundo at linagay sa panganib ang kinabubuti ng bilyun-bilyon sa buong daigdig.

Hindi ko na siguro kailangang sabihin sa inyo: Dito sa Saudi, ang pinakamalaking-expatriate Filipino community sa buong mundo. Gusto kong tiyakin na matatag ang trabaho ninyo dito, sa kabila ng pandaigdigang krisis sa ekonomiya dahil may mga kababayang nawawalang trabaho sa iba't ibang bansa. Ngunit gusto kong ibalita na mas marami naman ang bagong trabahong inaalok. Kaya umaangat pa rin ang remittances ng 13%. Maraming Salamat sa inyo.

Samantala sa ating bansa, tinutuloy natin ang ating programang lumikha ng mas maraming trabaho. Sa ganoon, gaya ng parati kong sinasabi, nawa'y dumating ang araw na ang pagtrabaho sa ibayong dagat ay career option lamang, at di ang tanging choice para sa masipag na pilipino. Isa sa mga ginagawa natin ay magbuo ng mga retraining program sa Pilipinas gaya ng mga training sa call center, welding, baker at chefs at iba pa, na maaaring ihanda ang mga bumabalik na expatriate para makatrabaho sa atin. Dinadala rin atin ang mga professional licensure examinations sa mga piling lugar kung saan may maraming expat workers gaya ng Qatar, Hong Kong at ngayon sa Saudi para maihanda kayo sa mas matatag na trabaho at mas mataas na suweldo. Halimbawa, para sa mga nagtapos ng engineering pero wala pang lisensya, ang Professional Regulation Commission natin ay magdadala ng professional exams dito sa Saudi. Sa gayon, kung kayo ay pumasa, maaari kayong ma-promote at madagdagan ang sweldo at mas tiyak pa ng inyong pwesto.

Sa panahong ito ng pagsubok sa mga expatriates, ang inyong pamahalaan ay hindi natutulog.

For government, it is now payback time. The heroic efforts of the expatriate workers will not go unreciprocated.

A program of full reciprocity shall be carried out para tulungan iyong mga nawalan ng trabaho.

Ang DOLE at ang OWWA ang mangunguna sa pagtupad ng programang ito para sa inyo, pati na rin para sa mga manggagawa sa ating mga export industries.

Ang unang bahagi nito ay Filipino Expatriate Livelihood Support Fund sa halagang P1 billion na popondohan ng OWWA at suportado ng mga government lending institutions gaya ng Development Bank Of The Philippines at Land Bank. maaaring gamitin ng mga expatriates na nawalaan ng trabaho ang pondong ito para mamuhunan sa mga bagong negosyo o pondohan ang dagdag na pag-aaral o training.

Nandito si Secretary Roque ng DOLE. Inatasan ko siya na tiyakin na ang mga reglamento at proseso para maka-abot sa pondong ito ay simple at hindi complicated. Huwag nating pahirapan pa sa daan ng maraming red tape ang mga bumabalik na expatriates.

Ang DOLE at OWWA ay inatasang makipag-ugnay sa mga ahensiya pangkabuhayan at pamumuhunan ng pamahalaan gaya ng Department of Trade and Industry at Department of Agriculture – narito si Secretary Peter Favila at Secretary Artie Yap – upang maitukoy ang mga bagong negosyong maaaring pasukan ng mga bumabalik.

Ang pangalawang bahagi ng buong suporta ng pamahalaan ay pagtulong sa mga bumabalik na expatriates na makahanap ng pagkikitaang trabaho.

Ang DOLE-OWWA ay nagtatayo ng mga help desks sa bawat probinsiya. Para sa ganoon, matutulungan kayo at mapapantayan ng trabaho ang inyong kakayahan, training at karanasan. We match the jobseeker with the job.

Mayroon pang tulong na mabibigay. Ito ang online information. ang gawain nito ay tungkol sa mga bakanteng trabaho, parang classified ads, “wanted: Carpenter o wanted: Welder o wanted: Plumber.” Mayroon na ngayong mga isang daang touch screen kiosks para dito sa buong bansa. Maaari nang ma-access sa internet sa phil-job.net.

Para sa mga bumabalik na expatriates na nagnanais tumawid sa ibang bansa na nangangailangan ng kanilang kakayahan at talento, ang POEA ay nagsasagawa ngayon ng malawakang pagbubukas ng employment opportunities sa maraming bansa. Marketing blitz ang ginagawa natin.

Kaya nating pondohan lahat nitong mga programa dahil kung ihahambing sa maraming ibang bansa, ang pilipinas ay nananatiling island of stability in an otherwise stormy global sea of economic troubles. Hindi lang ako ang nagsasabi nito kundi ang mga dalubhasa sa pananalapi gaya ng standard and poor’s. Pinagbago natin ang ating ekonomiya ilan taon nang nakaraan. Ito ay tumutulong sa atin ngayon. bilang resulta ng mga dramatic na reporma sa pagkoleksyon at paglikha ng mas malawak na buwis, pagmatyag sa gastos, at reporma ng mga bangko, ang ating ekonomiya ay lumago.

Gumagawa tayo ng nakapagbabagong pamumuhunan sa taong bayan, gaya ng edukasyon, training, kalinga sa kalusugan, social services, ganoon din sa imprastraktura. We are investing in modernizing infrastructure like roads and bridges on an unprecedented scale. Alam niyo ba na kalahating oras na lang mula sa Monumento hanggang Clark kapag dadaan sa north Luzon at Clark Expressway. The next time you go to the Philippines, maaari na kayong mag-drive mula sa Aparri hanggang Jolo sakay ng ating roll-on-roll-off sa nautical highway system. O maaari na kayong magbakasyon sa iba’t ibang world-class resort natin gaya ng Boracay, Cebu, Bohol at Palawan.

Sa atin, ayon sa mga survey, nine out of ten look forward with hope to the new year. Napakahalaga ng pagsama-sama nating lahat. Patuloy tayong magtulungan sa lahat ng paraang makabubuti sa ating bansa.

Maraming salamat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s speech before the Filipino Community in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105615/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=19526&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Multi-Sectoral Jobs Summit “Joining Hands Against the Global Crisis”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Multi-Sectoral Jobs Summit “Joining Hands Against the Global Crisis”

[Delivered at the Heroes’ Hall, Malacañang, February 9, 2009]

Thank you. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Secretary Roque.

Vice-President De Castro, other Cabinet members, Congressman Guinigundo, business leaders, labor leaders, ladies and gentlemen:

We’ve just been around the world in eight days; Peter and I, and compared to many parts of the world, we can truly say that we in the Philippines have weathered the worse of the global crisis thus far.

This is because we “rebooted” our economy several years ago. We took our economic medicine through fundamental reform by raising taxes, cutting down on smugglers and reforming our tax collection system and banking laws. Our reform moves have paid off with revenue for investments in human and physical infrastructure. I think you all recognize that it only takes about half an hour by car now from Monumento to Clark using the North Luzon-Clark Expressway. And that you can travel by car from Aparri to Jolo, island hopping on our Roll-on/Roll-off ferry Nautical Highway System. We are likewise investing unprecedented amounts in expanded social services.

As a result of our investments, our GNP grew 8.0 percent in 2007. And in 2008 when two-thirds of the world went into recession, our GNP still managed to grow by 6.0 percent. Nonetheless, this is a time when government, business and labor must join hands against the global crisis so that it does not become a crisis in the Philippines. In doing this, we must not neglect those who feel the hardships of the global downturn, especially firms under strain and workers facing layoffs.

We are here to follow-up initiatives from the tripartite meeting two weeks ago with specific measures and actions on concerns raised. So, may I therefore review some of the concerns raised two weeks ago as summarized by Secretary Nitoy Roque and givesome of the responses to those concerns.

Number one. SSS to condone penalties and surcharges on loans of affected workers. (Applause)

In response to this concern raised two weeks ago SSS is already implementing such a program for one year.

Number two. DOLE and OWWA to establish a stand-by fund for displaced seafarers and land-based OFWs.

As a matter of fact, a program is being carried out to help expatriate workers who might return home from their host countries that are now being buffeted by the economic crisis. This program is being made available as well to workers being laid off in export-oriented industries.

The DOLE is the lead in carrying out the government's program for the returning expatriates and the retrenched export workers. The first component of this program is an Expatriate and Export Workers' Livelihood Support Fund in the amount of one billion pesos financed by OWWA for the OFWs and supported by government lending institutions such as the Development Bank of the Philippines, the Land Bank and the SB Corporation. Displaced expatriate and export-oriented workers can access the fund to help capitalize start up businesses or finance further studies and training.

I have told Secretary Roque that the rules and mechanics of accessing to this money must be simple and hassle-free. Returning expatriate workers and retrenched export workers should not be subjected to irrational rules and red tape.

Number three. Implement training programs, training interventions specifically targeted for workers displaced as a result of the global financial crisis at the community level. And Secretary Buboy Syjuco and I have been talking, and TESDA will do this starting in CALABARZON, then Subic, Clark and Mactan.

Two weeks ago, one area that was suggested to be explored is the TESDA and its accredited training institutions tap as trainers skilled workers, both local and OFWs, who have been displaced, either permanently or temporarily. And TESDA will specifically seek in-bound returning workers and domestic retrenched workers with experience who will become trainers of TESDA.

Number four. Reduce the cost of doing business. One suggestion given two weeks ago was to provide fuel subsidy to firms operating in the export processing zones that transport their workers to and from the zones. Another is to lower the costs of business licenses and permits. Secretary Favila who was with me in the trip, instructed PEZA's Lilia de Lima to implement the fuel and transport subsidy, right, Peter? And the forthcoming standardization of the city business registration and permit process in Metro Manila which will be launched on eighteenth of February, I believe during the meeting of the League of Cities of the Philippines will also reduce red tape and therefore the cost of doing business.

In addition, due to difficulties currently encountered by some firms in accessing credit from the private banking sector, the government financial institutions will provide loan facilities, such as working capital, to creditworthy firms. We have requested the BSP also through the national government's representative in the Monetary Board, Trade and Industry Secretary Peter Favila, to provide liberal terms for rediscounting windows and allow the banks particularly the GFIs some flexibility on regulatory financial ratio compliance.

Number five. Stimulate domestic production and product demand and consumption by addressing smuggling. Our Anti-Smuggling Task Force has been working hard on this. I ask business and labor to join the task force. And we have here in front Jess Arranza of the Chamber of Philippine Industries, whose very mission is to help stop smuggling. And I reiterate my instructions that the Chamber of Philippine Industries as well as the PCCI should be an integral part of the task force.

Number six proposal or concern raised, was study the possibility of imposing a moratorium on wages and other economic benefits for a limited period. The issue on moratorium on wages can be discussed when wages are due for annual review between July and August. As for the benefits, that's why we have business and labor here with us together because those are better left to labor and management to agree on among themselves.

Number seven. Mainstream and expand training partnerships between government and private companies such as that being done in San Miguel and Max's. And TESDA will handle this, so Secretary Syjuco will be in touch with San Miguel and Max's on what they are doing, how they're doing this, expand that partnership with them, and expand it to other firms who are willing to do this.

Number eight. Government and industries to share information on industry employment, number of companies affected, number of workers affected either through retrenchment or flexible work arrangements, and other related information in order to come up with an accurate and reliable picture of the actual impact of the global financial crisis on employment and business and allow both government and industry to develop appropriate responses and interventions. Because when we are abroad we have heard strange, huge numbers that just depressed the people but really are very far from what it really is. So, Secretary Roque has already had a discussion I understand with Jun Ortiz-Luis who is the President of the Employers' Confederation, and it is with the Employers' Confederation that the DOLE will coordinate and share information. And it's through them that DOLE will coordinate and share information with major industries and the business sector. And let us emphasize on what government, business and labor are doing to save and generate jobs.

Even before this tripartite consultation started, our Economic Resiliency Plan has already been put together. In fact, I presented the first draft to the PCCI in your annual conference way back last October. And under this Economic Resiliency Plan which is our stimulus program, we will continue our unprecedented investments. I direct key agencies to show solid progress in bidding out and/or implementing major infra and social projects under the 300 billion pesos stimulus plan. We consider this the most important government initiative this year. And the agencies, you should start seeing the agencies rolling out tangible results. This will be part of our subject matter in our Cabinet meeting tomorrow.

Among other items of the resiliency plan, we will put all budget-funded energy independence and environment jobs in one box called "Green Collar Jobs."

This will include those who will be hired under the two billion-peso reforestation fund, whether in the re-greening of logged-over uplands like the mountains of Bukidnon, Cagayan de Oro, Lanao del Sur or in the regeneration of mangrove areas; under the GREET program of Tourism, coastal cleanup and Baywatch groups; jatropha planting and the replanting of coconut farms to ensure stable and sustainable biofuel feedstock; LPG retrofitting of tricycles and PUVs; Barangay electrification using solar panels or connecting them to hydroelectric powered grids; designating bike lanes using OYSTER labor ("OYSTER" stands for Out-of-School Youth Serving Towards Economic Resiliency); installation of solar-powered street lights, and other clean energy initiatives that the newly signed Renewable Energy Act can unleash. So these are part of the Green Collar Jobs that are part of our Emergency Employment Program.

Also, some 6,000 short-term jobs have been opened up in the government's 650 million-peso poverty mapping project which the DSWD will undertake once the 2009 budget takes effect in about six weeks, just in time when school is out. This project will be a major component of the government's Youth Employment in Summer or YES program.

Also, we are launching NARS or Nurses Assigned in Rural Areas. Nurses who have low overseas demand for their services due to lack of training – because there's a big demand for trained nurses but those untrained that's their problem — they shall be mobilized in their hometowns. These warriors for wellness shall do three I's: "Initiate" primary health, school nutrition, maternal health programs, first-line diagnosis etc.; "Inform", inform about community water sanitation practices and do health surveillance; and third, "Immunize", immunize children and mothers. They shall also serve as roving nurses for rural schools. How much will this cost on the nurses? If they're paid an allowance of P8,000 a month, and you have two 6-month tours of duties of nurses, five nurses for each of the 1,000 poorest municipalities, that will cost less than half a billion pesos. And I've talked to Nonoy Andaya about this (program) this morning. The stipend can be increased if — and I call the attention here of the President of the Mayors' League of the Philippines, Monching Guico — if the host LGUs offer a counterpart of say 2,000 pesos, which is the official cell phone bill of a town official. (laughter)

I ask Corporations to chip in as well – shirts can come from manufacturers, insurance, vitamins from pharmaceuticals, cell phones that will make the program truly a national enterprise with private equity.

Truly, if anything, a tight economy should prompt people to yearn for greater stability and harmony and working together; not working apart. So let us all pull together to make sure the country puts jobs and the economy ahead of political and costly conflicts. Let us focus on "Joining Hands Against the Global Crisis."

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Multi-Sectoral Jobs Summit "Joining Hands Against the Global Crisis". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105408/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=20056&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 9th e-Services Global Sourcing and Exhibition

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 9th e-Services Global Sourcing and Exhibition

[Delivered at Function Room 1, SMX Convention Center, SM Mall of Asia, Pasay City, February 9, 2009]

Thank you Secretary Favila for your introduction.

Chairperson Rey Chua of CICT, members of the Diplomatic Corps, our leaders of the E-service industry both here in the Philippines and around the world, ladies and gentlemen, Welcome to the Philippines!

As the world heads deeper into recession, we meet today in interesting times, so to speak. But to the fiscally strong, this is a time of opportunity. The Philippines has been compared to an island of stability amidst the raging world economic storm. That's not just coming from me. Standard & Poor's said it. "Reasonably healthy." — Fitch said it. "Macroeconomic risk the lowest." — Credit Suisse. "Inherently strong, a potential beneficiary of the world's financial woes." — JP Morgan, speaking of the Philippines.

We now have 36 quarters of uninterrupted growth since I took office as President in 2001. We have created almost 8 million jobs in eight years. We remain cautiously optimistic that our resources and plans will allow us to manage our way through this time. This is because we "rebooted" our economy several years ago with dramatic reforms in revenue collection and generation, fiscal controls and banking reform. All of these actions were taken before there was a hint of a global crisis. They have held us in good stead. Our GNP grew 8.0 percent in 2007 and in 2008, when two-thirds of the world went into recession; we managed to still have a respectable GNP growth of 6.0 percent. And we have a cushion in place to help the poor.

Aside from revenue, we have focused on reducing our debt-to-GDP ratio, and building up new industries such as the BPO sector. We have created the BPO's industry from almost nothing in 2001. In 2001 there were 4,000 BPO workers when our Administration started; today there are 400,000 BPO workers. Thank you so much for so much job creation. (applause)

I've been asking your industry leaders, how was the industry? And the response is that our BPO industry continues to boom as global cost cutting is sent to outsourcing. As you know the Philippines is ranked among the most attractive off-shoring destinations in the world because of cost competitiveness and more importantly the country's highly trainable, English-proficient, IT-enabled quality manpower.

Early in our Administration, we understood that we must act rationally and strategically, to foster a digital culture that maximizes the benefits of ICT. We initially concentrated our efforts on three areas.

The first area was the building of physical infrastructure. We worked to speed up the telecommunications network infrastructure by bringing down the cost of connectivity. We supported wider public access to communications and information services through the provision... encouraging the provision of broadband services in cities and identified growth areas, and a redundancy of telecommunications gateways. This infrastructure improvements have been among the most important reasons why BPOs have been coming, flocking to the Philippines.

The second area was ensuring an appropriate policy and legal environment. It is not the role of government to determine technological outcomes — that is the role of the market. Our role is to provide the environment to grow ICT. To that extent, I created a Cabinet level Commission on ICT headed by Rey Chua to lead our ICT policy formulation and implementation. Its function includes harmonizing and coordinating all public ICT initiatives. Our ICT sector is successful because it is driven by the private sector with minimal government intervention.

Finally, the third area of development is the development of human capital to close the digital divide and to provide the world-class workers that you need for your industry. The Philippines is one of the highest among the different countries in the number of training facilities for computer programming and other computer-related courses. And to make BPO world competitive, the world competitive industry that is today, the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority is working closely with the Business Process Association of the Philippines or BPAP on training courses on BPO to further enhance English proficiency to help near-hires develop the skills needed to qualify for employment.

To date, the Commission on Information and Communications Technology and the Department of Trade and Industry, in cooperation with the Business Process Association of the Philippines, have identified what they called the Next Wave Cities that are best capable of hosting IT-BPO and E-services operations. The original Cyber Corridor spanned Metro Manila, going down south to Iloilo, Bacolod, Cebu up to Davao. Now it has been lengthened — and I hope I get the facts right, they came to Peter Favila — to include Baguio, Dagupan, Tarlac, Pampanga especially Clark, Metro Manila especially Marilao, Meycauayan and Malolos, Metro Rizal namely Cainta and Antipolo, Metro Cavite where we have Dasmariñas and Imus, Metro Laguna where we have Santa Rosa and Calamba, Metro Batangas where we have Lipa and Batangas City, Dumaguete, and Cagayan de Oro. In any case if there are refinements to this list that comprises the cyber corridor that will be discussed during this conference.

What we can say is that, BPO and E-services are key drivers of our economy.

They generate investment, they generate jobs, they alleviate poverty, they improve the lives of our people. And we are proud to be among the world's leaders in this field. So we are proud to have you all today in this conference and exhibition.

To our first-time visitors who have come here to check out the opportunities we offer, I'm sure you will find that the Philippine BPO and E-services sector is among the best in the world. And to our existing investors, thank you for being a big part of the country's sustainable and resilient growth.

Maraming salamat. Thank you and Welcome once again! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 9th e-Services Global Sourcing and Exhibition. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105433/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=20098&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the welcome reception for the Philippines-Republic of Korea Business Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the welcome reception for the Philippines-Republic of Korea Business Forum

[Delivered at the Fiesta Pavillion, Manila Hotel, City of Manila, Metro Manila, February 18, 2009]

Thank you, Secretary Favila.

Other Cabinet members, Mr. Chang, Don Emilio, Ambassador Choi, other officials of the Philippine government, leaders of the business community –both of Korea and of the Philippines, ladies and gentlemen:

To our Korean friends, first of all, welcome to the Philippines!

And to Manila Bulletin and the Maeil Business Newspaper, congratulations for organizing this Business Forum.

It is a testament to the strong and mutually-beneficial relationship that has characterized the ties between the Philippines and the Republic of Korea.

As mentioned by Mr. Chang, I am very proud that in 1950, the Philippines participated in the Korean War by virtue of a Congressional Resolution authored by my father who was then Congressman and Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

And I am very proud that in recognition of this, when my father retired after 1965, he was invited to go to Korea and he brought me along where he received an award of appreciation from the Korean government. (Applause)

And now, I'm equally proud that in celebrating this year, the 60th Anniversary of the establishment of our relations, I have the honor to declare 2009 as "Philippines-Republic of Korea Friendship Year" (applause) and the coming March 3rd as our "Friendship Day." (applause)

As we have heard from the speakers earlier, the partnership between our two countries is hearty and robust, especially in terms of economic and people-to- people interaction. Our number one tourists to the Philippines are the Koreans, and with students and retirees, as mentioned earlier, there are twice the number of Koreans in the Philippines as Filipinos in Korea.

When I made my state visit to Korea in 2003, the number of Filipinos in Korea was the same as the number of Koreans in the Philippines. But today, there are twice as many Koreans in the Philippines as Filipinos in Korea. Maybe that means something about how Koreans like being in the Philippines. (applause)

As mentioned by Mike Varela, Korean companies are among the country's largest investors. There are about 900 Korean companies operating in the Philippines, among them such marquee names as Hanjin Heavy Industries, Samsung, LG, Eastern Group and the Korea Electric Power Corporation.

The billions of dollars that they have injected into the Philippines, particularly Hanjin's factories in Subic and Misamis Oriental, KEPCO's power plants in Batangas and Rizal, and now as of this week, Samsung's logistics hub in Clark. All of these not only demonstrate the Korean private sector's belief and confidence in the Philippine economy, but also the Korean people's willingness to help uplift the lot of the Filipinos by providing thousands of good jobs and creating opportunities for livelihood.

Even in development cooperation, the Republic of Korea has been a dependable partner, helping us achieve our Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan, always conforming to the priorities of the Philippine government. The Republic of Korea's aid program to the Philippines has been increasing significantly each year in areas like infrastructure. For instance, the Metro Manila-North/South Railway Link; the Olongapo-San Fernando-Gapan Road widening which passes through my hometown; the Laguindingan Airport in Mindanao; health projects, like the Cavite Hospital; information technology, like the training centers in Quezon City, Davao and other places; and agriculture.

And I am glad that now we have this business delegation to look at more opportunities in the Philippines. The Philippines has weathered the initial global shocks of the world economic crisis quite well because of the painful reform medicine we took several years ago. We took our economic medicine through fundamental economic reform by raising taxes, cutting down on smuggling, reforming our tax collection system and our banking laws and regulations. Our reform moves paid off with revenue for investments in human and physical infrastructure and an economic performance that has seen 36 consecutive quarters of growth over the last eight years, including 8.0 percent GNP growth in 2007 and 6.0 percent GNP growth in 2008.

And I am hopeful that the G20, especially under the upcoming leadership of the Republic of Korea, will make positive strides in engaging both the developed and developing world in coordinating effective responses to the global crisis.

I also hope that we develop a series of closely consulted and meshed regional alliances to complement the G20, or what we hopefully will become even a G30. For example, the countries of ASEAN, Korea, China and Japan have reiterated the agreement to set up a multibillion-dollar multilateral foreign exchange reserve pool through what we call an "Enhanced Chiang Mai Initiative" to ensure liquidity in our region, and thereby contribute stability in the world.

And this coming... in a couple of months from now, in a few weeks from now, Korea will host the ASEAN-Korea Summit. And I am very glad that during that period, I will also have the opportunity to make yet another official bilateral visit to the Republic of Korea.

I will be sharing again with the business community there as I would like to share with you the Philippine Economic Resiliency Plan which aims to save and create jobs, protect the poorest of the poor and returning Overseas Filipino Workers as well as those in export industries. Also to ensure low and stable prices to support consumer spending so that all those electronics from Korea will still continue to find a good market here in the Philippines. And also it aims to enhance our country's competitiveness in preparation for the global rebound that we know will happen.

First of all, we pump-prime the economy primarily by front-loading infrastructure investments in the first half of the year and by raising the absorptive capacity of government agencies to allow them to use their budgets productively and efficiently; And I am glad to see many Korean companies participating in this infrastructure investments. For example, I have been joking in Mindanao that the Cagayan de Oro-Iligan Corridor should be called the Hanjin Corridor because Hanjin has practically constructed every important infrastructure there including the road and now the Laguindingan International Airport.

In parallel, we are also focused on further raising revenues through improvements in tax administration and a public-private sector fund to support the initiatives in the resiliency plan. And we count on the leaders of the Philippine Business Community like Bulletin President Mike Varela to make this private-public sector fund a reality as soon as possible.

On the corporate front, we have provided tax relief for the private sector by reducing corporate income tax from 35 to 30 percent. Also, exempting minimum wage earners from personal income tax and increasing personal exemptions.

And to further enhance social protection, we are raising the allocation of conditional cash grants to the poorest households; we are doubling the funds for the national health insurance program to ensure the full national government contribution to that fund; and we are doubling the allocation for the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority, which is the recipient of Korean grants incidentally— all these among other healthcare and education initiatives.

Finally, we are ensuring that adequate support is provided to our workers, both domestically and overseas, through retraining programs to ensure they remain competitive and able to fully take advantage of job opportunities and find higher paying jobs; and also through reintegration services and livelihood assistance should any expatriate workers in Korea or in any part of the world return to the Philippines.

We are doing all these to take care of our people during the difficult times with the whole world, but also to ensure that you, the Korean investors invest in the Philippines. If you decide to go into the export market, you have the skilled Filipinos, the great Filipino worker making you competitive. And if you decide to invest for the domestic market, you have the consumer, the Filipino consumer who has the ability and the willingness to pay for the products that you produce.

This morning, I had a visitor, an American CEO of one of the large corporations dealing in, not export, but services for the domestic market. And he was telling me about how, though in his home country even during the height of the Christmas season, hardly anybody was buying things in the malls and department stores and boutiques. But he went to a mall yesterday, on a Tuesday, and it was so crowded with consumers. So, he is very confident about the consumption patterns of our country. I told him if that was the crowd you saw on a Tuesday, can you imagine what it will be if you were to go on Friday evening or Saturday anytime during the day.

So, dear friends from Korea, we must help our two countries navigate the current world economic crisis. We must combine the wisdom of our shared past and an enthusiasm for our common future to create a firm and strategic bond of cooperation. Very few relations exceed the warmth and depth that is found in the cordial and amiable friendship between the Philippines and Korea. Koreans are such a visible part of any scenery in the Philippines. In Baguio, for instance, in the John Hay Country Club for every one Filipino flight, you will find five Korean flights — they're there, they stay there, their children study English, and they play golf, and they're very much a part of that community. And we're only talking about one of the many that have Koreans as a very visible part of the community.

I flew over an area in Northern Cebu and I saw a golf course dedicated to Korean players and I saw a very nice housing project dedicated to the players who want to stay there whether a few days, a few weeks, a few months or a few years depending on what they're doing in the Philippines.

And so, this is our relationship — 60 years after we started and also after that first flight to the Philippines mentioned by Mr. Chang when there were only five passengers coming to the Philippines. Well, we heard from Mr. Chang that 60 years represents an important milestone in Korean philosophy. He said 60 years symbolizes the beginning of a new cycle, a fresh start, a new round.

So this year is a fresh start for our two countries as we celebrate our yesteryears with an eager participation of a stronger, brighter tomorrow. (applause) Notwithstanding the global economic crisis, I am optimistic that the future is bright — bright for the Philippines, bright for Korea, bright for a more vigorous partnership and a meaningful interaction between our two countries and our two peoples.

Thank you. Kamsahamnida. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the welcome reception for the Philippines-Republic of Korea Business Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105403/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=20893&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 23rd anniversary celebration of EDSA One Revolution

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 23rd anniversary celebration of EDSA One Revolution

[Delivered on February 22, 2009]

It is an honor to launch this year's celebration of the four days of the EDSA 1 anniversary in the company of that small band of patriots in uniform who chose to draw their line in the sand 23 years ago today, led by then Secretary of National Defense, now Senate President Juan Ponce Enrile.

If the patriots had not acted when they did—planning boldly, improvising on the way, but always moving forward decisively—then this historical watershed might not even have taken place. And had the Filipino masses not taken their side so quickly, the patriots holed up in Camps Aguinaldo and Crame might have been crushed and the whole episode reduced to a footnote in history.

But our people took to the streets in their support, sa kahabaan ng EDSA, mula sa harap ng Camp Crame at Aguinaldo, na walang sandata kundi ang pusong nagliliyab sa pagmamahal sa bayan at mataimtim na paniniwala sa Diyos. Together, as one people, we reclaimed democracy.

The world embraced EDSA 1 in 1986. The world tolerated EDSA 2 in 2001. The world will not forgive an EDSA 3 but would instead condemn the Philippines as a country whose political system is hopelessly unstable.

Our political stability today is one of the reasons why we have escaped thus far the worst effects of the global recession. We must prevent the world crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis, and protect those most hurt by the global downturn.

Let us honor the boldness of the leaders of EDSA, the boldness of our ordinary countrymen, the boldness of our faith in God. Let us look back to those four days of EDSA 1, not to relive them, for history must move on, but to recall their lessons and refresh our spirit as a people against the new challenges of today.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 23rd Anniversary Celebration of EDSA One Revolution. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105230/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=20965&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of the 2-storey, 4-classroom schoolbuilding of the Binalonan South Central School, Poblacion South

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the inauguration of the 2-storey, 4-classroom schoolbuilding of the Binalonan South Central School,
Poblacion South

[Delivered in Binalonan, Pangasinan, February 24, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Lapus for your introduction.

Other Cabinet members; other officials of the DepEd including our principals and teachers; Governor Espino and the other officials of Pangasinan; Mayor Guico and the other officials of Binalonan. And we have here on the... in our platform, Secretary Cabral, Secretary Esperon and P.A. for Education Mona Valisno: Dagiti kakailiak iti bangir ni mamang ko, naimbag nga bigat yo amin apo. (applause)

Ken maysa nga panangkablaaw kadakayo manen, kakailiak ti panagpiyesta tayo manen. (applause) Kablaawan kayo met para kadagiti proyekto iti edukasyon nga asegurado nga makatulong iti ili tayo.

Swerte iti Binalonan gapu ti our forebears valued intellectual pursuits and education very highly. We have, for instance, isu nga mano nga kakailian tayo became successful earlier than other Filipinos, ken nangted dagiti kinalaing kadagiti dadduma pay nga kakailian tayo. For instance, we have the famous Filipino-American writer from Binalonan, Carlos Bulosan, who wrote America is in the Heart. Adda diay met ni mamang ko, ni late First Lady, Doktora Evangeline Macaraeg, nga maysa nga doktora, anak ni Engineer Juan Guico Macaraeg. Maysa nga engineer, one of the first Filipinos who have completed an education in the United States.

Ti nagan ni apong lakay ko, adadiayen iti maysa nga eskwela, ti eskuwela idia highway. Tatta agyamanak kadakayo iti panangnangan iti baru nga library hub iti Binalonan a kas Doña Eva Macapagal Memorial Library Hub. (applause) Agyamanak iti amin nga nagtulong nga pondohan daytoy nga proyekto. And so, I'm glad to hear daytoy nga library hub. At first I thought that it had 35,000 book holdings, kunkuna da it has 60,000 book holdings, but a lot of them had already gone out and 35,000 are inside the library right now. Ket maysa nga benepisyo para kadagiti eskwela iti intero nga school division. Ti Northern Pangasinan ba Monching o Eastern Pangasinan? Ah, Eastern Pangasinan. Seguro nga mangted kadagiti agad-adal iti adu nga masapul nga edukasyon. Maragsakanak met para kadagiti estudyante iti Juan Macaraeg National High School nga libre nga maka-connect iti internet babaen daytoy baro nga e-library tayo.

In education, I'm glad that Monching made this theme education, with the invitation to the e-library and our two-storey school building here. Because it is a time for us to give a message that we can generate more social impact from education if the efforts are targeted and consolidated. This year, we have begun the effort to cluster the programs of DepEd, of CHED, of TESDA to create a forward-looking National Education Program.

Monching mentioned that Presidential Task Force on Education which I organized sometime ago. They submitted recommendations on improving the different states of the main education highway, that starts from pre-school, to elementary school, to high school, to voc-tech, to pre-college for some courses, college, and for some specializations, master and doctoral education. That is the education highway. And earlier today diay bangir, ano? Wen diay bangir, we showcased our reforms in pre-school education, particularly Executive Order No. 685 on the Standardization of the Pre-school Curriculum for 5-year olds with the goal, as Monching says, "increasing the participation rate for Grade 1." And Monching was talking about the drop-out rate. We're going to bring it down to less than 5.0 percent by 2010. And according to Jing Lapus, that's really a challenge, because Jing was telling me when we were in the audience that UNESCO has given up. He said the world will not be able to achieve one of the Millennium Development Goals and that is universal primary education. But even if the world may not be able to achieve it by 2015 with all our efforts here in Binalonan, Binalonan will be able to achieve it. (Applause)

Our special audience in the presentation of Secretary Lapus on the pre-school curriculum, the new pre-school curriculum was your Local School Board, because an active and supportive local school board is very important. The Local School Board is chaired by the municipal mayor and the district supervisor. The members include other key local officials; it's good that we have Governor Espino there with us also as well as representatives of the PTA and teachers' organizations.

The Local Government Code allot a special education fund of 1.0 percent tax on real property to Local School Boards for expenses related to school improvement and development. I was listening to how we want to use the budget — the Local School Board now I'm addressing them. But I waited for this program to announce that whatever the Local School Board will allocate to implement the pre-school curriculum, I will give Binalonan an equivalent amount. (Applause)

The people of Binalonan... Ah, okay. So, how much will you allocate? (laughter) Okay. So, if I know how much you allocate today, before I leave I can write the check today. (applause/laughter) But the people of Binalonan will always have a reason to feel optimistic despite news about the global economic recession. The structures that enable us to improve our lives, we've started even before anyone noticed that a global recession would occur. We already had our shields in place. We had installed programs that would increase our yields and allow us to help other provinces even more. Dagiti tattao iti Binalonan, you have always been supportive of our administration's goals.

And so, I'd like to take this opportunity once again to thank you. Thank you for the unity that you show our local officials and the national government, just like what you are doing for this week's fiesta celebration.

Isu nga tatta nga fiesta manen tayo, ti mensahe gapo kenyak ket let us commit ourselves to helping our townmates, our provincemates, and the rest of our countrymen who are not as fortunate as the professionals that abound here in Binalonan.

Iselebrar tayo iti pagkakaysa nga panakaigapuan nga dagiti umili iti Binalonan ket makaiturong dagiti mapagballegi nga fiesta kada tawen.

I remember kadda tawen, I remember thirty years actually since I became a senator, I've only missed one fiesta. But every year I come, in some form or another, I even invite guests usually. I remember the many years that I was crowning guest iti rabii Secretary Esperon came to look at the poultry industry here, and he ended up being the crowning guest. So, he was very happy about that.

Nakikaduaak iti fiesta tayo tatta gapu ta kayat ko nga agyaman kadakayo, dagiti kakailiak, iti panang-ayat yo kaniak ken iti panang-ayat yo ti umili tayo. Isu nga kadakayo amin, happy fiesta ken Dios ti agngina manen kadda kayo amin kakailliak!

(applause)

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the inauguration of the 2-storey, 4-classroom schoolbuilding of the Binalonan South Central School, Poblacion South. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105136/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21254&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the “ALDO NING PARANGAL: A Tribute to the Past Presidents of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines-Pampanga Chapter”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the “ALDO NING PARANGAL: A Tribute to the Past Presidents of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines-Pampanga Chapter”

[Delivered at Ballrooms 1 & 2, Holiday Inn Resort Hotel, Clark Freeport Zone, February 24, 2009]

Dakal a salamat.

Dakal a salamat Secretary Ed Pamintuan ing Cabinet Officer for Regional Development in Region III, ing Chairman ning NorthRail, ing Chairman ning Subic-Clark Alliance for Development, ampu Luzon Urban Beltway Super Region Champion. Salamat king introduction at ali tinuknang mag text para mumunta ku ngeni.

Our Cabinet members who are here today, Congressman Lazatin alibang opisyaes keti pu queng Pampanga. Karing judges, i Attorney Tuazon, ing malagu tamong presidenti ning IBP Pampanga. Past presidents, prosecutors at karing aliwa pang mamuntukan at miyembro na ning Integrated Bar of the Philippines keni king Pampanga, mayap a oras kekongan.

Muna, salamat king kekayung pamagsuporta king kakatamung administrasyon at karing inisyatibo tamu para king panyulung na ning kekatang bansa lalo na ing probinsya tang Pampanga.

Mayap a oras mu rin karing kekatamung parangalan keni, nung sabyan ko ngan, balamu meg roll call tamu karing peka magaling na ning legal profession alimu keti king Pampanga, but in the entire country.

Congratulations!

At salamat kaniting oportunidad a makisabe kekayu king panahun a kailangan mag join hands tamu kontra king global economic crisis.

The global financial turmoil has spread and jeopardized the well-being of billions of people across the world. Two-thirds of the world ing mekaranas yang pamagbagsak na ning kayang GDP. In the fourth quarter of 2008, Japan's GDP declined by 12.7 percent, U.S. by 5.1 percent, Taiwan by 9.2 percent, Thailand by 4.3 percent, Singapore by 3.7

percent, South Korea by 5.6 percent. But in that same quarter, the Philippines managed a 4.5 percent growth. And for the whole year a GDP growth of 4.6 percent and a GNP growth of 6.1 percent.

Ing rason? We “rebooted” our economy several years ago. We took our economic medicine through fundamental economic reform by raising taxes, cutting down on smugglers, reforming our tax collection system and banking laws. Our reforms paid off with revenue for investments in human and physical infrastructure.

Deng gagawan ning Japan ampo U.S. a paralan para misalba ing karelang ekonomiya — ini ngan pegumpisan ta nang gawan bayu pa mika crisis ing ekonomiya king mabilug a yatu. In 2008 in January we approved a stimulus of 1.4 percent of GDP and implemented it in March as the global food crisis erupted. Though the stimulus package is 1.4 percent of GDP, the deficit that we had to suffer to achieve that was less than 1.0 percent of GDP.

Ketang milabas a Marso, biklat ta ne ing SCTEX. Ding balang lalabas at manakit, metung mu ing sasabian da: “Metung yang karing pekamasanting diling dalan king mabilug a yatu.” Metung karing apulong legacy program cu, ya ing gawan ing Clark-Subic Corridor ing metung a competitive international service and logistics center king rehiyon. Alimu quing rehiyon Region III, but the region, the Southeast Asian Region. Lalam na ning kekatamung pamanungkulan, dininan tayang bie ing Diosdado Macapagal International Airport keti king Clark. Deti agawa tamu ngan kapamalatan da ring infrastructure development programs — king pamanyalese karing kekatamung airport facilities, pati na ing bagya-bagya tamung pamag implement karing policy reforms na memuklat pasbul, para karing mas marakal a international flights. Nung dati 44 la mu ding international flights a linub nyang 2003, when we started our development of Clark Airport. King kasalukuyan, atin ta ng 54 international flights kilub ning paruminggu. Ing milabas a paruminggu, mibuklat ing logistics hub na ning Samsung keti king Clark.

Tungkul karing policy reforms na kailangan para akwa ta ya ing patalakad tamung metung a competitive logistics hub king Subic-Clark Corridor, ing SCAD na penigobra de ing harmonization na ning immigration, customs at quarantine policies. One of the big achievements of Ed Pamintuan anti mung chairman na ning Subic-Clark Alliance for Development para king Clark at Subic. Pegumpisan ta ne inyang Disyembre ing pamag automate karing admission and transit procedures para king flow of logistics king Clark at Subic. King daratang a bulan ning Marso, target tamung apa-implement ing revised visa and work permit program, pati na ing customs admission rules at ing revised immigration, customs and quarantine manual para king Clark at Subic.

And of course, now you can travel by car from Clark to Boracay or Jolo. And you all know that it has cut down the time on travel from Clark to Metro Manila by one-half. You can travel by car from Clark to Jolo or Boracay, island-hopping on our Roll-on/Roll-off Ferry Nautical Highway System. We are likewise investing unprecedented amounts in expanded education, health care and other social services. We have accelerated our investments here in 2009. Our 300-billion peso stimulus spending or 7 billion dollars is bigger than Indonesia's 6 billion dollars, Malaysia's 4 billion dollars, and Thailand's 3 billion dollars, but it will not break our bank. We have brought forward investments to further stimulate our economy, to help our people, and to sustain the growth that has been so important to our economic success.

We remain mindful that this acceleration of investments must be balanced. We cannot abandon our hard-fought gains in fiscal discipline. We are well aware that we must both spend wisely and be prudent if we are to leave our nation in a healthy condition for the next generation. That is the road we were on before the onset of the global crisis. That is the road on which we would like the country to continue when this challenge has passed.

We pump-prime the economy primarily by front-loading infrastructure investments in the first half of the year and by raising the absorptive capacity of government agencies to make them use their budgets more productively and efficiently. In parallel, we are also focused on further raising revenues through improvements in tax administration where our lawyers can help so much and a public-private sector fund to support resiliency plan initiatives.

On the corporate front, we have provided tax relief for your clients in the private sector by reducing corporate income tax from 35 to 30 percent. Also by exempting minimum wage earners from personal income tax and increasing personal exemptions.

To further enhance social protection, we are doubling the allocation of conditional cash grants for the poorest households. We are doubling the allocation for PhilHealth — my half Kapampangan Cabinet member Pingkoy Duque is here — to ensure the full national government contribution to the national health insurance programs. And we are doubling the budget for the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority. These, among other healthcare and education initiatives. And we have our Kapampangan from Tarlac Cabinet Member Jing Lapus here with us today along with Angie Reyes and our own Manny Angeles.

Finally, we are ensuring that adequate support is provided to our workers both domestically and overseas through retraining programs among which will be right here in Clark to ensure that our workers remain competitive, fully take advantage of job opportunities because there're still are job opportunities. In fact, POEA is processing 3,000 new jobs a day. And therefore, we want to have our workers find higher paying jobs, or avail of reintegration services and livelihood assistance should any expatriate workers return to the Philippines, or for the export workers who get retrenched.

Ding economic indicators a pepakit na ning kekatamung bansa, mepansin la karing international economic institution and credit rating agencies. For example, para kang Dr. Victor Fung, ing Presidente na ning International Chamber of Commerce, ing ekonomiya na ning Pilipinas ing pekamatingkad king South East Asia. Sinangayun ya mu naman ing Moody's Rating Agency king positive rating outlook na ning bansa. Mimie lang pamangilala ing IMF at ing ADB karing kekatamung gewa para iangat taya ing kekatamung ekomiya. Ikayu mo, bilang abugado at huwes, nanu kaya ing pwede yung agawa para makasaup kayu para a sulung i momentum na ning national economy arapan da ring mangabayat at kapagsubukan? Well, I am not a lawyer, you see, although my father was a lawyer, a Kapampangan lawyer, number one in the bar, but I'm not lawyer so I need lots of help from lawyers. I'm an economist not a lawyer that's one way by which you can help. Di ba ing objective ning IBP, ay i Attorney Tuazon, "to ensure that the Bar discharges its public responsibility more effectively." Ing buri ng sabian ning "public responsibility," kalupa ne mu rin ing pamag-angat ning bie pang ekonomiya ding kekatamung memalen. Nung mag-survey tamu, ali ta na mabibigla nung keraklan karing kekatamung politiku, abugadu la. Pero ing sobrang pamamulitika, aliwa ne, lalu na ngening panahun, a mas kailangan tamung pi abe-abe ing kekatamung sikanan para arapan ing peka-matinding kapagsubukan ning yatu king kekatamung bie.

Maka pamie tula na ara karing surveys ding kekatamung memalen manatili lang matas a pag asa king kinabukasan na ning kekatamung bansa. In fact, we had the survey that said that 92 percent of the Filipinos look forward to the New Year with hope. Mamasa ku sana makasaop-saop tamu, in nurturing that sense of optimism among our people, by continuing to do our best. Bilang panauli, paburen yu kung saludu karing magaling a miyembu ning IBP-Pampanga. Kayabe ko karing kekatamung bayani. Thank you so much for your support. Mayap a oras.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the "ALDO NING PARANGAL: A Tribute to the Past Presidents of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines-Pampanga Chapter". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105147/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21253&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Philippine economic briefing “Challenges and Opportunities in Global Crisis”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Philippine economic briefing “Challenges and Opportunities in Global Crisis”

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Dusit Thani Hotel, Makati City, Metro Manila, February 25, 2009]

Thank you, Secretary Teves for your introduction.

Cabinet members, leaders of business, Excellencies of the Diplomatic Corps, ladies and gentlemen:

Thank you for joining us once again in this semi-annual activity and this time is a special time like in the World Economic Forum — it was the biggest attendance ever in their history because of the times we are in.

We’re all very much aware of the challenges of the global economic crisis confronted by countries around the world. But I hope we’re also all aware that ensuring that they continue to weather the global economic storm will require the cooperation and partnership of the government and the private sector.

As I’m sure you can remember, a year ago, we were riding the wave. This year, along with all other developed and developing economies alike, we’re working hard to make sure that we are not swamped by the world economic crisis.

In 2007, the Philippines generated an 8.0 percent GNP growth. In 2008, when two-thirds of the world went into a recession, we still managed a 6.1 percent GNP growth. In the fourth quarter of 2008, Japan’s GDP declined by 12.7 percent, U.S. by 5.0 percent, Taiwan by 9.0 percent, Thailand by 4.0 percent, Singapore by 3.7, Korea by 5.6. But our GDP went up by 4.5 percent. Up to late last year, Filipinos had no difficulties finding and keeping the important jobs overseas that were helping their families and contributing to the economy; food prices were coming under control and inflation was being checked.

Since then, the global financial turmoil has spread and jeopardized the well-being of billions of people across the globe. Late last year, 5,500 of our expatriates lost their jobs. Thank goodness, today, the number still remains largely the same. Between then and now, 39,000 domestic workers mostly in the export sectors of electronics, auto parts, garments and mining have lost their jobs, though 3,000 new jobs are being processed daily. I just came from the POEA office before coming here because part of our four-day EDSA celebration is to use the spirit of EDSA, the spirit of unity to join hands against the global crisis. And because the biggest challenge is the challenge of jobs — we had a jobs fair and the fair had just started a couple of hours ago and I was able to interview workers who were hired right on the spot.

So, we hope that this trend will continue, that there is room for those who have lost their jobs in new jobs. Some of them may require retooling but others need not. For instance, one of the biggest job opportunities that I found earlier today was a Dunkin Donuts store in— and would you believe it, in Dubai, which we hope... which we thought was experiencing a lot of difficulties but they have these openings and the pay is good. An electronics worker can get into the job. A garments worker can get into the job. The important thing is that they have the Filipino traits of a smiling face and a congenial personality.

Tourism according to the latest report of Secretary Ace Durano is bucking the regional trend; with our hotels and resorts fully booked for the first quarter, though they are going, they’re leaving... well, it’s a... they go from month to month and are not complacent about the rest of the year.

In many respects, we were prepared for this global crisis. That preparation has mitigated some of the hardships that have arrived with this worldwide challenge.

Our domestic strength comes in large part from our early response. In January 2008, we approved a stimulus of 1.4 percent of GDP and we implemented it in March as the global food crisis erupted. The resulting deficit though the stimulus was 1.4, the deficit was less than 1.0 percent of GDP. In reacting to this first wave of the economic downturn that early 2008, we worked hard to manage the huge spike in the prices and accessibility of food, fuel and rice. That stimulus that we approved in January and implemented in March included an 11 billion budget for the augmentation of the Department of Agriculture for its program towards rice self-sufficiency in five years. It included 24 billion for the National Food Authority for rice subsidies, 36 billion pesos of tax relief to the middle-class which increased the take home pay of minimum wage earners, and that has buoyed up demand.

If I may go earlier again to my trip to the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration, we not only saw displaced workers finding new jobs. We also saw displaced workers finding new livelihood opportunities — food processing, and would you believe, perfume making. So, these displaced workers in their new livelihood are doing their work in their own homes and selling in their own homes. And the one who was doing meat processing has a very brisk business, so she has decided that she will also study part time in TESDA so she can go into commercial cooking and expand her little meat process business into a restaurant because she is doing very well where she is now.

The other one is producing perfumes. And I said, “why did you get into the idea of perfume?” Then she said, “Well, you know we Filipinas, we never get out of our house without putting perfume on. So, I figured that I would have a good market.” So, she had this... she went into the training; and I’d like to acknowledge Tommy Alcantara and MECO because all of these, many of these displaced workers came from Taiwan and right in Taiwan they were already told about the training, livelihood and new job opportunities. And so she was trained by the Technology Resource Center. They gave her all the possible sources of supply; so she has her supply of her bottles, her essential oils and so on. And so I said, “How is your business doing?” She said, “Very well. I have a very, very good market.”

So, we really thank the consumption, our domestic consumption because they buoy up the new opportunities for our displaced workers. And a lot of that, I would like to think, was also encouraged by the tax relief of minimum wage earners that Congress passed last year.

To go back to that stimulus that we approved in January and carried out in March, part of that included also 5 billion pesos of conditional cash transfers, 7.5 billion (pesos) of various cash grants, and 32 billion pesos that went into a 10 percent salary increase for government employees, another stimulus for domestic consumption. And then we worked just as hard to meet the next wave — the crisis that has come to be called the global tsunami, the worldwide financial calamity. Our GDP and GNP growth in the face of global recession show that stimulus works. It shows it is not bound to fail. But we all have to work together to make sure that it succeeds.

We have acted to protect the poor as we also worked to protect our nation. While our efforts have been reasonably successful, we know that no country has been totally insulated from the pain and hardship being felt throughout the world. So, we are vigilant in our efforts to respond quickly to changing circumstances. Ralph Recto gave us a 300 billion-peso stimulus package or 7 billion dollars; bigger than many of the South East Asian countries even if our growth rate is better than theirs, but that stimulus package is always open for refinement as we go along.

We have been relatively lucky — I keep hearing that swerte, swerte, swerte — We have been relatively lucky because we worked hard to be lucky. We have been able to cushion the blow today because of the pain we endured yesterday. With the support of Congress and our dedicated civil servants, we took the economic reform medicine and improved our banking system, raised revenue, cracked down on smugglers and streamlined our revenue system.

That allowed us to have the resources to make significant investments in our country for the first time in those quantities in a generation; new money for roads, bridges, and ports; new investments in healthcare, education and social services.

Our domestic strength also comes in large part from our countercyclical policy. When I was in Davos, one of the famous professors was saying, the problem with many of the countries that have to follow the multilaterals is that their policies are procyclical. But in our country, we have been able to do a countercyclical policy.

On fiscal policy, we increased taxes in good times, and now we have increased spending in bad global times. Both the national and the local governments now have room to spend and borrow because the local governments this year are enjoying the biggest increase of 40 billion pesos in their internal revenue because there is a 3-year lag in the computation. So, since we increased the VAT, we implemented the VAT increase three years ago; now they will get their share from the VAT increase while the serendipity they can spend now when spending is needed.

On monetary policy, well, we all know that aside from Gary Teves being the Finance Minister of the Year for Asia, Say Tetangco has been rated among our 'A' central bankers in the world. The Central Bank has been prudent, with rates generally high during good times, while now lowering rates during bad global times, and some more room to ease if necessary.

The financial sector has been strengthened to supplement its innate domestic orientation and inherent conservatism. Learning from the 1997 financial crisis, we worked out reforms, including the Special Purpose Vehicle Assets Act, and other banking reforms leading to lower non-performing loans and loan-deposit ratios.

And we have healthy gross international reserves of almost 40 billion dollars much more than our need for imports compared to the 15 billion dollars that our administration inherited several years ago.

But we must move quickly if we are to ensure that our economy stays on path. So, that is what I was just telling Peter Favila earlier when we were in the holding room waiting for Gary to finish his talk. We have to move quickly. Let's not wait for that, and that to move before we do. Let's not wait for Congress to pass this or that because we have lump sums in our budget. Let's not wait for the private sector to come up with their part of the promise of the 100 billion-peso private sector fund. Let's work on our 50 billion contribution.

We have accelerated our investments in 2009. These expenditures however, are not meant to break the bank. We have brought forward investments to further stimulate the economy, to help our people, and to sustain the growth that has been so important to our economic success.

We remain mindful through all this spending that this acceleration of investments must be balanced. We cannot abandon our hard-fought gains in fiscal discipline. We may increase the deficit, yes, but it must be a finite number and not the sky is the limit. We must have a projection, a ceiling that we will stay under. We are well aware that we must both spend wisely and be prudent if we are to leave our nation in a healthy condition for the next generation. That is the road we were on before the onset of this global crisis. That is the road on which we would like the country to continue when this challenge has passed.

The world financial crisis appears deeper than most anticipated. However, I don't think our plans are doomed to fail. We remain cautiously hopeful that we can continue to insulate the Philippines from the full frontal assault that much of the world is experiencing. Yet, we realize with each passing day, that objective becomes a greater challenge and therefore we must always be ready to innovate.

Our government is up to the challenge. But it is clear that our success will come only if it is a true team effort. Government will do its part, but the private sector must step up and seize the opportunity we have created: a nation that is more stable and secure than at any time in recent memory. Working together, we have created a better deal if you will, than many countries in the region. So now, I call upon the leaders of our private sector to take up the challenge at this important time: join your government and continue to invest in our nation's future. Work with us to ensure that our nation's limited resources, finite resources are able to meet the objective of improving the lives of the people of the Philippines.

We must all band together to shoulder the responsibility of bringing our nation through these challenging global times. As I said, to date, we have been successful. But now is not the time to be laid back or inactive. It is the time to step up to the challenge and work hard to ensure our nation's bright economic future.

We are a tough, proud and resilient people. Our resilience has proven its worth this past year. It will see us through to the global economic rebound that we all know will eventually come. But if we are to continue on the path to progress, we must act together, in common purpose; to provide the long-term opportunities our people want and deserve.

Finally, for your commitment to the Philippine economy; a commitment that will continue to pay dividends for many years to come.

To all of you, maraming salamat and thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Philippine economic briefing "Challenges and Opportunities in Global Crisis". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104657/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21313&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 18th National Convention of the Vice-Mayors' League of the Philippines Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 18th National Convention of the Vice-Mayors' League of the Philippines

[Delivered at the Grand Mindanao Ballroom, Pryce Plaza Hotel, Cagayan De Oro City, Misamis Oriental, February 26, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you very much Secretary Claudio for your introduction.

And I would like to also congratulate and thank Vice Mayor Mike Rama and the other officials of the Vice Mayors' League, (applause) including our host vice mayor, Vice Mayor Yap of Tagaloan; (applause) our other hosts in this gathering: we have Cagayan de Oro Congressman Uy and Congressman Rodriguez, (applause) from the province of Misamis Oriental; we have Governor Moreno and Congressman Emano; (applause) and their neighbor here in Northern Mindanao Congressman Pancrudo from Bukidnon; (applause) and to all of you vice mayors, first of all, happy 20th anniversary to your League! (Applause) And thank you, congressmen, governor, vice mayor for hosting this important event — the 20th Anniversary of the League of Vice Mayors.

And I'd like to take this opportunity first to convey a message to the people of Misamis Oriental and Cagayan de Oro through Secretary Ebdane because we had been here several times due to the recent floods; but since the DPWH dredger that was here was in need of repairs during the time of your great floods, DPWH has instead deployed a Cebu-based commercial barge-mounted dredger and reported that it started its operation last February 16. So, I hope that that is solved. (Applause)

So, I came here to Cagayan de Oro not just to make sure that that dredger is already here and working, but also, of course because the vice mayors of the Philippines are crucial partners... are an important player in the country's fight against poverty and therefore an important player especially now that the nation is warding off the fall-out of the global economic crisis.

I thank Vice Mayor Yap for pointing out that we've so far been able to weather the global crisis quite well. And Governor Moreno who was a banker before he entered politics, was rattling off to me all the indicators that show how well our country is doing during these very bad global times.

Along with all other countries, developing and developed alike, we are working very hard not to get swamped by the world financial meltdown. In many respects, we were prepared for this global crisis. Our preparation has mitigated some of the hardships that have arrived with this global challenge.

The Philippines generated 8.0 percent GNP growth in 2007; and in 2008 when two-thirds of the world went into recession, we still managed a 6.1 percent GNP growth. All around us, we see countries having a much more difficult time.

In the fourth quarter of 2008, Japan's GDP declined by 12.7 percent, U.S. by 5.1 percent, Thailand by 4.3 percent, Singapore by 3.7 percent, and Korea — Hanjin's home country — by 5.6 percent. But our fourth quarter GDP went up by 4.5 percent. (Applause) And up to late last year, Filipinos had no difficulties finding and keeping the important jobs overseas that were helping their families and contributing to our economy; food prices were coming under control; inflation was being checked.

But since that time, the global financial turmoil has continued to spread and it has jeopardized the well-being of billions of people across the globe. Just before our meeting here, I had a meeting with the vice mayors of Metro Manila and they said that they want to help to address the needs of the displaced workers. Well, as far as OFWs are concerned, it seems that the Filipinos are the first to be hired and the last to be fired. That's why since November up to today, (applause) of our 8 million Filipinos abroad, only 5,500 have had to come back because they lost their jobs. Here in our own country, we have 39,000 domestic workers mostly in the export sectors of electronics, auto parts, garments and mining who have lost their jobs, although 3,000 new jobs are being processed daily. That is why after this event, I will proceed to an event with the TESDA where they are working on jobs that are already connected to the recruiters and the employers.

Well, we are here and you're all tourists, most of you because you've come from all over. I'd like to let you know also according to Ace Durano, the province mate of Mike Rama, that tourism is bucking the regional trend; and I hope that the hotels here, this hotel and the other hotels in Cagayan De Oro are sharing the experience of other hotels and resorts which are fully-booked for the first quarter of this year. (Applause)

Our domestic strength comes in part from our early response. In January 2008, we approved a stimulus of 1.4 percent of GDP. We implemented it in March when the global food crisis erupted. And in spite of that 1.4 percent of GDP stimulus, our deficit was less than 1.0 percent of GDP. We reacted to this first wave of the economic downturn. We worked hard to manage, I'm sure you remember, the huge spike in the prices and accessibility of food, fuel and rice. So, we spent 11 billion to augment the D.A. for its rice self-sufficiency program to be completed in five years; P24 billion for National Food Authority subsidies; P36 billion of tax relief to the middle-class which increased their take home pay because of the tax exemption for minimum wage earners that our congressmen here worked very hard to pass; P5 billion of conditional cash transfers; P7.5 billion of various cash grants; and P32 billion that went to a 10 percent salary increase for government employees. That was our response to the first wave of the crisis.

But there was a second wave of the world crisis, no longer food and fuel but now financial — the crisis that has come to be called the global tsunami. But through this time, because our GDP and our GNP have been growing, it shows that fiscal stimulus works and that should work not only for the national government but also for the local governments and you are in charge of how to spend the budget of your localities. (Applause)

We have acted to protect the poor as we have also worked to protect our nation. But while our efforts have been reasonably successful, no country can be totally insulated from the pain and hardship being felt throughout the world. That's why we must all be vigilant in our efforts to respond quickly to changing circumstances.

We've been relatively lucky because we worked hard to be lucky. We've been able to cushion the blow today because of the pain and unpopularity that we have had to endure. But with the support of your Congress and you, our dedicated public servants in the local government, we took the economic reform medicine, we improved our banking system. You helped us crack down on smugglers; you helped us streamline our revenue system. That has allowed us to have the resources to make significant investments in our country for the first time in a generation; new money for roads, bridges, and ports — maybe some of you were able to travel here using the RO-RO Nautical Highway; new investments in healthcare, education and social services.

And these programs successfully bore fruit because you, our local government officials supported them. You, the local governments have helped build our economy's reputation as "an island of stability in an otherwise global sea of economic troubles." You, our local government officials have played a crucial part in the country's impressive growth. And I thank you for that.

I'd like to point out one of the benefits — well, anyway, among the immediate benefits from our reforms — I'd like to point out one of them because you have 40 percent of every increase in internal revenue; 40 percent of every increase in the Value Added Tax, and that amount you get your share has a three-year lag. What you get this year is your share of the 2006 collections. Well, because we had about a 100 billion-peso increase in Value Added Tax every year since 2006. This year for the first time, you're going to have your biggest increase in IRA of 40-billion pesos. (Applause)

Of course, when Gabby Claudio said that I'm the best friend of the local government units, it is because giving the IRAs due to our LGUs is a top priority for me because... (applause) because you handle the budgets of your LGUs. You already know even before the VAT increase years before when we were very short of funds in the early years of my presidency. We still managed to pay your allocations in full and we even paid the debts owed to you by previous administrations. (Applause) That is because I realize that the IRA is your primary tool to serve your constituencies. And used correctly, it will go a long way towards ensuring that our people will get the kind of local government they want. The vice mayor as the chief legislator of her town or city holds great power in directing how the IRA will be used.

And it is clear that our success will only come if it is a true team effort. National government will do its part, but we count on the local governments to step up and seize the opportunity we have created and that is that local governments today are more empowered than at any other time in recent history. We have worked together on many things. In Metro Manila, again, because I had just had a meeting with our vice mayors there, all but three of the vice mayors are in-charge of their anti-drug campaign; and that is very valuable because we have put the anti-drug campaign on the forefront of our crime fighting and fighting against corruption.

And because they handle their budgets, in charge of allocating the budgets, they have been able to allocate budgets for innovative livelihood programs and urban agriculture that can help their people. A great example that I'm sure is being done under your own circumstances in the different municipalities and cities of the Philippines.

Together, we have created a better deal, if you will, than many countries in the region, which have not yet devolved power to the local governments. I remember early in my administration, in Thailand they had this one-million baht for every locality as microfinance, but I found out the reason why they have to do that is because they don't have an internal revenue allotment. So, you don't have to beg from the national government. You can do it on your own and especially the vice mayors who are the heads of the local government legislators.

So, on this, your 20th anniversary in very auspicious economic times for the world, the challenge for you is to continue to allocate your increased revenues to invest in the future of your local government units because if you invest in your cities and municipalities' future, the sum total of that will be the nation's future.

So, let us all work together to ensure that our nation's resources which are finite even if they are bigger than before are able to meet the objective of improving the lives of the people of your constituencies and therefore the entire Philippines.

Let us all band together to shoulder the responsibility of bringing your cities and municipalities, and therefore, our nation through these challenging times. As mentioned by Vice Mayor Yap, to date we have been successful. But now is not the time for being laid back or being inactive. Now is the time to step up to the challenge — work hard to ensure our nation's bright economic future.

Kangina nga Governor Moreno was talking about, ibang klase talaga yung ating mga OFWs; the way they keep sending remittances back to the Philippines. An example of being a tough proud and resilient people. And I was telling him, you know, in New Zealand — which incidentally is another country with a negative growth rate right now — 25 percent of their population works overseas. Imagine first world country but 25 percent work overseas. So, it's not a sign of poverty that you have people working overseas. We have 10 percent of our people living overseas. But with the case of New Zealand, even with 25 percent are working overseas, many of them are yuppies because New Zealand is a rich country, well, mom and pop from New Zealand still send additional allowance to their yuppies abroad.

In our case, even if your mother, father, uncle, brother, sister will sacrifice in Dubai, Milan or wherever he or she is, they will still send money home. That is the kind of people the Filipinos are — (applause) tough, proud, and resilient. And our resilience has proven its worth these past few months. And your support to our administration, vice mayors, heads of the legislatures of your municipalities and cities has also been very clear because you have aligned your own priorities with our national economic priorities. And I thank you for that.

So, for your commitment to the economy of your constituencies and therefore to the economy of the Philippines, a commitment that will continue to pay dividends for many years to come — I thank you , I wish you all the best and I congratulate you!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 18th National Convention of the Vice-Mayors' League of the Philippines. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104605/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21493&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Jobs Forum on Overseas Employment

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Jobs Forum on Overseas Employment

[Delivered at the Heroes Hall, Malacañang, March 2, 2009]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Marianito Roque sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

Secretary Boboy Syjuco, ang chairman ng TESDA; ang ating ibang mga opisyal ng DOLE; yung ating mga stakeholders; yung ating mga presentors: si Lita Hizon for the land-based and Marlon Roño for sea-based recruiters; lahat ng mga iba’t-ibang mga sektor na interesado, lalo na yung mga manggagawa:

Thank you all for coming.

I called for this second round of the job summit to focus on overseas employment. And I’m very glad to hear from the report of Undersecretary Padilla that there are 500,000 jobs available abroad because we have lost about 5,000 jobs. So for every worker who has lost his or her job, 100 are waiting depending on the skills.

In this second round, people on the ground, like labor attaches and welfare officers have been invited. I asked for at least one for Asia — saan ang ating labor attaché o welfare officer mula sa Asia? — okey, very good, thank you. (applause) For the Middle East — saan yung taga-Middle East natin? — very good, yes. (Applause) Saudi and Al Khobar, okey. Siyempre kasi Saudi has 1.5 million of our 8 million people abroad. Europe, (applause) Geneva and Americas (applause) from Canada. We invited them, instead of only the officials of the head office of the DOLE. Kasi kailangan marinig ang boses ng mga nandoon sa mga nasusugatan at nakikibaka.

And I have often said that in recent months, we were lucky to be less battered than others during the initial surge of the global economic crisis, because we have worked hard to be lucky. Years earlier, we decided to swallow the bitter pill of reforms that later fortified our economic fundamentals and gave us financial space to do all the things we need to do now in order to ease the burden on our workers losing their jobs. We raised revenues; we cracked down on smugglers; we reformed our tax collection system, our banking laws and practices. We borrowed sparingly, we brought down our foreign debts and we spent prudently, even as we moved fast to improve our human and physical infrastructure, lalo na ang ating human infrastructure na kailangang-kailangan ngayon.

The result of our tough choices is evident. Yung sinabi ni Undersecretary Padilla na 500,000 jobs are available — well, dito sa Pilipinas yung Grant Thornton Business Survey, that I think our Cabinet members should disseminate, reports that many Philippine companies will hire more people and raise pay despite the global slowdown. So the challenge is to match jobs with skills. So malaki ang papel ni Boboy Syjuco dito sa hamon na ito. Kaya kanina pinag-uusapan natin, at doon kay Boboy, kung gaano kalaki ang hamon niya dahil sa report na nandoon yung trabaho, ang problema or ang hamon, yung matching.

Eh kasi si Nitoy isang career official, matagal na matagal na siya nasa gobyerno. So Nitoy sabi ko, di ba di hamak ang laki ng budget natin sa TESDA haming sa noong araw? ‘Di ba noong araw budget sa TESDA 100 million, 200 million? Sabi ni Nitoy, “80 million pa nga,” eh sabi niya. So 80 million, 100 million, 200 million. Tapos nung pumasok yata tayo ginawa nating half a billion, tapos ginawa nating one billion. Ngayon ay two billion ang budget ng TESDA. (Applause) At sabi ko kay Boboy, “at huwag kang mag-alala, don’t try to have to live within two billion kung kailangan. Kasi kung maubos mo yang two billion eh di meron tayong policy sa pamahalaan ngayon sa mga ahensya — use it or lose it. So kung maubos mo yung two billion sa pangangailangan to match the skills, aba yung mga ibang medyo makupad na maggamit ng kanilang... yung mahinang absorptive capacity na ahensya, eh di yun ang babawasan natin ng budge,t at ililipat natin ang budget nila sa DOLE at saka sa TESDA.” (Applause)

So the message is, let us join hands against the global crisis. Let us join hands now to prevent the world crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis. Let us join hands to make sure that we stay on track towards sustainable growth. Kaya sa inyong lahat, mabuhay! Maraming salamat.

Di na kailangan ng maraming salita. Ang importante ay magtrabaho tayong lahat.

Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the Jobs Forum on Overseas Employment. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104453/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21526&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the inauguration of the New Rizal Provincial Capitol Building [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa inagurasyon ng bagong gusali ng New Rizal Provincial Capitol

[Ipinahayag sa New Provincial Capitol Bldg., Ynares Center Complex, Brgy. San Roque, Antipolo City, Rizal, ika 4 ng Marso, 2009]

Maraming salamat Congressman Duavit. (Applause) Maraming salamat sa inyong pagpakilala sa akin.

Bagay na bagay na si Congressman Duavit ang magpapakilala sa akin kasi totoo yun. Yung mga kinekwento ni Congressman Frisco San Juan, wala pa si Bibet noon kasi naalala ko nagsimula na sumikat si Bibet nung siya ay kasama ng aking tatay sa Constitutional Convention. (Applause)

So, batiin ko lahat ng mga nasa entablado dito at siyempre lalo na si Governor Junjun Ynares. Una sa lahat, happy, happy birthday, Junjun! (Applause)

Hindi ko na babanggitin lahat ng mga VIP sa entablado dahil nabanggit na ni Junjun kanina. Pero sa inyong lahat, congratulations sa bagong kapitolyo! (Applause)

At special mention na pagpasalamat sa Ortigas and company (applause) dahil kayo ang nagbigay ng lupa sa unang kapitolyo sa Pasig at kayo naman ang nagbigay ng gusali na napakaganda. (Applause)

Naalala ko nga mahigit tatlung taon nang nakalipas mula humiwalay ang bayan ng Pasig sa inyong lalawigan. At naalala ko nung ako ay isang bata pa ang aking address ay 157 Laura St., San Juan, Rizal dahil lahat dito ay Rizal. (Applause) Ngunit sa pagkwento nga ni Ka Frisco, yung pagpahiwalay ng Pasig, at hindi lamang yun, yung pagpahiwalay ng buong Metro Manila na dati ay Rizal. Kaya tamang-tama naman sa pagkatapos ng mahigit tatlung taon muling naibalik ang kapitolyo ng Rizal mismo sa inyong probinsiya. (Applause)

At bagay na bagay naman na dapat ang inyong probinsya ay magkaroon ng sariling kapitolyo sa loob ng probinsya dahil ang lalawigan ng Rizal. Ayon sa ating mga datos ay isa sa pinakamaliit na poverty incidence sa buong bansa. Kaya nangungunang probinsya kayo. (Applause)

Inaasahan ko na yung mga ginawa natin nitong nakaraang walong taon ay nakapagtulong sa pagbaba ng maliit na kahirapan ng Rizal. Kasi ewan ko kung naalala ni Governor Nini Ynares nang siya ay gobernador tinanong ko, “Nini, kumusta yung mga namumuhunan dito?” At sabi ni Nini, “Papano naman pupunta ang namumuhunan dito hindi naman makadaan sa traffic.” Kaya ewan kung naalala pa niya yun pero ako hindi ko nakalimutan yun, kaya pinalawak natin yung Ortigas Avenue at saka yung Marcos Highway. (Applause)

At ngayon nakikita natin ang kaunlaran na nangyari sa Rizal sa ilang nakaraang taon at gaya nang sabi ko, nawa’y nakatulong yung ating mga imprastraktura.

Gusto ko rin magpasalamat kay Junjun dahil inimbata niya ako sa kanyang kaarawan.

Actually, naalala ko nung isang taon, inimbata ako ni Junjun hindi ako nakarating.

Ngayon maaga niya ako inimbata kaya napai-schedule natin. (Applause)

At importante itong magkasama tayo ngayon, public sector-private sector represented by Ortigas; national government-local government, dahil sa kasalukuyang panahong bumabagsak ang pandaigdigang ekonomiya, higit na kailangan ang pakipagbabalik ng pambansa at lokal na pamahalaan.

Ang buong layunin ng ating administrasyon ay umahon ang mahihirap, magbigay ng pagkakataon pag maganda ang panahon at magbigay ng proteksyon pag masama ang panahon. At sa gitna nitong kakayahan nating magkalinga sa ating mahihirap maging maganda o masamang panahon ang patakaran ng mahirap na ginawa natin ilang taong nakaraan upang ayusin ang kaban ng bansa at itaas ang kita ng bayan upang mamuhunan tayo sa ating taong-bayan.

Kaya special mention sa ating congressman, ating mga congressmen, ating Senador Revilla lalo na yung mga nandoon nung ginawa natin yung mahirap na Value Added Tax. Si Bong nandoon na at saka si Jack Duavit nandoon na noon. Yun ang nagbibigay sa atin ng pondo ngayon. (applause) At yung ginawa nila tinulungan ako kahit na mahirap, kahit na hindi popular, ngayon ay hulog ng langit sa kasalukuyang pandaigdigang krisis. (Applause)

Kasi napapalaki natin ang ating pamumuhunan sa mga serbisyo sosyal upang mapalawak natin ang safety net na importante sa pinakamahihirap na kasapi ng ating lipunan.

Halimbawa, dito sa Rizal, bagamat isa kayo sa pinakakonting mahihirap sa buong Bansa, may mga nawalan ng trabaho dahil sa pandaigdigang krisis. Meron akong listahan: walong daan mula sa Walter Garments sa Cainta, halos animnapu sa Panasonic sa Taytay, mahigit sandaan sa Miyano Machinery sa Cainta, pitumpu't lima sa RNB Garments sa Taytay, hindi kumukulang sa apatnapung OFW, at dalawampu't tatlo sa KNJ International sa Binangonan.

Ngunit sa ating Economic Resiliency Program, na papabilisin ang paggastos ng pamahalaan sa mga larangan gaya ng pagsulong ng imprastruktura at pagsulong ng agri-business, ay sinadya ring lumikha ng maraming bagong mga oportunidad sa trabaho para doon sa mga na-apektadong malubha ng pandaigdigang krisis ngayon sa kasalukuyan.

Kasama dito ang mas maraming emergency employment. Kaya inatasan ko ang lahat ng mga ahensiya ng pamahalaan gaya ng DOTC ni Secretary Larry Mendoza na siya ang CORD para sa Region IV-A; at yung DILG ni Secretary Puno, yung anak ng Antipolo, na dapat magtabi sila ng 1.5 percent ng kanilang MOOE budget para sa emergency employment sa susunod na anim buwan. Inaasahan natin na ito ay makapagbigay ng mga trabaho doon sa kasalukuyang naghihintay na bumalik muli ang ekonomiya ng mundo.

Si Secretary Ronnie Puno — gawa nang siya ay taga rito, dati nga siyang congressman ng Antipolo, ngayon ang kapatid niya si Robbie ang congressman —si Ronnie ay mamamahala sa emergency employment ng Rizal. (Applause)

Kanina kausap ko siya, nagsimula na siya ng OYSTER — yung OYSTER ay ang Out-of-School Youth Serving Toward Economic Resiliency — pero inatasan ko siya na bigyan ng pansin na espesyal yung mga manggagawa na mga binanggit kong pabrika na nawalan ng trabaho. Kaya dala ko yung listahan — nasa 'yo na ba yung listahan, Ronnie? Ayun! ayun ang listahan — meron silang pangalan, meron silang address, yung mga walang address, yung address ng pabrika para hahanapin sila ni Ronnie at tignan kung papano maitutulong sa hanapbuhay. (applause)

Maraming klaseng emergency employment ang pwedeng maibigay. Halimbawa, kanina... sino ba yun? Si Gerry Calderon pa ang nagbanggit sa akin, yung Ecocenter, yung recycling, yung basura na ginagawang bricks o concrete block pwede ring concrete blocks para sa construction, yun ay isang pwedeng emergency employment.

O meron na tayong One Town, One Product, pwede na rin matulungan yuon. Yung microfinance, yung pag mentina siyempre ng mga kalsada, yung flood control at yung mga green collar jobs gaya nga nung brick-making. Meron kayong mga bundok na pwedeng mai-reforest o pwedeng matamnan ng jatropha. Meron kayong lawa, yung Laguna na pwedeng linisan at bantayan. At meron kayong mga public utility vehicles na pwede lagyan ng LPG para maging mas mura. Meron kayong mga barangay na kailangan pang lagyan ng kuryente, pwede mag-empleyo ng manggagawa doon, at iba pang inisyatibo sa malinis na enerhiya.

Kahapon binisita ko yung isang Teletech Business Process Outsourcing. Itong Teletech ang pinakamalaking call center sa buong mundo at ang pinakamalaking puhunan nila ngayon ay nandito sa Pilipinas. Mga 23,000 na ang kanilang empleyado gusto pa nilang magdagdag. Nung paalis na ako sa kanilang call center kahapon sinabi nung kanilang resident vice president, yung mga electronics halimbawa Panasonic Electronics yun sabi niya, palagay nila yung mga empleyado ng electronics pwedeng mga inhinyero at may mga maraming marunong mag Ingles konting training na lamang pwedeng ma-absorb ng BPO industry. Kaya yan ang isang gusto kong magawa ni Ronnie.

At bukod sa emergency employment pinapakita nung Teletech na marami pang trabaho sa pribadong sektor. Kanina si Secretary Roque ay na-interview sa radio station, sinabi niya sa katotohanan meron talagang 300,000 new jobs available. Kalahati noon ay nasa call centers at BPO. Pwedeng paglipatan ng mga nawawalang trabaho kung mapantay sana ang kwalipikasyon. Kaya ang malaking hamon ngayon ay palawakin ang skills training para sa mga trabahong malaki ang demand kaya dinoble natin ang budget ng TESDA itong taon. Kaya ako nagpapasalamat ako kay Jack at saka kay Bong kanina. Nagpapasalamat din ako kay Deline at saka kay Lito at saka kay Robbie na binanggit ko na kanina dahil doon sa budget linaki niyo ang budget ng TESDA na makakatulong ngayon (applause) na maibagay yung nawalan ng trabaho sa mga available na trabaho.

Kaya at doon sa preyoridad ng TESDA gumawa ako ng Executive Order na kailangan isama sa preyoridad ang training sa mga in-demand skills, at kasama sa preyoridad yung mga nawawalaan ng trabaho dito sa Rizal lalo na yung kababaihan. Bakit kababaihan? Dahil yung mga nawalaan ng trabaho mga electronics at garments at nakakarami doon ay mga kababaihan. Kaya sila ang namimiligro sa panahong ito.

Patuloy tayong namumuhunan sa ating pinakamahalagang kayamanan, ang sarili nating mamamayan. At umaasa ako sa province of Rizal na nakatutok din sa... sana maging mas magaan ang pasanin ng taong-bayan nitong mga panahon ng pandaigdigang krisis. Gaya nang sabi ni Bibet, para maging all-weather economy tayon, at umaasa ako sa pamahalaang lalawigan ng Rizal, kay Junjun na maging kabalikat dito sa mga programang ito sa pagka-ibsan ng paghihirap ng mamamayan at upang umiwas na ang global recession ay maging Philippine recession. (Applause)

Yung ginawang batas noon nila Bong Revilla at Jack Duavit, yung Value Added Tax.

Actually 40 percent noon ay pumupunta sa IRA. Pero tatlong taon na ang agwat ng computation. Kaya yung unang implementation ng IRA nangyari nung 2006... ng VAT nangyari ng 2006, lumaki ang VAT ng 100 billion pesos. So, three years now, ngayon 2009, this year magsisimula ang 40 percent ng 100 billion o 40 billion pesos na pupunta na sa local government bilang IRA. (Applause)

Kaya mararamdaman ng probinsya ng Rizal ang malaking lukso ng IRA.

Ngunit ang Rizal ay mayaman naman, maraming negosyo, ewan ko kung malaki o maliit na bahagi ang IRA, pero nevertheless yung IRA ay malaking lukso.

Kaya matatag na mahaharap ng Rizal ang mga hamon ng pandaigdigang krisis.

At ako naman nananalig naman ako kay Junjun Ynares kasi siya ay dating chairman ko ng Lake Laguna Development Authority bago siya tumakbo ng gobernador. (Applause)

Kaya kung nakaya niya na alagaan ang lawa at palawakin ang mga activity sa kapaligid nung lawang yun lalo na sa tulong ng ating bagong mayor ng Antipolo City, si Mayor Leyble. (Applause)

Dito sa malaking siyudad ng Antipolo marami kayong magagawa dito sa capital city of Antipolo pati na rin sa buong lalawigan ng Rizal sa liderato ng ating birthday boy na si Junjun Ynares.

Congratulations! Happy birthday! (Applause)

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the inauguration of the New Rizal Provincial Capitol Building. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104425/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21773&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening ceremony of the 34th Asia-Pacific Convention of the Kiwanis International Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening ceremony of the 34th Asia-Pacific Convention of the Kiwanis International

[Delivered at the Atlantic Hall Waterfront Cebu City Hotel, Lahug District Cebu City, Cebu, March 13, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you, Cerge, for your introduction and, of course, a heartfelt congratulations to Kiwanis!

First to my Cabalen, Chairman Navarro, congratulations! To our guests, our guests headed by Kiwanis International President Don, welcome to the Philippines; and our host Kiwanis Club Cebu; and we have, of course, to congratulate Marit Remonde and Miguel del Gallego. Our officials of the Philippine government; of the province of Cebu led by Governor Gwen Garcia who, I understand, hosted a very nice dinner for you last night; And in the table next to the Presidential table, we have our national officials such as our legislators. We have Deputy Speaker Raul del Mar — is this your district, Raul? Is this your district? So he is our host congressman. And then next to him we have my Presidential Adviser on Climate Change Sonny Alvarez; and Congressman Neri Soon Ruiz; former congresswoman and spouse of the incumbent congressman, Congresswoman Nancy Cuenco and Congressman Benhur Salimbangon:

So, we're all very happy to be here and I'm sure I speak for all of them when I say to all the foreign delegates to this convention, welcome to the Philippines! Welcome to Cebu! And to the Kiwanis Club of Cebu City, whom the Mayor called the best civic club in his city, for hosting this Convention, congratulations also!

I guess we should congratulate, as I said earlier, that this South District Governor Marit and Convention Chairman Miguel for leaving no stone unturned. I understand that Marit worked very hard to bring this event to her husband Cerge's province, which is now also her home province. But one of these days, Chairman Navarro and I will host you also, won't we?

Now Cerge was introduced as a fellow Kiwanian, because I understand that Cerge was president of Kiwanis Cebu in 1997-1998, not really so long ago. So it was Cerge who first got Marit interested in Kiwanis. But in 2001, when Cerge joined my new administration, then Marit took his place as a full-fledged member of the Kiwanis Club. So now we have Press Secretary Cerge Remonde. He took his oath of office before me sometime ago but Marit wasn't there so we didn't have the picture taking, we simply will have a reenactment of the picture taking here when Marit is around and all of you are here. And we have Marit of Kiwanis Philippines South.

Originally, I understand, that originally founded as a business club way back in 1915, Kiwanis soon transformed itself into a service organization dedicated to changing the world; one child, one community at a time. Cerge and I and our other officials...that is our national officials, are dedicated also to a common vision: a Philippines on the verge of First World in 20 years; when we hope that by time we will have dramatically reduced poverty, created a robust middle-class and have all the hallmarks of a modern society in strong, stable institutions.

I'm glad that you are all here. Chairman Miguel was saying that he was afraid that because of the global financial crisis, there might be not such a good attendance. But thank you for this good attendance, 400 strong from the region are here.

And I hope that as you go around you will see that our economy is stronger than it has been in generations. It has demonstrated that the hard choices we made together with our congressmen and congresswomen in recent years regarding economic reforms have allowed the resources to mitigate the impact of the global financial crisis on the Philippines. These efforts have served us well. They have helped to ensure that at least, thus so far, the global crisis does not become a crisis in the Philippines.

Having said that, we have not been immune to the impact of the global crisis. When we were in the bus from the airport coming here, I asked Governor Gwen Garcia, “do you have displaced workers in our economic zone, in our economic export zone?” She said, “yes,” because we have a strong electronics and furniture export industry here, and it’s export industries that are taking the brunt in the Philippines of the global crisis.

So, therefore, we must continue to focus on jobs. We must focus... and also not only jobs but also keeping prices low because if there is unemployment created in the export sector, well, the cost of living becomes more difficult for them. So, the government must provide incentives to help the private sector to keep and create jobs. One of the things that we are doing together with the Secretary of Labor is for those electronics firms who said that they don’t want to fire all of their workers because they know that there will be a rebound — it’s just that they don’t know when the rebound will happen in the electronics sector. So, they said if the government could help them and keep their workers even if their workers don’t have real work to do but to train in the meantime. So, that’s what we’re doing. They can pay their workers half of the minimum wage because they won’t be working anyway while the government is training them for higher skills for the rebound. And so this half of the minimum wage is not a wage, it is just an allowance for their food and their transportation to their training. So, that is among the things that we’re doing to help the private sector keep and create jobs.

Also, while the electronics and the furniture sector of Cebu, which is heavily export-oriented, is doing retrenchment, other companies are expanding. So even as we speak now, my Secretary of Tourism, who is from Cebu, is conducting a jobs fair somewhere here in Cebu because tourists continue to come to Cebu. There is a 6.0 percent increase in tourism so far this year in spite of the global economic crisis.

The government must also continue to come to the rescue of the poorest among us with targeted subsidies of food, fuel and rice. And all that of course will cost money. In challenging economic times, therefore, the government must tighten its own belt and live within its own means, so that we can have the money to pay for all of these subsidies and programs that I mentioned earlier. So we must live within our own means just like the average Filipino household.

So to that end, the government is taking a series of actions to stop unnecessary and wasteful spending. For example, when we were in the airport today, I checked to make sure that they start to use fluorescent lights rather than incandescent lights, that’s one way of saving. The taxpayers deserve no less from the government and public servants.

One of the other actions is my Executive Order to all government agencies to reduce by one, 1.5 percent their respective Maintenance, Overhead and Operating Budgets. This translates to a 7-billion peso savings, and these savings are not to be kept in the bank. The government must pour all its savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and even the middle-class.

This includes more and more investments in education, healthcare and infrastructure. And in my Executive Order, I mandated that savings from MOOE be allocated to emergency employment for the next six months. I mentioned this because Kiwanis Clubs are always open to partnerships with others, including governments throughout the world. So, I invite you, the Kiwanis, to increase the reach of your civic projects by considering partnerships with our government in these important initiatives.

Education may be an important program thrust that would be most interesting to Kiwanis Clubs like those who are here present. Your organization has a long history of supporting the growth and development, and especially the education of children.

I heard, for instance, that the Kiwanis Club of Cebu has been running for almost 30 years now — Cerge? — a successful collegiate scholarship program. And I understand that the program has sent numerous poor students to college and that out of the hundreds that Kiwanis has sent through college in Cebu since 1980, I understand that there are 10 summa cum laude, 47 magna and 29 cum laudes. So, congratulations for that! Also, congratulations for the Kiwanis Book Club. One of these days, Cabalen, I hope that we can also look at Kiwanis Pampanga and see what projects we can do together.

For one, perhaps we can all support programs for providing meals for our children in school and jobs and training opportunities for our young graduates that indeed is crucial.

We must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economy and way of life going strong. That's why on the part of government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in people.

For this reason, in the light of the global crisis, in the implementation of the rationalization program of government, I have asked Secretary Andaya to make sure that nobody is dislocated. If in accordance with the rationalization program an employee is occupying a position that is declared redundant due to rationalization, but he still prefers to stay in government, then the position will only be abolished upon his regular retirement when he turns 65 or when he turns 60 and takes his voluntary retirement. Because it would really be quite ironic if we're setting aside money for emergency employment and then we're letting other people go in the meantime. So a lot of the positions declared redundant are anyway going to be vacated by retirement in a few years time.

And I believe we can wait for that time.

So these are the things that we're doing in spite of the fact that in 2008 when many countries were having a negative growth rate, the Philippines had a GNP growth rate of 6.0 percent. We are not complacent. We have to work hard to make sure that the Philippines remains resilient in the face of the global crisis. So, we are not complacent but we are hopeful.

In the Kiwanis Cebu Club website, a song of hope plays in the background while one browses the contents of the site. In part the song goes like this: "Together, we can; together, we strive this task to fulfill." Indeed, if we are together, we can make a difference. After all, we share a common passion: a civic organization like Kiwanis and a government institution like the government of the Philippines. So, therefore, let us all be in service together.

To Kiwanis Filipinos — let us all be in service together.

To Kiwanis from all parts of the region — welcome and I hope you will also be there with your governments and are working with the Kiwanis here to help our people as well.

To all of you, welcome! Congratulations! And thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's Speech during the Opening Ceremony of the 34th Asia-Pacific Convention of the Kiwanis International. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104321/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=21988&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 104th Commencement Exercises of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA) “Masiglahi” Class 2009

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 104th Commencement Exercises of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA) “Masiglahi” Class 2009

[Delivered at the Philippine Military Academy, Fort Gregorio del Pilar, Baguio City, Benguet, March 16, 2009]

Thank you. (applause)

Thank you Secretary Teodoro for your introduction.

Vice President Noli de Castro and the other civilian officials who are present here today; Superintendent of the PMA, Vice Admiral Calderon, congratulations! on your first graduation as superintendent of the PMA; (applause) administration, faculty and staff of the Philippine Military Academy; AFP Chief of Staff General Yano; the other major service commanders; all the officers and men and women of the Armed Forces who are present here today.

Officials of the area: Congressman Domogan, Mayor Bautista, Governor Fongwan, and I’m sure they all welcome their colleague Governor Bella Angara Castillo and all the officials of Aurora who are here to greet their favorite son. (applause)

Members of the Diplomatic Corps, other local officials, other Local Government officials present; AFP and PNP officials present; at kayo mga kasapi ng PMA “Masiglahi” Class of 2009 pati na rin inyong mga magulang at kaibigan, congratulations! sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Congratulations! sa ating valedictorian and also condolence on the untimely demise of your grandmother, but I’m sure that she is very happy that you are the first PMA graduate to be both valedictorian and the recipient of the athletic saber — brain and brawn combined. (applause) Congratulations! also on your sister, topnotcher in the Medical Board examination. (applause)

Binabati ko ang lahat ng ating mga nag-graduate pati na rin yung mga guro, magulang at iba pang kaanak. At yung mga sa hindi matagal na panahon ikakasal na, congratulations din and best wishes to your spouses! (applause)

Malaking karangalan ang mapiling kadete sa Philippine Military Academy, kung saan libu-libong estudyante ang naghahangad na pumasok taun-taon. Lalong malaking karangalan ang makapagtapos ditto, whether it’s four years, five years or six years to take you to graduate. Napakaraming sakripisyong dinanas ng inyong mga magulang at ibang kamag-anak upang masigurong makabilang kayo sa mga tumatanggap ng diploma sa araw na ito.

Ngayon ang pagkakataon upang ibahagi naman ninyo sa inyong mga mahal sa buhay ang karangalang ito at upang ibahagi rin ninyo sa bansa na siya ang nagtrabaho at gumastos para mag-aral kayo. Kaya sa ating lahat, congratulations and good luck! (applause)

You have chosen as your class goal to bring back the finest glory of the Filipino soldier. MASIGLAHI (Mandirigmang Sigaw ng Lahi), the name you have chosen to respond to the call of the people for soldiers willing to make sacrifices to protect the people and our Constitution, uphold our sovereignty, and join the main catalysts for national development.

You are recipients of the reforms introduced into the Academy. You belong therefore to a new breed of military officers equally adept in the battlefield as in community building. You have been thoroughly trained not only by your commandants and his experts in the science of warfare, but also to be role models equipped with the mind, discipline, professionalism, drive for excellence, and the heart to stand for what is just and right for our country and our people.

The kind of officer you have been trained to be is crucial at any point in time but more so now for meeting the challenges of a deepening global economic crisis.

We must continue to focus on creating jobs and keeping prices low. The Armed Forces of the Philippines is one of the areas of government expanding its recruitment, together with the police and the Department of Education. But it is in the private sector... it is primarily to help the private sector to keep and create jobs that the government must provide incentives for. The government must also continue to come to the rescue of the poorest among us with targeted subsidies of food, fuel and rice.

Some of the poorest among us are the disabled soldiers and the families of soldiers killed in action. For their families, our special rescue comes in the form of housing assistance. In this regard, yesterday, I instructed the release from the President's Social Fund of more than 125 million, the biggest release I've ever had from the President's Social Fund. (applause) This will be for housing assistance for over a thousand disabled soldiers and families of those killed in action to whom we will give a 180,000 pesos each. (applause)

But even as we help provide homes for the families of the disabled and the slain, in these challenging economic times, the government must tighten its belt and live within its means, just like the average Filipino household. To that end, the government is taking a series of actions to stop unnecessary and wasteful spending. The taxpayers deserve no less from their government and public servants, just as the taxpayers deserve no less from you than the utmost courage, integrity and loyalty.

With regard to belt tightening in government, I have issued an Executive Order to all government agencies — and this should include the Department of Defense, the Armed Forces of the Philippines, and the Philippine Military Academy — to reduce their respective Maintenance, Overhead and Operating Expense budgets by 1.5 percent. Government-wide, this shall translate into a savings of 7 billion pesos.

I also take this opportunity to remind all government agencies and entities including the DND, the AFP and the PMA that as early as last year when the price of fuel started to go up, I had issued a directive to start electricity and fuel saving measures, using many already widely accepted practices as well as creative and innovative ways that can be employed to substantially lower fuel and electricity consumption. And the government, including the DND, the AFP and the PMA, must pour all savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and the middle-class. Thus with regard to savings from MOOE, in my Executive Order regarding that, I said that savings must be allocated to emergency employment for the next six months. Secretary Gilbert Teodoro has been designated as Emergency Employment Champion for Region XII, Central Mindanao, with priority to that towns in that region that belong to the 100 poorest towns in the country.

Helping the poor and the middle-class includes also more and more investments in education, healthcare and infrastructure. There will be those among you who will be called upon to help in these investments: building classrooms or serving as soldier teachers, conducting medical missions, building bridges and roads especially in conflict areas. You will be called upon to win communities away from the insurgents and provide the means to live peaceful, productive lives for those communities through the Kalayaan Barangays.

And whether in conflict areas or in the communities in which you are located, we must all support programs for providing meals for our children in school, and job and training opportunities for our young graduates. On jobs and graduates, PMayers are among the fortunate few who have jobs waiting right after graduation. Your colleagues in other colleges are now anxious about finding jobs in April or May. Thus, we have escalated our jobs matching program to make information about job vacancies available to more people, simultaneously with accelerated skills training program.

I mentioned meals for children in school, so from your savings, from the savings of the military camps, I asked them, including PMA, to spend part of the savings for providing breakfast for the day-care, pre-school or Grade One children in the school within or nearest the camp.

We must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economy and way of life going strong. On the part of government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government, including the DND, the AFP, the PMA and the units that you our young graduates will soon be commanding. Running a lean and efficient unit includes continued fiscal prudence while the national government, undertakes efforts to work towards a balanced budget. But all the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people. For the DND and the AFP, the most key of these programs of my ten point agenda is to arrive at a just completion of our peace process.

Peace conduces development and development conduces peace. Armed conflicts slow down growth. Conversely, a long period of extreme economic difficulty is a powder keg that threatens the community's security. We must move fast to stop the conflicts and I will need your greatest military skills there. But we must also move fast to promote growth. Therefore, you play a vital role in winning battles and winning the peace.

At the first PMA graduation rites I presided over as President, I said that the peace process is a function of Defense, especially as it proactively seeks to transform conflict into dialogue and consensus and thereby strengthens the ramparts of our internal security. Indeed, peace is always our preferred choice but we also need your military skills to make sure that it will be the preferred choice of all parties in the conflict.

For armed groups, we have adopted the U.N.-approved framework of Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration.

Our new paradigm for peace is community-based and recognizes the needs of various stakeholders of the peace process. The men with guns do not speak for the people. That is why we are conducting authentic dialogues with communities. They have a bigger stake in peace and deserve a stronger voice.

The peace we seek is anchored on Peace Talks for All, and Projects for Peace many of which it will be the AFP that will implement.

So, young PMA graduates, as new officers you are expected to be a unifying force to bring together your fellow soldiers and the civilian communities where you will serve in endeavors that will win battles but also further peace and development.

Be proud that you are among the few who have been molded especially to make a difference in our people's lives as you rule your own life with "Courage, Loyalty and Integrity."

Congratulations and make good! (applause)

I now pardon the outstanding punishment of the cadet corps of the PMA as may be prescribed by the Superintendent.

Congratulations to all of you!

Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 104th Commencement Exercises of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA) "Masiglahi" Class 2009. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104305/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=22035&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 30th Commencement Exercises of the Philippine National Police Academy (PNPA) “Kaisang-Bisig” Class of 2009

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 30th Commencement Exercises of the Philippine National Police Academy (PNPA) “Kaisang-Bisig” Class of 2009

[Delivered at the PNPA Campus Grandstand, Camp Castañeda, Silang, Cavite, March 26, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Puno for your introduction.

Tikas pahinga.

Vice President de Castro, members of the Diplomatic Corps, Dr. Cojuangco, Police Chief Superintendent Abarzosa, PNP Chief General Versoza, Head of our Bureau of Jail Management and Penology Dian, Acting Chief of the Bureau of Fire Protection Bandilla, Mayor Tolentino and other local government officials, other national government officials, PNP 'Kaisang-Bisig' Class of 2009:

Congratulations! Lalo na kay Cadet Roan Marie Bascugin, class valedictorian, congratulations! (Applause)

Pinagmamalaki kong kababaihan ang ating valedictorian itong taong ito. (applause)

Sa mga magulang, kaanak at kaibigan ng mga nagsisipagtapos, congratulations din! (Applause) Dahil sa inyong pagsisikap, nakapagtapos sa Akademya ang inyong anak, kapatid, kaibigan. At special na congratulations sa ama ni Cadet Roan Marie Bascugin, si Police Superintendent Bascugin. (applause) Talagang 30th Commencement Exercises na ito dahil ang ama ni Marie Bascugin ay Class '84 ng PNPA. (Applause) Kaya second generation na itong ating mga nagtatapos ngayon.

Ang 'Kaisang-Bisig' ang napili ninyong pangalan ay nagbibigay ng pagkakaisang kailangan para sa kapayapaan at kaunlarang makakamit lamang sa pagtutulungan ng ating kapulisan, mga bumbero, at mga jail officers.

And together with Secretary Puno who inducted you, who received you into the service of the Department of Interior and Local Government, I welcome you, the country's newest police, fire and jail inspectors, to permanent government service. (Applause)

Yung ginamit ni Secretary Punong salitang 'permanent' ay napakamakabuluhan sa mga panahong ito sa buong mundo. At mabuti naman at sa ngayon may mga bakante pa ring mga naghihintay sa mga kwalipikadong aplikante sa sektor ng kapulisan, ng military at ng edukasyon.

We must continue to focus here at home on creating jobs as well as keeping prices low. Salamat na lamang na nakaya ng taong-bayan ang mga presyo ng bilihan ng pagkain kaya malaking binaba ang hunger rate ng ating bansa itong Enero. (Applause) But the government must provide incentives to help the private sector to keep and create jobs. The government must also continue to come to the rescue of the poorest among us with targeted subsidies of food, fuel and rice.

How do we fund all these? The answer is: "Cut government waste."

In challenging economic times, the government must tighten its belt and live within its means, just like the average Filipino household. To that end, the government is taking a series of actions to stop unnecessary and wasteful spending. The taxpayers deserve no less from their government and public servants. Kaya ipinag-utos ng inyong lingkod ang belt-tightening measures sa lahat ng ahensiya ng pamahalaan, kasama na rito ang DILG, PNP, BJMP, BFP at PNPA. Mabuti na lang at noon pa natin itinaas ang sweldo ng mga pulis. Sa loob ng nakaraang walong taon, limang beses itinaas ang sweldo o allowance ng ating mga pulis. (Applause)

Ngayong dapat magtipid, nilagdaan ko ang Executive Order upang bawasan ang mga ahensiya ng pamahalaan ang Maintenance, Overhead and Operating budgets ng 1.5 percent. Aabot ng 7 billion pesos ang salaping matitipid.

I have directed electricity and fuel saving measures. Our targets: Bring down consumption by 25 percent of fossil fuels; reduce electric consumption by at least 10 percent; turn off airconditioners at 4:30 except those with 24-hour work.

Ipinag-utos ko rin na gumamit ang lahat ng ahensiya ng fluorescent bulbs imbes na incandescent upang makapagtipid tayo sa inaangkat na kuryente; and convert 20 percent of our government vehicles in major cities to non-fossil fuels. At dapat umpisahin na nating gawin ito, Ronnie, sa ating mga police vehicles.

Government vehicles not on official trip, including police cars and fire trucks should be garaged in the agency office and the keys kept by the guards during weekends and holidays. Government vehicles used by officials below Cabinet rank may not have security plates unless there is imminent danger to the lives of the officials involved.

This coming Independence Day, we will forego the annual parade which costs 30 million pesos. Instead, we will hold a mega-jobs fair so that our 45,000 workers displaced by the global crisis can find employment and livelihood.

The government, including the DILG, PNP, BJMP and BFP and PNPA, must pour all savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and the middle class.

Savings from MOOE shall be allocated to emergency employment for the next six months. Secretary Puno has been designated as Emergency Employment Champion for the Province of Rizal, while Secretary Jun Ebdane of Public Works has been designated as Emergency Employment Officer for the Province of Cavite; and in both cases, in fact in all cases, with priority given to displaced workers in the export industry.

Helping the poor and the middle-class also includes more and more investments in education, healthcare and infrastructure. Kaya sa edukasyon kasama na doon ang PNPA. Thus, I directed the Secretary of Interior and Local Government to provide more slots for PNPA next school year. (Applause)

Itong klase ninyo — I think, 315 or 14 kayo nagsimula — at sabi ni President Cojuangco next year ay 380 ang pwedeng makapasok. Sabi ko sa kay Secretary Puno dagdagan yun at gawing 400 ang tatanggapin. (Applause)

Inatasan ko rin ang upgrade ng PNP hospital at mga clinics — meron ba kayong clinic dito? O, i-upgrade din natin ang clinic dito. Gawin nating primary hospital kung clinic-clinic pa lang siya (applause), para makapaglingkod na rin sa kapaligiran sa pamayanan. At hindi lang dito yun din ang dapat — sinabi ko na kay Ronnie noon — na gawin sa malalayo at mahihirap na lalawigan.

Working on infrastructure also means more road repair, where we can use OYSTER (Out-of-School Youth Serving Towards Economic Resiliency) at importante ito para sa inyo dahil ang recruitment officer ang dapat ang chief ng police station.

And all agencies must support programs for providing meals for our children in school and job and training opportunities for our young graduates.

Yung kanina nung nakaupo kami at sinabi ni Ronnie he's accepting you in the permanent service, yun nga sabi ni Vice President Kabayan yan trabaho rin yan. Kaya mapalad kayong mga nagga-graduate dahil meron nang trabahong nagihihintay sa inyo. (Applause) Kaya bilang sukli, I am instructing all police camps, including the PNPA, to spend also part of your savings for providing breakfast to the day care, preschool and Grade 1 children in the school nearest your camp para sa kinabukasan ng susunod naman na henerasyon.

We must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economy and way of life going strong. On the part of government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes continued fiscal prudence on the part of every agency including PNPA as our national government officials and economic managers undertake efforts to work towards a balanced budget. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people, and certainly one of these key programs is public safety.

Natutuwa ako at tuloy-tuloy ang naging pagbaba ng ating ibat-ibang crime rates. Halimbawa, malaki ang naging pagbaba ng mga bank robberies at mga insidente ng kidnapping, hindi ba General Versoza? Tama yun. But there are still challenges we have to address. We must bring political killings to zero, including assassinations of government officials and media personalities.

This morning I talked with General Versoza and I said that Davao broadcaster Elgin Damasco should be offered police protection, and the texts threatening him should be investigated.

Kaya maraming nagawa ang inyong mga predecessors, mga Class 2009, at marami pa ring kailangang gawin ang inyong klase pagpasok niyo sa police, sa jail management at saka sa fire protection.

Our people have given you the rare opportunity to develop your potential. Go now and give back what you received by keeping the people safe. And as you keep the people safe, you will be able to carry out through your careers your theme today of, “Justice, Integrity and Service: Essential Values Towards a Strong and Globally Competitive Republic.”

Sa inyong lahat, congratulations! Good luck! And thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s Speech during the 30th Commencement Exercises of the Philippine National Police Academy (PNPA) “Kaisang-Bisig” Class of 2009. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104248/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=22670&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Asian Development Bank (ADB) Reception

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Asian Development Bank (ADB) Reception

[Delivered at ADB Avenue, Mandaluyong City, March 27, 2009]

Thank you very much, President Kuroda for your very kind words; and thank you and congratulations for organizing this very first ADB Reception ever. Congratulations to all of you.

Other officials of the Asian Development Bank; members of the diplomatic corps; Philippine officials; ladies and gentlemen:

I would like to thank ADB, indeed for this very first ADB Reception. It's a great occasion to celebrate what President Kuroda said, "it's our strong relationship."

On a personal note, I am proud to recall that it was in my father's administration that ADB started building its main headquarters here in the Philippines. I remember how hard my father worked for that and he provided valuable land in Roxas Boulevard in order to make sure that ADB would make its home in the Philippines.

Since then, ADB's financial and technical assistance for the development of Asia-Pacific has touched millions of lives in the region. And to date has even become more valuable as we strive to shield our peoples from the global economic downturn.

We must continue to focus here at home on creating jobs and keeping prices low. The government must provide incentives to help the private sector to keep and create jobs. The government must also continue to come to the rescue of the poorest among us with targeted subsidies of food, fuel and rice.

How do we fund all these? Before going to the ADB for technical assistance or loans, we must first and foremost, "cut government waste."

In challenging economic times, the government must tighten its belt and live within its means, just like the average Filipino household. To that end, our government is taking a series of actions to stop unnecessary and wasteful spending. The taxpayers deserve no less from their government and public servants.

I have instructed all national government agencies, including Government Owned and Controlled Corporations to reduce their Maintenance, Overhead and Operating Expenses by 1.5%. This translates to a saving of P7 billion.

I have directed national agencies to save fuel and electricity. Our target: bring down the use of fossil fuels by 25% and reduce electric consumption by at least 10%. National agencies must turn off their airconditioners at 4:30 p.m., except those with 24-hour work; and they use fluorescent rather than incandescent bulbs. If all bulbs in the country were to shift to fluorescent, we could save P2 billion. And I thank the ADB for supporting this endeavor.

Twenty percent of national government vehicles in major cities shall be converted to non-fossil fuel users. Government vehicles not on official trip shall be garaged in the agency office and the keys kept by guards during weekends and holidays. And this Independence Day, we will save the diplomatic corps including President Kuroda of the need to go to Luneta to watch a P30 million parade because instead we will hold a mega-jobs fair so that the 46,000 workers in the export sector displaced by the global crisis can be matched to the jobs that are certainly still available.

In this regard, I was happy to hear for Indophil that rather than laying off workers, they're looking for additional workers, so certainly jobs are still available. The government must pour all savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and the middle class. This includes more and more investments in education, healthcare and infrastructure. And we must all support programs for providing meals for our children. This is part of our template — our formula that has contributed to the drastic reduction in our hunger rate these past few months. And of course, it is summer time, graduation time; we must also work hard to provide job and training opportunities for our young graduates.

To keep our economy and way of life going strong, we must tackle many challenges at once. On the part of government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes fiscal prudence not only on the part of government, national government but also local governments. I just come back from Mindanao where I spoke in Davao before the Board Members of the Philippines, those who make the loss in the provincial governments. And I told them about our cost-saving measures and they have said that they will replicate these same measures by legislating belt-tightening measures in their own provinces. This is very welcome as we in the national government undertake efforts to work towards a balanced budget. And I'm glad that Secretary Teves just walked in because that is his important task together with our Secretary of the Budget. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people.

And here, we thank the ADB for your support for our key programs. President Kuroda enumerated the many kinds of programs that you have provided for us, your assistance you have given which has benefited the urban and the rural poor of Tawi-Tawi to Cagayan Valley with projects ranging for so many all those things that President Kuroda mentioned. But I would also like to thank not only the institutional ADB but also ADB and its staff for giving a lot of attention to Metro Manila with your community projects and welfare assistance.

International financial institutions like the ADB had a particular significance during this global economic downturn, orienting your financial products to be more responsive to countries vulnerable to the crisis and using all your resources to mobilize rapid assistance. And given the magnitude of the global downturn, all multilaterals should come together to provide counter-cyclical financing as other sources might begin to dry up.

And we count on you for your technical assistance and support to share knowledge and experiences on how different countries are responding to the crisis. We also count on you and we will be seeing President Kuroda in Thailand in the East Asian Summit soon. We count on the ADB to help strengthen ASEAN's surveillance activities which is so important for our region's economic resiliency.

To do all that you have been doing and to do what has to be done, in order that our region should continue to be resilient in the face of the global economic downturn, I agree that ADB should be well-equipped in its participation in the world's efforts to address the global crisis. So we support what President Kuroda expressed as his wish in his all remarks the capital increase of the bank, you have our support there Mister President. (Applause)

And because we cannot temporize, we call for its finalization by the Annual Meeting this coming May.

You helped us strengthen our economies; strong economies interacting together will bring about a comprehensive strength for the region that will be greater than the sum of our individual national strengths. And for this, we look forward to the ADB in the many years to come to continue to forge partnerships to strengthen our respective national economies and thereby to strengthen the economy of the whole Asian Region.

To ADB, thank you for all that you have been over this more than 40 years to the Philippines, to the region and therefore to the world.

Congratulations, mabuhay and thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Asian Development Bank (ADB) Reception. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412105813/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=22867&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 18th National Assembly of the Provincial Board Members League of the Philippines

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 18th National Assembly of the Provincial Board Members League of the Philippines

[Delivered at the Ballroom, The Apo View Hotel, Davao City, Davao del Sur, March 27, 2009]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Gabby Claudio sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

And I would like to greet and give my hats off to Speaker Boy Nograles for his firm leadership of the House of Representatives. (Applause)

And thank you also, Boy and the other people of Davao City for hosting this very important convention. (Applause)

Board Member and President Pearl Angeli Pacada, congratulations also on your leadership of the Board Members League. (Applause)

Pag-usapan natin kung papano tayo makakapagtulungan doon sa hinihingi niyong kontribusyon sa inyong condotel doon sa Ortigas. (Applause)

Other officials of the Board Members' League, at kasama rin natin ditto, our Cabinet member from Mindanao, Secretary Nasser Pangandaman. (Applause)

To all of you, thank you for inviting me here.

I got the invitation a few weeks ago. My schedule was already full today because Friday is Climate Change Day and I had some visits scheduled to see Solid Waste Management facilities and to advocate among the different local governments; but I decided to redo my schedule and do my Solid Waste Management Day right here in Davao City and in the surrounding areas. (Applause)

And I thank you that, that is one of your advocacies — fighting global warming, fighting climate change — and solid management waste is a very important contribution to that. Because next to fossil fuels, the second biggest source of climate change is the methane coming from garbage.

And all of these you are doing in accordance with your theme: “Moving Forward in Unison Towards the Provincial Board Members’ Vision for a Stronger Philippines.” I thank you for your theme, it is very similar to the vision I have been speaking about of a strong republic.

Indeed, this is an important convention because Board Members are crucial to the growth and resilience of a province. Put together, your power of the purse and your power to legislate, just like the power that Boy Nograles and his colleagues wield, can wield significant influence; Boy in the country, you and your provinces’ growth path and the pace by which your provinces’ programs are executed. That is why when you came forward the several occasions to support me during the trials of my presidency, it was really important and crucial support because of your importance in your provincial governments. Thank you for that. (Applause)

Now, the experience you have in your respective Boards and your will for your provinces are being summoned to address the concerns being raised by the economic crisis that is sweeping the world today. We must all continue to focus here at home on creating jobs and keeping prices low. The government, national and provincial, must provide incentives to help the private sector to keep and create jobs.

One of the things we are doing in the electronics industry, to help the electronics which is the hardest hit industry of the global crisis keep and create jobs, is, that if they don't lay off their workers and they keep them, waiting for the rebound even if they are not doing any real work, they can pay them minimum wage while TESDA finances the industry specified training program. That is something we're doing in the national level. Something that you might look at also at the local level.

The government must also continue to come to the rescue of the poorest among us with targeted subsidies of food, fuel and rice. And I thank your local governments for helping us to do this distributions because as a result of our being able to provide a food, fuel and rice at subsidized prices to the poorest of our constituents, the country has experienced a drastic decline in the hunger rate this past month. Thank you again for your support there. (Applause)

To fund all the things we need to do, to keep the Philippine economy strong during this global economic crisis, we must "cut government waste." And that is at the national and provincial levels.

In challenging economic times, the government — national and provincial — must tighten its belt and live within its means, just like the average household.

To that end, at the national level, we are taking a series of actions to stop unnecessary and wasteful spending. The taxpayers deserve no less from their governments and public servants. And these measures are probably things that also the provincial governments can replicate. So I call on you to the extent practicable, to legislate programs similar to what we have done. The series of belt-tightening measures that we have done for the national government which I hope the provincial governments through your legislative powers can replicate. For instance, I have ordered all national government agencies, including Government-owned and Controlled Corporations, to reduce their Maintenance, Overhead and Operating Expenses by 1.5 percent and allocate the savings to emergency employment for the next six months.

I have directed national agencies to undertake electricity and fuel saving measures. Our targets include bring down consumption of fossil fuels by 25 percent; reduce electric consumption by at least 10 percent; turn off air conditioners at 4:30 except those with 24-hour work; gumamit ng fluorescent bulbs imbes na incandescent bulbs; convert 20 percent of vehicles in major cities to non-fossil fuel users.

Government vehicles not on official trips should be garaged in the agency office and the keys kept by guards during weekends and holidays.

This coming Independence Day, we will forego the annual parade which usually costs 30 million pesos and instead hold a mega jobs fair so that our workers, our 46,000 workers displaced by the global crisis can find livelihood or employment.

Indeed, the government — national and provincial — must pour all savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and the middle-class. This includes more and more investments in education, healthcare and infrastructure which are well within the spending authorities of the provincial governments. And now that we have lowered the hunger rate, let us continue with successful programs, let us all support programs for providing meals for our children in school; and I'm glad that Board Member Pacada mentioned your support for the early childhood development because part of that is giving our day care, pre-school and grade one children a healthy start with a nutritious breakfast.

It doesn't have to be sumptuous but it can be nutritious — rice, malunggay — these are very good for nutrition. Also, we all have to work together at our different levels to help provide job and training opportunities for our young graduates, because not only are we holding this convention during women's month, we're also holding it during graduation month and there are those young graduates looking for a job soon.

One of the things we are doing in the national government is that DSWD is doing a poverty mapping. And so, for enumerators to find out who are the poorest of the poor, DSWD is using the young graduates so that they have a job immediately. That is a few thousand of them and I hope that you can also look for activities whereby you can mobilize the young graduates.

We must tackle many challenges to keep our economy and way of life going strong. And on the part of government — national and provincial — we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes on the national and local governments continued fiscal prudence as we in the national government together with Congress, which has the power of the purse and the power to tax, work towards a balanced budget. And all the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people.

We have our programs at the national level, you have yours at the provincial Level; but over these past eight years, we have been jelling our programs together and I'm very happy with that.

On our part, the national government has increasingly invested in the growth of our local government units. Even in the cash-strapped early years of my administration, because I inherited a very parse purse when I became President in 2001, we still took great pains if you remember, to release your IRA in full, even if we had to sacrifice the national government spending and we even paid the debt that previous administrations owed to our LGUs.

One of the areas in which you, the Board Members have supported me was in the massive reforms that we made in taxes. In 2005, we made the most massive of those reforms, the Value Added Tax which was at very great cost to my popularity. Not only that, it was challenged in court but it was finally implemented in 2006.

Forty percent of all internal revenue, including the Value Added Tax goes to IRA, with a three-year lag in computation. So when we first implemented VAT, the expanded VAT in 2006, the VAT went up by 100 billion pesos. And so now, three years later, due to the three-year lag in computation, this year, the IRA went up by 40 billion pesos. (Applause)

So maybe you're beginning to notice this big increase that you have to budget. So this year, you the local governments, are reaping the benefits of my political sacrifice. But one of my konsuelos is that the Board Members supported me (applause) during that period of sacrifice.

And certainly, it will be doubly worth the sacrifice if you in the League take up the challenge now that you have this big increase in IRA, to make sure that each province spends your IRA windfall prudently. Not on trimmings, but only on strategic programs that will keep us growing in spite of the slump in the world today, and that will lay the foundation for sustainable growth, because that is indeed what a stronger Philippines is all about.

So, together — and I thank you for your resolution and it looks like that we will continue to be together — together, we can achieve our common vision: a strong and resilient Philippines; because each of your provinces through your wise legislation remains strong and resilient during this period of crisis. The country as a whole will be greater than the sum of its parts. And the strength of your provinces will be more than an equal contribution to the strength of our Republic.

Kaya sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat sa inyong suporta at nawa'y magtagumpay ang mga resulta ng inyong mga workshop kung papaano palakasin pa ang inyong mga probinsya at ating republika.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104237/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=22856&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during an Official Banquet in Honor of H.E. Prime Minister Sir Michael Somare of Papua New Guinea

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During an Official Banquet in Honor of H.E. Prime Minister Sir Michael Somare of Papua New Guinea

[Delivered at Shangri-La's Boracay Resort & Spa, Boracay Island, Malay, Aklan, March 29, 2009]

His Excellency, The Right Honorable Grand Chief Prime Minister Sir Michael Somare; Members of the Diplomatic Corps, Ladies and Gentlemen:

It is our honor and pleasure to welcome to the Philippines, The Right Honorable Prime Minister of Papua New Guinea.

Sir Michael is my seatmate in APEC, but of course more than that, he is the founding father of the Independent Papua New Guinea, the Commonwealth's longest surviving politician with 40 years of service and Papua New Guinea's longest serving prime minister.

He is a valuable friend of the Philippines, and a good brother of ours in the Pacific. We invited His Excellency — even if he has been here before, two times — to express our gratitude for Papua New Guinea's unwavering support to our initiatives and our aspirations in the United Nations.

Papua New Guinea has not only been consistent and constant, often it has also influenced the other Pacific islands to support us.

The relations between the Philippines and Papua New Guinea go back to the 1800s when 14 Filipino missionaries accompanied European priests to Papua New Guinea to teach catechism. I understand there is a monument at the Holy Rosary Parish Church in Port Moresby with an inscription that reads and I quote: "In remembrance of the first group of Filipino Lay Missionaries in Papua New Guinea who arrived on Yule Island during the 1880's and other whose names are known only to God."

This is followed by the names of the 14 missionaries who set foot on Papua New Guinea and by coincidence the parish church of Boracay is also called the Holy Rosary Parish Church.

In any case, these missionaries started the wave of cultural, intellectual and technical exchanges between our peoples that 120 or so years later still continues to this day.

I am pleased to note the presence of Filipino workers, Filipino technicians and Filipino firms in Papua New Guinea. For instance, the Kenmore Group which was founded over 30 years ago who hosted Sir Michael at lunch today; And we have Rodrigo Rivera's RD Tuna Canning based in General Santos but with a very big investment in Papua Guinea whom we would have wanted to visit for tomorrow but the schedule of Sir Michael is so full of many other activities so he will postpone that for some other visit. And another big investor is the Fravel Fishing Corporation of Francis Tiu Laurel. And I'm very happy that we have Mr. and Mrs. Tiu Laurel here with us tonight.

And with these big investments in fishing in Papua New Guinea, it is significant that the Memorandum of Understanding on Fisheries Operation will be signed during his visit containing especially our common commitment to sustainable development.

This commitment to sustainable development is made doubly significant by Papua New Guinea's being a partner of the Philippines and four other countries in the Coral Triangle Initiative; the other four countries being Malaysia, Indonesia, East Timor and Solomon Islands.

Papua New Guinea not only has that great jungle under the water in the Coral Triangle, it is also home to the third largest jungle in the world, next only to the Amazon Jungle and the Great African Jungle.

Another important area in which Papua New Guinea has an influence in the world, in the region and on the Philippines is in the Pacific Islands Forum and the Southwest Dialogue. Papua New Guinea is a leading member, and the Philippines is a dialogue partner.

And this I believe, is another significance of our relationship because the Pacific Islands Forum and the Southwest Dialogue can be part of the solution to the current global slowdown. It should be part of a larger Pan-Asia body in Asia that should include East, South and Central Asia, the Middle East, Russia and Oceania to which Papua New Guinea belongs.

If we have this, Asia will be stronger with the more united region. This large Asian community can strengthen our economy, security and prosperity. It can help us maximize growth, trade, investment and financial stability in our great region and continent which is best suited to weather the global crisis and come up the strongest compared with other regions.

So, on this note, for all these reasons which make Papua New Guinea such an important country to us, I invite you all to join me in a toast to Her Majesty The Queen, who is the Head of State of Papua New Guinea; to Sir Michael, the Prime Minister, Prime Minister Somare of Papua New Guinea; and to the people of Papua New Guinea.

Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during an Official Banquet in Honor of H.E. Prime Minister Sir Michael Somare of Papua New Guinea. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104203/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=22953&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Sangguniang Kabataan (SK) National Federation launching of its Environmental Program “Sama-Sama Para Sa Kalikasan” and bill signing of the Special Program for Employment of Students (SPES) Speech

of

Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines

During the Sangguniang Kabataan (SK) National Federation launching of its Environmental Program “Sama-Sama Para Sa Kalikasan” and bill signing of the Special Program for Employment of Students (SPES)

[Delivered at Bohol Wisdom School Gym, Tagbilaran City, Bohol, April 1, 2009]

Daghan salamat Jane ug daghan salamat sa imong maayo nga liderato sa atong SK sa tibuok nasud. (Applause)

Our leaders of Congress headed here by Girlie Villarosa and the authors of the very important Youth Student Training Program, and as we heard earlier, principally sponsored by Congressman Edgar Chatto; our leaders of the province headed by Governor Aumentado ug nianhi karon ang mga tanang congressmen ug mga mayors dinhi sa Bohol, maayong udto kaninyong tanan; our members of the Cabinet those who will be helping to implement the law on student employment; aton mga SK from the whole Philippines, thank you for being here, 6,000 of you, congratulations on this excellent attendance! (Applause)

And you couldn't have chosen a better place to gather today. Not only because we are in the home province of your national federation president, but also because dito sa Bohol — the only province I understand with an Environmental Code being implemented — dito ninyo naisipang ilunsad ang kampanyang “Sama-sama Para sa Kalikasan.” Congratulations! (Applause)

“Sama-sama” is as important as the word “kalikasan.” Yung “sama-sama” now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. We must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. This should include the government, the religious and civic groups and non-government organizations harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities. We should focus on initiatives such as cleaning up our environment, building parks and planting trees, and bringing comfort to the poor through food banks and bringing the dignity of literacy to adults who cannot read.

SK's adoption today of environmental protection as your priority program is a declaration that you are ready to train your energies on activities that will slow down or hopefully even reverse the harmful effects that mankind has brought on our planet. And you have my support, as Jane said, the last time we were together in Cebu, I awarded your organization 10 million pesos for use in your environmental protection projects. (Applause) And I am glad that Jane said you will focus on cleaning up our environment, including solid waste management and also on planting trees.

During these trying times of the world, the Filipino spirit and commitment to caring should prompt each one of us to count our blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate. Our nation needs us all pulling in the same direction. Volunteering time, skill and resources that is a noble undertaking we should all take seriously.

In lean global economic times, we need to tap into national support for “volunteerism.” We need to promote citizen involvement to help friends, families, communities and the less fortunate, notably revolving around the poor and the environment.

In the Sangguniang Kabataan, you the youth have a vehicle by which you can achieve our shared vision of a Philippines that provides a high quality of life and protects our resources for future generations. I am happy that you have taken on the challenge of protecting the environment and mitigating the effects of climate change.

This is in line with the Task Force on Climate Change that I created, to address issues related to environmental protection. It has 14 Task Groups covering a whole range of concerns, from waste management to water and air pollution and energy utilization. Each Task Group is headed by a Cabinet Member who is assigned to draw up activities on an approved design or implement assigned tasks.

I hope the SK can align your environmental activities along with those of the Presidential Task Force on Climate Change. Your tasks can be as simple as educating our people about proper solid waste management or helping plant trees in logged-over areas. Or they may be as complicated as linking up with various government agencies to assist in the monitoring of projects. A laudable idea would be a data bank, as I understand Jane Cajes has proposed, which may be pursued in coordination with the DENR and your respective revenues.

How timely it is also that today in front of the youth of our country, I have just signed an Executive Order promoting a Youth National Service and therefore...

Well, that's different yet from what Edgar did. Aside from what Edgar has done, I also signed an Executive Order for a Youth National Service.

This targets 18 to 24 year-olds, tamang-tama SK is in that age. This national service shall be composed of a National Service Corps and a Youth Conservation Corps.

The National Service Corps shall be like a domestic "Peace Corps." It shall be geared to the unemployed or underemployed skilled youth or college graduates. It will focus on their contributions to education and community service programs. So, I ask the SK to help me recruit such youth to undertake a national service commitment with a modest stipend.

On the other hand, the Youth Conservation Corps or YCC shall be composed of the unskilled or less-educated youth. They shall focus on environmental and infrastructure projects. I also ask the SK to help me recruit you to likewise undertake a national service commitment with a modest stipend. Maybe some of you know the OYSTER program that will be subsumed into this new YCC.

OYSTER means "Out-of-School Youth Serving Towards Economic Resiliency." The police implements that. That will be subsumed into the YCC.

And as what we did earlier, I was very happy to sign before the youth of our country the new law creating as sponsored by the Boholano, Edgar Chatto and the other congressman who are here today, a Special Program for Employment of Students. As Bernie Sayo explained earlier this law will expand opportunities for poor students to acquire hands-on training and earn some money which they will use to continue schooling.

The number of companies allowed to participate has been increased, and government partly pays for the students' allowance in the form of vouchers that all schools are ordered to accept.

And that is so important because in today's global economy, knowledge is the greatest creator of wealth. The government must pour all savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and the middle-class. This includes more investments in the economy, environment and education.

The social safety net programs of our administration are focused like a laser on expanding educational opportunities to enable the upward mobility of young men and women from poor families. Our administration readily addresses educational concerns.

Two concerns have been brought to my attention: One, the rigid tuition fee payment rules — where is Chairman Angeles? Yun — of state universities and colleges; and the second, the clamor to expand the coverage of the Student Assistance Fund for Education or SAFE.

The “no payment, no periodic examination policy” I understand is one of the main reasons why young students from poor families drop out of college. This has to change to ensure a decent graduation rate for college. Rigid tuition fee payment rules cannot be allowed to sabotage the great educational agenda of our Administration. (Applause)

Likewise, the benefits of our Student Assistance Fund for Education should receive the fullest of endowments. You know you have a president from Bohol, President Garcia. And I am also the daughter of a president, Diosdado Macapagal.

And being the daughter of a president, speaking to those who come from the province of another president, I think we can all agree that the most inspiring stories of the Filipinos as a people are the great stories of meritocracy, and driving, fueling and enabling those great success stories is one constant — education. For instance, my father was born into abject poverty, but because a philanthropist gave him a scholarship to finish school. He was number one in the bar examinations. He was able to work in a good law office. He was able to join the government. He became congressman, vice president and president. And I want all the youth of our country to have the same chance. (Applause)

So, inspired by his story and others like his, to make sure that as many graduates from college as one too, I have issued an Executive Order for the Commission on Higher Education to instruct all state universities and colleges to devise a flexible, socially-sensitive tuition fee payment plan, and reform the “no payment, no periodic examination policy” that is currently being applied.

(Applause)

That Executive Order also instructs the administrations of the SAFE or the Student Assistance Fund for Education to expand the coverage of the program.

On top of tuition, beneficiaries of the program should be able to borrow from the fund for a monthly stipend to subsidize the students’ transport fares and laboratory, research and book allowance.

My dream for the youth that you represent is that in the prime of your life which is today — no, not yet today — in the prime of your life ten years, twenty years from today, you will see the Philippines on the verge of first world. That in the prime of your life, poverty shall have been marginalized; and the marginalized raised to a robust middle-class. That in the prime of your life, we will have achieved all the hallmarks of a modern society where institutions are strong.

And by today, when you are not yet in the prime of your life, you are already strengthening the institution of the SK. I know that you the SK have the drive and the will to achieve a Strong Republic in the first world by the time that you are the adults and the leaders of our country.

Congratulations! And good luck to all of you! (Applause)

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s Speech during the Sangguniang Kabataan (SK) National Federation launching of its Environmental Program “Sama-Sama Para Sa Kalikasan” and bill signing of the Special Program for Employment of Students (SPES). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104130/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=23022&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 27th Biennial Convention of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. (FFCCCII) Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 27th Biennial Convention of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. (FFCCCII)

[Delivered at Function Rooms 1 & 2, SMX Convention Center, SM Mall of Asia, Pasay City, April 3, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Favila for your introduction.

Ambassador Liu of the People's Republic of China, thank you for being here with us; Secretary Roque; the elder statesmen of the Federation, the previous presidents, honorary presidents and senior advisers; Mr. Henry Sy, our host for today and his family and corporations; and Tessie, thank you for your contributions to the Philippine economy, and thank you Tessie for your kind words about our economy and our economic management; the outgoing officers headed by President John Tan, congratulations for a job well done!

Under John, the Foundation has continued to be government's strong partner in development programs. Our incoming Board and Officers headed by Alfonso Uy of Iloilo, whom I've known for a long time in Iloilo, congratulations for being the first Federation president coming from the province!

This makes the Federation truly national and I am optimistic that our partnership will grow even stronger under the next set of officers who will officially be chosen during this convention. But because Dr. Uy is running unopposed, he was already introduced to me by Francis Chua as the next president or their incoming president.

It is so impressive that such a large ethnic-based group can be so cohesive and keen in preserving your unity, your cultural identity, and yet be so thoroughly assimilated to Filipino culture and traditions. Just looking at this room, if I had maybe an hour to speak, there would be so many that I could mention that I can recognize on this floor of Chinese ancestry. Of course, we have your congresswoman from Chinatown, Naida Angping, and her husband Chairman Harry Angping, but we also have mayors, city and municipality, we have prominent businessmen that I have interacted with not only in Manila but in the provinces and so many of you. And this is just a tribute to your ancestors who chose to make the Philippines their home.

And let me say that because of your ancestors and you, our country has been culturally and economically enriched several times over. In fact, most Filipinos have a Chinese ancestor in their family tree. So you're really considered of Chinese ancestry if you can trace it very specifically in your family tree. Because if you cannot trace it, then everybody has Chinese ancestry. In my case, I'm very happy that my grandchildren can have traceable Chinese ancestry because my husband's middle name, Tuason, came from his Chinese ancestor, Son Tua, whose gallantry in helping defend the Philippines against the British forces in the mid-18th century earned for him a Spanish nobility title and lands stretching from today's Sta. Mesa to Diliman to Marikina. So, we are part of you.

The government's partnership with your Federation started ever since you were founded. The numerous projects that your Federation launched in support of government's programs have touched the life of every Filipino in one way or another. Just speaking of John Tan's administration, and he gave us his report, the Federation provided assistance in lobbying for far-reaching economic laws, sponsoring various trade fairs and investment and promotion campaigns, providing police patrol cars — and how many times I was there to witness the turnover together with other equipment necessary to maintain peace and order — training our youth, building schools in far-away communities, delivering relief goods in places visited by calamities. So, thank you, John again and your Board and thank you to the elder statesmen and senior advisers of the Federation.

The Federation is among the most active of groups complementing government's social services delivery. You have the best volunteer fire brigades in the country. You have mobile clinics that have helped cure thousands of the sick. Your speedy relief to victims of calamities such as typhoons Cosme and Frank in the region of your new president has been exemplary.

And the people especially thanked the Federation for your landmark championing the cause of quality education. You have shown that classrooms can be built at half the cost estimated for these projects. That's why I decided that in support of what the good you're doing for our people on the occasion of the inauguration of the new Board, I will give you a 35 million-peso check. So that you can be even more generous, as you have already been generous, with your two-classroom school building donations to the "Operation Barrio Schools." I only ask — you have linked up with the DepEd to build so many units of two-classroom buildings. And I thank you for that — I only ask, for this one, you will specifically put it in the grade schools where the ratio of students to classroom is 100 for one shift or two-fifth students for two shifts. Because if the ratio is more than that, that is where the lack is really there. So that is where I would like you to put this money where the ratio is bigger than 100 to one for one shift or fifty to one for two shifts.

And I'm glad that John already told you about the Executive Order that I signed authorizing your Federation to fund raise for your "Operation Barrio Schools" and that all the funds generated from contributions shall be tax-exempt. Meaning, the donor or contributor shall be allowed to deduct the donations or contributions for income tax purposes.

At no time in written history do strong partnerships matter more than now, when our nation faces concerns brought about by the global economic crisis. As you all know, this global recession is not of our making, yet we have to deal with its challenges.

In challenging economic times, we must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economy and way of life going strong. On the part of government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes continued fiscal prudence, which Tessie said is one of the keys to our resiliency today, and efforts to work towards a balanced budget. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people.

So this coming Independence Day, we will forgo the costly annual parade. In the past, I looked forward so much to your dragon dance which I insisted to my organizers that must be included together with the 'tinikling' or what Muslim dance are there because the Chinese-Filipinos are Filipinos and your culture is part of Philippine culture. But we won't have that now because we won't have a parade.

Instead, we will hold a countrywide mega-jobs fair so that our — is the number correct, Nitoy? — 46,000 displaced workers can find employment and livelihood. And I enjoin your Federation, with your network of 170 member organizations all over the country, to be actively involved in the jobs fairs.

I am happy to recognize the Federation's action also in signing the Memo of Agreement with the DOLE, that's why Nitoy Roque is here, for the reemployment of workers who would be displaced by the global crisis.

By the way, I'd like to thank Mr. Sy and family for having the Gaming Exhibit downstairs because we've lost 5,000 jobs abroad, right? But Nitoy Roque was able to get openings in Sentosa in Kuala Lumpur for 5,000 jobs. So, now what we have to take care of are those losing their jobs in our export-oriented industries in the Philippines.

On the part of the people, now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. We must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. This should include the government, religious and civic groups such as the Federation, and non-governmental organizations harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities. We should focus on initiatives such as cleaning up our environment, building parks and planting trees and bringing comfort to the poor through food banks and bringing the dignity of literacy to adults who cannot read.

During these trying times, the Filipino spirit and commitment to caring should prompt each one of us to count our blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate. Our nation needs us all pulling in the same direction.

Volunteering time, skill and resources is a noble undertaking that the Federation has taken seriously all these years. And I thank you for that and I hope you will be an example for many other Filipinos.

Because in lean economic times for the world, we need to tap into national support for “volunteerism.” We need to promote citizen involvement to help friends, families, communities and the less fortunate, notably revolving around the poor and the environment. You know, today is Friday. I devote Fridays to concerns and initiatives for environmental security. On this Friday that I am with you, I especially appeal for your help in promoting proper waste management, solid waste management, and also in putting sewerage treatment plants in your respective office buildings so that the water that will flow into the system, into the Pasig River will be already treated and clean water.

I also ask your help for the Youth National Service targeting 18 to 24-year-olds that I launched last Wednesday in Bohol at the Sangguniang Kabataan National Convention. The National Service Corps shall be like a domestic “Peace Corps.” It shall be geared to the unemployed or underemployed skilled youth or college graduates. It shall focus on their contributions to education and community service programs. We are recruiting such youth to undertake a 2-year national service commitment with a modest stipend. And I ask that the Federation help me with the stipends.

We look to our reliable partners for support to create new jobs, deliver targeted relief to the sectors that have been hardest hit by the global economic slump, and spend more judiciously on programs that give the greatest positive impact.

Also, I’m sure that you are very much concerned that in times when money is difficult and crimes are expected to rise, the police must become even more vigilant, so with the military.

This morning, I was able to talk on the phone with Ms. Lacaba. And I told her we are happy that she is back with us. And we give credit — as I told her, those who worked hard for her release — to the local crisis committee, the troops, the DND, the DILG and the PNRC leaders. We call for more of such concerted efforts to end lawless violence.

Here in Metro Manila, I have put a new director for the whole region for NCR. Somebody that many of you are familiar with because he was the head of the Manila Police District and maybe some of you in the provinces are familiar with him because he was able to have for a long time the biggest drug bust in Quezon province and put in jail the highest ranking fish in the drug trade. That is your new director for NCR, General Boysie Rosales, and my special instruction to him is look into the kidnapping incidents in Metro Manila. He has done a good job in Manila because of the support of your community and your Federation. And now I’m sure you’re supporting him in his bigger area.

I thank the Federation for your contributions that help the police keep the peace and make our people feel safe in their homes, their workplace and in the streets. As Tessie said and our other speakers, the theme of your biennial convention is: “Working Together, Overcoming Crisis.” Indeed, we have been working together for a long time and produced inspiring results.

The people of the Philippines recognize your efforts to make life better not only for the Filipino-Chinese in our country but for everyone else. Tessie praised our economic management for our resiliency. But let me in return say that your efforts, the Filipino-Chinese business community, helped our country achieve a record 36 successive quarters of growth during my Presidency, capped by the 8.0-percent GNP growth in 2007.

Last year, when two-thirds of the world went into recession, we managed a 6.1- percent GNP growth last year. And this year, while 46,000 of our workers have lost their jobs in our export-oriented industries and 5,000 workers have lost their jobs abroad. There are 5,000 jobs available abroad and our economy has increased employment by 500,000 also so far this year.

So we have created more than 500,000 jobs here and there are 500,000 jobs abroad, and hunger has gone down significantly. This was achieved with members of the Federation playing vital roles in propelling the economy upward as well as delivering more social services to the poor. For your contributions to this achievement, we thank you.

FFCCCII has promoted the growth of business and integrated the Chinese community into our society. And most importantly, the Federation has worked hard to achieve our vision of a modern Philippines.

In these challenging times, we need to work together even more closely, complementing each other's actions to keep the global crisis from becoming a Philippine crisis and to keep our country on the path of long-term growth.

With your support, I have high hopes of sustaining our economic resiliency and attaining a vision of a Philippines at the threshold of first world in 20 years.

To the officers to be elected, congratulations!

And to all of you, maraming salamat muli sa inyong lahat.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's Speech during the 27th Biennial Convention of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. (FFCCCII). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104123/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=23265&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo on Heroism at the National Shrine, April 9, 2003

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
On Heroism at the National Shrine

[Delivered in Capas, Tarlac, April 9, 2003]

KEEPING THE FLAMES OF HEROISM ALIVE

The soldiers who fought in World War II, most of whom are no longer around, are pillars of courage and heroism, we'll forever be indebted to them. This memorial that we unveil today is a tribute to them. Nothing is ever enough however to show our gratitude for their sacrifice. On the wall we unveiled today, are inscribed the names of 32,285 gallant men who took part in the Bataan-Corregidor campaign, and the Death March from Bataan to Capas.

Max Soliven's father, Commander Major Benito Soliven, who commanded 1,000 men has his name inscribed in that wall. Seven of my uncles have their names inscribed in that wall. One uncle, Angel Macapagal, does not have his name inscribed in that wall because as he marched from Bataan through Lubao, on the way to Capas, passing through his hometown, he knew where he would have some drinking water from a well, and he was very thirsty. He went to the drinking water and found out that nobody noticed that he had gone, so he did not go back to the Death March and he survived. But the seven others did not survive. And I am proud that my family, the Macapagal family, is part of the Death March and part of Capas and part of Bataan.

Each of those men, the 32,285 men whose names are inscribed in this wall, is a hero. An example for us in today's difficult times, faced with a mortal crisis, they embraced a collective destiny and gave their all for the flag.

Hinahandog natin ang ating taos-pusong pasasalamat at dasal sa mga magigiting na ito na ang kanilang mga pangalan ay nakasulat dito sa pader sa Heroes Memorial. At naaalala natin sila lalo na sa mga panahong ito, mga panahon na maraming hamon sa mundo at sa bansa na kailangan ng mga bayani lalo na sa mga araw na ito.

Tayong mga Pilipino ng kasalukuyang henerasyon, hinaharap natin itong mga banta at ang masasabi ko bilang inyong Pangulo, para harapin ang tagumpay at itong iba't-ibang mga banta, kailangan ko ang suporta ng buong taongbayan. Halimbawa, iniimbestiga natin ang nagpapatok sa Davao. The arrest of the suspects is only the beginning. We shall uncover the larger conspiracy behind the terrorist acts in Davao, and expose the face of the enemy to the people.

I have directed the probe to be determined and unrelenting. The people must know the motive and the mastermind behind these acts. Even if we have to chase the truth across frontiers with the cooperation of our allies against terrorism. I commend the vigilance of our security forces as they fight for our freedom from violence.

I ask our people for your support, together we shall show the world that this country will never be a safe haven for terrorist groups.

Isa sa ating sandata kontra sa terorismo ay ang kagalingan ng ating mga sundalo na pinag-iibayo sa pamamagitan ng mga pagsasanay kagaya ng Balikatan. Itong taon, ang Balikatan ay gaganapin sa ilang lugar kasama na rito ang Sulu. The Province of Sulu is strategically important, that is why "Balikatan" will partly be held there.

The local governments want it, and this is important to our national security. Anti-terrorism exercises will improve the capability of our soldiers to gain ground. We are determined to cut down the entire body of terrorism in the country, and the Sulu connection is vital to this objective. There is a nexus in Central Mindanao connected with another hub in Sulu, both interlinked with militant cells in several urban centers. We have to take down all the nodes and cells to contain the threat and we must not take this effort in isolation.

We acknowledge the opposition to this exercise. We will take that into consideration in the constitutionally adherent terms of reference.

Ang laban ng mundo kontra sa terorismo ay umabot sa giyera sa pamamagitan ng Amerika at Iraq. The U.S.-Iraq war is virtually over. The Coalition is now crossing the bridge between mopping up operations and the beginnings of restoration. We must remember that we have also benefited in a significant way from this victory. We are now safer from weapons of mass destruction. We are now more secure from the tentacles of worldwide terrorism abetted by rogue states. We have won freedom as much as the Iraqi people have won their freedom.

Thus, today, Heroes Day becomes even more meaningful as a time to reminisce the sacrifices of our own soldiery and people during the past war. Celebrating the nobility of the soldiers gives us an opportunity to pay homage to the Coalition Forces as well as to the Iraqi soldiers who died in the conflict. We also join the Iraqi people in their struggle for freedom whose profound meaning we had always known throughout our history. This meaning of freedom is the stuff our heroes of Bataan and Capas were made of. Many fought shoulder to shoulder until death. Others perished out of hunger and disease.

In their memory and in honor of those among them who continued to live among us, let us all work together and harder than ever to win the battle against terrorism, to win the battle against poverty, to win the struggle for democracy, independence and freedom.

Thank you.

Source: Adamson University Library

Speech of President Arroyo during the Dubai Job Summit Conference and Luncheon

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Dubai Job Summit Conference and Luncheon

[Delivered at the Al Thuraya Ballroom, Renaissance Hotel, Dubai, United Arab Emirates, April 12, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Roque for your introduction and for organizing this very important conference.

Secretary Romulo and the other members of the Philippine Cabinet who are here with me today. Ambassador Cabactulan and the other officials of the Philippine government based here in the Middle East; Deputy Speaker Villarosa and the other members of Congress who are here with us today; Governor of the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao Zaldy Ampatuan and our other Muslim leaders who are here with us today in Dubai upon my invitation; employers; recruiters; and all those who are working for more employment for Filipinos here in the Middle East.

Thank you for coming to this conference. And thank you for your manifesto that provides 200,000 new jobs aside from those already in the roster of the POEA. Maraming salamat sa inyo.

The world economy continues to challenge developed and developing nations alike. So, our top officials not only the Cabinet members, legislators and Muslim leaders here but even the Vice President of the Philippines have traveled to Dubai to promote the interests of our expatriate workers here in the Middle East. Economies had been difficult in several countries but we thank the governments and the employers of the region, of the Gulf Region and Northern Africa that Philippine workers are still, Philippine workers are still in demand and that they are still the most sought-after workers in the region. So, we have come here to champion our workers before the governments of the Middle East and those firms that are hiring workers.

Central to keeping our economy moving is keeping our workers employed, both at home and abroad. The central mission of the Philippine government is the health, security and safety of our people. Good jobs and good wages will continue to help achieve these goals.

In these trying times for Filipino workers, both overseas and domestic workers in the Philippines in the export-oriented industries, the government will not sit idly and do nothing. For government, it is now payback time. The heroic efforts of our Overseas Filipino Workers whom we call our modern-day heroes will not go unreciprocated. So, we have a program of full reciprocity being carried out to help Overseas Filipino Workers in the host countries that are now being buffeted by the economic crisis.

Naturally, Secretary Roque and his department, the Department of Labor and Employment, is taking the lead in carrying out the government's payback program for the Overseas Filipino Workers. One of the components of this full government support in helping Overseas Filipino Workers who have been displaced is to find remunerative jobs.

And for OFWs who want to cross over to other countries or to other companies in the same country that are in need of their skill and talent, the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration — and Jennifer Manalili is here — is carrying out a marketing blitz to expand the market for our Overseas Filipino Workers, and part of that marketing blitz is our Job Summit today and tomorrow.

So far — correct me if I'm wrong, Nitoy? — but it seems a number of Filipino workers deployed thus far has continued double-digit growth. The market for Overseas Filipino Workers remains high and resilient. Of course there are some challenging spots, but overall while some expatriates have lost their jobs, employment overseas is holding steady because new jobs are being created at the same time like the 200,000 new jobs that you, the employers, recruitment agencies and hardworking government officials had been able to put together.

We are proud that our expatriate workers are increasingly skilled and diversified in their fields. And we are glad that bilateral discussions with many countries are opening up new employment opportunities abroad for Filipinos in a wide range of skilled sectors.

I thank you that your manifesto specified the country, the skills so that this can be provided to our Technical Education and Skills Development Authority which has been given a budget of billions of pesos as opposed to hundred millions in previous administrations. And we will tailor those scholarships that it is handling out to the specific skills that are spelled out in your manifesto.

Given the global environment, indeed, we must be prepared, which is why we are doing everything possible to continue to create jobs at home and abroad.

Aside from tailoring the skills training to your specific needs as spelled out in your manifesto, we are taking the licensure examinations of the Philippine Professional Regulation Commission to selected international locations where large expatriate worker populations are present, including Dubai I suppose, so that these workers who have finished their college degree in a specific skill but still have not taken the professional licensure examination can do so and therefore by getting that license they can prepare for higher paid and more secure employment. We are doing this, for instance, for the professions of Mechanical Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Architecture, Certified Public Accountants, Civil Engineering, and teachers.

So, let me once again reiterate, the government will not sit idly and do nothing for our modern-day heroes in this time of great world economic uncertainty. And I thank the employers, the recruitment agencies, and the hardworking Filipino bureaucrats who are here, for supporting us in identifying business and employment opportunities amidst the global challenges.

May you have a fruitful Job Summit. And thank you once again for being here and giving jobs to our Filipinos.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). PGMA's Speech during the Dubai Job Summit Conference and Luncheon. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104059/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=23452&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the meeting with the Filipino community in Dubai

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the meeting with the Filipino community in Dubai

[Delivered at the Auditorium, Fairmont Hotel, Dubai, United Arab Emirates, April 12, 2009]

Maraming salamat Secretary Romulo sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin. At ako naman ay ipapakilala ko rin yung aking mga kasamahan dito sa entablado natin.

Nandito ang ilang mga Cabinet members dahil kami ay nanggaling pa sa ASEAN Summit doon sa Thailand. Ang ating Secretary of Finance si Secretary Margarito Teves. Ang ginagampanang papel ni Secretary Teves doon sa ASEAN ay kasama ng ibang mga finance ministers ng ASEAN at ng Japan, China at saka Korea ay magbuo ng isang pondo para doon sa mga nagkakaproblema ang liquidity kaya ito ay isang inaasahan na masisimulaan sa darating na buwan.

Nandito naman ang kanyang talagang pakay hindi nga siya kasama doon sa Thailand, nagsalubong dito ay si Secretary Mariano Roque ng DOLE, at palagay ko karamihan sa inyo alam ninyo kung ano ang kanyang pakay dito sa Dubai; mamaya pag-uusapan natin yun. Nandito rin ang ating Secretary of Trade and Industry, si Secretary Peter Favila. At si Secretary Favila ay kasama ko rin dito sa Dubai at saka sa Abu Dhabi ilang buwang nakaraan dahil panahon na na kunin na ng Pilipinas ang bahagi ng mga investments na pwede manggaling dito sa Middle East, at eto nga ang ginagawa. Kanina kausap namin ang ilang mga investors, yung iba kasama ako, yung iba hindi ako kasama, si Peter lang. At bukas, ipa-follow up din yung mga pinag-usapan namin ng Emir ng Abu Dhabi na siya ang pangulo ng UAE tungkol sa mga inaalok nating investments sa Pilipinas.

Nandito rin si Secretary of Agrarian Reform Nasser Pangandaman. Ang isang dahilan kung bakit siya ay nandito ay dahil ito ay isang bansang Muslim, si Nasser ang Muslim na miyembro ng ating Gabinete. At kanina ay pinirmahan ko ang isang proklamasyon dahil kung Pasko at saka Easter at All Saint's Day na Christian Feast ay National Holiday sa ating bansa. Pinirmahan ko rin kanina na ang Eid'l Fitr at Eid'l Adha ay maging isang National Holiday din sa ating bansa.

Well, hindi ko na ipapakilala si Ambassador Cabactulan at saka si... at magpapasalamat ako kay Consul General Valeriano sa kanyang pag welcome kanina. Yung ating mga delegasyon mula sa Kongreso ay pinamumunuan ni Deputy Speaker Girlie Villaros, pati na rin si Congressman Danny Suarez na ginamit ang pagkakataon ng pagbiyahe kasama ko para pag-usapan kung papano makakabuo ng pondo para madagdagan ang computer literacy sa ating mga eskwelahan, di ba, Danny? Nandito rin si Congressman Munir Arbison ng second district of Sulu dahil inimbata ko nga yung mga legislators at governors ng Muslim community para nga matestigo yung pagpirma nung Eid'l Fitr/Eid'l Adha bilang National Holiday. Nandito naman mula sa Batangas si Congressman Dodo Mandanas, at malaki ang papel na ginaganap ni Congressman Mandanas dito sa ating biyahe. Kung matupad yung mga nilalakad ni Governor Mandanas para sa ating bansa ay meron tayong maikakasama sa Billion Dollar Club mula dito sa Middle East. Etong Billion Dollar Club ay yung mga namumuhunan sa Pilipinas ng at least one billion dollars gaya ng Texas Instruments, gaya ng Hanjin, gaya ng... at saka yung... — sino ba yung sa ano eh Tokyo Electric and Marubeni? Ano, Marubeni? — at ilan pa at magkakaroon ng isang palagay ko isang kasapi ng Middle East doon sa Billion Dollar Club kaya let us hope that Congressman Mandanas will be successful in nursing that investment.

Nandito rin mula naman sa Lanao del Sur si Congressman Pangalihan Balindong kasama sa ating Muslim Legislators delegation. Doon sa kabila naman ng Lanao del Sur nandito si Congresswoman Faysah Dumarpa at saka nakikita ko yung kanyang maybahay doon, si Mr. Salik Dumarpa. Nandito rin mula sa Leyte si Congressman Martin Romualdez na merong ipinapangakong ipakilala isang prospective investor sa akin mamayang gabi, okay. At karing kabalen kong Kapampangan tang Kapampangan keti ke Congressman Dong Gonzales. Kasama rin sa ating Muslim congressmen si Congressman Mujiv Hataman ng Party List, Anak Mindanao. Isa pang congressman mula sa Christian Mindanao naman, si Congressman Anton Lagdameo at ang governor ng Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao, si Governor Zaldy Ampatuan. Ang kanyang ama, ang governor ng Maguindanao, si Governor Andal Ampatuan; governor ng Lanao del Sur, si Governor Adiong; governor ng Basilan, si Governor Akbar; governor ng Tawi-Tawi, si Governor Sahali. Meron tayong mahiyaing secretary na ayaw umupo kasama ng mga kapwa Cabinet members, si Secretary Mely Poblador. At yung napakilala ko si Mr. Dumarpa na maybahay ni Congresswoman Dumarpa. Nandito rin si Mrs. Lovely Romulo at saka si Mrs. Favila. Ah, sino si Bert Romulo? Eh siya nga ang nagpakilala sa akin eh. Tapos yung nag-alaga ng aking mga bisita sa lunch kanina, yung mga media at saka press at saka photographer ng UAE, si Secretary Cerge Remonde. Hala, ayun! Oo nga no, si Cerge Remonde. Kasi you're in between two absent Cabinet members. Sige, okay.

Anyway, ako ay nasisiyahan na nandito kayo ngayon, Happy Easter to all of you! At ating kabalen ug naa pay mga ig agaw gikan sa Mindanao, maayong hapon kaninyong tanan. Oh! mga Bisaya sab gikan sa Cebu ug laing-laing probinsya sa Visayas. Ilokano, naimbag nga malem yo amin, Apo.

Naalala ko nung ako'y nagpunta dito sa Dubai in January of last year, yung St. Mary's Choir ang kumanta, ang galling noon, ang galing pa rin ngayon, congratulations! Noong araw ang problema natin ang lakas-lakas ng piso. Ngayon may problema, hindi yung kalakasan ng piso, yung problema ng buong mundo.

The world economy continues to challenge developed and developing nations alike. At ako ay nagpunta dito sa Dubai dahil alam ko abalang-abala kayo to promote the interests of our expatriate workers here. And I want to let you know, if last time we came, we were talking about how to alleviate the problems of a strong peso. Now, I'd like to tell you about a program of full reciprocity that is being carried out to help OFWs in host countries that are now being buffeted by the economic crisis.

Ang Department of Labor ang nangunguna sa pagtupad ng tinatawag nating payback program dahil kayong mga OFW ay sabi nila bagong bayani, we have to pay back to you what you have done for our country sa panahon na nanganganib sa at least sa feeling ninyong nanganganib ang mga trabaho dito.

Ang unang bahagi nitong reciprocity program ay ang Filipino Overseas Livelihood Support Fund sa halagang isang bilyong piso, ito ay galing sa OWWA at sa mga bangko ng pamahalaan. Ang mga OFW na nawawalan ng trabaho ay maaaring gamitin itong pondo sa bagong negosyo o dagdag na pag-aaral at training.

At yung kanina nung nag luncheon kami ng mga Dubai-based media ang kinekwento ay may ilang mga umuwi pero hindi nag register, hindi nagkaroon ng pagkakataon na mag register sa POLO na nawalaan sila ng trabaho. Kaya pagpunta sa Pilipinas at gusto i-access ito hinihingan ng certification, eh wala namang certification dahil ang ginawa na raw ng kanilang boss employer ay hiningi ang kanilang registration kaysa officialling ire-trench sila. So, sinabi ko kay Nitoy Roque, "Nitoy, gawin nating hassle-free itong mga... ang reglamento eh ipakita na lamang sa passport na nandito kayo sa Dubai ng ilang taon." Very obvious nagtrabaho kayo dito.

Ang pangalawang bahagi ng kumpletong suporta ng pamahalaan ay tulungan ang mga bumabalik na OFW na makahanap ng trabahong maganda ang kita. Kaya may libreng online information tungkol sa mga bakanteng trabaho sa Pilipinas at may Help Desk sa mga probinsiya para maibagay ang inyong kagalingan, training at karanasan sa mga trabahong available.

Ngunit sa alam ko karamihan sa mga OFW ang balak rin niyo ay hindi umuwi kung hindi maghanap ng ibang trabaho, maging sa ibang bansa o maging sa ibang kompaniya sa parehong bansa. Para doon naman, para yung gustong lumipat sa ibang bansa o ibang kompanyang nangangailangan ng inyong kagalingan at talento, ang Philippine Overseas Employment Administration ay gumagawa ng marketing blitz upang palawakin ang market para sa ating OFW.

Kaya kanina yung ginawang Job Summit bahagi yun doon sa ating marketing blitz. Alam ko na dito panay kwento ninyo, kwento ng mga nakikilala kong mga manggagawa dito naghihirap ang trabaho dito sa Dubai ngayon may ilang mga nawawalaan. At kwinto pa nga ng ating mga media community dito na may mga hindi nairereport dahil nga hinahatid na lamang. Kaya importante, gaya nang sabi ni Engineer Deliso, yung inyong pakikipag-ugnay sa isa't-isa at yung kabayanihan. Sa mga panahong ito kailangan ng volunteerism, at isang malaking volunteerism ay kung meron kayong alam na nawawalaan ng trabaho o nawalaan na ng trabaho at umuwi na nga na hindi nagkaroon ng pagkakataong ireport sa POLO sana ang Philippine community ang magrereport sa POLO para sa kanila. Ito ay isang malaking paglilingkod na maigagawa ninyo, kasi kung hindi nagreport sa POLO hindi malalaman. Pero kung maireport ninyo kahit na umuwi na sila, kahit ibigay niyo na, narinig niyo na, naitsismis sa inyo, ito ay malaking bagay para magtulungan sa isa't-isa.

But we are grateful from what we have seen in the Job Summit that Philippine workers are still the most sought-after workers here in the Middle East. Kanina nagbigay ng manifesto yung mga employers, recruitment agencies, at yung ating mga labor attaches at naka specify doon there are 200,000 new jobs available here in the Middle East.

Nanduon ang mga bansa. Nanduon ang mga kailangang skills. So, I hope that each one of you, if you have a problem or you have a friend who has a problem, can go to the POLO and to be able to help crossover to another job. And here we have also come to champion your cause before the governments and before those firms that are hiring workers in the Middle East.

Bukas nga bago umalis dito sa bansang ito ay ang inyong lingkod ay pupunta kasama ng ilang Cabinet members para makipag-ugnay nga sa Hari ng Abu Dhabi na siyang pangulo ng UAE. At doon din ay siyempre pag-uusapan kung paano matulungan ang Overseas Filipino Workers dito sa UAE.

May mga problema sa ilang lugar, mas alam ninyo yun kaysa sa akin. In fact, kailangan nga ipaalam ninyo sa ating POLO yung mga problema na dumadating sa inyong pansin. Ngunit habang may mga OFW na nawawalaan ng trabaho, nakita natin doon sa 200,000 may mga nalilikhang bagong trabaho naman, kaya sa kalahatan, ang trabaho sa ibayong dagat ay matatag pa rin.

Central to keeping our economy moving is keeping our workers employed at home and abroad. The central mission of the Philippine government is the health, security and safety of our people. Good jobs and good wages will continue to help achieve those goals.

But while we honor the value and contribution of our expatriate workers, we are very much focused on changing the opportunity paradigm. My vision is to help launch an economic revolution where one day soon going abroad will be a career choice and not the only option for our hardworking Filipino workers. This is exactly what our economic reform program is helping us to do.

Global engagement has been an essential component of what has kept the Philippines from getting pulled under the raging economic waves sweeping most countries. Abroad, our economy is increasingly diversified. Noong unang umupo ako sa pagkapangulo napakalaki ang ating inaasahan sa American market — ano noon, Peter, 28 percent? — ngayon, ang American market is mga 17 percent. So diversified na ang ating market at isang malaking bagong market natin nga ay ang Middle Eastern market. Halimbawa, yung ating mga bananas, hindi ba, pag maraming bananas dito pumupunta sa Middle East at iba pa. At yung halal, yung RFM Foods nagbebenta na ng halal dito sa Saudi Arabia at iba pang bahagi ng Middle East na nangangailangan ng halal. So, we have...

And overall, we have also... so, we have lessened reliance on one market alone. And we are relying now on many markets and that makes us more resilient. Kaya ang natamaan sa ating bansa ay yung ating mga exports to America, yung electronics natin. At kanina nga si Peter dahil maraming mga opening for engineers — kaya ang daming engineers dito, di ba? — andaming openings for engineers, yung mga electronics maraming mga engineers doon. So doon sa 200,000 jobs available, hahanapan ni Peter kung papano yung mga electronics workers natin na nasa Pilipinas ay siguro makakahanap ng mga pagkakataon doon.

But today, exports are a smaller component of our total production compared to when I started as President. Today, we are a very strong consumer-driven nation. We like to rely less and less on exports and more and more on our own domestic economy. Kaya yung ating GNP growth rate nung isang taon ay 6.0 percent pa rin kahit na may global economic crisis.

Sabi nga nila yung mga nagsu-survive sa crisis na ito ay yung mga malalaking populasyon na mataas ang consumption kaya China, India, Pilipinas kasama doon. Ang pinaka naghihirap ay yung mga maliliit na populasyon na masyadong umaasa sa exports, halimbawa, Singapore. Kaya yun ang isang mabuting nagawa natin, we've been able to strengthen our domestic demand. Hindi lamang sa pamamagitan ng household spending kundi na rin dahil sa mga buwis na itinaas natin ilang taon na ang nakaraan, although it was very unpopular ngayon may kakayahan ang gobyerno na gumastos sa imprastruktura, sa healthcare, sa education, sa training para sa ganun ay manatiling ang ang domestic demand.

Kailangang harapin natin kaagad ang maraming hamon upang manatiling malakas ang ating ekonomiya at paraan ng pamumuhay. Sa hanay ng pamahalaan, kahit na meron tayong dagdag na pondo mula sa mga buwis na ginawa nung ilang taong nakaraan, we must still live within our means at magpatakbo ng matipid at mabisang pamahalaan. This includes continued fiscal prudence and efforts to work towards a balanced budget. Yan ang malaking trabaho ni Secretary Gary Teves. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people, at isa dito ay yung training. Nuon doon sa mga nakaraang administrasyon, hundreds of millions ang budget for training. Ngayon sa ating administrasyon, billions ang budget for training. Sa hanay naman ng taong bayan — gaya nang sabi ko kanina, gaya nang sabi ni Engineer, ang inyong pangulo — ito ang panahon upang tayo'y magkaisa. Harapin ng lubusan ang ating pamilya at pamayanan, ang inyong pamayanan ay ang OFW community dito sa Dubai at saka sa UAE.

Dapat nating simulan ang isang bagong panahong nagtataguyod ng boluntarismo at ng diwa ng pagkakaisa. Dapat magsama-sama sa kilusan, sa ganitong kilusan ang pamahalaan, ang simbahan at ang mga samahang sibiko gaya ng inyong mga 60 organizations upang himukin ang bawat mamamayang Pilipino, maging nanduon sa Pilipinas o nandito sa UAE, na lumahok sa mga gawaing nagkakatatugma para sa kawanggawa.

Doon sa Pilipinas tinutuon natin ang mga inisyatiba sa gawaing tulad ng paglilinis ng kapaligiran, pagtatayo ng mga parks, nagtatanim ng puno, nagbibigay ng ginhawa sa mahihirap sa pamamagitan nang pamamahagi ng pagkain, pagtuturo ng pagbasa sa mga mangmang para bigyan sila ng dignidad. Dito palagay ko very obvious ang kailangang gawin ninyo. Magtulungan sa isa't-isa lalo na tulungan yung mga nawawalaan ng trabaho.

At yung sinabi ni Father kanina, hindi ko masyadong alam yung kasaysayan na yun, yung Pilipinong kapwang niloko ang Pilipino, at least ang kabutihan doon ay yung ibang mga Pilipino naman ay talagang tumulong ng lubusan doon sa mga naging biktima. So, ganun ang mga kailangang gawin natin bilang boluntarismo.

Sa mga panahong ito kung kailan dumadaan sa pagsubok ang buong mundo, angat ang pagiging mapagmahal at mapagkalinga ng Pilipino. Sabi nga nung ating mga reporters kanina na andaming mga Pilipina ay nililigawan ng mga... sabi ni Father ... at tinatanong bakit, bakit gustong-gusto niyo ang mga Pilipina? Kasi nga mapagkalinga, mapagmahal. At ito ay napakaimportante hindi lamang para makahanap ng kapwang intelihenteng asawa kung hindi na rin para magtulungan sa ating pamayanan ng mga Pilipino dito.

So, gamitin natin ito upang magpasalamat para sa mga biyayang tinatamasa natin at upang mamahagi din ng biyaya sa mga mas naghihirap sa atin. Kailangan tayong lahat ng ating bansa ngayon. Kailangan kayo ng ating bansa ngayon, hindi lamang doon sa remittances ninyo na patuloy pa rin, kundi na rin para mahanap yung mga kailangan nating tulungan na mga kababayan na narito dito sa UAE o kaya umuuwi. Kailangan kayo ng bansa upang magkaisa't sama-samang tumungo sa iisang direksyon.

Ang pagtugon sa hamong ito sa pag-aalay ng ating oras, kakayahan at kagamitan ay isang dakilang adhikain na dapat pagtulungang gampanan ng lahat. Kaya ako ay nagpapasalamat sa pagkakataong maglingkod sa inyo. At ako ay nagpapasalamat sa inyong malasakit sa inyong bansa at sa isa't-isa. Talagang dito sa Dubai inaasahan ko na kayo ay magtutulungan at tulungan ninyo ang pamahalaan na hanapin yung mga dapat tulungan.

Kaya ako ay nasisiyahan na nagkita tayong muli. Talagang pinili ni Nitoy Roque sa Dubai natin gagawin itong meeting kanina dahil alam ko na dito ay napakamalaking pag-aabala na nararamdaman ng Filipino community. Sana itong pagbisita ng inyong lingkod, ng ating kasamahan at yung Jobs Fair kanina ay makakatulong upang magkaroon ng konting ginhawa ang inyong mga panganib.

Kaya salamat sa inyong pagpunta ngayong hapon. Thank you for spending Easter Sunday afternoon with all of us. And may our world economy have an Easter of recovery very soon sa kinabubuti nating lahat.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). PGMA's Speech during the meeting with the Filipino Community in Dubai. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104110/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=23451&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening program of the 28th Asian and Oceanian Stock Exchanges Federation (AOSEF) General Assembly

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening program of the 28th Asian and Oceanian Stock Exchanges Federation (AOSEF) General Assembly

[Delivered at the Mactan Ballroom, Shangri-La's Mactan Island Resort & Spa, Lapu-Lapu City, Cebu, April 23, 2009]

Thank you very much, Secretary Favila for your introduction.

Chairman Vitug; Francis Lim, the president; our officials of the Philippine government who are here with us today; participants in this what we consider a very important general assembly; ladies and gentlemen:

To all the officials and members of the bourses that comprise the Asian and Oceanian Stock Exchange Federation, welcome to the Philippines!

And I understand that this is the first time a head of state welcomes you to a conference. So, I'm very glad and I hope that this shows you how important is the capital market to our country and to the region.

To the Philippine Stock Exchange, which is serving as host, congratulations!

This is a fitting homecoming for the Federation which was organized in the Philippines in 1990, in order to promote closer ties among the stock exchanges in the East Asian and Oceanian region.

It is a good idea that we seek to put together the economic and financial activities of Asia and Oceania. In fact, I have been advocating that we should push for an Asian Economic Community including the Middle East; Central, South and East Asia; Russia and Oceania, to maximize growth, trade, investment and financial stability in the Asian region, which is best suited to weather the global crisis and come out the strongest, compared with other regions.

The question isn't whether a larger Pan Regional body is necessary. The question is rather, "will we be stronger with a more united region?" And the answer should be an Asian Community, including Oceania, will strengthen our regional economy, our security and our prosperity.

During this time in the world, as we all know there are strains on alliances from the Middle East to the WTO, and we are facing as you all know, one of the most powerful economic downturns in modern history. So, it is essential that new, vital alliances be forged to keep the world stable and strong. Some sort of Asian Community would certainly be a bold step in that direction. And your Federation uniting the bourses of Asia, East Asia and Oceania, is a very good start.

As I said earlier, the Asian economies have been weathering the global crisis better than other regions, but that doesn't mean that there are no challenges that we are facing.

Indeed, today, the global challenges faced developed and developing nations alike. But, I am very glad that Asia is weathering it well. And in spite of the global economic downturn, like many countries in Asia, the Philippines is not standing still. We have weathered the worst of the global crisis this far. That doesn't mean we have not been affected. But we are holding our own. We remain cautiously optimistic that our resources and plans will allow us to manage our way through this difficult time. Because we "rebooted" our economy many years ago, and this has held us in good stead.

As a result of dramatic reforms in revenue collection and generation, as a result of fiscal controls and banking and financial reform, we hope to continue our economic growth this year.

I would like to congratulate the Philippine Stock Market because you registered a 16 percent gain from March 16 to April 13. Congratulations for that! (Applause)

And we cheer the rebound in foreign portfolio investment in the first quarter, with a P55-million net inflow compared to the P130-million net outflow in the first quarter of 2008. So, congratulations for that! And thank you for helping keep the Philippine balance of payments in surplus. That is the contribution that the Philippines Stock Market makes to our economy.

And you have contributed also to our economic and financial reforms. Through the coordinated efforts of the stock exchange, we have enacted landmark legislation that establishes a market-friendly and sustaining environment for capital market transactions and participants. We hope including those who belong to the different stock exchanges that are members of this Federation.

Among the significant laws passed in the Philippines is the Personal Equity and Retirement Law, the counterpart of the United States' 401-K system, that stimulates personal saving and investment for retirement through tax exemptions.

We also passed the Credit Information System Act to enhance the accuracy of credit information and to improve market efficiency and liquidity by reducing credit processing times and transaction costs and lowering default risk.

Indeed, we need all this legislation because we must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economy and way of life going strong. On the part of the government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes continued fiscal prudence and efforts to work towards a balanced budget. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people.

On the part of the people, now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. We must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit.

This should include the government, religious and civic groups and non-governmental organizations like the stock exchange harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities.

We should focus on such initiatives not related to our core activities as organizations such as cleaning up our environments, building parks, planting trees, bringing comfort to the poor through food banks, and bringing the dignity of literacy to adults who cannot read.

All the while, as members of the stock exchange, you must also simultaneously invest in making your own organization and your own industry efficient and competitive: investing to improve your methods of cooperation and synergy, investing to turn market challenges into market opportunities, investing to continue to play a role – a leading role in the recovery of the economies of the region, investing in the renewed prosperity of the capital markets that you collectively represent.

So, this is the reason why the President of the Philippines is here to welcome you personally to show you how important you are to the economies of our region in your role to strengthen the capital market and in your role as leading citizens of the different economies.

And so as you have this convention in our, what I hope you consider very beautiful Mactan Island of Cebu, I wish you the best wishes not only for the success of this conference, but also for the success of your business and civic endeavors in your respective economies.

Mabuhay! Welcome once again to the Philippines!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the opening program of the 28th Asian and Oceanian Stock Exchanges Federation (AOSEF) General Assembly. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412104016/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=23699&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 30th National Conference of Employers

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 30th National Conference of Employers

[Delivered at the Centennial Room, Manila Hotel, City of Manila, Metro Manila, April 29, 2009]

Thank you. (applause)

Thank you very much Mike, for your introduction and thank you to the other officers of ECOP for inviting me once again to be here and congratulations on your successful conference!

Don Emilio, thank you for hosting lunch today. And of course congratulations to Mr. Henry Sy and the Sy family. (applause) To Joe Ledesma's team in St. Luke's (applause) and to all our other awardees for being such model employers, and we need model employers in times like this. (applause) And to all of you and to all of the leaders and officers of ECOP led by Jun Ortiz Luis this year, thank you also through all the years that I have served as President, ECOP has always shown the sense of community and corporate social responsibility that I have asked from Philippine business. Salamat Jun, salamat sa iyong buong team. (applause)

You have always focused on what the synergy of government and the private sector can do to upgrade our human resources, to lower the cost of business, and to generate quality jobs for our growing labor force.

And today once again, I would like to thank you for the resolutions that you have made: Number one, to preserve whatever jobs and businesses you have. Number two, to minimize job losses and business dislocations. Number three, to build the capacity of the domestic economy to create jobs and businesses; and number four, to unite and support of reform and transformation in society. In your resolution, you have given several means by which you and we will attain all of these. So, thank you so much for that and congratulations! (applause)

The success of business and industry depends on how well on we get together, and it also depends of course on the excellence of our labor force, the genuine concern of the employers for the well-being of their workers as well as their companies — and this what our awardees exemplify — and government's sound policies that serve as the framework for continuous growth.

In these trying economic times for the global economy, we must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economy and way of life going strong. On the part of government, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes continued fiscal prudence and efforts to work towards a balanced budget. All the while, we must also simultaneously invest in key programs for our people. For instance, food on the table, education for all, skills training, and good health for everyone.

And at this special time in world economic history, we are focused on creating jobs and keeping existing ones to prevent the global economic slump from becoming a Philippine crisis. Our priorities are on activities that can create the most number of jobs while allowing us to improve our people's lives.

As I said earlier in government, we are undertaking massive belt-tightening in order to fund among other things the Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program or CLEEP.

CLEEP is area-specific. Secretary Nitoy Roque who helped in choosing our outstanding employers today — but who is not here because his son is graduating, isn't it? — has identified with your help the names of the employees of the workers who lost their jobs because of the global crisis. And we have farmed out those names by area to different cabinet members, and the different cabinet members are supposed to supervise the CLEEP in their respective areas. Among other things, to spur emergency jobs in specific sectors that are best suited to each region's resources and potential for development. A lot of you are in industry, a lot of industries in CALABARZON and a lot of our problems are in CALABARZON, a lot of which are in Laguna.

So, Secretary Peter Favila is the one handling that together with you — Oh, I see Mr. Mamon, is the chief in Laguna — but I think Enchanted Kingdon is still doing well, right? Congratulations!

But I am really very much concerned over the fate of our over 50,000 local workers, I guess excluding... that doesn't include the SM workers because you're doing well with the good domestic consumption. (applause) This 50,000 local workers are mainly from industrial parks and export-oriented companies. And these are the 50,000 domestic workers in those export-oriented companies who have been sidelined from work by the global crisis.

Because of our special concern for them the Export Development Council chaired by Secretary Peter Favila, who is not here now because he's waiting for me in my next appointment, which is to meet with the exporters of the Philippines. Well, that Council — but some of you are members here — has submitted the "bill of materials" for the one billion-peso export support fund. I hope that's part of Bobby Amores' papers. (applause)

And I have instructed Secretary Favila to work with the Presidential Management Staff, the Department of Finance and the Department of Budget to facilitate the final evaluation of the various proposals with the intent of releasing the fund soonest. And I hope that that will help our export sector. (applause)

But it's not only the government, it's not only our employers as employers, it's also the people as people that need to work altogether. On the part of the people, now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. We must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. And as I said, this should include the government, that's why we're working on CLEEP. It should include the religious sector, it should include civic groups, it should include non-government organizations like ECOP harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities.

I remember visiting, for instance, Yazaki Torres where — 'coz I saw Toti Torres here — where your people, your employees were doing volunteer activities. And that is what a lot of the firms can be doing, focusing on such initiatives not part of your core activities like cleaning up our environment, building parks, planting trees, giving comfort to the poor through food banks, and bringing the dignity of literacy to adults who cannot read.

Yes I know, it is a great challenge because you're trying to keep your business together. You're trying to keep your workers within the fold. And on top of that, we are asking you and your workers to do volunteer work. Indeed, these are trying times, but during this trying times, the Filipino spirit and commitment to caring should prompt each one of us to count our blessings.

For instance, those companies that had not yet had to retrench, we must count our blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate. Our nation needs us all pulling in the same direction. Volunteering time, skill and resources is a noble undertaking we should all take seriously.

I remember, for instance, when I visited Dole, a lot of your wives... of the executives do a lot of volunteer work, and they have organized the wives of those who are working there. So, there's so much that can be done. And I know it's a bigger challenge during this times but that's why we're specifically making a call to continue to do that as well as appreciating your resolve to continue to fight hard to keep the jobs that you have been giving and to create new ones as much as possible.

We conducted a number of worker-employer consultations with a view to integrating the initiatives of you the private sector with the coping strategies of labor. ECOP has been a strong presence in these fora whether or not you were invited as ECOP because you hold so many hats, sometimes you're there but you were invited as PCCI or something else. But ECOP has always been a strong presence. And I thank you for that whether or not you have a formal invitation as ECOP. (applause)

And you know where you have been as a result of our consultations, we have followed a lot of your recommendations. For instance, we have doubled TESDA's training budget this year to reach out to more members of the workforce, including displaced domestic and overseas workers. In this connection, I thank the many corporations, especially the early participants who partnered with TESDA in training workers and allowing their own workers to participate in internally generated work sharing and training arrangements.

And I would like to reiterate, for those of you who don't want to let your workers go, who are willing to make them... to keep them and then make them work full time again when times get better — and I hope that times are beginning to get better because some orders are coming back — I'd like to remind you that the DOLE is giving you the privilege of paying only half of the minimum wage if your workers will enter our training program on our scholarship. So the half of the minimum wage that you are giving them is to help their transportation and their accommodations while they are training.

And we would like you to do the curriculum for the training so that when things get better, and I said I hope we have bottomed out already in the world, their workers will even be more productive than they were before the global crisis.

In Yazaki Torres where we visited last week, Toti is doing that. He's keeping some of the workers even if they're not working, paying them 25 percent because he's paying about double the minimum wage, so that's about half the minimum wage, and then TESDA can train them at the expense of TESDA not at your expense. Let's do that to be able to keep our workers on your payrolls and getting better for the recovery.

I was talking about SM keeping its market, and I think St. Luke's is probably keeping its market and many companies are keeping their market a lot of these are keeping their markets and their employment because of our strong domestic demand. And this is not unique to the Philippines. China, India and Indonesia demonstrate that large populations can reasonably sustain business through the sheer number of domestic consumers. So while we do not have a population as large as theirs, our numbers so far seem to be able to support local industries during these challenging times. And I point this out because yesterday I was listening to the sermon of Cardinal Vidal against the Reproductive Health Bill because indeed during these times it is the countries with large populations with the reasonably good per capita income like the Philippines that are able to resist the worst effects of the global crisis.

I thank you all for trying as much as possible to keep our workers so that the number of displaced workers is very finite. Nitoy Roque can make a list and give it around to the cabinet members. Imagine all those other countries where the unemployment is down by two million. Oh, you cannot make a list that way and you cannot give it to cabinet members to take care of each subset of the list. But I thank ECOP because I think the list would have been much longer or it might have become infinite if you were not there to help us to keep the jobs even if you are making your own sacrifice.

I thank ECOP for the constant support and trust that you have given me not only during this time when you are keeping many workers even if you don't specifically need them now but on other matters of policy. But during this time, I thank not only ECOP, I thank labor — and we have our labor leaders here — for the industrial peace we have enjoyed over the years. Salamat sa inyo. (applause)

Palagay ko dahil napakabait ang ating labor, may malasakit, mas nagaganahan yung mga employers na tumulong at 'wag mag lay off kahit na mahirap ang panahon. And of course, we have the government agencies to help cement the strong bond of the tripartite.

And our most important message is that: we must and we will sustain this partnership as we work together to hasten our country's economic rebound. And that is our response to the global crisis: staying together, pulling together, nagkakaisa sa ating kapatiran.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 30th National Conference of Employers. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412103927/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=24880&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 19th Annual Meeting and Conference of the Inter-Pacific Bar Association (IPBA)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 19th Annual Meeting and Conference of the Inter-Pacific Bar Association (IPBA)

[Delivered at the Plenary Hall, PICC, Pasay City, April 30, 2009]

Thank you. (applause)

Thank you Secretary Gonzalez for your introduction.

Incoming President, Atty. Rafael Morales of the Philippines; incumbent President Libby; other officials of the Inter-Pacific Bar Association. First of all, Atty. Morales, the new president of IPBA, congratulations! (applause) And to all our delegates from the Pacific region, welcome to the Philippines!

I'm glad that you have chosen for your conference's theme, "Legal Practice: Coping with Diversity and Change." Indeed, a timely choice. I was told that your conference sessions will cover the global credit crisis, law firm continuity, and other major risk issues.

They say that a lawyer's practice, unlike other livelihoods, is recession-proof. In good times when the economy is booming, you need a lawyer to set up a company, do the paperwork to obtain the financing, draft employment contracts. And when things turn bad, the same lawyer can help you close the company, restructure the debt and retrench workers.

But I understand that in these particular global times of today, especially tough times, even lawyers are feeling the crunch as well. That well-established law firms are downsizing offices around the world; that lay-offs are tracking the reported downturn in revenues of law firms.

Timely therefore to talk about continuity. We must tackle many challenges at once to keep our economies and way of life going strong. On the part of the Philippine government, for instance, we must live within our means and run a lean, efficient government. This includes fiscal prudence and efforts to work towards a balanced budget. All the while, simultaneously investing in key programs for our people. And that is a challenge indeed.

But also we should be ready to take full advantage of a rebound, if it happens soon. According to Ben Bernanke of the U.S. Fed, "There are signs the sharp decline in the U.S. economy is slowing, indicating a first step toward recovery."

The Japanese Prime Minister refers to "a few glimmers of hope."

China's stimulus package is working. The pick up in China will "strongly" support growth in the rest of Asia by raising demand for commodities and products, says the World Bank. IMF Managing Director Dominique Strauss-Kahn says, "Free fall may be abating." It will probably have much more to go before these bits of good news we are hearing really become a positive trend, but just as bad news should not take us by surprise, recovery should also be prepared for. And I think the law profession should be part of those preparing for that.

So in the Philippines, as we implement a fiscal stimulus package to create and keep jobs, we also proceed with the groundwork to enhance our business environment, and that includes the regulatory framework. There is the new program of Secretary Gonzalez in the Department of Justice granting instant visas to foreign business locators who will employ at least a hundred local people. There is the accelerated anti-smuggling and anti-tax evasion programs being run by the Department of Finance so that legitimate businessmen will not feel the challenges from unfair competition. And there is the tight price watching by the Department of Trade and Industry.

And yesterday, I signed a law increasing government insurance coverage on individual bank deposits.

On your part, as lawyers, because of your expertise and the ethics of your profession, you're in a unique position to help solve part of the crisis and that is the crisis of pinpointing responsibility. If we recall, how did this crisis begin? Well, first of all, there was the combination of the high prices of food and oil early last year and then there was the subprime credit crisis. Well, how did the subprime credit crisis happen? Because there was very little monitoring of subprime credit activities. So, the hot money moved from subprime to commodities. Prices of oil and rice went up some more and the credit crunch in the subprime deepened and it spread to even the A-rated corporations. And when that happened then everything broke loose. So a lot of it had to do with accountability, pinpointing responsibility.

And as lawyers, you can be the one to teach that lesson to your clients. You can seek to ensure that from now on if they have not done so, your clients comply, not just with the letter but also with a spirit of the law; because we have seen how not doing that can result in a global crisis. So, instead of trying to bend the law to suit your client's interests, now as your contribution to recovery and sustained recovery we count on you to creatively recast the interests of your clients to conform to the law.

As lawyers, you indeed have the responsibility to lead a crusade for selflessness and especially for respect for the rule of law. Whether you are a managing partner of a big corporate law firm, or a single practitioner in your hometown, a lawyer is bound by your moral obligation to help people, not only achieve their objectives, but to achieve them responsibly. Because you're the ones who can advise them on what the law expects of them.

And on your part not just as lawyers but as people, and on the part of your clients as people, now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. Over and above your work as lawyers, we must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. This should include the government, religious, civic groups and non-government organizations like the bar associations, harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities.

In other words, aside from focusing on your work which is so crucial for bringing the world back to recovery, we should focus on non-core activities, non-core initiatives like cleaning up our environment, building parks, planting trees, bringing comfort to the poor through food banks, bringing the dignity of literacy to adults who cannot read.

And I am certain that the Inter-Pacific Bar Association is one organization that has the capability to take this ethic to heart.

Once again, to Atty. Morales, we are proud to have you a Filipino head the Inter-Pacific Bar Association. Congratulations on your take over in two days from now! (Applause)

And to the delegates, may you all thrive in your profession, not just for the luster or the wealth that your profession brings, but for the opportunity it gives to each one of you to make a difference in our people's lives especially now that there is a great change happening in the world, and especially because as Inter-Pacific, you do deal with diversity.

Good luck to all of you! And may you have more power as you cope with diversity and change!

Mabuhay to all of you! Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 19th Annual Meeting and Conference of the Inter-Pacific Bar Association (IPBA). Retrieved

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412103202/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=24939&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) Change of Command Ceremony

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) Change of Command Ceremony

[Delivered at the GHQ Grandstand, Camp Aguinaldo, Quezon City, May 1, 2009]

Thank you, Secretary Teodoro.

Troop Commander, give ‘Tikas pahinga.’

General Ibrado, our new Chief of Staff; General Yano, our recently retired Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces; other officers of the Armed Forces of the Philippines; members of the Diplomatic Corps; members of the civilian officialdom; Bishop Tumulac; our other guests; the great Filipino Soldier:

Araw-araw nitong taon ay Labor Day. Mula noong nagkaroon ng recession ang Amerika at nagkaroon ng krisis sa ekonomiya ng buong mundo, araw-araw binubuhos natin ang ating kakayahan para magsagip at maglikha ng trabaho para sa manggagawang Pilipino.

So today, May the 1st is the occasion for the nation to celebrate the resiliency of our economy that has so far protected us from the worst of the global recession and allowed us so far to continue to grow. The skills and talents of our workers at home and abroad are confounding the gloomy forecast of pessimists, as they continue to seek out ever more jobs. And may I say at this time that among the jobs available to the great Filipino worker are jobs in the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

We salute our great Filipino worker for remitting more funds to our shores, for sustaining the hopes of our country and the dreams of their families. Yes, we honor the Filipino worker today.

A grateful government pledges its unwavering support to the great Filipino worker and the bright future that our workers are building for our country.

Today, we also honor a particular sector of the working class — the great Filipino soldier. As General Yano calls it, calls him or her, the ‘Kawal Pilipino’ — the men and women of the Armed Forces of the Philippines who continuously demonstrate their devotion to duty and to our Constitution. Our military men and women are good, upstanding and loyal patriots, fighting to protect our country everyday.

We honor the great Filipino soldier for being ready to make the supreme sacrifice in war, as well as for exemplifying the spirit of sacrifice that uplifts people in times of needs and succor. In honor of the great Filipino soldier, our administration has invested heavily in new and better equipment, more training, more cooperation with our allies to professionalize our military. We have invested in higher pay, more housing, better healthcare, better force protection.

So it is in this special regard that on top of his many achievements enumerated in the citation on the legion of honor, enumerated in the invocation of Bishop Tumulac, enumerated in his own tour-of-duty report, enumerated in the tributes paid by his successor. In addition to all this, I applaud our recently retired General Alexander Yano because as fiercely as he fought the enemies of the State, he worked just as passionately to secure the well-being of the ordinary soldier and to give former rebels a chance, a second chance to live in peace, a second chance to be part of the great Filipino workforce.

To modernize and strengthen his revered Armed Forces of the Philippines, Alex Yano focused on improving the life of the ordinary soldier. He was the one who proposed to me the issuance of sleeping bags and prepaid cellular cards to the soldiers fighting in the wilderness of Lanao and Cotabato. These benefits, funded by the value-added tax were soon followed by scholarships for soldiers' children and financial assistance for parents of military men, the senior citizens, parents of the military men assigned to the field.

More benefits were provided during the tenure of General Yano not only to the soldiers fighting in Mindanao, but also to every man and woman in the Armed Forces of the Philippines. With his frequent reminders, the Department of Health continued the rehabilitation of military hospitals. The housing program for soldiers proceeded with the highest priority given to families of soldiers killed or severely wounded in action.

As the only son of Mindanao so far to be named Chief of Staff, General Yano applied his knowledge of the intricacies of the conflict in Mindanao and went all out in support of the peace process through the various developmental and cultural integration programs, as well as through the efforts and successes of the fighting kawal Pilipino.

And now General Yano will continue to pursue peace in Mindanao as our next Ambassador to Brunei Darussalam. (Applause) General Yano, if he were to retire on his birthday, would not be able to reach the confirmation of the Commission on Appointments because that would have happened after the Congress adjourns sine die. Therefore, upon recommendation of the Foreign Affairs Secretary, his retirement from the military was advanced by a few weeks in order to have sufficient time for his confirmation, hopefully, before Congress adjourns in early June. He has had smooth-sailing in previous confirmations in the Commission on Appointments. And I hope this one will be just as smooth and so that soon enough, we will be able to congratulate Alex as the next ambassador to Brunei Darussalam. (Applause)

Once again Alex, congratulations and thank you for all that you have done in the Armed Forces and for the great Filipino soldier.

Now we welcome the former Commanding General of the Philippine Army, Victor Ibrado, as our new Chief of Staff. This member of PMA Class of 1976 and holder of a Master's degree in Public Administration is one of the most bemedalled of our soldiers.

There is one important thing going for our new Chief of Staff — the respect and admiration of the ordinary Filipino soldier. From the lowest ranks to the top brass, our soldiers whom I consulted have all given their vote of confidence to General Ibrado, who is well-known for his fairness and collegial style of decision-making as well as his excellent commanding skills in the field. (Applause)

I expect General Ibrado to build on the gains of his predecessors, not only on the military front, and we have heard his no-nonsense declarations of what he intends to do on the military front. But I also expect him to build on the work of his predecessors especially with regard to the soldiers' welfare. I hereby instruct General Ibrado, along with the heads of civilian agencies, to do the following:

First, implement the shuttle service for government employees. Well, I know the soldiers have their shuttle service, but the civilian employees in the Armed Forces, in the Defense Department, and the other departments of the Philippine government should likewise have a similar service.

Second, financial subsidy and other needed support to make the Botika ng Bayan more accessible to government employees, including our soldiers in the various military camps.

Third, more scholarships for the children and siblings of government employees, including those of our soldiers.

And fourth, implementation of PX markets and provision of seed fund so that we can have them all over not only in the military camps but in the various large agency offices.

I count on General Ibrado to do this within the Armed Forces not only using the budget of the Armed Forces but also to harness the Filipino spirit and commitment to caring to prompt those who benefit from peace and security provided by the Armed Forces; for instance, the business community and the NGOs, many of which have been enumerated by General Yano. For all of them, I count on General Ibrado to inspire and to count their blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate among our ordinary Filipino soldiers.

Bong Ibrado, you have talked about the great challenges that faced you, but with your background, with your character, with the support of the great Filipino soldier, with the support of all the civilians who have learned to care for and to take care of our Filipino soldiers, I have faith that you can hurdle all the challenges of the times and in your unique way make a difference in our shared goals of peace and prosperity.

Once again, to you Bong, congratulations and best wishes! To you, Alex, congratulations and may you have the same success in the next stage of your career.

At sa inyo, ang magiting na manggagawang Pilipino, kawal Pilipino, maraming salamat.

Congratulations to all of you!

Thank you. (Applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) Change of Command Ceremony. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412103149/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=24940&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Butil Farmers' Day and thanksgiving of Butil Partylist Representative
Agapito Guanlao
Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Butil Farmers' Day and thanksgiving of Butil Partylist Representative Agapito Guanlao

[Delivered at the Main Exhibit Hall, Hilaga (Paskuhan Village), Brgy. Dolores, City of San Fernando, Pampanga,
May 8, 2009]

Dacal a salamat cabalen at mayap a oras keng kekatang bayung halál a sectoral representative na ning BUTIL, Congressman Agapito Guanlao. Congratulations! (applause)

Kekatang congressmen, congressman and congresswoman who are here today y Congressman Dong Gonzales (applause) ning distritu keti and Congresswoman Nelly Chavez; (applause) and of course ing kekatang host city mayor, Mayor Oca Rodriguez; (applause) karing ali-aliwang opisyaes ning Pampanga atyu keti, dening Board members, councilors, Mayor Flores y Chairwoman Zeny Ducut and our Undersecretary of Agriculture Jess Paras, capampangan ya naman, (applause) capampangan oneng ing pengari na megsettle keng Cagayan de Oro oneng capampangan karin karas keng Cagayan de Oro; and of course kekatang Presidenti na ning BUTIL keti king Pampanga, y Presidenti Galang; (applause) ampo karing ali-aliwang ortelano, leaders da ding ortelano keti king Pampanga, pati na rin sa Nueva Ecija, pati na rin sa Bulacan, atlong probinsya, are all here today. Congratulations, Happy Farmers' Month! (applause)

Dahil ang month of May, gaya nang sabi sa akin ni Lito, is Farmers' Month pero wala talagang Farmer's Day kaya isa sa mga initiatives ni Congressman Guanlao ay magkaroon ng Farmers' Day aside from Farmers' Month — May 15 ang fiesta ni San Isidro Labrador. Kaya kagaya nung Women's Day, atin tang Women's Month king Marso, atin tang Women's day king March 8; atin tang Farmer's Month king Mayo, ala tang metung a Farmer's Day. So, iya ing metung a initiative ning kekatang bayung Congressman. Congratulations, Lito! (applause)

At masaya ku at aisip yung gawan ing okasyong iti keti king Pampanga a metung karing pekamaragul a producer ning pamangan keti king bansa. Although siyempre kinikilala natin ang Nueva Ecija ngayon, ang number one agricultural province dahil ang Pampanga ay malaki na ang industrialization at bilang service center at bilang hub ng yung Clark-Subic. Ganun din ang Bulacan malaki na rin ang industrialization sa Bulacan kaya bagamat ganun malaki pa rin ang produksyon ng Pampanga at Bulacan although number one na ang Nueva Ecija.

Maulaga ya king kasaysayan da ding ortelanong Pilipino ing kekatamung probinsiya. Ketu ya mibait ing kilusang pang-masa, na ing mumuna nang layun iya pin ing mabawas ing pamang-api da ring makibanding gabun karing ortelano. Ketu ya rin king Pampanga menibat kalupa ning sinabi nang Congresswoman Chavez ing ginawang takbang king reporma queng gabun, y Presidente Diosdado Macapagal at sinakripisya na ing suporta da ding keying kaluguran a makibandi karing mangaragul a gabun pauli na ning buri nang mitugunan agad ing kasakitan da ding ortelano pauli ning tenancy. So keng administrasyon ning pengari ku, natanggal yung share tenancy para sa ganun ang ani ng magsasaka ay sa kanya pupunta at kung hindi kanya yung lupa babayad na lang siya ng rent kagaya ng nagbabayad ka ng rent sa iyong apartment. Yun ang isang programa tapos yung pangalawang programa is land to the tiller.

Manalig ku na ing manimuna ya ing BUTIL ban mahikayat la ding representante a ipasa da ne ing batás na extension ning Agrarian Reform bayu sana mag-adjourn king Hunyo ing kongreso. (applause)

At marami na rin gaya nang sinabi ni Congresswoman Nelly Chavez at di ko na uulit yung mga sinabi niya pero nakita natin marami na rin yung programang tinatag natin para tumaas ang kita ng mga magsasaka at patuloy ang pagpalakas nitong programang ito. Yung pinakatampok nating programa para sa agricultural sector ay yung FIELDS. Alam niyo lahat kung ano yung FIELDS kung saan pinapalakas natin at pinapalawak yung mga imprastrakturang pakikinabangan ng mga magsasaka. At sa ilalim din ng FIELDS nagbibigay ang gobyerno ng tulong pati subsidy para maging mas kaya ang presyo ng kagamitan kagaya ng binhi, pataba, mga driers. Pero ang ating bagong paksa ay higit sa sikapin magkaron ng subsidy sa mga inputs itaas na lang ang kita ng magsasaka para makaya yung inputs.

Kaya nung nakaraang taon ay pinataas natin ang presyo ng pagbili ng palay at dinami natin. Kung nung araw 33,000 metric tons lang, hindi ba? ang binibili ng 17 pesos, ngayon ay one million metric tons na. Kaya dumami ang magsasaka na pwedeng magbenta sa pamahalaan ng kanilang palay sa 17 pesos na pinakamagandang presyo sa ating kasaysayan. (applause)

Metung halimbawa ning saup ning gubyerno quing agrikultura, yapin naman ing irigayson o letrang “I” ning programang FIELDS. Sa loob nitong programang ito, sa loob ng walong taon ng aking pagkapresidente ilang hundreds of thousands of hectares ang ginawa natin Jess, di ba? na dating walang tubig kaya hindi mataniman. Inayos muli, binigyan muli ng patubig sa programang rehabilitation and restoration, kasi sabi nila mula nung tinayo yung mga irrigation system ay wala nang nagre-rehabilitate rinehabilitate natin, prinayoritize natin yun kaya maraming libong daang ektarya ay tinataniman na muli.

So agyang atin tang industrialization keti king Pampanga pati na rin sa Bulacan dahil sa irigasyon ay tuloy pa rin na dumadami ang ektarya para sa ating pagtatanim. At lalo na dito sa Luzon isa sa pinakamalaking nagtatanim o nagbibigay ng bigas para sa ating bansa tuloy-tuloy yung proyekto ng irigasyon at inaayos natin. Ang ating priority ayusin yung mga nasirang irigasyon dahil umaabot sa halos isang milyong ektarya yun. At pangalawa naman yung mga wala pang irigasyon ay tulungan natin magkaroon ng mga small scale communal irrigation system.

Para king pataba, preyoridad tamu ing macasaup caring ortilano a magproduce ning organic fertilizer mula sa composting ng solid waste, ito ay makakatulong sa mga magsasaka at makakatulong din kontra sa climate change. Dahil ang climate change ang pinanggagalingan ng masamang panahon parati bagyo imbes na ordinaryong ulan, bagyo, madalas, malakas, mahirap para sa magsasaka. Kaya kailangan tumulong tayo na maiwasan or tumagal pa ang pagdating ng climate change.

Ing number one cause na ning global warming yung paggamit ng gasolina kaya naghahanap tayo ng mga bagong panggagalingan ng ating fuel at marami dito ay yung biomass yung tinatanim ng mga magsasaka na gagawing fuel kaya malaki ang magagawa ng magsasaka para maiwas ang climate change. At pangadwa, pangalawang pinanggagalingan ng global warming ay yung methane na nanggagaling sa solid waste kaya dapat iwasan natin yun. Dapat zero waste tayo. Yung solid waste natin ay dapat hahatiin natin, gawin yung recyclable bago ire-recycle, yung biodegradable ay gawin nating fertilizer. So yun ang kailangan, yun ang pwedeng magawa ng ating mga magsasaka. Kaya bilang... tutal marami na akong nabigay sa pamamagitan ni Congresswoman Chavez bilang buena mano ni Congressman Pitong Guanlao ay para yung mga magsasaka ng keti king Pampanga, Nueva Ecija at Bulacan para makatulong kayo sa programang solid waste management na gawin niyo yung solid waste na makukuha ninyo sa paligid ninyong mga taniman at gawing fertilizer, organic fertilizer. Alam niyo yung multi... sabi ng DENR yung multi... yung Materials Recovery Facility na nag... yung solid waste ay ginagawang fertilizer at ginagawang recyclable materials yung mga recyclable.

Depende kung gaano kalaki it can be worth 200,000 pesos or it can be worth two million pesos kaya masanting a proyekto ita. Kaya para makatulong si Pitong sa maraming mga magsasaka na tumulong din sa kanyang mahalal bibigyan ko siya ngayon ng 10 million pesos para — (applause) ang peya BUTIL, ayan, okay — para sa solid... ang peya BUTIL ali ya Congressman Guanlao a peya BUTIL para king proyekto tamung conversion of solid waste into organic fertilizer para karing ali-aliwang gabun ding kekatang ortilano kasingit ni naing oras ning pamangilus, umpisan tana iti ngeni ing Climate Change Mitigation program karing ortelano ning BUTIL keti king Pampanga at dito sa Nueva Ecija at saka Bulacan.

Mabuhay ang BUTIL! (applause)

Congratulations, Pitong! at Happy, Happy Farmers’ Month sa ating lahat! Dacal pung salamat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Butil Farmers' Day and thanksgiving of Butil Partylist Representative Agapito Guanlao. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412103109/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=24985&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Regional Development Committee's One Visayas Initiative on Climate Change Summit and signing of R.A. 9593

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Regional Development Committee's One Visayas Initiative on Climate Change Summit and signing of R.A. 9593 or the Tourism Act of 2009

[Delivered at the Dubhe Ballroom, Imperial Palace Waterpark Resort & Spa, Lapu-Lapu City, Cebu, May 12, 2009]

Maraming salamat Secretary Atienza sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

To our members of the Senate, Senator Zubiri the majority leader and Dick Gordon the sponsor and author of the Tourism Law, the Tourism Act; to our several members of Congress who are here today either because they are from Cebu or because they are authors and sponsors of the Tourism Act — but of course all the congressmen of Cebu are authors of the Tourism Act — members of the Cabinet; chairpersons of the Regional Development Councils and the other members of the councils; the governors; city mayors; municipal mayors; other officials of the whole Visayas who are here today. To all of you, this is a wonderful day.

First to the authors, sponsors and co-authors of the Tourism Law, and the members of the tourism industry who are here today with us, congratulations! (applause)

To the local government officials in Regions VI, VII and VIII, for putting up this One Visayas Initiative, and to our NGO leaders Bebet, Tony and Father Jet and the other leaders who are here today, congratulations! (applause) for getting this very important summit together to act on an issue that threatens the well-being of our nation and our people, and an issue that if we address it properly will enhance the attractiveness of Central Philippines as a tourism destination. Congratulations also to you! (applause) That's why I thought of putting the two events together because they are so closely link to each other. And it's timely to have this event today not only because the tourism industry has been waiting for this law for so many years now but also because climate change is here. Human activity has caused it. Fossil fuels. Land use. Solid waste.

Although we can tell ourselves and be proud that with our total gas emissions constituting less than one percent of the total emissions from the whole world, the Philippines is not a climate maker, but we are a climate taker. Even if we say we contribute less than one percent to climate change, yet we suffer as much or maybe even more than climate makers because we are an archipelago. If climate change were to reach its tipping point Florida may lose some coastline, but we may lose entire islands. Weather patterns are changing. You in the Visayas only know too well how super typhoons like Frank killed hundreds of our countrymen and wrought damage worth hundreds of millions of pesos on public and private property. Because of climate change and the many things that happen that are not as predictable as they use to be.

Planning and implementation will be increasingly difficult. That is why this summit is so important because you have come up with your output on what you should do because of climate change and that becomes a blueprint moving forward even as planning and implementation become more difficult. I think we need not overstress, it must have been said yesterday over and over again, that climate change is bad for the Philippine economy. And it will be especially bad for the Visayan economy whose future is eco-tourism. So, we do not have much time. But we should find comfort in the thought that solutions exist today.

Humanity started climate change. It is humanity that can stop climate change. And the sooner we fix it the cheaper it will be. So, we have to work together. The framework to drive climate change effectively is largely present in the architecture of the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change and its Kyoto Protocol of 1997. That framework, the Kyoto Protocol and the Bali Plan of Action of 2007 have pointed out two strategies that must be simultaneously activated by all countries in response to climate change. The first is adaptation, where we apply strategies to cope with the effects of climate change as they hit us; or even before they do and the second is mitigation to significantly reduce greenhouse gases that we release.

Here in our country our reforestation efforts to have more trees absorb more carbon dioxide; our early warning systems, including coordinated action for rescue and rehabilitation in times of floods and other climate change-related activities; and even our training in alternative livelihood activities for people who use to earn their living from now degraded forests and mangrove areas — all these are examples of adaptation.

We have likewise been involved in mitigation, and they are reflected in our laws: the Clean Air Act, the Solid Waste Management Act — which I was honored to have signed as my very first law when I became President in 2001— and the Clean Water Act. The Tourism Act today will likewise contribute to our efforts to reduce the effects of climate change by giving more teeth to our tourism jobs creation policy, which has a very strong environmental protection component. I was asking the various authors what they considered so important in the law and their contribution to it.

We have here two Deputy Speakers, Girlie Villarosa and Raul de Mar of Cebu. While riding in the plane with Raul Del Mar I asked Raul, “what do you think was your most important contribution?” — because Raul authored one of the three bills in the House that eventually became the Tourism Act. I asked Raul, “what do you feel was your most important contribution?” And he said that it was strengthening the Department of Tourism in implementing the strategies — that was his most important contribution. And then I asked Dick Gordon, who was my Secretary of Tourism and therefore that... and I remember when I told him why I wanted him to be Secretary of Tourism, I told him I want you to make a Subic out of the whole country. So he continued with that work. I asked him now, as we were signing, “so, Dick, what is the most important part of the law as far as you are concerned?” And he said it is the strengthening of the policy, the incentives in the tourism zones which will be administered by the Department of Tourism for the contribution of Raul del Mar and the strengthening of the infrastructure component.

And so, indeed, we will be having all kinds of tourism areas all over the country, but I am sure that as 55 percent of our tourists come to visit Central Philippines, I figure 55 percent of those tourism zones will also be in Central Philippines especially the Visayas and here in Cebu. (applause)

As mentioned by Mel Sarmiento — who welcomed us and who was the one who called me to come and attend this conference — in late December last year, I reorganized the Presidential Task Force on Climate Change with the use of a draft submitted to me by Tony Oposa. In that draft as per his recommendation... in that Executive Order, I made myself the chairperson. But the Task Force has 14 task groups for various concerns, and every task group is headed by a Cabinet member to draw up action plans and set targets for a specific area related to climate change. For instance, Secretary Atienza is the head of the Task Force on Solid Waste Management, also on protected areas, and that is why he goes around with me every Friday in order to communicate to all our local governments that the Solid Waste Management Law mandates every single barangay in the country to have a Materials Recovery Facility. Now, that's not such a tall order really because depending on how simple or how elaborate you want your MRF to be it can be as cheap as less than 200,000 pesos or it can be as sophisticated as two million pesos.

And so, therefore, this is something we want every barangay to do. In fact, I will also like to take advantage of this occasion to thank the League of Municipalities because even as we speak they are now on a caravan all over the Philippines to communicate to all the mayors that they should help and assist their barangay in putting up Materials Recovery Facilities.

We have also task forces on fossil fuels, renewable energy and, of course, needless to say that Angie Reyes is in-charge of the energy-related task forces as well as DOTC Secretary Mendoza with regard to shifting from fossil fuels to other fuels. And part of the requirement of the task force is that we should really promote renewable energy which is a law that was sponsored by Migs Zubiri here, the two Juan Miguels, Juan Miguel Zubiri and my son Juan Miguel Arroyo. But when I said that the framework is largely in the U.N. Convention and the Kyoto Protocol there are still key remaining elements.

We still have to set new targets for the post 2010 period. We still have to establish suitable carbon markets. The carbon markets I have seen in the Philippines have been very well done. For instance, I have seen the Toyota reforest the Northern part of Sierra Madre using carbon credits. I have seen landfills being transformed into methane-driven power plants using carbon credits. Although may I add a caveat, this is not an excuse to put up new sanitary landfills. Let's just clean up the old ones but instead of sanitary landfills, let us just concentrate on MRFs in every barangay. (applause)

We still have to formalize funding arrangements so that developing countries like us can meet the additional cost of low emission technology. We still have to reach agreements on administrative arrangements for the adaptation fund that the developed countries are supposed to help us with. And as far as the post Kyoto is concerned, the Philippines supports an 80 percent reduction of carbon emissions. (applause) In order for the world to agree to this, there is an urgent need to crop a new Climate Treaty that is viable in the long- term and binding under international law and we hope to do this in the forthcoming Copenhagen Conference. The decision to avoid dangerous climate change does not rest in the future but in today's national and local governments and businesses including the tourism industry, the hotel industry including especially those in the Visayas.

We all have the opportunity to devise replicable models to identify national vulnerability and build formulas for adaptation. Here in the Visayas, for instance, the world's largest wet steam fields are right here in Leyte, in Negros Island, and tapping our geothermal sources has enabled us in fact not only in Negros Island but in several parts of the country, they have helped us to become 60 percent energy-sufficient. Likewise, biogases co-generation plants like in Negros Occidental can tap the waste product of sugarcane manufactured to produce energy instead of being left to rot and discharge more methane into the atmosphere. And since we're talking about the Visayas and what the laws require there is an earlier law that also requires the municipalities, the coastal municipalities to set aside 15 percent of your waters for marine sanctuary. (applause)

The environment cannot take a back seat to economic development. There is no reason that job creation and a good, clean and sound environmental policy cannot exist. I think tourism, the kind of tourism that we have today shows that, because our tourism is very, very eco-friendly. So different from tourism in the days of old. I remember when I was a young activist we were all against tourism because of the sex tourism. But now I remember, on the other hand today, how times changed, there is a certain area in the country where the religious are against a casino. So they said... then the local officials say, but it creates jobs. So, the answer of the religious was, "why not create jobs through tourism?" See, because now the understanding of tourism is eco-tourism. So that is a best example of what we're trying to say that caring for the environment is an important contribution to job creation.

That is why this One Visayas Initiative in the heart of our tourism region is significant and timely. It is led by local government executives through the Regional Development Councils. We have here Mel, our host Governor Gwen and Sally, and it has the support of the academe, private sector representatives, civil society as members and Father Jet comes from the church.

And as I see all of you coming here together to put this One Visayas Summit together on Climate Change, I am reminded that now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. Now is the time to initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. Climate change adaptation and mitigation is not only a job of the government but also of religious and civic groups and nongovernmental organizations harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities. Volunteer activities can focus on initiatives as cleaning up our environment; because trash is not only ugly it contributes to methane. Building parks because building parks build up greens, produce oxygen and reduces climate change, the same with planting trees. These are just as important as bringing comfort to the poor through food banks and bringing literacy to adults who cannot read.

So, I thank all of you for being here today. And I say to all of you, to our green legislators who love and promote eco-tourism, to our green LGUs, to our green NGOs and to our green industry in tourism, congratulations to all of you! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Regional Development Committee's One Visayas Initiative on Climate Change Summit and signing of R.A. 9593 or the Tourism Act of 2009. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412103057/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25031&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and India

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and India

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Dusit Thani Hotel, Makati City, May 15, 2009]

(applause) Thank you. Thank you. (applause)

Thank you Secretary Romulo for your introduction.

Other members of the Cabinet and senior government officials who are present here today; Ambassador Mitter and Madame Mitter; of course, Ram Sitaldas and all the other leaders of the Indian Business Community; members of the Diplomatic Corps; former Senator Letty Ramos-Shahani who is a daughter-in-law of India; ladies and gentlemen. (applause)

First of all, to the Indian Chamber of Commerce now to be called the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce, (applause) for your many initiatives including holding a full-year celebration of the 60th Anniversary of the Diplomatic Ties between the Philippines and India, congratulations! and thank you. (applause)

Ram and I were talking about the implications of the change from an Indian Chamber to a Federation of Indian Chambers, and the new roles and the new character of the Federation. While one of them is that, hopefully, individual Indian businessmen who are CEOs of large multinationals like Citi Bank, Nestle, Sutherland and so on can become individual members and Filipinos who do business in India can also be members — that is truly a significant transformation of the Indian Chamber into the Federation. (applause)

And it is only so fitting because India and the Indian people play an important role in the Philippine experience. Hundreds of years before diplomatic relations were established between our two newly independent countries in 1949, in the 18th century, trade was already flourishing between Manila and the Coromandel Coast in Bengal, involving Philippine exports of tobacco, silk, cotton, indigo, sugar cane and coffee.

Politically, the Philippines is Asia's first democracy and India is today the world's largest democracy. (applause) The Philippines has become a second home to thousands of Indians, and I'm glad to hear from Ram that majority have already acquired Philippine citizenship. (applause)

Gone are the days when Indian people coming to the Philippines were considered as restricted aliens. Today, you are very welcome visitors and residents to our country and even citizens. (applause)

In terms of the economy, India and the Philippines are ranked the two most attractive offshoring destinations in the world, and this brings us to another important level of joint venture partnership between Indian corporations and Philippine business investors. We are buying a lot of pharmaceuticals from India as part of our program to cut the price of medicines for the ordinary Filipinos. Many other kinds of relationships were already enumerated both by Ambassador Mitter and by Ram — I need not mention all of them again — they both mention the exchange of high level visits. India's Head of State and Head of Government both came to the Philippines, and I as Head of State and Head of Government combined have also visited India together with several of you who are part of the Chamber now the Federation. And I'm sure that you all know what memories I have of India, fond memories, not only from that State Visit but from the many times I visited India during my youth. And having visited India in my youth and having made a State Visit two years ago, I witnessed the transformation of India into the fourth largest economy in the world. (applause)

In fact today, BRIC has now become an important acronym standing for Brazil, Russia, India and China, the four new economic giants to whom the world looks today to stimulate economic recovery because the traditional giants of America, Japan and Europe are not to be the ones who will bring us to recovery. India's projected growth rate of 6.0 to 7.0 percent in this time of global recession is admirable. Having said that, the world economy continues to challenge developed and developing nations alike.

So for us, for Filipinos, for Indian friends living in the Philippines, now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. We must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. This should include the government, the religious, the civic groups, the nongovernmental organizations like the Federation of the Indian Chambers harnessing our peoples to engage in coordinated volunteer activities.

We should focus on such initiatives like cleaning up our environment, building parks, planting trees, bringing comfort to the poor through food banks, bringing literacy to adults who cannot read. During these trying times, the Filipino commitment and caring – which includes the Filipino-Indian community because having stayed here for so long you have already all these Filipino traits of caring – should prompt each one of us to count our blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate. Our nation, the nation you have chosen to call your home, needs us all pulling in the same direction. Volunteering time, skills and resources is a noble undertaking we should all take seriously.

In lean global economic times, we should tap into national support for “volunteerism.” We need to promote citizen involvement including the Indians who have become Filipino citizens and resident involvement including the Indian citizens who have been residing in the Philippines for so long, we need all of you to help friends, families, communities and the less fortunate, notably revolving around the poor and the environment.

I mentioned all these because I have declared the month of May as Volunteerism Month. And I hope as part of your yearlong anniversary, 60th Anniversary celebration of our diplomatic relationship, the Federation of Indian Chambers can use this month to launch some of your volunteer projects for the poor and the environment.

Also within the context of a turbulent world, it is essential to keep our own continent as calm and coordinated as possible. Perhaps because of the strength of India and China and other parts as well including ASEAN, the Asian continent is the best situated to weather the global crisis and come out the strongest compared with other continents like America and Europe.

It is time to harness the potential of Asia, to capitalize on its resources and to give the Pan-Asian Region a stronger voice in shaping the world economic order. One way to achieve this is for ASEAN and India to accelerate the negotiations for an ASEAN-India Free Trade Agreement. I hope the Filipino-Indian Business Community, the Federation of Indian Chambers will make this advocacy as one of your missions for this 60th Anniversary of our relations. (applause)

Our government views Asian neighbors like India as partners in economic development. We count on you, the Philippine-Indian Business Community, to ensure that our two countries work together to build a more cohesive regional community that will strengthen the economic clout of all nations in our rapidly growing region.

And on our part, to ensure that we remain a competitive player within the region and are able to attract investments from countries like your home country of India, with the support of the Indian Business Community and the then Indian Chamber getting all your inputs, we have invested heavily in improving the quality of the country's human resources, in lowering transaction flows and the costs of doing business, in developing efficient access to financing, and building a seamless infrastructure network. I have mentioned, for instance, the ease now of immigration procedures for the Indian Business Community and many other types of red tape we did away with because you pointed them out to us.

And as mentioned by our two speakers earlier, we are also focusing on developing our strongest sectors, including commodities, BPO in great partnership with the Indian Business Community in India and around the world and niche tourism. One of the niche tourism sectors we identified is to invite Indian movie companies in Bollywood to come and do films in the Philippines. We have had a couple come. They are happy about the site. They're happy about the talent. They're in fact happy about the assistance they get from agencies. They have difficulty because there's no direct flight. So, what I heard about the direct flight earlier is I think something that we must all work for. We have an air agreement... (applause) We have an air agreement, don't we? It's now the economic decision making of the airlines that we must work for, and that would be in the hands of the business community because you are the one who can assure these airlines that they can make money with the load that you will provide with your business activities.

We have unique competitive advantages in these areas. We offer significant value for investors. We thank the Indian companies who have come to invest here over these years where we had different kinds... waves of investments as mentioned by our speakers: textile industry, retail industry, now high-tech and high-value. I remember when I was a young girl living in Iligan and I would go to town to go to the market in that very, very multi-ethnic society. I made a lot of friends among the Indian retail owners of the stores there. So, that's where you've been for a long time, you're still there, and you are now in high-tech and manufacturing as well.

The Philippines and India, both with strong decades-long democratic traditions, are partners in the continued growth and development of the countries of Asia. So, for the next 60 years and even more, may our two peoples continue to work for the deepening of our relationship that has been mutually beneficial to both our countries.

To all of us, Happy Jubilee of our Diplomatic Relations between the two countries!

Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and India. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412102706/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25090&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and India

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Coral Triangle Initiative Summit

[Delivered at the Grand Kawanua Convention Center, Manado, North Sulawesi, Indonesia, May 15, 2009]

Thank you, Mr. President.

President Ramos Horta, Prime Minister Somare, Prime Minister Sikua, Prime Minister Najib, development partners, ladies and gentlemen.

Thank you President Yudhoyono for making this Summit happen. At a time when the world seems mired in bad news, the Coral Triangle Initiative is genuine good news. Here, we have nations coming together in common purpose to protect a vital segment of our common global environment.

During times of economic hardship, the pressures are greatest to abandon our obligation to the environment or to loosen the rules. That is precisely why now, we must be even more vigilant in advancing the CTI Program.

To a world struggling with global warming, we are showing the way toward a united front to keep our biodiversity intact, our food resources strong, and our environment pristine.

The Coral Triangle is potentially the world's most important refuge for marine life. But only if we do our part to keep it in good health. For too long, we have let our environment become degraded; our natural resources diminished; our social contract with nature destroyed. It is time to rebalance our approach, develop a strong economy, provide full employment and maintain the sacred relationship of human beings to mother earth.

This is not an either/or proposition. This must be a win-win solution to not just stopping the degradation but also improving, restoring and enhancing our ecology. We rely on the sea for food, jobs and pleasure. Let us not destroy this resource.

President Yudhoyono's CTI proposal was welcomed at the 2007 APEC, ASEAN and BIMP-EAGA Summits. CTI Ministerial and senior officials developed a joint action plan, a regional plan of action which we are slated to adapt today.

We in BIMP-EAGA reinforce the synergies with the CTI. We are pursuing the establishment of a joint fisheries consortium among our private sectors. We are pursuing the adaption of policies that call on the tuna industry to share the costs of caring for tuna spawning grounds in the Coral Triangle.

As acknowledged earlier by His Excellency President Yudhoyono funding and assistance has been provided by the multilaterals present here today and the Australian and United governments among others. International nongovernmental organizations such as Conservation International, the Nature Conservancy and the Worldwide Fund for Nature are also joining forces to work with the Coral Triangle governments in pursuing the Regional Plan of Action as well as National Action Plans.

I have just signed Executive Order 797 mandating the Philippine National Plan of Action that follows the general outline of the CTI Regional Plan and adapts the guiding principles enunciated by our six Coral Triangle countries in 2007. My earlier Executive Order 533 adapting Integrated Coastal Management as a national strategy to ensure the sustainable development of our nation's coasts, oceans and marine resources is further adherence to the CTI. We have taken decisive action of the community, local government, provincial, district and national levels on coastal resource management and multisectoral climate change adaptation planning with national budget funding.

I thank President Yudoyono for showing the way for the rest of us on how much Indonesia will be allocating to this effort and the Philippines will do the same, Mr. President. (applause)

As part of these funds, we have allocated funds this year in our national government appropriations to support the conservation of important species and management of several protected areas including the Apo Reef Natural Park. The Turtle Islands Wildlife Sanctuary and the renowned Tubbataha Reefs Natural Park, a UNESCO World Natural Heritage site.

If we are going to impact the climate change dialogue we must strive to carry the message of Manado into the ongoing meetings of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. We must call on all countries, but most importantly the major industrialized nations and the rest of the developed world, to live up to the UNFCCC obligations particularly those related to access to affordable and appropriate technology and the provision of funding for climate change management programs.

Going back to the Philippines, we are also carrying out a joint effort of our government, conservation international and WWF to identify a new priority seascape in line with the regional plan of action and our own national plan. This is a true government-NGO partnership that is successfully working to protect our marine resources.

We hope to continue our collaboration with our development partners, particularly in expanding opportunities for private sector participation in the CTI. We have initiated constructive dialogues with global players in the tuna and tourism industries at an event we co-hosted with our international NGO partners.

Our national plan uses the Sulu-Sulawesi Marine-Eco Region program, the SSME, as its platform in such areas as the management of marine protected areas and networks, and the use of an ecosystem approach to sustainable fisheries management.

Our current SSME efforts include the development and planned implementation this year, with Malaysia and Indonesia of the Trinational Sulu-Celebes Seas Small Pelagic Fisheries Management Project. This project with funding support from the Global Environment Facility through the U.N. supports the goal of the CTI Regional Plan of Action on Sustainable Fisheries Management.

The Philippines is honored to take the lead in its implementation. We are also working to strengthen our bilateral relations with CT countries. We signed separate MOUs on Fisheries Cooperation with Timor Leste and Papua New Guinea as part of our commitment to the sustainable development of the fishing industry. These exchanges will contribute to capacity building in each of our nations. We are interested in Papua New Guinea's leadership in innovative and effective tuna fisheries management as we look at ways to effectively protect the juvenile and spawning grounds of tuna in our own part of the Coral Triangle.

In the next few years, we will work to improve practices and policies towards achieving sustainability of the live reef fish trade in Palawan, a major source of live reef fish for restaurants all over Asia. We have made great strides in engaging the traders and industry players active in Palawan with the help of WWF. We look forward to the day when Palawan seafood will be recognized as sustainable seafood.

The Filipino people love the environment. They embrace the need to invest in keeping our environment clean, our seas full of fish and our coral free from exploitation and degradation. That is why we have the Green Philippines Initiative. This includes a national commitment to clean air, clean water, and clean land. We are also working to find harmony between jobs and the environment and to find new ways to provide clean energy.

We have a moral obligation to ensure that the beauty and bounty of the land, air and sea remain for the rest of time.

So colleagues, I join our Chairman in calling on everyone to continue our efforts towards sustainable development of our shared coastal and marine resources. There is no higher calling than the protection of our environment. The CTI is central to our individual sense of self-worth, the prosperity of our nations and our commitment to a sustainable globe. Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Coral Triangle Initiative Summit.

Retrieved

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412103047/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25089&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Sponsorship Speech of Senator Benigno Simeon Aquino III on House Bill No. 3206, May 18, 2009

Sponsorship Speech
of
Honorable Benigno Simeon Aquino III
Senator of the Philippines
On House Bill No. 3206

[Released on May 18, 2009]

In presenting House Bill No. 3206 for the Body's consideration, Senator Aquino delivered the following speech:

The Committee on Local Government is honored to present Committee Report No. 231, recommending the approval with amendments of House Bill No. 3206, introduced by Representative Glenda Ecleo, entitled "An Act Amending Section 1 of Republic Act No. 6769, Entitled An Act Creating the Municipality of San Jose in the Province of Dinagat Islands."

Section 442 (b) of the Local Government Code states that the territorial jurisdiction of a newly created municipality shall be properly identified by metes and bounds.

The Municipality of San Jose in the Province of Surigao del Norte was created by virtue of Republic Act No. 6769 on November 15, 1989.

In the course of finalizing the town planning and zoning of the municipality with the technical assistance of the Housing and Land Use Regulatory Board (HLRUB), the actual survey conducted reveals an inconsistency in the narrative and technical descriptions defining the boundary of two municipalities, namely San Jose and Basilica.

Such an irregularity affects the Internal Revenue Allotment (IRA) share of the said municipality.

In order to correct this, a joint session was conducted by the head officials of both municipalities who agreed to correct and clearly define the boundary. This correction, which rectifies the technical description of the municipal boundary of the Municipality of San Jose in the Province of Dinagat Islands, was discussed in the hearing of the Senate Committee on Local Government last April 29, 2008.

The people of San Jose are responsible for the resources that exist within their jurisdiction. They are also entitled to a share of the internal revenue allotment that is commensurate to the size of the land they occupy. A well-defined physical boundary is therefore sought to prevent boundary disputes from arising and to award the right amount of government funding that is due them.

Source: Legislative Library, House of Representatives

Aquino, B. S. III (2009). Sponsorship speech of Senator Aquino. Journal of the Senate, 3, 2208.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Sponsorship Speech of Senator Benigno Simeon Aquino III on House Bills declaring public holiday, May 20, 2009

Sponsorship Speech
of
Honorable Benigno Simeon Aquino III
Senator of the Philippines
On House Bills declaring public holiday

[Released on May 20, 2009]

In presenting the House bills declaring public holidays, Senator Aquino delivered the following speech:

The Committee on Local Government is honored to present Committee Report Nos. 398, 399, 400 and 401, recommending the approval of the following local holiday bills:

- House Bill No. 3685 — An Act Declaring October 2 of Every Year an Official Nonworking Holiday in the Municipality of Majayjay, Province of Laguna and in All its Barangays, to be known as the “Majayjay Day”;
- House Bill No. 1314 — An Act Declaring September 18 of Every Year a Special Non-Working Holiday in the City of Bislig, Province of Surigao del Sur;
- House Bill No. 1125 and Senate Bill No. 1979 — An Act Declaring July 18th a Special Non-Working Holiday in the Province of South Cotabato in Commemoration of its Foundation Anniversary and the Culmination of the T’nalak Festival; and
- House Bill No. 206 — An Act Declaring September 29 of Every Year as a Special Non-working Holiday in the Municipality Balilihan, Province of Bohol.

We recognize the need to observe local holidays that remind citizens of the legacy of their ancestors. The memory of their achievements inspires people to work for a better future.

Each locality is separated from others by their own distinct and colorful history. This uniqueness entitles localities to celebrate key historic milestones that are a source of pride for their constituents.

The authority to declare local holidays is vested with the President, through a Presidential proclamation, or with Congress, through the enactment of a law.

Chapter 7, Book 1, Section 27 of Executive Order No. 292 (Administrative Code of 1987) states that “the President may proclaim any local special day for a particular date, group or place.”

Under the authority of the President, it is necessary to declare local holidays every year. This has led to repetitive declarations of the same holidays every year.

In contrast, Congress sets in stone the need to observe such local holidays through its power to legislate. This helps eliminate the recurring and seemingly wasteful practice of annual holiday declarations.

In view of this, we therefore seek the approval of the abovementioned bills to place these holidays permanently in the consciousness of the people and to immortalize pivotal local events that helped transform Filipino society in general.

Source: Legislative Library, House of Representatives

Aquino, B. S. III (2009). Sponsorship speech of Senator Aquino. Journal of the Senate, 3, 2267.

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2nd National Convention of the Liga ng mga Barangay National [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa Ikalawang Nasyonal na Konbensyon ng mga Liga ng mga Barangay (National)

[Ipinahayag sa SMX Convention Center, Lungsod ng Pasay, ika 20 ng Mayo, 2009]

Maraming salamat President Echiverri sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin at sa iyong napakagarang diskurso na may laman naman dahil yung full benefits nga ay nagaganap na sa ating mga barangay leaders. (applause)

Ang ating ibang mga officials: si Mayor Peewee Trinidad, ang ating host city mayor (applause) at yung ibang mga officials na narito ngayon; yung ibang officials ng Liga ng Barangay at kayong lahat mga leader ng barangay sa buong Pilipinas, congratulations! din dahil dalawang libo kayong narito, mas malaki keysa nung nakaraan. (applause)

Ako naman maligaya at nagkaroon na naman ng pagkakataong magtipon-tipon kasama ninyo. Gaya nga nang sabi ni President Echiverri, ni Kapitan, ang mga lider ng barangay, kayo, ang grassroots leader pinaka nasa unahan sa paghatid ng serbisyo mula sa pamahalaan. Kaya't nagpapasalamat ako sa lahat ng tulong ninyo, etong huling resolusyon na naman ninyo of support.

Salamat sa tulong ninyo sa pagtataguyod ng programa ng ating administrasyon. Maraming salamat. (applause)

Alam na ninyo na humina ang ekonomiya ng daigdig. Marami tayong kailangang harapin na mga hamon sabay-sabay upang manatili ang ating ekonomiya at manatili ang ating paraan ng pamumuhay. Sa bahagi ng pamahalaan at kasama na rito ang barangay kailangan tayo ay we must live within our means and run a lean efficient government, kasama dito yung patuloy na fiscal prudence, kasama dito yung magtrabaho para balansyado ang budget, habang sa kabilang dako naman, we must simultaneously invest in key programs for our people.

Salamat doon sa binanggit ni President Rico Judge Echiverri yung suporta ninyo sa aking ten-point program. Isa na nga dito sa ten-point program ay yung pagdala ng kuryente para sa lahat ng mga barangay. Kaya kung meron pang mga barangay dito na wala pang kuryente, ipaalam na sa Liga headquarters para tugonan ng National Electrification Administration ang inyong pangangailangan agad-agad. (applause)

Isa pa doon sa ten-point program ay yung makamtan ang makatarungang kapayapaan. Kaya nasisiyahan ako na kasama doon sa programa — yung sa Resolution of Support ninyo kanina — yung tutulong kayo sa laban kontra sa insurgency at saka terorismo. At diyan talagang kailangang-kailangan ang ating mga barangay officials. Kaya ang alyansa ng mga LGU at Armed Forces of the Philippines ay isang malaking tungkod ng ating administrasyon. You complement the efforts of the Armed Forces of the Philippines under the National Internal Security Plan. The AFP looks to you, looks to the strong and active participation of our local leaders in the fight to end insurgency in the country. The AFP looks to you and recognizes your local initiatives, peace initiatives.

Kaya nananawagan din ako sa mga barangay captain gawa nang kayo ay nagbigay ng resolusyon na sumusuporta sa laban kontra sa insurgency kayo na ang manguna to lead and engage in local peace talks and in the campaign for rebel surrenders. (applause)

Nandito tayo sa Pasay City hindi ko maiwasan yung mga modelong programa ng Pasay City tungkol sa Solid Waste Management na binisita ko na at yun din ang isang inaasahan ko sa ating mga barangay — itupad ang ating batas ng Solid Waste Management. Kasi may probisyon na bawat barangay ay dapat maglaan ng lupa para sa Materials Recovery Facility or MRF. Ito ay imbakan ng mga basura kung saan yung mga basurang biodegradable or yung mga nabubulok kagaya ng pagkain, mga dahon ay maaaring gawing compost, charcoal briquettes o ibang mga bagay na magagamit muli. At yung recyclable naman, yung non-biodegradable gaya ng plastic ay mare-recycle na nga para sa ibat-ibang mga produkto.

Halimbawa, doon sa Boracay — ewan ko kung nandito yung mga tatlong barangay captain ng Boracay — ginagamit nila yung plastic waste, ginagawang mga bricks at yun ang ginagamit na mga foot walk ngayon doon sa magandang resort ng Boracay. At alam ko... magkano ba itong mga Materials Recovery Facility na ito, depende kung simple o elaborate. Yung mga simple less than 200,000 pesos. Yung mga elaborate umaabot ng two million pesos, so depende kung gaano kayaman yung inyong barangay. Pero ang gobyerno, national government ay tutulong. We are, sabi ng Secretary of Environment and Natural Resources, ready to contribute 20 percent of what you will spend. Halimbawa, kung gagawa kayo ng 200,000-peso MRF at kayo ay gagastos ng 160,000 pesos, handa ang national government na mag-contribute ng 40,000 pesos para sa ganun buong bansa (applause) magkaroon tayo ng MRF.

At itong MRF na ito may proseso para sa biodegradable, may proseso para sa recyclable or non-biodegradable. Kaya para sa ganun madali niyo ipasok yung isang machine o sa ibang machine yung mga basura kailangan upang madaling gamitan ng MRF. Nanawagan din ako sa inyong lahat na lumahok sa kampanya tungkol sa wastong pagtapon ng basura — ihiwalay yung mga biodegradable doon sa mga recyclable. Yun ang isang malaking magagawa ninyo dahil kung kayo ay mayrong MRF at magpo-produce kayo ng compost, fertilizer, bricks – ano pa ba ito? – yung mga charcoal briquettes mabebenta pa niyo ito, so kikita kayo at makukuha niyo uli yung puhunan na ilalagay ninyo.

Marami ng mga barangay ang gumagawa nito, kaya isang pwedeng magawa ng Liga ay ipakita kung papano ginagawa nung mga barangay yung ibat-ibang kanilang mga Solid Waste Management. Yung League of Municipalities ginagawa na ito. Ang pinapakita nila Best Practices.

Ako para sa akin, sabi ko, ‘di na kailangang ipakita ang best practices, medyo magastos iyon. Yung Pasay City best practices yun. Pero yung sa mga barangay level lalo na yung mahihirap na barangay eh baka naman madismaya sila doon sa gastos ng best practices na ginagawa ng mga mas may kayang barangay. Ipakita na lang yung mga minimal practices para makita na kayang-kaya ng bawat barangay magkaroon ng malinis na kapaligiran.

I also call on the barangays to intensify your anti-drug campaigns. The LGUs that can declare a barangay a “drug-free zone” will be rewarded with development projects to sustain your efforts and ensure a bright future for our children and communities.

Panahon talaga ngayon upang ating higpitan ang ating pagkakaisa at tumukoy sa pamilya at pamayanan. Kailangan magsimula tayo ng bagong panahon ng boluntarismo at diwang makapamayanan. Mahalagang magsama-sama ang pamahalaan, at kasama dito ang barangay, ang simbahan, mga samahang sibiko, at ang mga NGO harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities. Dapat itoon natin ang mga inisyatiba sa gawaing tulad ng paglilinis ng kapaligiran — iyon ngang solid waste management na binanggit ko kanina o pagtatayo ng mga parke at pagtanim ng mga puno, lalo na yung mga barangays na nandoon sa mga bundok, pamamahagi ng pagkain sa mga mahihirap, pagturo ng pagbabasa sa mga adult na hindi marunong magbasa upang magkaroon sila ng dignidad.

Sa mga masubok na panahong ito, ang diwa ng commitment ng Pilipino sa kalinga ay dapat bigyan tayo ng inspirasyon to count our blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate. Kailangan tayo ng ating bansang patungo sa isang parehong direksyon kaya lalong nagpapasalamat ako sa resolusyon na binigay na naman ninyo muli sa akin. And this time, volunteering time, skill and resources is a noble undertaking na dapat siryosohin nating lahat.

Higit sa kailanman, kaya ng barangay itong mga binanggit kong gawain. Kasi kwarenta porsyento ng Value Added Tax ay pumupunta sa mga pamahalaang lokal, tatlong taon ang agwat ng komputasyon. Kaya dahil noong 2006 tumaas ang VAT ng 100 billion pesos dahil sa ating batas; three years later, 2009, itong taong ito hindi ba niyo nahahalata lumulundag ng 40 billion pesos ang IRA ng mga local government, at kasama na doon ang lukso ng kita ng mga barangay. (applause) Inaasahan ko na maunawaan ninyo na tumaas ang inyong IRA itong taon dahil tumaas ang revenues ng bansa mula sa Value Added Tax.

At tinitiyak ko, gaya nang palagi, ang IRA sa mga lokal na pamahalaan sapagka't kayo ang unang humaharap sa sambayanan upang magbigay ng serbisyo ng gobyerno. Kahit nga noon nung wala pa tayong tax reforms at kapos tayo ng pondo sa national government naalala niyo naghanap pa rin tayo ng pondo upang bayaran ang inyong IRAng buo. Binayaran pa nga ang IRA na utang ng mga previous governments.

Kaya ngayon sa pamamagitan ng inyong malaking dagdag na kita sa IRA himukin natin ang bawat Pilipino na makiisa. Dapat nating itaguyod ang partisipasyon ng lahat ng mamamayan na tumulong sa pag-angat ng pamumuhay ng mga maralita at sa pagbibigay ng proteksiyon sa ating kalikasan.

Hindi natin maaaring pabayaaan pa ang kapakanan ng ating bansa. Working together as one nation and people, not only will we survive, we will prosper in this time of global crisis.

Magkaisa tayo bilang isang bansa na pinagbubuklod ng ating iisang pinagmulan at magkaparehong hangarin sa hinaharap. Mga kapitan ng barangay sa buong Pilipinas sa patuloy ninyong suporta sa ating nagkakaisang layunin. Maraming, maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 2nd National Convention of the Liga ng Mga Barangay National. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412102600/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25133&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the general membership of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the general membership of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP)

[Delivered at the Tower Club, Philamlife Tower, Makati City, May 21, 2009]

Thank you. (applause)

Thank you Secretary Roque.

Secretary Cabral, our other senior government officials, our leaders of the Pharmaceutical and Health Care Industry header by Mr. Aragon and the other officers of PHAP, ladies and gentlemen.

This is a timely meeting. The world is once again on high alert with the emergence of the deadly Influenza AH1N1 virus.

We thank the providence of the Lord Almighty and the cooperation of the government and the people for the continued resilience of the Philippines against the swine flu. Just as we have so far been relatively resilient from the global economic crisis.

According to the WHO there are now more than 8,000 cases in 36 countries, but by the grace of God and the carefulness of all of us, there is still no swine flu case in our country. Nonetheless, on my instruction, the DOH has put up a stock of more than one million capsules of tamiflu as a precautionary measure.

But let's continue to pray and work hand-in-hand, as we did during the SARS and bird flu outbreaks, in order to keep the Philippines free from swine flu. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank not only the Pharmaceutical and Health Care Industry but also all the people for their prayers and trust in government I understand that PHAP has started to print Influenza AH1N1 information materials from the DOH, and that these materials are on their way to the provinces. So, I thank you for that.

As more diseases emerge, the role of the pharmaceutical industry in developing and distributing cutting-edge drugs to combat disease has become even more important. And we saw that in the presentation of PHAP. Saving people's lives is at the core of your mission, the Pharmaceutical and Health Care Association of the Philippines.

For over 60 years, it has been providing cures for diseases, and through your very good PHAPCares Foundation — congratulations to the executive director! — sharing with our indigent countrymen large numbers of life saving medicines, medical missions, participation in emergency and disaster response activities, campaigns for the prevention and treatment of major diseases and support for the victims of these ills.

I laud PHAP for your support especially of what was presented today, our project NARS. And that excellent presentation saves me the trouble of explaining what it's all about except to just summarize that it was a project we developed both as an emergency employment measure and as a training ground for nurses who wish to obtain some hands-on experience before they can qualify for greener pastures abroad.

And I am happy to learn about all the things that they have pointed out there — your agreement together with the NARS Steering Committee sponsoring the stipends of about a hundred nurses, but now more because you have 3 more companies coming in, fielded to 20 more municipalities. So for that, maraming, maraming salamat.

The work of the PHAPCares Foundation is something I would especially like to highlight during this meeting during this month of May. Because I have proclaimed May as Volunteerism Month and PHAPCares is a great example of volunteerism.

Now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and the community. We must initiate a new era of volunteerism and community spirit. This should include the government, religious, civic groups and NGOs like PHAPCares harnessing our people to engage in coordinated volunteer activities. That is why your partnership with DSWD and now your partnership with DOLE is really an excellent example of pulling together.

But may I make a call also to focus on initiatives not just related to your core activity of health but also non-core activities like cleaning up our environment — which is after all very much related to health — building parks and planting trees, bringing comfort to the poor not only through medicines but through food banks because nutrition is also important for health, and the dignity of literacy to adults who cannot read. Because the more literate the adults are, the more they know how to take care of their health.

During these trying times, the Filipino spirit and commitment to caring should prompt each one of us, even the non-Filipinos among you, for after all whether your corporation is Filipino or multinational, it's still a Filipino corporation operating in the Philippines and PHAP is a Filipino association. All of us should count our blessings and give back to those who are less fortunate as you are doing in PHAPCares.

Our nation indeed needs us all pulling in the same direction, and one way to do it is to volunteer time, skills and resources. That is a noble undertaking we should all take seriously. And, of course, you're all aware that with the poorest of our people in mind, one of the key programs of our government is to bring down the cost of medicines frequently purchased by the poor to one-half of their 2001 prices. I made that declaration in my 2001 State of the Nation Address because when I came in to the presidency our prices were double that of our neighbors. That's why I made a goal to bring it down to one-half.

But let me stress that this program is not meant to be a grave threat to the viability of the pharmaceutical industry. And I appreciate that PHAP has been active in the campaign against intellectual property and the counterfeiting of products affecting public health and safety, and I appreciate that.

After all, our government supports intellectual property. It supports research and development which requires the protection of intellectual property rights. You do a lot of research but I was asking your Executive Director Mr. Gloor, how much are indeed you do here. You do testing here, but I hope that you can also move towards more basic R & D. And in order to encourage you to do this, we have spent billions of scholarships to include scholarships in the PhD and masteral level for Science and Engineering. And I hope that that will help you that pool of manpower we are putting will help you to make a decision to put more basic research here in the Philippines.

And I'd like to and also assure you that we religiously implement laws that uphold patent protection as a major incentive for scientists and researchers to discover new and effective products. We are joined together in a common fight against fake products, more so of medicines which are crucial to a patient's survival.

Earlier before the general meeting, we had a meeting with some of your leaders and very concerned corporations about two matters: one, is the recent Supreme Court ruling about the very liberal importation of pharmaceutical products; and the other one, is a recent BFAD ruling about discount cards. On the Supreme Court ruling I understand that you have somebody among you has a motion for reconsideration. So, we will await the Supreme Court's final ruling on that case.

In the case of the BFAD's policies on discount cards, I think Undersecretary Alex Padilla made many things clear in the meeting and that can be a subject matter for you to disseminate among your members in other meetings or later in the day. But I think Alex has... from the way you understood everything, it really is something that the industry can very well be able to live with and remain viable. Because after all, government and PHAP need not be on opposite sides. We are both concerned that the Filipino people will be healthy and strong. We are both concerned that the people will be free of disease. We are both concerned that the people of the Philippines live quality lives, and able to contribute to the nation's continued growth and development.

So, let me finally say that working together as one nation and people, our economy and your industry will not only survive, but will do quite well in this time of global crisis.

Once again, thank you for your cooperation with the government. Let's continue to work together for the good of the Filipino people.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the general membership of the Pharmaceutical and Healthcare Association of the Philippines (PHAP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412102435/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25132&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo at the Independence Day reception

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
At the Independence Day reception

[Delivered at the Malacañang Palace, June 12, 2009]

Today we remember once again those historic events of a hundred and eleven years ago when a band of patriots announced to the whole world the birth of a new and sovereign nation, one with full rights to dream its own dreams, choose its own leaders, and work towards its own goals and aspirations.

Our freedom, paid for by the blood of heroes, has been challenged several times since. But our people rose to the occasion at every turn, defending their liberty with everything they had, prepared to render the ultimate sacrifice if asked to do so.

Those external threats to our freedom are no more. Our former conquerors have become our close friends and allies in our quest for development. Yet we must remain united and vigilant as ever, not only against foreign domination, but—more urgently—against a familiar enemy who continues to eat away at our people’s capability to exercise their free will. That enemy is poverty, and the hunger, ignorance and despair that it brings.

We have fought poverty for decades, and we were starting to gain the upper hand through strong political will and our people’s full support. But factors not of our own making are now eroding those gains. The Filipino people are called to action once again to fight off these threats before they reverse our development and return us to our economic Dark Ages.

Where before our heroes fought to gain political freedom, today we must rely on our sense of community and solidarity to gain freedom from economic deprivation in the face of the global economic crisis.

No nation is immune from the impact of the global crisis. A few are faring relatively better than the others. The Philippines fortunately belongs to those few, not because of luck, but because we chose years ago to prepare for an emergency like this by taking the bitter pill of fiscal and economic reforms.

On those reforms we built our growth, the fruits of which we invested in turn in long overdue physical and human infrastructure. We worked hard to bring increasing balance to our national economy. Pumping more money into infrastructure and welfare, we expanded our domestic demand, which decreased our reliance on exports. Our export to GDP ratio now is only 28.5%, compared to 49% in 2000.

We moved quickly to diversify our trade partners as well as the overseas destinations of Filipinos going abroad. At the same time, we worked to build up new industries and develop new sectors, and encouraged our people to build up their skills in accordance with shifting demand. All of these measures, among other things, helped loosen our ties to the fortunes of the world’s biggest economies when they started going down last year.

I am proud to say that the Philippines is now one of only two countries in the region whose growth rate remained positive the first quarter of this year, albeit much slower than before.

Nonetheless, I do not mean to diminish the pain and disruption the global crisis has brought upon our economy. We are feeling the pain just like the rest of our neighbors. And the poorest among us are the ones being hurt the most.

We must continue to focus here at home on creating jobs and keeping prices low, while rescuing the poorest among our people with targeted subsidies of food, fuel and rice.

Government has tightened its belt and put a stop to wasteful spending, just like the average Filipino household. Government must pour more of its savings and revenue into programs that help the poor and the middle class, without neglecting the investments in education, healthcare and infrastructure that will be the springboard of our growth when the global economic rebound happens.

We are tackling many challenges all at once in order to keep our economy and way of life going strong. Running on a lean and efficient machinery, government must continue exercising fiscal prudence and working towards a balanced budget, even as we continue to invest in key programs for the people.

It is not enough for us to celebrate our day of freedom by remembering our heroes. We must also think about their hopes for a better life for us, and commit to work even harder to realize them. Only then can we say that we deserve the gift of freedom our forefathers gave us.

During these trying times, the Philippine spirit and commitment to caring should prompt every Filipino to count his blessings and share them with the less fortunate. Now is the time for pulling together and focusing on family and community. We must start a new era of volunteerism and community spirit that embraces all sectors – government, the religious, civic groups, non-governmental organizations as well as our foreign friends. The nation needs all of us pulling in the same direction.

I believe that when the rebound occurs, our relative position within the region and the world will continue to improve. Not only do we have the resources to absorb the global shocks, but we also have our economic resilience and continuing fiscal reforms that will enable the nation to pull ahead when the global recovery begins.

We are heartened by pieces of good news from all over the world indicating that this global economic slump may already be bottoming out. There are growing signs of recovery in some of the biggest international markets. We earnestly hope there will be more of these positive signs pointing to an early global turnaround.

We must look at the present with clear eyes, ever mindful of the goals that we hope can be realized soon. Kagitingan, Kagalingan at Kasipagan ang magdadala sa atin tungo sa Tunay na Kalayaan. Courage, Excellence and Industry – the Filipino has all these qualities, in abundance. Add to these the unity of a people determined to rise from poverty once and for all. They are the building blocks of our new growth.

We hope our foreign friends, whose friendship we continue to cherish through the years, will continue to be with us, as the Philippine Ship of State navigates through the murky waters of the global crisis towards the sunlit port of prosperity, security, and sustainable growth.

Let us all work together to apply the lessons learned from this global crisis, so that together we may create a global village that celebrates the sovereignty of each nation even as it works as one in pursuit of our common goal: a world that is free from fear and free from want.

May I invite you now to raise your glasses in a toast to international solidarity and mutually beneficial growth, and a bright future for the Philippines.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). Speech of President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo Independence Day reception. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101715/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25337&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the closing session of the High-Level Dialogue on Climate Change in Asia and the Pacific: Developmental Challenge

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the closing session of the High-Level Dialogue on Climate Change in Asia and the Pacific:
Developmental Challenge

[Delivered at the Asian Development Bank Headquarters, Mandaluyong City, June 17, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Atienza.

Thank you very much President Kuroda. I'd like to congratulate also Director General Pachauri for the event, for this conference that you have just concluded. Former Prime Minister of Korea — how very nice to have you here — and also I'd like to greet ADB Vice President Ursula Preuss, thank you. And we have together with us not only Secretary Atienza on the platform but also our Presidential Adviser for Climate Change Sonny Alvarez.

I'm very glad that you have had this conference because we must not lose sight of the challenges we were already addressing before the onset of the global economic crisis. Climate change ranks high on the list of challenges that must not be forgotten in a rush to fix a world economy in crisis. The challenge of climate change, and the devastating permanent impact it will have on economies around the world, will still be with us long after the global economy returns to health.

Indeed, we are all here today because climate change is here. Weather patterns are changing. Human activity has caused climate change. Fossil fuels. Land use. Solid waste.

Climate change is already impacting adversely on many of the world's peoples. It will have catastrophic effects if we don't take immediate and sufficient action to curb the industrial emissions and the forest loss that have been clearly identified as among its major causes.

Though the Philippines produces only one-third of one percent of the global Green House gases, much lower in per capita income than those of industrialized nations; and we are not a climate maker, we are a climate taker. And that is our very special reason for being involved in climate change mitigation and adaptation. We suffer as much or even more than climate makers because we are an archipelago.

From rising tides, to changing weather, to deforestation and pollution of air, sea and land, the challenges of climate change to us are great. As a nation made up of over 7,000 islands, rising seas due to global warming take on a whole new meaning. Florida may lose some coastline, we lose a nation. Our response to this grave challenge may sound humorous, but our intent is deadly serious and we must all work together to solve this problem. If we do, we in Asia and the Pacific and the world for that matter, hopefully, it will be one of the great achievements in our history.

Every nation, developed or developing, must assume the mantle of leadership and work to address the challenge of climate change, but not only every nation every person as well. Each and every person bears some responsibility for what we have done today and throughout history to diminish our environment. Obviously, some are more responsible than others; and some are more responsible today than yesterday. But all that apportionment of blame does nothing against a rising tide of global warming that will swamp our nation and many parts of our region and our world if we do not act with decisiveness and solidarity.

We have a Green Philippines Agenda and it covers not only the work of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources but the work of other department as well especially the Department of Energy. Our Green Philippines Agenda puts an emphasis on a sustainable economic model that brings economic opportunity and a concern for our environment.

It is devoted to a sustainable economic model that allows for growth, job creation and environmental stewardship. Too many nations, developed and developing, used to believe — and I hope they don't anymore — that the environment must be sacrificed at the altar of growth. We firmly believe otherwise. And because we are only doing our take off now, we have a unique opportunity to get it right from day one: to introduce new industries that are clean and profitable. This ranges from furniture made with environmental-friendly practices and materials, to eco-tourism, to developing a biofuels industry that helps our energy independence, creates jobs and keeps our nation clean for future generations but not at the expense of food supplies.

Our Green Philippines includes reducing reliance on fossil fuels with our biofuels, wind and solar efforts and geothermal programs, and other renewable energy programs. It is good for our economy and good for the health and well-being of our people to have a strong economy and a clean environment.

I have two Cabinet members here with me today because as I said, mitigating and adapting to climate change are not just the work of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources. Not even our whole Green Energy Program is just under one department, because biofuels, renewable energy are under our Department of Energy. So much more so many other aspects of climate change that is why I have created a Presidential Task Force on Climate Change and the chair of the task force is no other than myself. (applause) And the work that has to be done day-to-day to carry out the provisions in the Executive Order that I wrote and signed on the Presidential Task Force on Climate Change is done or is overseen to make sure that it's complied with by our Presidential Adviser on Climate Change.

There are 17 task groups under these Presidential Task Force and 11 of them are headed by Cabinet members. Every Friday, Secretary Atienza, Secretary Alvarez and I spend about five hours together with different groups because among other things that he has to do to mitigate and adapt to climate change, Secretary Atienza is also chair of the Task Group on Solid Waste Management. And every Friday we go around the country to make sure that all our local governments know about the Solid Waste Management Act and their obligations under that Act, and we look to see how they're doing, and we look to see where we can work together.

We've been doing this for the last ¼ almost six months now and soon — oh, after we've started because we have had so many local governments already aware of their obligations — we are adding to our agenda for Fridays also discussions on the obligations of the community towards reforestation and mangrove rehabilitation and other similar activities.

Together with the Asian Development Bank — and President Kuroda has already mentioned this in his remarks — we have a program to replace and phase out incandescent bulbs and replace them with compact fluorescent bulbs. The logic is simple. An incandescent bulb consumes five times more energy than CFL that produces the same amount of illumination. For instance, a 60-watt bulb could be replaced by a 12-watt CFL. This saves close to 50 watts without losing illumination. If we replace one million incandescent bulbs with one million CFLs, we will have obviated the need to set up a 50-megawatt power plant which would cost us at least 50 million dollars to put up.

So, in accordance with the program that was mentioned by President Kuroda, by August we will distribute five million free CFLs in Metro Manila, Cebu, Cagayan de Oro and Davao cities. This is only the first tranche because the entire program calls for the distribution of 13 million free compact CFLs.

This was funded to the tune of 500 million pesos out of our Value Added Tax proceeds. I released this to the Department of Energy which is the partner, maybe I would say the primary partner of the Department of Environment in adapting to and mitigating climate change. And this fund in turn^{1/4} this is our contribution to the joint ADB-DOE project, which in turn, provided a 31.1 million dollars concessional loan with 50 percent Clean Development Mechanism paid in advance.

I have seen many examples of the Clean Development Mechanism work in our country. This CDM under the Kyoto Protocol has allowed developing countries like the Philippines to voluntarily reduce our Green House gas emissions through private sector initiatives. But as we all know, as you all know, is set to expire by 2012. And as we have heard from our speakers earlier an ambitious comprehensive agreement, negotiated within the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change and building on the Kyoto Protocol, must be achieved no later than this year in Copenhagen. And that is why your conference here is so important for us to work together towards a good outcome of that conference in Copenhagen and to work together towards a good implementation of the outcome of that conference.

Indeed, there is need for greater levels of cooperation and financial support to promote not only mitigation but adaptation strategies, capacity development and technology transfer to avert the security implications of the various effects of climate change. But we must do it in a way that puts the interests of the poor and the dispossessed ahead of the rich and powerful. And that is why this is so important that nations in the Asia and in the Pacific should be here together to make sure of that particular characteristic of the outcome of whatever new agreement we will be able to come up with.

If our country is to do its fair share, then the developed nations, with their historically much greater contribution to the onset of climate change, must help us take a less carbon intensive road to sustainable development, including through expanded carbon markets, investment, and technology transfer.

As an international community those of you here who belong to the world that Asian Development Bank assists we must act together. And we must act with the rest of the world. And most important, we must act effectively and act now. That is why your meeting has been so important.

Thank you once again for coming and more power to all of you! (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the closing session of the high-level dialogue on climate change in Asia and the Pacific: Developmental Challenge. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101503/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25382&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino community [Filipino] Talumpati
ng

Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas

Sa pagpupulong kasama ang komunidad ng mga Filipino

[Ipinahayag sa Hotel Mariners' Court, Tokyo, Japan, ika 19 ng Hunyo, 2009]

Maraming Salamat, Secretary Romulo sa iyong pagpakilala. Maraming salamat, Ambassador Siazon sa iyong mga salitang pag-welcome sa atin at sa mga ginagawa mo na rin dito sa Hapon para sa ating bansa at pati na rin sa ating mga Pilipino na narito sa Hapon.

Kasama ko rin itong gabing ito ang ilang mga kasapi ng ating pamahalaan bilang miyembro ng ating delegasyon. Nandito hindi lamang ang aking si Atty. Mike Arroyo, ang aking asawa; nandito rin si Senator Edgardo Angara; nandito rin ang ilang mga congressmen at kumakatawan sa kanila dito sa entablado, si Deputy Speaker Eric Singson; Meron din tayong mga gobernador, mga negosyante at siyempre mga kasapi ng ating kabinete at senior government officials na kasama sa pag-uusap sa mga opisyal ng Hapon dito sa ating pagbisita.

Kami lahat ay bumabati sa mga Pilipino dito sa Hapon. Careng cabalen cung capangpangan, mayap a bengi quecongan. Dagiti cacailian ni Ambassador Siazon, naimbag nga rabii yo amin. San saray kabaleyan nen mamang ko, masantos ya labi ed sikayon amin. oy konti lang ang Pangasinan dito. Kanatong mga kaigsunan gikan sa Bisayas ug Mindanao, maayong gabii. And I saw earlier mga kasimanwa sang akong bana, mga Ilonggo maayong gab-i sa inyo nga tanan; Sa mga Bicolano, marhay nga banggi sa indo gabos. Ayon nandito si Nonoy Andaya, yung ating Bicolanong cabinet member; at magandang gabi sa inyong lahat.

Malaking pagbati at pasasalamat sa lahat ng mga dumalo dito ngayon. Salamat, mabuhay din kayo! Alam ko na iba sa inyo ay nanggaling pa sa mga malalayong lugar, hindi ba Ambassador Siazon? Sa Nagano, sa Ibaraki, sa Kanagawa, sa Chiba, ay iba pala yung prefecture kaya maraming salamat sa pagbiyahe niyo dito.

Sa nadinig namin yung inyong mga iba't-ibang adhikain bilang Overseas Filipino Workers dito sa Hapon. At bumulong na sa akin si Secretary Roque na yung OFW Wing sa Philippine General Hospital ay itatayo na magsimula sa susunod na buwan. (applause) Hindi lang doon magtatayo rin ng OFW Wing doon sa Iloilo, so doon tayong magsisimula next month.

And I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the Japan Seamen's Union for always being supportive of the Filipino community here. I'm so familiar with this place because the old Japan Seamen's Union has always allowed us so generously to use this venue everytime we have a gathering with the Filipino community. So in behalf of the 38,000 Filipino Seafarers who work on Japanese shipping lines and our members of all Japan Seamen's Union, tonight we conferred a Special Presidential Citation on the Japan Seamen's Union together with the three hospitals that have been helping so much our Filipino workers.

Kanina nanggaling ako sa... nakipagkain nga ako sa Japan Seamen's Union pati na rin sa Japan Ship Owner's Association, pinag-uusapan ang kapakanan ng mga seafarers lalung-lalo na yung mga panganib hindi lamang dahil sa global economic crisis, kundi na rin yung panganib sa inyong katawan dahil marami sa mga Filipino Seafarers ay umaabot sa Gulf of Aden at kung minsan, hindi lang kung minsan, siyempre may panganib na baka makasama kayo doon sa dadamputin ng mga pirata doon sa bandang Somalia. At nagpapasalamat ako dahil yung Hapon, ayaw naman nilang i-ban natin ang mga Sea Filipino Seafarers kasi talagang sa hirap natin, na sunod-sunod naririnig natin noon ang mga balita na kinikidnap yung mga Pilipinong mga Seafarers doon sa Gulf of Aden, pinag-isipan nga ng Department of Foreign Affairs dahil sila parati ang kailangang magnegotiate pag merong mga nakikitang nahohostage na siguro i-ban na lamang yung mga seafarers na nagtrabaho sa mga barko na dumadaan doon pero anong mangyayari sa buong industriya ng Hapon? Ano ang mangyayari doon sa ating mga 38,000 Seafarers? At hindi lang tayo nag-iisip noon, ang Hapon ang nag-iisip noon, ang gobyerno at ang Japanese shipping industry.

Kaya ang magandang balitang ibinigay sa akin kanina nong kanilang Minister of Transportation and Member of Parliament, binalita rin ni Prime Minister Taro Aso kahapon na kanina, pinasa ng Japanese Diet yung batas na yung mga Patrol Trucks, yung Self Defense Force ng Hapon ay puwedeng pumunta sa Gulf of Aden upang ipagtanggol hindi lamang yung mga barkong mga Hapon kundi lahat ng barko sa buong mundo, kaya yon ay makakatulong sa kaligtasan ng ating mga Pilipino.

Palagay ko yun ay isa sa pinakamagandang balita na maiuuwi natin sa ibang mga seafarers na nandoon sa Pilipinas na natatakot sa kanilang kapalaran, at yun ay kwinento nga ng mga Hapon na mula pa nong Marso, nagsimula na sila. Ngunit nong Marso, ang ipinagtatangol lang nila, ang binabantayan lang nila yung mga barkong Hapon ngunit pinahayag nila kay Secretary Romulo, ang ating DFA Secretary na siyang kailangan parating nagne-negotiate pag merong nakikidnap na Filipino Seafarer mula nong yung Hapon ay nagsimula na bantayan yung mga barko nila sa Gulf of Aden, wala nang kidnapping na nangyari, lalo na ngayon na lahat ng barko kahit na anong bandila ay puwedeng ipagtanggol at puwedeng proteksyonan ng mga Seacraft at Aircraft ng Japanese Defense Force. Sabi nga ni Secretary Romulo, maraming nagsasalita tungkol sa problema ng pagkapirata sa bandang Somalia, pero ang Japan ang unangunang nagbigay ng kumprehensibong sagot para ipagtanggol at proteksyonan ang ating mga Filipino Seafarers na dumadaan doon.

And this shows how Japan is a strong and reliable partner to the Philippines and to our region as a whole. With the global economic crisis continuing to create challenges for all our economies, there is no better time than now to strengthen our partnership between Japan and the Philippines.

At ito ang ating pinagdidiriwang sa aking pagbisita ngayon ay yung bagong Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement o JPEPA, na ito ang magiging sanhi na kailangan para dalhin ang mga benepisyo ng higit pang kooperasyon sa ekonomiya sa pamamagitan ng Hapon at Pilipinas at ang taumbayan ng dalawang bansa natin. At ang dahilan kung bakit ang inyong lingkod ay nagpunta dito kasama ng ating mga economic managers ay upang makipagtrabaho, to work closely with Japan to ensure that the JPEPA is fully implemented and effectively implemented para naman yung mga oportunidad na nalilikha ng agreement ay talagang puwedeng makita natin yung paglikha ng trabaho, yung paglawak ng ekonomiya at yung mga oportunidad sa negosyo dito sa mga mahihirap na panahon.

Malaking bagay sa ating bansa ang pagpapatupad ng JPEPA. Magdadala ang JPEPA ng mas madaling pangangalakal sa pamamagitan ng ating dalawang bansa. Magiging mas madali ang investment sa Pilipinas galing sa Hapon, at madadagdagan ang mga tulong ng Hapon sa Pilipinas.

Mas madaling makapasok sa Hapon ang mga galing sa Pilipinas na saging, pinya, alimango, hipon, manok, tuna. At mas makakagamit ang mga pabrika ng Pilipinas ng mga importanteng gamit mula sa Hapon gaya ng mga produktong espesyal na bakal, mga auto parts, mga electronic and electrical parts para mas efficient ang ating manufacturing, mga tela at damit ay mas madaling papasok sa isa't isa.

At dahil sa JPEPA, mas maraming mga kababayan natin ang magkakaroon ng trabaho dito. Noong Mayo lamang, 283 na mga nurse at caregiver ang dumating dito. Meron ba dito mga nurse, kayo ang mga dumating? Okay at bukas bibisitahin na natin yung iba. At nagsimula na ng training sa salitang Hapon. Sa mga darating na araw, linggo at buwan, higit pang maraming Pilipino ang makakakuha ng trabaho dito lalo na pag nagsimula na yung recovery ng Japan, ang economic recovery ng Japan ay nasisimulan na nating makita ngayon hindi lang sa mga nurse at caregiver kundi pati na rin sa mga English teacher at mga nagtatrabaho sa Information Technology.

Dito sa Hapon, marami ring siyempre, 38,000 ang Seafarers, yun ang napakalaking bahagi ng Filipino Community dito, pero dinig ko, 200,000, is that right Ambassador Siazon ang buong Filipino Community dito? At marami dito ay nandito dahil kayo ay napangasawa at nagkaroon na ng pamilya dito sa Hapon. At nong ako ay nagbisita, kami ni Atty. Arroyo at ako nagbisita sa kanilang mga Mahistad, ang Emperador at Emperadora ng Hapon ay binigyan niya ako ng permiso na sabihin sa inyo na parati niyang iniisip at parating gusto niyang mangyari na maganda ang pamumuhay ng mga Pilipina na nag-asawa sa mga Hapon dito sa kanyang bansa at sa ating bansa.

On your regional and global level, Japan deserves special credit for its role in working to return the world to sustainable economic growth. Yung kanyang liderato, innovative, generous and bold, doon sa G-7, yung pitong pinakamamayamang bansa sa buong mundo, o yung G-20, yung dalawampung pinakamalalaking ekonomiya sa buong mundo o yung ASEAN Plus Three kung saan kasama ang Pilipinas o yung East Asia Summit, labing-anim na mga bansa kasama ang Pilipinas at yung maaga niyang pangako na magcocontribute siya ng $100 billion sa IMF para magpahiram sa mga bansa na nagkakaroon ng cash flow problems. Ito ay hindi lamang nagbigay ng napakaimportante at may kinakailangang tulong at suporta sa napakamaselan na panahon, it also encouraged other economies to step up to the plate and make similar pledges. Kahit na naghihirap ang ekonomiya ng Hapon, nauuna pa sila sa tumulong sa buong mundo. And Japan has done much to support the region and it will continue to play the role of a valued partner for economic development and regional stability.

Kaya kayo ay nakatira sa isang napakaimportanteng ekonomiya ng buong mundo. Lumalaki nga ang Filipino community dito sa Hapon. Noon, hindi naman 200,000 ang numerong sinasabi at lalaki pa pag napupuno na natin at nabubuo na natin yung mga pakinabang na manggagaling sa JPEPA.

At gusto kong gawin itong pagkakataon na gamitin itong pagkakataon na magpasalamat sa inyo, ang ating mga masisipag na Pilipino na nagpapadala ng mga remittance sa inyong pamilya. Kasi itong mga remittance na ito ay tumutulong upang magkaroon tayo ng magandang tinatawag na domestic consumption. Kasi tignan niyo yung mga naghihirap na ekonomiya sa buong mundo ngayon, ito yung mga maraming ini-export.

Halimbawa, yung Amerika noong nahirapan ang ekonomiya, nong bumagsak ang ekonomiya, yung mga pinagbibilhan niyang mga ekonomiya ay bumabagsak din. Pero sa ating bansa, noong araw, noong hindi pa ako Pangulo, 49% ng ating produksyon ay pumupunta sa ibang bansa, export. Pero ngayon dahil marami tayong domestic consumption sa loob ng ating bansa mismo ay 28.5% na lang ang ating inaasahan na mag-export kaya ang domestic consumption ay napakalaking gabay para sa pagsulong ng ating ekonomiya. At yun ang isang napakalaking tulong ng ating mga Overseas Filipinos, yung mga inuuwi niyo o mga pinapadala niyo na mga remittance ay nakakatulong, yung pamilya ninyo ay namimili, pumupunta sa mall, at kung anu anong ibang bagay na pinaggagastusan, yun ang malaking domestic demand.

Or also, however, over the last eight years, we have been building greater internal strength to our economy. At bagamat maraming nawawalaan ng trabaho sa buong mundo pati na rin sa ating export oriented industries, meron naman tayong mga bagong mga trabaho na nalilikha ng ating ekonomiya, di ba Secretary Roque? So, we continue to create employment opportunities for our people at home. At yung ating development na ito ay tumutulong na magkaroon tayo ng cushion sa mga kahirapan na nanggagaling sa volatility of the global economy.

Pinag-iibayo ng pamahalaan ang ating programa hindi lamang upang mabawasan ang epekto ng pandaigdigang krisis sa ekonomiya natin, kundi na rin kasi gusto natin na pag dumating ang araw na tayo ay maunlad. At itong kaunlaran na ito, we are working for the day when, because there are good jobs in the Philippines, we hope that someday, going abroad will just be a career option and not the only choice for a hardworking Filipino. Yan ang ating hinahangad.

Halimbawa, itinayo natin yung Business Processing Sector kagaya ng mga call center. Halos wala yan nong araw. Nong ako ay naging pangulo, ang naabutan ko, 4,000 workers sa BPO sector. Ngayon 400,000 workers ang nandoon sa BPO center sector. Ito ay mga trabahong maganda ang suweldo at marami din sa mga young Filipinos and Filipinas ay sinasabi sa akin na salamat po sa trabaho sa call center, mananatili na lang sila sa Pilipinas at hindi na kailangang mag-abroad. Yun sana ang gusto nating mangyari sa ating ekonomiya.

And well, in terms of our economy, we recorded modest growth in the first quarter of the year. But the fact is, against considerable odds that are challenging all countries, the fact that we have managed a positive growth shows that our economy is relatively strong and resilient. And we have been able to avoid the worse effects of a crisis in the Philippines dahil we took the bitter pill of economic reform years ago. Puwedeng ikuwento sa inyo ni Secretary Ralph Recto yung mga kinahirapan niya nong siya ay senador dahil siya ang nag-author ng ating mga tax reforms.

And those efforts are now creating, ang tinatawag ng ekonomista — firewall, siguro alam natin yun. Pagka dalawang bahay ang nagkadikit, pag nasunog yung isa, sunog din yung isa. Pero kung mayroong pader sa pamamagitan nila, yun ang firewall, pag nasunog yung isa, hindi masyadong masusunog yung kabila o konti lang. And these reforms that we have are creating a firewall kaya bagamat naapektuhan tayo, hindi lubha ang epekto sa atin ng global economic downturn.

But we do face considerable pressures and we're working hard to keep the global economic wave from washing over the Philippines. Bahagi don sa prosesong yun sinisikap natin, masipag tayong nagsisikap na tiyakin ang ating pangangailangan sa pagkain, sa gasolina, at sa bigas. Tayo ay namumuhunan sa energy, and rice self-sufficiency.

Tayo ay tinatayo natin ang ating mga eskuwelahan, and we are jumpstarting the economy with much-needed infrastructure projects. Itong mga proyektong ito ay human infrastructure gaya ng training at physical infrastructure gaya ng kalsada, tulay at iba pa.

Yung training, education and health care, malaki ang ating nilaki ng gastos doon. Halimbawa, doon sa training. Noong bago nong administrasyon natin, sabi ni Nonoy Andaya, ang ginastos ng pamahalaan sa skills training ay P200 milyon. Itong taon, ang ginastos natin sa skills training ay P3 billion.

At yung mga kalsada, ewan ko kung gaano katagal na kayong... since the last time you went see the Philippines pero siguro yung mga lately umuwi, siguro nakita ninyo kung gaano na kabilis umuwi ng Nueva Ecija kung kayo ay taga-Nueva Ecija dahil sa Subic-Clark-Tarlac Expressway o kaya puwede kayong pumunta mula sa Maynila hanggang sa Visayas o Mindanao na naka-bus lamang o nakapunta sa Boracay, nakabus lamang dahil yung bus ang sasakay sa Roll-on-Roll-off ferry. So itong mga imprastrukturang ginawa natin ay titiyakin na we would be well-positioned for higher growth once the global economy rebounds. Pero kanina, sinabi ko, ang tinamaan talaga sa ating bansa ay yung export sector. Salamat na lamang na 28.95% na lamang ang ating inaasahan sa export.

Ito talagang isang natamaan sa ating ekonomiya ngunit gaya ng sinasabi dito sa Hapon, nakikita na natin ang konting recovery ng mga exports bagamat hindi pa pareho doon sa nakaraang taon. But this is already a very good improvement kung ihahambing natin sa ibang mga bansa sa rehiyon. Yung export market, yung 28.5% malaki pa rin yun. It's a major driver for our economy, at may ganon din sa buong mundo. Kayat ginagawa natin ang lahat para suportahan ang ating mga exporters. Halimbawa, meron tayong P1 billion Fund para suportahan ang export pero para suportahan naman ang ating mga OFW, na baka nawawalaan ng trabaho, meron din tayong P1 billion Filipinos Overseas Livelihood Support Fund. kaya yun ang sinasabi ni Noel sana mapalawak ang reintegration, ito na nga pinopondohan natin ng P1 billion. (applause) Ito ay pautang sa mga OFW, mga Seamen na nawalan ng trabaho dahil sa krisis, magagamit itong pautang para sa pamumuhunan kung gusto ninyong magsarili ng negosyo o kaya panggastos sa retraining para makahanap ka yo ng ibang trabaho at ito ay bahagi ng ating programa para sa OFW bilang panukli sa inyong malasakit sa ating bayan.

Bahagi rin ng programa ang tulong para maghanap ng bagong trabaho, merong mga kiosk ang DOLE para malaman ninyo kung saan yung mga available jobs at gumagawa sila ng aggressive marketing sa mga bagong mga merkado para sa overseas Filipinos. At gaya ng binanggit ko na P3 billion ang ginastos natin ngayon sa training. At marami don ay para sa mga Overseas Filipinos na umuwi para sa ganon ay ready na kayo muli sa ibang klaseng trabaho.

Really now is the time to work together to strengthen the competitiveness of our great Filipino worker. Now also is the time to work together to strengthen trade at yun ang ginagawa ng JPEPA. Ito ang sinisikap gawin ng JPEPA on a bilateral level between the Philippines and Japan.

Itong JPEPA ay importanteng support system para sa mga Filipino exporter, para sa mga Japanese exporters, ito ay magbibigay ng importanteng oportunidad para sa mga negosyo itong panahon ng paghihirap sa buong mundo.

At masasabi ko sa inyo, ako ay nagpapasalamat sa pagkakaon na magkasama tayo ngayon. And I am pleased that we had been able to institute improvements on a wide range of fronts.

Kung titignan natin ang Pilipinas ngayon at titignan natin ang Pilipinas maybe ten years ago, ibang-iba na. Meron tayong bansa na ligtas at mas secure. Meron tayong ekonomiya na mas malakas at kayang to withstand the shocks like what the global financial crisis is throwing at us. At tayo ay namuhuhan sa bago at modernong imprastructure at itong mga imprastructura ay magbibigay ng benepisyo hindi lang ngayon kundi sa mga darating na henerasyon at maging mas competitive ang ating ekonomiya.

Milyun-milyon ang bagong trabaho na nalikha, milyon ang mga umabot sa health care at edukasyon na nong araw hindi sila makaabot dito. At ginagawa natin lahat nito habang we stay the course to beat our fiscal obligations, ginagawa natin ito pero binabayaran pa natin ang ating mga utang para sa ganon ay mabalanse ang ating budget in the long term. Kaya talaga ngayon ay panahon na magtrabaho tayo at magsama-sama tayo.

Kanina, nong papasok ako dito, meron isang tumakbo at sinabi sa akin, we want to help. Siya ay isang nakapag-asawa sa hapon at siya ay nagtrabaho bilang caregiver at sabi nga we want to help. Nasisiyahan ako na ang Filipino community sa Hapon ay active sa civic work. Tignan mo yung organization ni Noel Cristobal, Philippine Assistance Group kaya talagang tumutulong, yun ang layunin at dahil sa kayo ay matulungin, nagagawa rin niyong maimpluwensiya yung ibang mga kaibigan niyong Hapon na tumulong din, our old Japan Seamen's Union has been very supportive, our three hospitals have been very helpful, talagang panahon ng pagtutulongan.

Ako ay nagpapasalamat sa inyo dahil kayo ay matulungin sa isa't-isa Manalangin tayo sa ikabubuti ng ating bansa, para sa mas mabilis na pagbangon muli ng ekonomiya ng mundo. At maraming salamat sa inyong malasakit, maraming salamat mabuhay ang Pilipinong manggagawa dito sa Hapon.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). PGMA's speech during a meeting with the Filipino community. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101452/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25407&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Forum organized by the International Friendship Exchange Council (FEC) Japan-ASEAN Economic and Cultural Committee, and the Asian International Exchange System (AIS)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Forum organized by the International Friendship Exchange Council (FEC) Japan-ASEAN Economic and Cultural Committee, and the Asian International Exchange System (AIS)

[Delivered at the Fuji Room, Imperial Hotel, Tokyo, Japan, June 19, 2009]

Thank you very much.

Mr. Inamori, Mr. Hanioka, officials of the International Friendship Exchange Council, Secretary Romulo, other officials of the Philippine government who are here today, members of the business delegation, ladies and gentlemen.

I thank the Chairman and President of the International Friendship Exchange Council for inviting me to address you, the members of the FEC. I thank the various Ambassadors who have also joined us here today. The FEC are friends of the Philippines. We share many goals.

As we are all aware, the world is experiencing unprecedented economic challenges. Without doubt, this is a global economic crisis that has affected all nations, rich and poor, developed and underdeveloped, North and South.

This is also a crisis that has taught us all many lessons that will serve us well as we work together to restructure the global economic system. The most important thing we have learned is that our economies are all closely interconnected. We sink or swim as one global economy.

Only months ago, the condition of that global economy was quite grim. Today, while we are by no means out of the woods, there are rays of hope. I heard this from leaders of the business community that I spoke with yesterday, and I heard this with officials of the Japanese government as I have been hearing from American economists and other experts from around the world.

Japan deserves special credit for its role in working to return the world to sustainable economic growth. Its innovative, generous and bold leadership in the G-7, G-20, ASEAN Plus Three and East Asian Summit, and its early pledge to provide the IMF 100 billion dollars for lending to countries facing financial liquidity not only provided much-needed support at a very critical time, it also encouraged other large economies to make similar pledges.

Japan's commitment to global and regional development has also been instrumental in tripling the capital of the Asian Development Bank and in increasing to a 120 billion dollars the level of funds for the Chiang Mai Initiative Multilateralization, which is an ASEAN solution to an ASEAN challenge.

Moreover, Prime Minister Aso's "Growth Initiative towards Doubling the Size of Asia's Economy" comes at a very crucial time for developing Asia. We in the Philippines will do our part to meet its objectives because we recognize that it can contribute to enhancing the economic prosperity of East Asia and lead to greater economic stability throughout the world.

If there is any silver lining in this crisis, it is that the world will emerge from this challenge with a structure that is more aligned to global realities than it was before the global downturn. But we must not look only at the economic situation of the world, we must also look at the security of our region. And in doing this, we cannot overlook the important issue of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and its nuclear weapons' program.

The Philippines stands with our trusted friend and ally, Japan, against the dangerous experimentations with nuclear weapons by North Korea. Japan has stood with the Philippines, with ASEAN, and with the region. Now we must stand with Japan for the success of critical talks about the future of the Korean peninsula. In this regard, we support the decisions of the United Nations Security Council.

And while we all want North Korea to become a responsible member of the world of nations, the Six-Party Talks is the appropriate forum to make this happen.

The Philippines is committed to work for a world free of nuclear weapons. In this regard, we continue to work as a member of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency to ensure an efficient and effective Agency for the promotion of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and for the prevention of nuclear weapons proliferation.

In cooperation with the IAEA, the Philippines is in the process of renewing our energy options including the use of nuclear power. We seek the cooperation of Japan for the training of our technical people and for Japan's counsel and advice in this very sensitive area.

As part of our drive for energy independence, the Philippines is also engaged in the development of renewable energy sources like geothermal, solar and wind which are climate friendly.

We also have projects for alternative transport fuels in biodiesel and bioethanol. Large tracks of land have been identified for the development of alternative fuels. They offer tremendous opportunities for foreign investment. And just this morning, before I came to this hall for this talk with you, I received the Chairman of Toyota who said that, indeed, Toyota intends to invest in this alternative energy in the Philippines.

Forty four percent of Philippine energy requirements are supplied from renewable resources. We intend to increase the share of this renewable energy in power generation. In this regard, we are seeking the cooperation of Japan. And later this shall be part of our message when we have our conversation with JBIC.

As an island developing country, the Philippines is seriously affected by climate change. And that is why renewable and climate friendly energy is important to us. According to a recent report of the ADB, Southeast Asia could face falling rice yields, a lack of water and higher costs to our economy due to the impact of climate change.

But while Southeast Asia is especially vulnerable to climate change, for the whole world, the challenge of climate change and the devastating permanent impact it will have on economies around the world will still be with us long after the global economy returns to health. That is why we must all take immediate and collective action to do everything possible to halt the practices that cause climate change.

Action on this front is urgent. We count on Japan to use its considerable influence to convince other major economies to commit to medium-term targets and the 80 percent 2050 target for emission cuts. The Philippines would like to see a meaningful medium-term target and a goal of an 80 percent reduction of greenhouse gas emissions by 2050 in line with the upper limit announced by former Prime Minister Fukuda.

Without diminishing the urgency of climate change as an important challenge for our nation, the Philippine economy remains, of course, our priority. In 2007, Philippine GNP grew by 8.0 percent, the highest in many years. Last year, when two-thirds of the world went into recession, our GNP grew at 6.1 percent. For the first quarter of this year, GNP growth was 4.4 percent. We remain optimistic, though cautiously optimistic, about our prospects for growth in 2009. We are heartened by the fact that we are still so far a growth story in the midst of this global challenge. We certainly don't take this for granted. We will remain vigilant. We will continue to take whatever action is required to preserve our hard-earned economic progress.

The Philippines has resisted the worst effects of the global downturn so far because we resisted the temptation, we broke the temptation to continue on our nation's previous path of debt, deficit and slow growth. That cycle was broken a few years ago when we pushed through fundamental reforms that changed the way we do business.

Today, the Philippines is one of the best investment choices in Asia, with our strong workforce, our world-class information and communications technology infrastructure, and our renewed commitment to economic reform, fiscal responsibility and global engagement.

Since 2004, Philippine national government debt has improved from more than 78 percent of GDP to about 56 percent at the end of 2008.

Our ability to reduce debt has been due in large part to our success in raising revenue. This can be attributed in turn in large part to the increase of our Value Added Tax in 2006. Tax reforms, including tax administration, as well as an aggressive privatization program, have provided the much-needed space for fiscal expansion during the current economic downturn.

The Philippines is finally unlocking its full potential and value for the benefit of its people but also for the benefit of its strategic partners. And no partner is more crucial to our success than Japan. I would love nothing more than for our two nations to accelerate our economic relations and build on the Japan Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement or JPEPA that was ratified recently by the Senate, by our Philippine Senate.

We are proud that our Philippine Senate — represented here in the hall by Senator Angara and in our trip by Senator Miriam Santiago as well who chaired the Committee on International Relations that took care of the ratification — we are proud that our Senate, very independent by tradition, joined hands with our Administration and forged ahead with a new strategic economic relationship with Japan that will help define the contours of our economic relations for generations. And that is the reason why we are here again here in Japan for the seventh time in my Administration including a State Visit in 2002 because this time our focus is on making sure that we have a smooth implementation of the Japan-Philippines EPA.

Last May, Filipino nurses and caregivers, who came to Japan under the new Japan-Philippines EPA framework, started language training in Tokyo, Osaka, Nagoya and Hiroshima. This I hope is the beginning of a mutually beneficial cooperation between our two countries in the important healthcare sector. I am confident that these our first batch of Filipino nurses and caregivers and other Filipino healthcare workers who are very much in demand in the whole world will help satisfy the fast-growing manpower requirements of Japan's aging population.

Our countries are also cooperating closely in the maritime sector. The Philippines accounts for approximately 70 per cent or 30,000 seafarers of the sailors manning Japanese vessels. It is no wonder that whenever I have a meeting with the Philippine community here in Japan we always hold it in the headquarters of the Japan Seamen's Union because they are such a dominant presence in that union.

Japan shipowners have established schools and training facilities in the Philippines. This is an important and creative approach to economic cooperation. It could be applied in other sectors of Japanese industry, in particular, the health sector now that the Japan-Philippines EPA has opened the doors for health workers to come to Japan.

As a major supplier of the world's seafarers, we greatly appreciate Japan's decision to send vessels from the Maritime Self-Defense Force to the Indian Ocean to protect Japanese ships and foreign ships from the scourge of piracy. Piracy is an international crime that requires close cooperation if it is ever to be stopped.

The active participation of Japan in combating piracy in the Indian Ocean is an example of the many roles that Japan have assumed internationally. This action and other actions clearly demonstrate that Japan should be a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council.

And as Asia's largest economy and largest source of Official Development Assistance, Japan is also in a position to work towards or to lead the work towards an Economic Community of Asia, to include South Asia, Southeast Asia, East Asia, the Middle East, Central Asia, Russia and Oceania, to maximize growth, trade, investment and financial stability in the Asian region. Because if we look at the world around us, Asia is the best situated to weather the global crisis and come out the strongest, compared with other regions. Japan is in a position to convene the regional groups such as the East Asian Summit, the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation or SARC, the Gulf Cooperation Council, Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States, and the Southwest Pacific Dialogue to discuss an Economic Community of Asia as a bulwark against economic crisis.

Ladies and gentlemen, FEC members, members of the diplomatic community, members of the Philippine delegation, we have all learned from the Japanese experience. We would do well to remember that in good times and bad, Japan has been there for all of us these last 50 years. In every endeavor, Japan has helped move mountains, be it in areas of regional peace and security, global economic stability or environmental stewardship.

On the part of the Philippines, we will remain on our path of reform and renewal, of fiscal prudence, targeted investments, and the fight against poverty. We want to succeed someday as Japan has succeeded. We need the continued investment, development assistance, and political leadership of Japan now more than ever.

With deep appreciation for all that Japan has done and is doing for our people and the world, I express our heartfelt thanks from a grateful nation for the historic support from the people of Japan.

We may all be challenged by the current state of the global economy, but I dare say our best days are ahead of us maybe because precisely of the lessons we have learned from this global crisis. Asia, the best place to survive the crisis and come out the strongest for it has tasted the bitter sting of economic setback, but we Asians are fighters. Far from setback, we are poised for a comeback.

And we are glad that the Japan-Philippines EPA will be there to help us in this Asian comeback.

I thank you. (applause)

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Forum organized by the International Friendship Exchange Council (FEC) Japan-ASEAN Economic and Cultural Committee, and the Asian International Exchange System (AIS). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101432/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25435&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a stopover visit and breakfast meeting with the Filipino community in Los Angeles, California, U.S.A.

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a stopover visit and breakfast meeting with the Filipino community in Los Angeles, California, U.S.A.

[Delivered at the Los Angeles International Airport, Los Angeles, California , U.S.A., June 20, 2009]

Aside from Secretary Bert Romulo and Senator Miriam, we have with us a number of senior government officials and Cabinet members and members of Congress, and our job is to protect the Philippines and our people from the full brunt of the global economic recession.

To date, we have kept that wolf away from the door through a combination of targeted stimulus investment and providing strengthened social safety nets for our most poor.

Well, I know you know what it means to have a recession or a slowdown. Our economic growth in the Philippines has also slowed, we have been affected but the good news is that we are comparatively better off than most other nations in the region and in the world.

Thank you. Salamat, salamat. Thank you for your support.

The slowdown even if it's not a recession, a slowdown tends to be on the back of the poor although every citizen is affected — middle-class, poor and rich alike. So, we have an economic resiliency plan and it has been designed to provide short-term relief to our most affected citizens while investing in the long-term prosperity of our nation.

But it is essential that we look a year or two ahead and prepare for long-term recovery and rebound and not be totally consumed with just managing through short-term challenges. And we are prepared for the rebound.

We took the necessary medicine in the past years to strengthen our revenues — and that is why I like to acknowledge our members of Congress, our Senator because they helped, they were the ones who legislated — the difficult revenue measures that we needed, and we have been able to use these revenues to invest in the people and the nation.

We have also made fiscal prudence and working towards a balanced budget, a central component of our long-term health. We will never lose sight of our need to balance our budget and for our government to live within its means.

We would have balanced the budget this year. In fact last year, it was almost balanced. But, as you all know, the global recession intervened. And with the global recession comes the need to provide stimulus for our economy. And we are here to support for our people who have been impacted. But we can take heart in the fact that there are signs of recovery in America, where you live; in America which is the biggest market in the world. And when America goes the rest of the world economy goes.

The prognosis from American economists about U.S. recovery starting sometime between July and next March further buttresses recovery expectations. U.S. manufacturing has slowed down the rate of contraction. And there are early signs of improvement in consumer spending — that's you, you're part of the U.S. consumers. And also signs of recovery in consumer confidence, and there's greater stability in the financial sector. AMEX and J.P. Morgan are raising equity. Dow Jones and S & P reached their highest levels since January and November, respectively.

So, if there are these signs of American recovery — the recovery of the economy that you have been contributing too as well and benefiting from — these are also signs that the global gloom is lifting. And when the rebound comes, we in the Philippines will be poised for growth and a balanced budget.

In this time of need, because we are still in time of need, we should continue to make tough choices that benefit the nation. As I said earlier, the government for its part must live within its means as a normal Filipino family does. But having said that, it is also essential to understand that one key to having kept our economy strong at home, has been a strong engagement with other countries abroad.

Through aggressive engagement, we've championed our OFWs. We have brought in new foreign investment. We have kept the Philippines top of mind with world leaders. And now more than ever, you our Overseas Filipinos, are keeping our nation resilient in times of global challenge. Thanks to your unswerving dedication, you our far-flung heroes have been a major contributor to our nation's economic resilience.

That is why I spare no effort to visit our valiant heroes across the globe, from the Middle East to the Midwest in the U.S.A., from Asia to North America to Brazil, you our Overseas Filipinos are first and foremost great patriots and great family men and women, and we salute you. Maraming salamat.

Everyone must step up and share in moving the nation forward.

Friend and foe alike must all join hands to see our nation through these times. It is important — and I saw some young Filipino-Americans here — it is important that our next generation will have hope and opportunity and not be mired perennially, permanently in economic paralysis.

The coming year will continue to be a challenge. At home in the Philippines and here in the United States, but I remain hopeful and optimistic. The global economy will still buffet our nation. America, as I said, were beginning to recover according to most of the economists but that recovery is not necessarily going to be rapid recovery.

So, therefore, there is still work to be done on the economy this year and next year. And we will remain vigilant to keep the recession from our shores.

What I would like to ask the FILUSA and the Filipinos here is to convey to our other Filipino compatriots here in the U.S.A. that we, I — and I think the members of Congress who are here with me today, and I think Senator Santiago, she's here with us today, and I think our Cabinet members who are here with us today — I think they will agree that I speak for them when I say that we will do everything within our grasp to keep the nation and the economy steady.

Filipinos are very special. We're among the most optimistic people in the world. And this optimism about our future keep showing survey after survey. So, I would like to ask FILUSA, the newly-organized organization that wants to communicate and empower the Filipino... to communicate too and empower the Filipinos here in America — let us keep the fire of optimism of our people burning. Because if we keep that optimism, and we our officials do our part to keep the nation steady, and each and everyone of the Filipinos in the Philippines and here in the United States where we have the biggest Overseas Filipino community in the world and where the biggest remittances come from. (applause) Yes, we must never forget that of the eight million Filipinos living abroad, three million are here in the United States, but you send us two-thirds of all the remittances.

And I thank you that inspite of the recession in the United States tuloy-tuloy pa rin ang tulong ninyo sa ating bansa.

So, with our Filipinos in the United States, and especially here in the Los Angeles area where within the United States we have the biggest community of Filipinos here. With you continuing to support us, as I have seen in your placards, then we can really say that we can be in good stead and our country are still in good hands. Good hands not only of the leaders of the government, good hands in the form of the hands of the leaders of the communities not only in the Philippines but here among the Filipino-Americans in Los Angeles and in the United States.

Mabuhay ang ating mga Pilipino dito sa Amerika!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a stopover visit and breakfast meeting with the Filipino community in Los Angeles, California, U.S.A. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101352/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25436&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a Meeting with the Filipino Community in Hong Kong Sar (Presidential Citation Award to OFW Mildred Perez) [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa pagpupulong kasama ang komunidad ng mga Filipino sa Hong Kong SAR

[Ipinahayag sa Hong Kong SAR, ika 28 ng Hunyo, 2009]

Maraming salamat sa halimbawang binigay mo, pero alam ko rin na bagamat hindi kasing traumatic ang kwento, ang kasaysayan ng inyong mga ibang mga OFW dito lahat kayo ay magandang halimbawa ng ating bansa, ng ating kababayan.

At inyong lingkod naman, gaya nang sabi ni Secretary Roque, ang ating pamahalaan kasama ng ating mga congressmen ay binibigyan talaga ng halaga ang ating mga Overseas Filipino Workers lalo na ngayon sa pagkakataon ng kahirapan sa buong mundo at pati na rin Hong Kong may nararamdamang kahirapan mas lalong kailangan asikasuhin ang inyong kapakanan. Kaya tamang-tama yung sinabi ni Secretary Nitoy Roque na maraming naghahanap ng mas malawak na reintegration program. At gusto ko ipaalam sa inyo, at pinapaalam natin sa iba't-ibang mga bahagi ng mundong may OFW na mayron nga tayong programa para doon sa mga mamalasin na kailangan umuwi o kailangan maghanap ng ibang trabaho at ito ay isang buong programang komprehensibo na pwedeng ipaliwanag or ipatupad na ng ating labor office dito.

Una sa lahat para sa doon sa kailangang babalik meron tayong Filipino Overseas Livelihood Fund, ang halaga nitong pondo ay one billion pesos, at ito ay pwedeng abutin ninyo bilang pautang doon sa mga kailangang bumalik. Magagamit ninyo para magsimula ng inyong sariling puhunan o kaya magkaoron ng panibagong training para sa ibang kakayahan na malaki ang demand para sa trabahong yun. At kung kailangan niyo ng training ay kasama rin sa ating programa yung TESDA ay nagbibigay ng talagang na nanggagaling sa hiniling ng mga prospective employers kasi gusto natin na kung anuman kung magre-retraining kayo dahil nawalaan ng trabaho ay kailangan makakahanap ng trabaho, so dapat yung training doon na magbibigay ng bagong trabaho. Kaya kaugnay na ng DOLE at ng TESDA ang mga employers, nililista ng employers kung ano ang mga kailangan doon, doon nag-eensayo sa mga returning OFWs. In fact, napaka-successful yung programang yun kung minsan hindi na kailangan bumalik dahil diretso meron nang ibang naghahanap na employer.

At doon din tayo sa isang ating programa yung paghanap ng bagong trabaho sa inyo. Kaya yung Secretary of Labor natin pati na rin yung POEA ay gumagawa ng hindi lang proteksyon ng manggagawa, ang ginagawa natin dahil may global recession maraming lugar nawawalan ng trabaho may mga lugar naman na hindi nawawalaan ng trabaho dahil nagsu-survive sila sa crisis at nagdadagdag pa at doon naman nagkakaroon ng marketing blitz.

At magbibigay ako ng isang halimbawa, nung kami ay pumunta sa Dubai sabi ni Secretary Nitoy Roque kasi napakarami nating manggagawang nawalaan ng trabaho sa Dubai. In fact, yung unang nagbalita sa akin na isang congressman dahil sumulat sa kanya yung kanyang constituent sabi na lalay off kami dito sa Dubai. Eh hindi tayo makapaniwala noon nung maaga pa ito dahil dinig natin na yung Middle East ay hindi natamaan ng krisis pero nung tsinek totoo pala yung Dubai ay natamaan. So, nag-schedule tayo ng biyahe sa Dubai at meron naman nagsasabi, bakit ka pupunta sa Dubai? Anong investment makukuha mo doon ngayon naghihirap ang Dubai?

Ang sagot doon ay hindi naman investment ang hinahanap natin doon kung hindi trabaho. At the end of the day, trabaho ang hinahanap natin kahit ako investment ang hinahanap natin trabaho pa rin ang hinahanap natin para sa ating mga mamamayan. So nagpunta kami dito sa Dubai, at hindi lang kami nagpunta sa Dubai ang ginawa inimbata yung mga employers sa buong Middle East na pumunta sa Dubai dahil pangulo ng Pilipinas ang nag-iimbata, mga may-ari ng malalaking kumpanya ay nagpunta doon, mga head ng malalaking employment and recruitment agencies ay nagpunta doon. At yung nawalaang trabaho — mga ilan? 5,000 workers — 5,000 workers nawalang trabaho sa Dubai pero ang na-offer ng mga employers na pumunta doon sa Dubai dahil nagkaroon ng summit ay 221,000 jobs.

Kaya lahat nang may available jobs sa lahat ng 5,000 na nawalaan. Kung merong hindi nakapasok ay dahil mali ang skills nila kaya ...(audio cut)... may mga 200,000 jobs na binigay nung mga employers ay linista nila yung ano ang pangangailangan nila para sa ganun mayron dun sa 5,000 na hindi pumasok ...(audio cut)... trabaho.

Kaya yun ang isang ginagawa natin para masigurado ba yung ating mga Pilipino sa buong mundo dahil meron tayong global recession ay hindi magkakaroon ng lubhang kahirapan. Kaya ako ay nasisiyahan na makapunta dito, makipagbalita sa inyo at tamang-tama dahil hinahanap niyo yung reintegration program na yun, eto yung reintegration program at papalawakin natin yung training dito. At yung training na gagawin ni Nitoy ay hindi yung ordinaring basta ano lang training ang gagawin, eto yung training sa mga skills na hinihingi mismo ng prospective employers specifically specific skills.

So, inaasahan ko na yun ang ating magagawa para sa inyo. At Mildred, salamat sa iyong halimbawa at pinataas mo muli ang profile ng ating dakilang anggagawang Pilipino.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a meeting with the Filipino community in Hong Kong Sar (Presidential Citation Award to OFW Mildred Perez). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101245/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25516&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the closing program of the Strategic Conference on Social Welfare and Protection

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the closing program of the Strategic Conference on Social Welfare and Protection

[Delivered at the Heroes Hall, Malacañang, July 7, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Cabral.

This document that's handed over to me by Secretary Romy Neri is the result of what I announced in my State of the Nation Address last year that we are integrating the programs of DSWD, DOH, GSIS, SSS, and other Anti-Poverty agencies.

And this is one reason why I accepted the invitation of Brazilian President Lula da Silva to make a State Visit, where Espie Cabral was one of the members of my official party, because we wanted to study Brazil's exemplary social protection program. The World Bank and others say that Brazil's social protection program especially 'Bolsa Familia' program had immediate and significant effects on the living conditions of its poor population, without discouraging work and job search. In fact, Brazil has already reached the Millennium Goal of reducing extreme poverty by half for 2015. So, it is indeed a model that we should study.

Brazil's Ministry of Social Development and Fight Against Hunger was created in January 2004 to coordinate social assistance, food and nutrition security, and income transfer action. They have a single system of social assistance and food and nutrition security.

Similarly in our country, as a result of the work in progress then of what is this document now, we tasked the Secretary of Social Welfare and Development to coordinate the programs that were set forth in this document, in this plan whose crafting was headed by Romy Neri. And these programs are implemented not only by DSWD but also by SSS, GSIS, PhilHealth, DOH and the Nutrition Council, TESDA, DepEd, CHED, PAG-IBIG, NHA, Micro SMED Council, Department of Energy and others.

Brazil's system of social assistance includes continuous benefit for aging and disabled people, fight against sexual abuse, violence and exploitation for child and adolescent victims, and its flagship or its most popular smarky project — the 'Bolsa Familia' Program.

Similarly in the Philippines, SSS and GSIS provide pensions for aging people. Employers, in fact, we should thank for they have funded the two increases in SSS benefits since 2005. And GSIS pensions have been indexed to inflation and have increased every year since 2001. The elderly who are not covered by SSS and GSIS were given a one-time 500-peso medical assistance last year when we had a big increase in our VAT collections. Senior citizens enjoy 20 percent discount on food, transportation and recreational services. And Vice President de Castro was the author of that Senior Citizens Act when he was a senator.

Benefits for disabled people include mandatory 20 percent on discounts on medicines for the aged, medical and dental services, transportation fare for domestic air and sea travel and public utility, and educational assistance. The PNR, in fact, offers 50 percent for train rides.

Educational skills training opportunities are available to persons with disabilities. We facilitate their mobility by requiring public places and buildings to have access ramps, and mass transport facilities to reserve places with special fittings for them. Businesses are encouraged to hire qualified PWDs. In the Office of the President, I am proud of the PWDs that we have had with us for the last eight years.

In our fight against sexual violence, abuse and exploitation of children and adolescents, the DSWD provides community based services and operates residential and non-residential centers and institutions for the disadvantaged, including children, youth and women. Community based services cover such activities as adoption; foster and legal guardianship; travel clearances; counseling; educational support and legal assistance. Financial, transportation and medical assistance may also be offered to the disadvantaged during crisis situations.

A landmark in our campaign against the exploitation of women and children as the passage of our Anti-Trafficking of Human Persons Act. Putting emphasis on prevention, we are now more strict in the enforcement of the law at exit points, particularly at our international airports.

Two years ago — was it two years? — we've introduced a program similar to Bolsa Familia called Pantawid Pamilya.

Brazil's Bolsa Familia Program is a direct conditional cash transfer created in 2003 by Federal Law, whereas, our Pantawid Pamilya is still an administrative program. But I am glad that I have brought with me to Brazil a congressional delegation and they have committed to sponsor a bill to institutionalize our pantawid Pamilya into a "Bolsa Pamilya" Program. Because if that Brazilian's program is Bolsa Familia, why we also have Bolsa Pamilya.

The three dimensions of the Brazilian Bolsa Familia Program are relief, conditionalities, and third, capacity development. Relief we know the income transfer to the beneficiary families. In Brazil it consists of three components:

There's a basic of 30 dollars paid to families whose monthly per capita income is 35 dollars. In the Philippines our basic benefit is 500 pesos.

And then in Brazil there's a variable benefit, two variable benefits, in fact, 10 pesos is paid to families even if their income is 70 dollars not 35 if they have adolescent children. And under 15, with a maximum of three benefits per family plus youth, and benefit of 15 dollars if they have adolescents age 16 and 17, that's because they have a lot of I think exploitation of teenagers with a maximum benefit of two benefits per family.

In the Philippines, we have one variable benefit. That's 300 pesos per month per child age 3 to 14, with maximum benefits of 1,400 pesos per month per family.

Now in Brazil, to be registered, a family has to answer a questionnaire. Then the Federal Government analyses the information and identifies the families that should enter the program. Then the benefits are paid by the Federal Government directly to the families who draw them monthly from banks and other establishments using a magnetic card.

In the Philippines, it's very similar, the benefits are also withdrawn from the ATM service of the Land Bank unless other arrangements need to be made. For instance, in Siargao Island there's no Land Bank branch, so to get the ATM money from Surigao City they end up spending their whole month's stipend. So, now there's another arrangement for them in Siargao Island itself.

And in the Philippines, the way that Espie chose the beneficiaries, they're selected from: First, the poorest provinces listed in the 2006 Family Income and Expenditure Survey; second, the poorest municipalities in those poorest provinces according to the National Statistical Coordination Board Small Area Estimates of 2003; and in addition, 15 highly urbanized cities with large pockets of poverty; and fourth, results of a household survey where families are ranked according to their socio-economic status through a Proxy Means Test like the way their house looks or appliances they have and so on.

Now, in Brazil, upon entering the Bolsa Familia Program, the family is committed to comply with conditions to keep children and adolescents of school age in school, and to fulfill a vaccination schedule for children 0-6 years, and pre-natal and post-natal care for pregnant women and breastfeeding mothers. And that's very similar to our Pantawid Pamilya.

In Brazil, however, the program has a capacity development component among the families, by means of separate but complementary actions from the three governmental levels — Federal, State and Provincial. The Single Registry data, because they only have one master list, enables identification of the characteristics of the families, and it orients the delivery of public services according to their profile, and this contributes to their autonomy and emancipation. And President Lula told me or the Governor of Recife told me that there are those who, in fact a lot, have already graduated from that program.

Some of these capacity building programs include literacy courses, popular housing is what they call it and we call it social housing, access to electric energy, inclusion in banking or microcredit, and work and income opportunities, particularly in civil construction, which we call public works, in partnership with private companies and for the 26 capitals and the Federal District, tourism as well. And what they do first is to train the members of the beneficiary families for this occupations.

And that is something that can enrich our Pantawid Pamilya Program. In other words, and that's why I asked the several Cabinet members to come and join us today, Pantawid Pamilya families should also have access to adult literacy courses — who does this, is it DepEd?; social housing under PAG-IBIG for those who are members and National Housing Authority for those who are not members of PAG-IBIG; microcredit through the Micro SMED Council of Peter Favila — I'm looking for him — and which is chaired by the Secretary of Trade and Industry; and training scholarship of TESDA for tourism skills for NCR and Central Philippines and company-specified courses for the Luzon Urban Beltway, and construction skills for the rest of the country. And the DOE's Barangay Electrification program should also form part of the Pantawid Pamilya.

Now by itself, even in Brazil, the Bolsa Familia is not a self-sufficient strategy to reduce poverty and inequality. It is in fact, part of a broader social protection and promotion network in Brazil. Such should also be the case in the Philippines, which is why we asked Romy Neri to lead in putting this document together.

The Brazilian National System on Food and Nutrition Security was also implemented by Federal Law in 2006. For our part, we also have a Hunger Mitigation Program coordinated by the National Nutrition Council, which is under the DOH's oversight. And the survey say that this program has been successful in bringing down hunger. But we can still improve in this program just a little bit more, as I said in my SONA last year, by having a massive schoolfeeding program worth 10 pesos per child in our poorest and most food poor provinces, namely: Tawi-Tawi, Zambo Norte, Maguindanao, Apayao, Surigao del Norte and Sur, Dinagat, Lanao Sur, Northern Samar, Masbate, Abra, Misamis Occidental, Agusan Sur and Kalinga. And we should make this Hunger Mitigation Program also part of our Integrated Social Welfare Program. Tise Integrated Social Welfare Program should also include SSS and GSIS salary loans, health insurance, and scholarships such as the "One Town, One Scholar" Program.

We are proud that aside from offering free basic education, college scholarship funds have doubled, while private high school scholarship funds have almost tripled to almost 700,000 slots this schoolyear from less than 300,000 slots when we started in 2001.

And since 2001, we have passed nine very good laws protecting the most vulnerable members of our society, those who are intended beneficiaries of our social services. This include as I mentioned Noli's law on Senior Citizens, which we added to during our administration; what we mentioned earlier, the Trafficking of Persons, the Magna Carta for the Disabled, the Anti-Violence Against Women and Children.

And now that the Integrated Social Welfare and Protection Program is under way — and that is what your meeting is all about — I have been meeting with teachers now and other educators. I formed a Task Force for Education composed of heads of public and private agencies, it was headed by Romy Neri when he was the head of CHED, now headed by Father Bienvenido Nebres, president of Ateneo University. So, Romy started the study also and it includes business and professionals to get a first-hand look at the improvements we need to make. I have listened to what they have to say and therefore these fine public servants and stockholders what they have to say.

And I am glad they have produced the Philippine Main Education Highway which maps out the reforms and interventions needed to ensure that the Filipino family's investments are properly translated into best results. The successful completion of each stage of the Education Highway — early childhood, elementary school, high school, college or vocational and technical education, and for some even post-graduate education is a means to a productive and well-paying job and a good future.

So, these are the two programs that are really important for us to integrate. One is a Social Welfare and Protection Program, where although there are many departments involved, many agencies involved we have asked Romy to put them together first and enumeration of what they're doing and then filling in the gaps and how to consolidate now that we implemented, being implemented at the direction of the DSWD, and the second other integration is the integration of our educational system.

So, I thank everybody involved in putting together these two very important plans, and I wish the best to all those who are in charge of implementing our Integrated Social Welfare and Protection Program.

Maraming salamat and Good luck to all of us!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the closing program of the Strategic Conference on Social Welfare and Protection. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101139/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25552&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the provincial launching of the National Youth Service Program
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the provincial launching of the National Youth Service Program

[Delivered at the Covered Court, Guagua East Central School campus, Brgy. Sta. Filomena, Guagua, Pampanga,
July 9, 2009]

Dacal a salamat. Dacal a salamat king anak kung Congressman Mikey.

At pupugayan king kekatang congressman naman king BUTIL Party List y Congressman Pitong Guanlao; at siyempre king kekatang mayor, Mayor Rivera ampo y Vice Mayor Tuaño; Secretary Cabral, thank you so much for joining us today and thank you for your very active participation here in our program; ing NYC Chairman Richie Nalupta and all the other officers of NYC, thank you for helping put this very important program together; and General Versoza a very active participant of this program; and we have also from Guagua Undersecretary Bacani, and the DPWH just showed us that more than that will be used for their active participation in this program.

Kekatang Board Member keti king distrito y Board Member Catalina Bagasina, Happy Birthday, belated! Karing kekatamung volunteers, youth service, mayap a oras karing kayanakan. Ngening aldo iti, susulung taya ing National Youth Service Corps para mamie obra ampong oportunidad kareng kekatamung kayanakan edad disiotso angga beintekuwatro, ding ausan dang formative years.

Ing national youth service tamu kalupa ning sinabi ning Richie Nalupta nandin atin yang adwang parte: a National Service Corps and a Youth Conservation Corps. Ing metung, ing menona National Service Corps is geared to the unemployed or underemployed college graduates. It focuses on their contributions to education and community service program. Mudeni kanayakan are recruited to undertake a service commitment natin ditak a allowance. Ing metung naman, ing Youth Conservation Corps, composed ya deng out-of- school youth. Mag-focus la karing proyekto ning environment ampu imprastraktura.

Alimbawa, kalupa ning sinabi ng Richie nandin, mumuran na, rainy season na — salamat keni aldo ali mumuran — oneng rainy season na ngeni, panaun na para mag-obra na OYSTER king danum. Oneng bansagan taya ini antimong Organized Youth Stewards of Esteros and Rivers, OYSTER naman, at kalupa ning sinabi ng Richie maging lang amphibian component ning maragul a OYSTER. Linisan ta deng kanal ampong estero — retang mangalati na y na kailangang makina. Linisan da ing basura at sana nang da ing polusyon nukarin dadalan ing danum. At saka la sana makisabi, mangumbinsi karing makatuknang karing gilid ilog a maging aktibong kasaup ban kanita e la lumbag at saka ing estero eya naman maging basurahan. Balu yu, qing Marikina, masanting ya ing riverbank. Menikayat na ng y nga LGU karelang kabalen at meging alimbawa ning mabisang community action king waterway rehabilitation ita ing kekatamung model king project tamung ini.

Kaya ing importante patuluy tayang patnubayan ing kekatamung ekonomiya anggang agyu. Salamat sa lahat ng mga agency na nakikipag-ugnay dito sa proyektong ito kasi eta mu dapat masaul king global economic crisis. Patuluy tang mamuhunan karing kekatamung memalen at king kekatamung bansa ban siguraduan tamu ing pundasyon ding memalen para king masanting a kinabukasan.

Kaya sa inyong lahat, maraming, maraming sa lahat ng ahensyang tumutulong at congratulations karing kayanakan a kasapi king kekatang National Youth Service Corps.

Congratulations kekongan!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). Pres. Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the provincial launching of the National Youth Service Program. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412101108/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25579&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during a call by the delegates of the 5th Ambassadors/Consuls General and Tourism Directors Tour (ACGTDT)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a call by the delegates of the 5th Ambassadors/Consuls General and Tourism Directors Tour
(ACGTDT)

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, July 11, 2009]

Thank you, Thank you.

Thank you, Ambassador Brillantes for your introduction.

Secretary Romulo; Secretary Favila, our Secretary of Trade and Industry; Undersecretary Palabyab of the Department of Tourism; our Consuls General; our tourism officers, attaches, representatives; and of course, our visiting friends from the United States whether Filipinos or friends of the Filipinos.

Welcome back to the Philippines! Welcome to Malacanang!

As Secretary Romulo said, today is the fifth year of this Ambassadors/Consuls General, and Tourism Directors Tour. And I'm happy to see that the tourist, bigger than ever, that interest has not waned one bit among our kababayans and friends in North America about visiting the Philippines.

And as always, as in every year, I understand that once again, the biggest contingent of participants come from Hawaii. Aloha! Naimbag nga bigat yo amin.

For some of you, this may be your first time to visit and discover the motherland. For others, it may be a homecoming of sorts and a reconnection to old but unbroken ties. For all of you, whether you're a first timer or a repeater, a real balikbayan in that sense, I hope that this journey becomes a journey of appreciation for the country, the people, and the unique spirit of the Philippines.

And as our officials here in the platform said, "this trip defies all global economic odds." And we all know, especially North America, that the past twelve months have been a year for the history books. The global financial turmoil has spread and jeopardized the well-being of billions of people across the globe.

And the stark reality is that even Philippine economic growth has slowed. We have been affected. But we are comparatively better off than most other nations.

Last year, we managed to grow our GDP by 3.8 percent and our GNP by 6.2 percent. In the first quarter of this year our GNP continued to post positive growth of 4.4 percent, GDP at 0.4 percent. Standard & Poor's reports of nine countries seem to post positive growth in 2001. And one of those nine countries is the Philippines.

This is a reality from which we can and should take heart and hope. Our work is never done. But the Philippines we see today is different from the Philippines eight years ago. Back then was a perilous time for our economy with our country teetering near bankruptcy.

Since 2001, our economy has posted uninterrupted growth for 33 quarters. It has doubled its size from 76 billion dollars to a 168 billion dollars. We have brought down the rate of poverty. It has increased per capita GNP from 967 dollars to a middle-class of 2,051 dollars. The economy supported 7 million entrepreneurs; reversed our balance of payment deficit to a record surplus of 8.6 billion dollars in 2007; grew the business process outsourcing industry from almost nothing to a six billion-dollar industry; and enhanced tax revenues by P291 billion more between November 2005 and December 2008.

And I'm very glad that we've been able to do all these because we hope that you, our Overseas Filipinos will be very proud of us for that.

We took the bitter medicine years ago — that's why we had this 291 billion pesos extra money now — we took the bitter medicine in the past years to strengthen our revenues and invest in the people and the nation. Now, we have an economy that is stronger and able to withstand shocks such as what the global financial crisis is throwing at us.

We have also invested in new and modern infrastructure. For those of you who will travel to the north by car, there's the first-world Subic-Clark-Tarlac Expressway as one example. But on the other side of the spectrum, there's also the 13,000 kilometers of farm-to-market roads. Indeed, among administrations we have built the most roads, the most international airports, and the most seaports.

The Roll-on/Roll-off or RORO system has three nautical highways composed of roads and vehicle ferry routes that go from Mindanao to Luzon.

Our job today is to protect the Philippines and our people from the full brunt of the global economic recession. We would have balanced our budget this year were it not for the global recession and the need to provide stimulus for our economy and welfare support for our people who have been impacted. But through all these efforts I'm talking about and how we've been able to withstand the global recession, let me say that one key to keeping our economy strong at home has been our vigorous engagement with other countries abroad.

We have championed our OFWs and brought in new foreign investment. Net foreign direct investments multiplied from a 195 million dollars in 2001 to a peak of almost three billion dollars in 2007. But now more than ever, it is you, our Overseas Filipinos who are helping very much, keeping our nation resilient in times of global challenges. Your remittances reached a record 16.4 billion dollars in 2008; you contributed 10 percent of our GDP. Thank you for that.

And so far this year, your remittances will overall, the whole world are already higher by 2.58 percent than last year's. And for that I thank your unswerving dedication. You are really our far-flung heroes. When I said 2.5 percent overall, I had to point out overall because Filipinos in the U.S. and Canada remain the top two remitters of funds to the Philippines. Thank you again for that. And I especially note that those of you based in Canada have already remitted 65 percent more than last year. So thank you so much for that.

So, it should not be surprising that I spare no effort to visit our Overseas Filipinos across the globe — from Asia to Brazil, from the Middle East to the Midwest in the U.S. One of the benefits of our travels is the protection of our OFWs in difficult situations. For instance on my request, King Juan Carlos of Spain and Prince Khalifa, the Prime Minister of Bahrain, even though there are very few problems in their countries of our OFWs, they've been interceding with their peers in other countries in behalf of our OFWs.

In 2005, on the occasion of my visit, the state visit to Saudi Arabia, King Abdullah triggered a process of amnesty to more than 700 detained OFWs. And I brought a planeload of them home as part of my entourage. Among those pardoned was the death convict Sarah Dematera, who has since returned home. Likewise through my personal intervention, the Emir of Kuwait commuted the death sentences of OFWs Marilou Ranario and May Vecina.

Another benefit of our international engagement has been the chance to work with you, our Fil-Ams to promote our veterans' rights. The day I visited Washington early this year was the day Senator Daniel Inouye successfully sponsored the inclusion of the lump-sum benefits for Filipino veterans in the Fiscal Stimulus Package of the U.S.

So, we're able to work together on that. And you, the Filipinos in the U.S., know only too well how long you have struggled in order to get recognition for our veterans.

The whole nation is grateful to our Overseas Filipinos for your dedication. So I hope that when you return home — well, first you return home to your provinces here and enjoy yourselves and then you return home to your new land, your new home — I hope you can bring to our kababayans in your communities the message that your countrymen and women at home fully appreciate the many ways you, our Overseas Filipinos, share your skills, time and resources with the Philippines here, and what a contribution you have made to the resilience of your homeland.

On our part, to the best of our ability, let us assure you that we will continue to work to keep the global recession from overwhelming our country — your country here. It won't be easy, but with the support of our people, and with the continuing support of you, our Overseas Filipinos, I'm sure we can rise to the challenge.

So more than ever, I thank you all. And I wish all of you an enjoyable stay in the Philippines.

Mabuhay! Welcome! And thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a call by the delegates of the 5th Ambassadors/Consuls General and Tourism Directors Tour (ACGTDT). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100858/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25629&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Opening Ceremony of the 15th Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) Summit on behalf of the Asian Group

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Opening Ceremony of the 15th Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) Summit on behalf of the Asian Group

[Delivered at the Congress Hall, Maritim Congress Center, Sharm El Sheikh, Egypt, July 15, 2009]

Your Excellency President Mohamed Hosni Mubarak Your Majesties; Your Excellencies; His Excellency Mr. Ban Ki-Moon; Ladies and Gentlemen.

Mr. President, I am honored to address this distinguished assembly on behalf of the Asian Region and the heads of State or Government, and the Heads of Delegations to the 15th Conference of Leaders of the Non-Aligned Movement, in this beautiful city of Sharm El Sheikh.

We are delighted to see you, Mr. President, at the helm of the Non-Aligned Movement.

Mr. President, we are confident that under your very able stewardship, our organization, the voice of the developing world, will be able to forge increased international solidarity as we work to address such significant challenges as faster and more equitable levels of economic development and poverty alleviation, climate change, the quest for greater peace and security, closer interfaith dialogue and the protection of migrant workers.

Mr. President, the theme for this Conference, “International Solidarity for Peace and Development,” is a timely and fitting response to the crying needs of our time. Your Excellency understands well the realities of the world’s economy and politics today.

We, as part of an integrated global community, must work together to halt the divisions in international relations that work against our common effort to promote peace, stability, development and progress. We must intensify our collective efforts to enhance equity, democracy, inclusiveness, the rule of law and justice in the international system. Giving just recognition to differentiated approaches, based on different national capacities among us, serves to strengthen our solidarity as a strong voice in the world today.

Mr. President, Your Excellency takes the leadership of the Non-Aligned Movement at a critical time. The world remains in the grip of the deep and negative impacts of the global financial crisis. The road to saving the planet from global warming at the upcoming meeting in Copenhagen is strewn with barriers to international consensus in our global fight against climate change. The world’s nuclear arsenals can lead to human distinction.

The Non-Aligned Movement brings together nations to address such global challenges as well as such issues as the welfare and development of migrant workers in this increasingly globalized world and also the importance of interfaith and intercultural understanding.

The issues confronting humanity are so grave that there is no time, no time for rigid ideologies while the poor suffer. The global economic crisis has taught the world many lessons but the primary one is that: peace and development and the return to stability in our global financial system can only move forward in an atmosphere of international cooperation. In our continent of Asia, there is such an example of this, the ASEAN Plus Three countries have been engaged in such cooperation. Among other actions we are multilateralizing our Chang Mai Initiative to help solve liquidity problems that may occur in our region.

Such cooperation can only come through dialogue. Dialogue creates mutual understanding, respect and tolerance. And for more than 50 years, the Non-Aligned Movement has been one of the most respected platforms for dialogue amongst the developing countries in the world.

Mr. President, international solidarity can be effectively developed through dialogue amongst peoples, civilizations, and religions. Toward this end, Asia will contribute its share, including the hosting by the Philippines of the Special Non-Aligned Movement Ministerial Meeting on Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace on December 1st to 3rd this year in Manila.

The meeting in December will mark the first time that the Non-Aligned Movement will harness the great potentials of interfaith dialogue and cooperation to advance our secular concerns for a durable and lasting peace and sustainable development. This meeting will give representatives from the over 100 Non-Aligned Movement member countries an opportunity to focus on the role interfaith dialogue and cooperation can play in averting and ending the conflicts that are bringing death and destruction to countries around the world.

I hope to see all our Non-Aligned Movement member countries in Manila.

We also take this opportunity, Mr. President, to thank the NAM membership for endorsing the Philippines' presidency to the 2010 Review Conference of the Non-Proliferation Treaty which was mentioned by His Excellency Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon in his statement earlier today and which he said, "we must not allow to fail." And so, I hope that all the Non-Aligned Movement member countries having selected the Philippines to head this Review Conference will support that conference and make it a success.

Mr. President, if the developing world speaks as one and the Non-Aligned Movement we can speak as one, we have the potential to speak as one then we have the power to move forward toward faster solution to the many challenges facing the world today.

And in behalf of Asia, Mr. President, I'm sure I speak for each and every member country coming from Asia when I say that you can count on the full cooperation of all the Asian Non-Aligned Movement member countries in the pursuit of the goals and principles of our great movement.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Opening Ceremony of the 15th Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) Summit on behalf of the Asian Group. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100746/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25647&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the League of Municipalities of the Philippines-Zero Bazura Caravan 2009

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the League of Municipalities of the Philippines-Zero Bazura Caravan 2009

[Delivered at the Waterfront Insular Hotel, Davao City, July 17, 2009]

Thank You.

Other cabinet members; Monching Guico and the other mayors who are here with us today; we have Congressman Anton Lagdameo Congressman Way Kurat Zamora here with us, good morning to you; and to all of you; to the municipal governments under the able leadership of Monching Guico, for spearheading very important caravan that responds to issues on the environment and health, congratulations to all of you!

And thank you for the Manifesto that you have presented Monching. I understand this is the manifesto from all the caravans that have been done starting with Region I because this caravan today is the culminating activity of all the caravans all over the country as Gerry Calderon has reported to you. And I hope that among those commitments is a common commitment to put up or to invest in MRFs in your different barangays.

I have just returned from the Conference of Leaders of the Non Aligned Movement or NAM held in Egypt. And I spoke in behalf of Asia, and I expressed confidence that the developing world will be able to forge increased international solidarity as we work to address such significant global challenges as faster and more equitable levels of economic development and poverty alleviation, the quest for greater peace and security, which is an issue that unfortunately Mindanao knows only too well, closer interfaith dialogue, the protection of migrant workers, and climate change.

Even there in the NAM, it was acknowledged that we must not lose sight of the challenges we were already addressing before the onset of the global economic crisis. And high on the list of these challenges is climate change.

Amidst climate change we have put into action our drive for energy security and environmental conservation. This includes initiatives for which financing up to $250 million could be sourced from the Asian Development Bank and through the trading of Philippine carbon credits. Now as local government units, you have corporate powers. You can access this facility of the ADB and you can create in carbon credits.

In fact, as an example, this partnership is presently undertaking a program to replace incandescent bulbs with compact fluorescent bulbs. That is a national program of the DOE to the ADB, but you can have your own individual programs using carbon credits.

Well, Sonny Alvarez is here, our presidential adviser for climate change. And he's been talking to the ADB, perhaps you can help them on how to access that ADB facility for which the Philippines can grow up to $250 million. It's actually a two-billion facility, but every country can access up to $250 million.

Also, one of the jobs of Sonny Alvarez as my PACC is to participate in the crucial negotiations leading to the Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change to be held this December in Copenhagen.

The Philippines is active in the preparatory discussions and negotiations. Because if we are going to impact the climate change dialogue and we must, because we're going to be one of those who will suffer the most from climate change, we must carry a message to the ongoing meetings.

We must remain actively involved in negotiations concerning carbon emission reduction targets, because we are not a big contributor to carbon emission which causes climate change, but we are a big victim, so we have to convince the other countries, the ones who are emitting a lot of carbon to reduce their carbon and to present _____ for carbon emission reduction.

Also because they have contributed to global warming because of their carbon emission, the industrialized countries should somehow make up to that by providing financing for countries like us who are not really at fault but who are victimized to adapt to climate change. And also share with us technology that we can use to adapt to climate change. So, the industrialized countries must decide, before the Copenhagen meeting on how much they will reduce their carbon emission. And what they announced as a target will enable us to determine whether or not we can keep global temperature rise to less than 2 percent. Why is 2 percent so important? Because beyond that point, countries like us and our neighbors in Southeast Asia could lose as much as 6.7 percent of GDP yearly by 2010. We will suffer more than twice the rest of the world according to the Asian Development Bank.

Our region of Southeast Asia is one of the most vulnerable regions to climate change because we have a high economic activity along our long coastlines. Imagine coastlines disappear because climate change, global warming will cause the polar ice capture the north pole in Antarctica to melt and the water will rise in the ocean, and our coasts on which we rely so much for the livelihood of our people will disappear. Also we depend heavily on agriculture, forestry and other natural resources. And with climate change and global warming comes all these aberrations in the typhoons, getting more frequent, getting stronger and therefore that will also impact on us.

As I said earlier, we produce only one-third of one percent of the global green house gases, much lower in per capita terms than those of industrialized nations. But from rising tides, as I mentioned to changing weather, and even to deforestation and the pollution of the air, sea and land, to us the challenges and change are great. We are 7,000 islands, and for us when the seas rise due to global warming that's a whole new meaning. 7,000 islands and many of them are, you know, there a few islands that are called 'luli'. I thought they were named after my daughter Luli. Yun pala they are short for 'luluboglilitaw – luli'. When the tide is high, they go under water. When the tide is low, they surface. Well, if the tide becomes permanently high, talagang lulubog. And that will be a lot of island of the Philippines. In fact, they have a saying, "With climate change and global warming Florida may lose some coastline, but some of us may lose a nation. That's why we must work together to solve this problem. And if wdo, it will be one of the great achievements in our history.

Whoever is at fault, we're saying we're not at fault. But every nation, developing or developed, must assume the mantle of leadership and work to address the challenge of climate change. On the part of the Philippines, we have begun the Green Philippines plan. This is a blueprint for mapping our environment and economic policies that will allow for sustainable development that doesn't fall on the backs of the poor or erode our environment. Yes, there is a cost to make the Green Philippines come to life.

For instance, a factory will have to spend extra money for treating its water, that's extra cost. There is a cost to making the Green Philippines come to life. But the cost is greater without the plan and the investment in our people and the environment.

Because what happens when we spoil the environment. The cost may not be so much for one factory or maybe for one town. But it will be very large for the country as a whole in terms of lower production of agriculture, fisheries have been lower in output because of the rising tides. Health being bad because of the pollution.

We took the bitter pill in the past years to strengthen our revenues and invest in the people and the nation. And we enhanced tax revenues by P291 billion more between November 2005 and December 2008. Kauban si Waykurat kaniadto when he was already a congressman during the time of our difficult tax reforms.

And this year, the LGUs have started to enjoy 40 percent of that increased in taxes. In other words, from the P100 billion additional value added tax, P40 billion now goes to the local government units.

So, I hope that the members of the League of Municipalities will use part of your increased IRA to invest in the MRF that Gerry Calderon was telling us about in his report.

Patuloy natin ang pamumuhunan sa 3 E's — Ekonomiya, Environment, Edukasyon.

Dear mayors, together we have been working all these years, 8 years now, we've been able to work to get the economy working again. But still there are two Philippines as I've said very often: One is where the economy is working again and moving ahead; the other is where the political system is badly broken. And I thank you for advocating the need to fix the broken political system.

But even as we begin fundamental political reform to fix our broken political system, let me say in no uncertain terms: there will be elections in 2010. (applause) Anyone who questions our resolve on this critical issue is undermining our nation's commitment to a vibrant democracy.

And let me thank this opportunity to congratulate the COMELEC for putting the finishing touches to put in place the automation of next year's polls.

And I call on all of you dear mayors, not only to put up your MRFs in your barangays but to support the COMELEC in making the first ever nationwide automated elections in our country a success. These elections will send a signal that our democracy remains strong, viable and stable. So much depends on our local government units — the future of our country because of sustainable development and concern for the environment, the future of the political stability of our country as well.

So, to all of you, congratulations! Daghang salamat. Mabuhí kitang tanan!

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the League of Municipalities of the Philippines- Zero Bazura Caravan 2009. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100724/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25676&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching ceremony of the Aboitiz Power Brand

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the launching ceremony of the Aboitiz Power Brand

[Delivered at the NBC Tent, Fort Bonifacio Global City, July 22, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Reyes for your introduction. Vice President Noli de Castro, Aboitiz Chairman Endika Aboitiz, Aboitiz Vice Chairman Jon Aboitiz, Aboitiz Power President Moncho Aboitiz, Secretary Teves, Zeny Ducut, guests, ladies and gentlemen.

This is a great day for energy independence as we launch the Aboitiz Power Brand and the latest geothermal plants of Aboitiz Power, congratulations! (applause) Congratulations to the Aboitiz group for your 70 years of being in power. You are demonstrating by your investments today that our electric power industry reform has set into motion greater competition in the power sector. Moncho told us many things about the state of the power industry today. But let me walk you through some of the beginnings of the reform. The reform program was initiated with the passage of the EPIRA in 2001 after a delay of seven years. We aimed to address the issue of high power rates and improve delivery of power supply to end-users by encouraging greater competition and efficiency in the electric power industry.

Although the new law did not produce the intended effect within the same year, it nevertheless became the basis for a reduction of prices around two years later. Sometime in 2003 the electric bills of the poor went down after we unbundled costs and strictly implemented the provision on lifeline users. But that was not enough, studies from the Asian Development Bank and our various financial and technical advisers then indicated that we would need an additional 6,000 megawatts of generating capacity over the next 10 years, if we are to avoid shortages and higher power prices. It takes years of lead time from planning, to construction, to operation, in order to establish a power plant. Thus, we needed to act right away.

The studies then also showed that we would need 400 billion pesos in order to finance these power plants, as well as support transmission and distribution facilities. Historically, the main companies providing these power-related assets had been the National Power Corporation or NAPOCOR for power generation, the Transmission Company for power transmission, and MERALCO for the bulk of power distribution. At that time, these companies were all in bad financial shape, so how could they finance our future needs?

NAPOCOR was a case study. In the past years before our administration, NAPOCOR had incurred losses of almost a hundred billion pesos and had seen its debt rising from 4.5 billion dollars in 1983 to seven billion dollars in 2002. On top of these losses and borrowings, the level of service of NAPOCOR had been attacked as being unreliable, and of course in its operations, NAPOCOR was accused of inefficiency and many other allegations.

Therefore the answer to sourcing the huge capital requirements of our power sector was privatization. The first key to privatization was to create an investment climate that is attractive to both domestic and foreign investors. The second key was to create a privatization process that is transparent and free of corruption.

The privatization that is taking place now, exemplified by the involvement of the Aboitiz group will help reduce the cost of electricity in the next administration. Aboitiz power and all the other players who are joining the privatization program will keep competition keen in this industry. Competition forces players to improve services and bring down costs, the beneficiary of healthy competition is the Filipino nation.

Meanwhile, our administration has brought to 98 percent the barangays with electric power. I hope Aboitiz Foundation will help bring that ratio to 100 percent.

We increased energy self-sufficiency from 48 percent to 58 percent. We reduced oil consumption from a 110 million barrels to 86 million. This should be further reduced with the Renewable Energy Act and the Biofuels Act, especially as Aboitiz group and other responsible investors avail of the opportunities provided by those laws.

When I was sitting with Jon Aboitiz in the table and we were looking at the presentation about how we're moving away from oil and moving into renewables, I saw a chart there that said that the Aboitiz group uses 66 percent of its operations uses renewable energy. But that figure is wrong it seems, it's out of date. Aboitiz is now 77 percent renewable energy, congratulations!

The Philippine energy sector has confronted many challenges, both local and global, in addressing energy security and price volatility. Our energy and power users have always been price sensitive, and that is particularly true amidst the global financial turmoil today that threatens the well-being of billions of people across the globe.

The past twelve months had been a year for the history books. Financial meltdown has spread throughout the world. Financial systems in the West shattered; even conservative financial systems in the East were shaken to their foundations. Grand names in international finance fell into disrepute and vanished overnight. Tens of millions have lost their jobs; billions across the globe have been hurt — the poor always harder than the rich. No one has been spared.

It has affected us already. But the headline story of the Philippines in 2008 is that the country decently survived a succession of global crises in fuel, then food, then financial and finally economic with still keeping our economic fundamentals intact and without losing focus.

My job is to work and to lead, to protect and to preserve our country and our people, especially during this difficult global times. I am gratified that investors like the Aboitiz group understand that philosophy. I am gratified to see evidence of confidence in that philosophy by the investments of the Aboitiz group.

Presidents have terms, but businesses continue as long as the market provides for it. I therefore count on the Aboitiz group to look ahead to ensure that our momentum for growth and for an efficient power sector is maintained. We will continue to focus like a laser on the long-term recovery and rebound of the world, and our own long-term development. And for that, to our valued investor, Aboitiz, for your unwavering support to the nation and your strong faith in our people.

Congratulations! and thank you.

*Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the launching ceremony of the Aboitiz Power Brand. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100640/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25716&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 155th Bohol Foundation Day Celebration

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 155th Bohol Foundation Day Celebration

[Delivered at the Bohol Cultural Center, CPG Ave., Tagbilaran City, Bohol, July 22, 2009]

Daghan salamat Secretary Cerge Remonde and aton Press Secretary ug ang aton nga Cabinet Officer for Regional Development diri sa Region VII.

Daghan salamat sab Governor Aumentado, salamat sa imbitasyon kanako ug salamat sa Sikatuna Award. Aton mga congressmen: Congressman Chatto, ang chairman sa Tourism sa House; Congressman Cajes, and amahan ni Jane ug Congressman Jala, ang akong mga kauban ug dako ang tabang kanako sa mga importanteng nga reporma sa Kongreso, salamat sab. Vice Governor Julius Herrera salamat sa imong pag welcome kanako; ang atong vice mayor diri sa Tagbilaran, Vice Mayor Veloso; ang aton nga Obispo nga dako ang iyang papel karon sa pagsegurado na mobilin ang kalinaw dinhi sa Bohol, Bishop Medroso. Mrs. Garcia, Mr. Cagaanan, aton mga Cabinet members who are here today, and we have here Secretary Jing Lapus of Education, Secretary Duque of Health, and Secretary Esperon of the Presidential Management Staff aside from Secretary Remonde na siya ang nagpa-ila kanako, ug ang tanang opisyaes dinhi, aton mga board members, mga mayors, tanan-tanan mga opisyal sa barangay ug tanang Bol-anon: Happy Bohol Day kaninyong tanan!

Sa gihapon daghan salamat sa Sikatuna Award. Kining pasidungog makalipay gyud tungod kay gi-ila ninyo ang akong handom nga motabang aron ilhon ang inyong dapit isip usa ka labing matahom ug progresibo nga isla sa tibuok kalibutan.

Ingon ni Edgar gyud ako lang ang presidente nakabisita na sa kada lungsod dinhi sa Bohol. Ug matagduaw ko sa Bohol kanunay ako makakita dinhi ug mga bag-ong proyekto nga makahatag ug kaayuhan sa katawhan. Sa ulahi kong pagbisita sa mga youth aron ilunsad ang programa sa Youth Commission, nakita ko kon gi-unsang pagpangga sa mga kabataan dinhi ang inyong environment. Congratulations! Jane ug tanang kabataan dinhi.

Ang katawhan sa Bohol kanunay gyud nga mapasalamaton alang sa mga laing-laing programa. Ug salamat sa Sikatuna Award nakalista ang aton mga mega projects, maayo nga souvenir sa akong pagserbisyo dinhi sa probinsya sa Bohol.

Busa tungod kay kanunay ga-recognize kamo sa aton mga nihimo kauban ang gobyerno nasyonal gahatag pa ug mga programa nga makatabang aron labaw pa kamong mo-uswag. (applause) Murag ingon sa awarding gyud sa miaging walo ka tuig sa akong administrasyon gi-revive nato gyud ang Bohol Irrigation Phase II. This is one example of the two million hectares nationwide of new and rehabilitated irrigation that we built during our administration. Some of them were built together with the private sector. This one we borrowed in order to build but because there were cost overruns we also had to finance it from our own taxation.

Kay gipahimo nato ug gipadako nato ang Bohol Circumferential Road. This is one example of the infrastructure all over the country that our administration has completed. It is one example to show that compared to other administrations we built more infrastructure, including roads and also including airports of international standard. Gisugdan na ang preparasyon sa airport sa Panglao aron mas daghang turista ang mo-anhi dinhi. Usa ka benepisyo sa akong pagbisita sa mga probinsya sa okasyon sa akong pagbisita sa mga staff work nga kinahanglan mahimo bag-o ako makaabot naa kita kanunay nga mga update sa atong mga proyekto, mga dlagko nga proyekto ug importante nga proyekto.

Ug nangutana ko kan Secretary Mendoza, na kagabii kauban nato, unsa na ang nahitabo, kumusta na ang atong Panglao Airport project. Napalit na 'no, Governor ang yuta, kumpleto na. Ug nahuman na ang detailed engineering karon, ang detailed engineering ug ang iyang final costing kinahanglan karon maagi sa NEDA aron ma-aprub ug NEDA ang project cost, ang final project cost. So kinahanglan maagi sa Investment Coordination Committee ug sa NEDA Board ug ang timetable ni Larry Mendoza paspasan ang pag-agi sa Investment Coordinating Committee na mahimo ug technical evaluation sa costing.

Unya unta ingon ni Larry Mendoza next week sa NEDA Board. Ah dili next week, sa first week of August kay next week sa ICC, first week of August sa NEDA Board. Apan ako wala naman ako diri sa first week of August kay naa ko ug official visit sa White House. So ingon ko kan Larry Mendoza dili ko gusto na mao lagi kining project nato. So si Vice President de Castro na ra ang mo-preside sa NEDA Board aron bisan wala ako ma-aprub ang final stage sa proyekto sa Panglao.

Gi-mention sab sa pag award kanako na nagpatukod sab kita ug mga RORO aron dunay koneksiyon sa kotse ang Bohol sa Camiguin, sa Cagayan de Oro, sa Cebu ug bisa pa sa Southern Leyte, 'no Governor? Busa niya na ang mga pasilidad ug busa daghan na ang inyong mga turista. Usa kamo sa paborito sa mga turista nato bisan ang aton mga Boholanons in America and other parts of the world. Mas daghan ang nianhi karon tuiga.

Ngano nato nihimo tanan kining mga imprastraktura, because through improved financial condition, to our improved national financial condition — thanks to the support of our Boholano congressmen — we were able to put up the infrastructure which added to your natural hospitality of the people of Bohol. We developed tourism in the Philippines from 1.8 million visitors in 2004 to 3.14 in 2008 when tourism became a five billion-dollar industry. Ingon nila sa mga laing-laing nasud tungod sa world economic crisis dunay mga nasud, mga leading tourism destinations kaniadto na dili na kaayo taas kaayo, the tourism has gone down. Apan dinhi sa Bohol, tourism is up 15 percent. Congratulations!

Sa Amorita asa ako nitulog kagabii, ingon ng tag-iya, kay tungod supposedly lean season karon kay rainy season, gipabakasyon nila unta ang pila ka staff. Apan sa daghang mga turista, gipabalik nila gihapon ang ilang mga staff gikan sa ilang bakasyon. So nangutana ko kanila, naa kamo ug room for expansion? Oo gyud, ga-expand sila karon more than double their present capacity. Di nanganhi na gyud ang mga investor dili lang sa Amorita kundili sab sa laing-laing lugar asa naay touristic attractions ug laing-laing pa na mga industriya ug agrikultura dinhi.

Apan tungod kay kanunay ako naman gaanhi dinhi bisan senador pa ko, sa dili ko pa nalipatan, dili ko pa nalimtan na dili sama nining pag-uswag ang nahitabo sa probinsya ninyo kaniadto. Dili ko makalimot diri mismo sa atong cultural center ang atong hearing alang sa aton development sa Bohol. Ako ang chairman sa Committee on Trade and Industry. O, Secretary Yap just arrived. Hello! Arty. Arty Yap, ang ating Secretary of Agriculture.

Ug katong panahona dili pa kaayo mauswag ang Bohol apan naa na ang inyong damgo. Dako nga dungog para kanako nga senador pa ko nahibalo ko na kung unsa ang inyong kinahanglan, unsa ang inyo mga damgo, unsa ang inyo mga vision busa karon na ako nahimo presidente magkauban kita sa pagtuo, pagpatinuod kining aton mga vision alang sa Bohol.

Dili pa nato nakalimtan tingali sa tuig 2001, sa una ko pagsulod isip presidente apil pa ang Bohol sa pulo ka labing pobrang probinsiya sa nasod. Pila na sab ka dekada sab kamo ang gi-istorbo sang mga rebelde. Nakit-an ni Governor Aumentado — congressman kamo kaniadto sa una, 'no? — na ang pagkakabos maoy gapadako sa rebelyon ug ang mga rebelde maoy gadala sa labaw pang pagkakabos sa katawhan. Busa gituyo na niya nga putlon na gyud ang kadena sa kapobrehon ug rebelyon.

Ang kumbinasyon nga gihimo ug inyong mga opisyal sa diri kauban sa atong mga sundalo — terrific partnership between the local government and our armed forces. Ang kusog nga paglaban sa mga armadong grupo samtang gapatuman sa mga proyekto aron ma-uswag ang mga komunidad maoy rason kon nganong mihinay ang suporta ug katawhan sa mga rebelde tungod kay nabati nila ang pag-uswag gumikan sa mga programa. Busa sa tuig 2005, nalibre na ang probinsiya sa mga rebelde. Ang gagmay nga grupong nabilin, tuwa na nagtago sa mga bukid sa central Bohol. And this model of peace and development of Bohol has in fact been touted as the lesson for the model of peace and development in all provinces of the country.

That award that was given earlier to SPIN, that is the Rebel Returnee Program of the DTI, a terrific partnership between the DTI and the Armed Forces, so we can ask Aster... Colonel... Aster. And it is a peace and development program for rebel returnees that is patterned after the peace and development concept of the province of Bohol now spread out throughout Region VII and even in other parts of the country. Salamat sa inyong example.

Sa pag-abot sa kalinaw, misugod sab dayon pagsulod sa kauswagan. Busa sa tuig 2006, layo na kamo sa listahan sa pulo ka labing pobrang probinsya, middle-class na karon ang Bohol. Middle-class ug tingali sa mahuman ang airport, sa mahuman ang mga bag-ong investment sa tourism, sa daghan pang-anhi ang mga turista basi — dili basi — tingali sigurado moabot ang adlaw that Bohol will in fact be one of the ten richest provinces in our country.

Garbo ko alang sa Bohol, ang Bohol usa sa labing maayong ehemplo sa mga lugar nga labing paspas ang pag-uswag nining atong administrasyon. Busa makasigurado kamo sa akong suporta alang sa aton mga damgo alang sa Bohol. (applause) Magkauban kita niadtong senador pa ako sa pagplano alang nining mga damgo ug karon magkauban kita gihapon sa implementasyon sa aton mga damgo sa atong pinalangga nga Bohol.

Ug sa inyong suporta kanako na kanunay naa niya sukad pa sa ni kandidato ko sa senador sa 1992, sa akong reelection sa '95 na nahimo ko ug number one, sa akong landslide sa '98 isip vice president, sa akong mga senador niadtong 2001, sa akong pagka-presidente sa 2004 sa election nga nidaog dinhi sa Bohol usa ka labing dako nga mayoriya sa tibuok nasud, sa aton mga kandidato senador niadtong 2007, sa inyong kanunay nga suporta kanako. Daghan salamat.

I love Bohol. Thank you. Happy Bohol Day! kaninyong tanan.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 155th Bohol Foundation Day Celebration. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100651/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25715&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Oath Taking Ceremony of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. (FFCCCII) Officers

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Oath Taking Ceremony of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. (FFCCCII) Officers

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, July 23, 2009]

Thank you Secretary Ermita.

Dr. Alfonso Uy, your new President; Dr. John Tan, Honorary President; Secretary Favila; officers and members of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, of course, led by Alfonso Uy, welcome the new set of officers!; (applause) and to the immediate past officers headed by Dr. John Tan, thank you for your service to the Federation and the nation. (applause)

I am happy that in Dr. Tan's time, and now in Dr. Uy's time the Federation continued to share our enthusiasm, our many other projects for improving the quality of education of our youth, particularly through your donation of so many classrooms.

I was a teacher, so pardon my partiality for the teaching profession. That is why I have invested so much in education, skills development and training, and that is why I appreciate the Federation's contributions to education among your many other contributions to so many other areas of Philippine society.

Your contributions were part of the 87,000 classrooms that we built during my administration. And to fill up those classrooms, our pupil-teacher ratio is now 1 is to 36 for elementary schools, and 1 is to 39 for secondary schools because our administration created 60,000 teacher items from 2001 to 2008. And to make these teachers good and better we allocated 1.5 billion pesos for teacher training, especially for 107,000 English teachers. And early in my term, we revised the basic curriculum to emphasize English.

One of the most difficult Millennium Development Goals is Education for All, meaning, universal primary education by 2015. Most countries will not achieve it. But we are trying. We cut the cost of going to school by building more classrooms nearer to homes, and you help so much in that. Also, we stop the collection of miscellaneous fees for primary school and declared school uniforms optional.

Our administration provides government assistance to now 47 percent of students in private high schools. Maybe that is why National Achievement Tests show trends towards mastery.

In technical education and skills training, our 27 billion pesos is more than three times that of three previous administrations combined. We have provided 600,000 college and post-graduate scholarships.

The Presidential Task Force on Education headed by Jesuit educator Father Bienvenido Nebres, which has interacted very much with leaders of your Federation, has come out with a Philippine Main Education Highway towards a knowledge-based economy. It envisions seamless education from basic education covering pre-school, grade school and high school, and on to vocational schools or colleges. It recommends the restoration of compulsory Scholastic Aptitude Tests for college admission.

For professions seeking international recognition — engineering, accountancy, architecture, pharmacy and physical therapy — it recommends radical reform: 10 years of basic education and then two years of pre-university before three years of university.

The Task Force identifies career, job, entrepreneurship and life-long learning as goals for the Education Highway. Our educational system indeed should make the Filipino fit not just for whatever jobs happen to be on offer today, but also for whatever economic challenge life will throw them. So, again, I thank the Federation for contributing to these goals.

But aside from the school buildings the list of programs you have supported is very long. You have sponsored volunteer fire brigades possibly the best ones in the country, regular fund campaigns for the victims of calamities, mobile clinics, and many other programs. And I thank the Federation for this morning's 3.6 million check donation for the National Youth Service Corps.

I want to pay you back tenfold. So, I will give you a 36 million-peso donation for your school buildings. I just asked that among these school buildings you will build if you could begin to build the beginnings of a high school in the last two remaining towns in our country which still have no public high schools.

The past twelve months — you know more than me because you're businessmen — have been a year for the history books. Financial meltdown spread throughout the world. Financial systems in the West shattered. Even conservative financial systems in the East were shaken to their foundations. Grand names in international finance fell into disrepute and vanished overnight. Tens of millions have lost their jobs; billions across the globe have been hurt — the poor always harder than the rich.

But it has affected us already. But the headline story of the Philippines in 2008, and I believe it is you who can attest to this, is that the country decently survived a succession of global crises in fuel, then food, then financial, and finally economic, keeping economic fundamental strong and not losing focus.

To work and to lead, to protect and to preserve our country and our people, that is why I became President with the support of many of you including our new president now in Iloilo.

When my father who was also very close to your Federation left the presidency, the Philippines was second to Japan. I like to recall how close he was to your Federation. At that time, the head of your group was Antonio Roxas Chua, the grandfather of my cabinet member now, Rey Anthony Roxas Chua. Well, of course, in your present leadership you also have the father of Secretary Arty Yap, so, good we continue our family friendship.

Anyway, speaking of my father I share his vision. If not second to the best, then a vision of a Republic ready to join the first world in 20 years.

Towards that vision, we made key reforms, difficult reforms, unpopular reforms but always supported by your Federation.

So, I want to use this occasion to thank you, members of the FFCCCII, our biggest and most influential Filipino-Chinese group, for sharing our vision, for supporting our reforms and for working hard to attain the Filipino dream.

I have no doubt that your new officers will continue the Federation's tradition of providing support for the programs of government.

So once again, thank you, Johnny and your team, and congratulations Alfonso and the incoming officers.

Mabuhay tayong lahat! Maraming salamat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Oath Taking Ceremony of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Inc. (FFCCCII) Officers. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412053057/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25717&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a dinner meeting with the FILUSA (Filipinos International of the U.S.A.)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a dinner meeting with the FILUSA (Filipinos International of the U.S.A.)

[Delivered in Washington, D.C., USA, July 29, 2009]

Thank you

Thank you.

Thank you very much Secretary Pamintuan for your introduction.

I'm happy to be here with you tonight with an official delegation who will be meeting with their counterparts. We have here the Speaker of the House of Representatives Speaker Boy Nograles and several members of Congress who will be attending the various meetings with members of Congress tomorrow. We have here, of course, several Cabinet members who will be meeting with their counterparts headed by Foreign Affairs Secretary Bert Romulo and Executive Secretary Ed Ermita. We have with us also members of the Senate, Miriam is not here with us tonight but we have Lito Lapid here with us tonight. We have a governor, Governor Tet Garcia of Bataan, and we have two city mayors: Mayor of Marikina Marides Fernando and Mayor of Danao City Nitoy Durano

And of course, I'd like to greet the leaders of the Filipino community here headed by our Ambassador to Washington Willy Gaa. And Henry and Jackie, thank you so much, and all of you who came from everywhere Maryland, San Francisco, Virginia, of course, Washington.

Magandang gabi sa inyong lahat. At king kekatang 60 percent ni attendance ngening bengi, mayap a bengi kekongan. Thank you. Thank you. Of course, we must also greet the other Filipinos from various parts of the country: sa mga kaigsuonan gikan sa Visayas ug Mindanao maayong gabii kaninyong tanan; sa indo gabos Bikolano, marhay nga bangi; sa mga kasimanwa sang akon bana nga ari naman subong, maayong gab-i sa inyo nga tanan; dagiti kakailyan ni mamang ko, naimbag a rabii yo amin

And, of course, congratulations to the Filipinos International of the United States of America or FILUSA here in Washington and surrounding areas, and the other American organizations here tonight. Thank you very much for coming despite the very short notice and thank you for waiting. You know when we arrived in Canada a half an hour ahead of schedule, so I was so happy... Oh, we'll arrive in Washington half an hour ahead of schedule instead combination of paper work and inclement weather along the way made us not leave half an hour ahead of schedule, not in _____ schedule it made as leave an hour and a half later than schedule, but thank you for waiting. I'm so sorry for that

Last month, I met with the FILUSA chapter in Los Angeles. And I congratulated your organization, as I congratulate now FILUSA-Washington D.C., as Jackie described it your efforts in helping unify the Filipino community here in the U.S. and in projecting the good news about the Philippines. And I'm happy about the launching tonight here in Washington your "Proudly Filipino" campaign. Congratulations!

And as you have said, we are really very pleased to accept the invitation of President Obama to be the first leader from our region to meet with him at the White House.

The Oval Office meeting with President Obama comes at a pivotal time for U.S. relations in Asia. We're very hopeful that the Obama Administration will put America on the radar screen in Asia. The visit to the region by Secretary Clinton where she met with Secretary Romulo in Thailand and now the early outreach by President Obama sends strong signals that the U.S. is committed to a new, more robust engagement with the region.

The fact that President Obama sought out the Philippines for this first opportunity is a testament to the strong and deep ties between our two nations. Kaya maganda yung placard ninyo, “Mabuhay RP-U.S. Relations!” Ayun, thank you for that. “Long Live our U.S.-Filipino Relations!” Yeah, thank you.

The early invitation also reflects the ongoing relationship we have built up through a series of phone conversations and correspondences reaching back to when Senator Obama was the candidate for President.

Our expectations for this trip are straightforward: to meet the new U.S. President and to advance the interests of the Philippines with our strongest friend and ally. The U.S. is essential to our economic, diplomatic and national security. We plan to ensure that these objectives remain front and center and on track between our two nations.

High on our agenda will be peace and security issues, including ways to continue to strengthen regional cooperation on anti-terrorism.

We will also discuss the global economic crisis that has swept the world and what we can do to mitigate the impact on the poor, especially in Asia and the Philippines.

The other day, I delivered my State of the Nation Address. As we all know, the past twelve months had been a year for the history books. As you know more than I do because you experienced it personally, financial meltdown in the West spread throughout the world. Billions across the globe had been hurt. Tens of millions have lost their jobs.

It has affected the Philippines as well. But, and Jackie said, your proposition tell the good news, the story of the Philippines in 2008 is that the country weathered a succession of global crises in fuel, in food, then in finance, and finally the economy in a global recession, but never losing focus and with economic fundamentals intact

A few days ago Moody’s upgraded our credit rating, in the middle of a global recession, citing the resilience of our economy. Therefore, I could say, the state of our nation is a strong economy

I want our Republic to be ready for first world in 20 years. And towards that vision, we, the senators, the congressmen, Speaker made key reforms. Our economic plan centers on putting people first. Higit sa lahat, ang layunin ng ating mga patakaran ay tulungan ang masisipag na karaniwang Pilipino. New tax revenues were put in place to help pay for better healthcare, more roads, and a strong education system.

Housing policies were designed to lift up our poorer citizens so they can live and raise a family with dignity. Ang ating mga puhunan sa agrikultura ay naglalayong kilalanin ang atin mga magsasaka bilang backbone ng ating bansa, at bigyan sila ng mga modernong kagamitan to feed our nation and feed their own family.

In 2008 up to early 2009, we were among only a few economies in Asia-Pacific that did not shrink, contrast that to 2001 when I first became President. Asia was then surging, our country was on the brink of bankruptcy. Now it’s the other way around. The world is in recession. Our country remain strong.

Since 2001, our economy posted uninterrupted growth for 33 quarters, and more than doubled its size — in 2001 it was 76 billion dollars; in 2008 186 billion dollars, more than double what it was eight years ago. And the average GDP growth during our administration is the highest among all administrations in the last 43 years. From January 2001 to April 2009 we created eight million jobs — source of that, the National Statistics Office Labor for Survey. That is an average of a million a year more than at any other time in our history.

Our foreign debt ratio we cut in half from 73 percent before I started to 32 percent of GDP. Kaya kung meron man tayong malaking kaaway na tinalo, walang iba kung hindi yung utang, yung foreign debt. Others conjured the demon of foreign debt. We exorcised foreign debt from our country

Our average inflation rate is the lowest since 1966. Sabi nga ni Governor Salceda sa akin, Joey Salceda who is an economist, “Alam mo, Ma’am, ang nakatalo lang sa record mo sa ekonomiya yung tatay mo, si President Diosdado Macapagal.” And last June, a month ago, inflation dropped to 1.5 percent

What do all these things mean? They mean that we have a strong economy in a strong fiscal position to withstand global shocks. And we were able to achieve this at the same time that we were building new modern infrastructure and completing unfinished ones. And the economy is more fair to the poor than ever before. Aside from that, we are building a sound base for the next generation. And International experts have taken note that we are safer from natural and man-made disasters.

Sa hiram at ginhawa, ang ating bansa ay pinapatatag ninyo, ang ating Overseas Filipinos, kaya nagpapasalamat ako sa inyo. Kahit hindi gaanong lumalaki ang numero, eight million nung nagsimula ako bilang Presidente, more or less eight million pa rin ngayon. Iyong padala ninyong 16 billion dollars noong isang taon ay record. At itong taon, mas mataas pa kaysa sa record na ginawa noong isang taon. At pinakamalaking bahagi ng remittances ay nanggaling dito sa ating mga kababayan sa North America. Kaya maraming salamat sa inyo

But even as we honor you for your hard work at malasakit ninyo sa inyong bansa, sa ating bansa, we are doing our best to create good paying jobs at home, so that overseas work will just be a career choice, and not the only option for a hardworking Filipino.

In fact, meron akong mga kaibigan na nasa Los Angeles. A lot of Filipinos in Los Angeles are doing well over the past years in real estate, eh pero ngayon bumagsak ang real estate. Well, they went back home and got into the real estate business and they’re doing better there. So, that was what I would want — that every Filipino has an option. You can be in America and be okay, and you can be in the Philippines and be okay — that is our ambition. Salamat.

Meantime, meantime, as Jackie said, you have the usual critics in the opposition and also in the ideological groups of the left and the right. While we’re doing our best to create jobs, they’re also doing their best and their worst in trying to bring me down. And if you look at all their charges, the things I’ve never done any of the things that have scared them so much. They seem to be frightened by their own shadows.

The noisiest critic of constitutional reform tirelessly and shamelessly attempted Cha-Cha when they thought they could take advantage of it. Now that they feel they cannot benefit from it, they oppose it. So, what is that? For bested interest versus national interest

I never declared Martial Law, but they’re running scared as if I did. Really in truth, what they are really afraid of is their own weakness in the face of this self-imagined threat.

And I never expressed the desire to extend myself beyond my term. But many of those who accuse me of it were the ones who tried to cling like nails to their own posts

My term does not end until next year. And until then, with your support, I will fight for the ordinary Filipino. There is much to do as head of state up to the very last day. And I trust that the Filipino-American community, the FILUSA, the different organizations here will continue to support and have faith in the Philippines.

So, I am so happy to be able to be with you tonight kahit na naghintay kayo — I feel so guilty about that — kahit na nagutom kayo, akala ko kumain na sana kayo bago... habang hinihintay ako, but thank you so much for waiting for me. Thank you what you’re saying — you support peace and progress in the Philippines.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a dinner meeting with the FILUSA (Filipinos International of the U.S.A.). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100613/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25801&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the National Geographic Society Coral Triangle Initiative Program Stakeholders' Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the National Geographic Society Coral Triangle Initiative Program Stakeholders' Forum

[Delivered at the Grosvenor Auditorium, National Geographic, Washington, D.C., USA, July 30, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Yap for your introduction.

Mr. Fahey, president and CEO of National Geographic; Madame Weiner; Madame Ellis; Dr. Sala; oh, Mr. Francis Tiu Laurel, president of Frabelle Fishing; Ladies and Gentlemen:

As some of you are aware, I am passionate about the environment and the Coral Triangle. And we were able to share some of our passion on climate change, earlier today, I believe — thank you, Arty during... — not only here with you but also earlier in the White House with President Obama.

And because of our passion against climate change we have our desire to reassemble a stakeholders working group meeting on the Coral Triangle. And in this action, we could think of no host better than the National Geographic Society, thank you so much. Actually, this organization should be called the International Geographic Society rather than a National Geographic Society because children from across the globe have grown up reading the famous yellow-bordered magazine, learning about the exotic and glorious world in which we live. I was one of those children. And our Senator Miriam Defensor Santiago, who's here with us today, was also explaining how she was one of those and at least one of my children is also that way.

But I was also saying that now in this generation, you don't even have to be an avid reader, you don't even have to be especially interested because you turn on your cable TV and you watch the National Geographic Channel and I know a lot of people who are not intellectuals, not environmentalist, not conservationist but they love to watch National Geographic. So you've done a lot to make people aware.

The Society's mission resonates loudly: Inspiring People to Care about the Planet.

During times of economic hardship, the pressures are greatest to abandon our obligation to the environment or to loosen the rules. This is why at this point in time we must come together in the world community and be even more vigilant in advancing efforts to conserve the six million square kilometers that form the resource-rich Coral Triangle.

The Coral Triangle is potentially the world's most important refuge for marine life. But only if we do, if we all do our part to protect it from further environmental degradation. It's time to rebalance our approach as we work to develop strong economies, to provide employment, and maintain the sacred relationship between human beings and Mother Earth.

The political will of the governments of the Philippines, Indonesia, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, the Solomon Islands, and Timor Leste, the Coral Triangle six countries to protect the Coral Triangle is high. At a time when the world is focused on bad news associated with the global economic crisis, the Coral Triangle Initiative driven by our six nations is good news. The countries responsible for the stewardship of the waters and resources of the Coral Triangle have created a strong and united force to keep our biodiversity intact, our food resources strong, and our environment pristine.

During a meeting of the leaders of the Coral Triangle held in Indonesia last May, we agreed to a series of new commitments to safeguard the world's richest marine resources and to ensure the income and food security of millions of people in our countries who depend on the resources of the Coral Triangle for their livelihood.

In our Leaders' Declaration on the Coral Triangle Initiative on Coral Reefs, Fisheries and Food Security, we adopted a comprehensive plan for the conservation of our marine and coastal resources. The ten-year regional plan of action sets time-bound steps to address not only the growing threats to the region's coral reefs, fisheries, mangroves, threatened species, and other marine and coastal resources, but also the challenge of climate change.

This initiative also recognizes the urgent need to tackle the poverty affecting the people throughout the Coral Triangle region, especially those in coastal communities.

Climate change and the management of our coastal areas are linked inextricably. A great human tragedy that will arise from climate change will be the migration that will be forced by sinking coastlines and in some cases, such as in Tuvalu and the Maldives, even sinking countries. As more sites are rendered inhospitable to human life and economic activity, as many as one billion people may be affected globally and half of them will come from Asia. As families scatter to upland sites throughout the globe, climate change will spawn global change.

This is something the countries of the world must address together and for us. As a nation of over 7,100 islands, this is something that is of great concern to the Philippines. If the flood waters rise, you may lose Florida; we lose a nation.

So, we the fellow Coral Triangle country leaders agreed that we would bring our collective voices into the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change. We want to make an impact on the climate change dialogue. And we want to call on all countries, but in particular the major industrialized developed countries, to live up to the UNFCCC obligations, including affordable and appropriate technologies, and funding for climate management.

Economic development and national stability depend on parallel initiatives aimed at environmental sustainability and social equity. We must aim for this as one living planet.

One of those parallel initiatives is our effort to conserve the marine and coastal resources of the Coral Triangle. Aside from political will, however, to achieve this goal, it will also take the collective efforts of our six nations, our development partners, including the support that is already being provided by friends such as the United States, the NGOs, the domestic and international business, and private citizens around the world.

This is not an either or proposition. We must find a win-win solution to not just stopping the degradation, but also restoring and enhancing our fragile ecology. We rely on the sea for food, jobs and pleasure, and we cannot allow this resource to be further compromised.

One approach to that solution begins with the Regional Plan of Action, I mentioned earlier, adopted by the six Coral Triangle countries with the support of donor countries and such NGOs as Conservation International, the Nature Conservancy, the Worldwide Fund for Nature — I keep calling it Worldwide Life Fund, the old name, but now it's Worldwide Fund for Nature — among others, and National Action Plans created by each Coral Triangle government. These national action plans are specific programs with commitments of the financial and human resources needed to bring a halt to the practices that have jeopardized the future of their Coral Triangle and resources found there.

For our part in the Philippines, our National Strategy to protect our marine resources is focused on an Integrated Coastal Management approach to the sustainable development of our nation's coasts, oceans and marine resources.

As part of this program, we are working at the community, local government, provincial, district and national level on the twin goals of coastal resource management and climate change mitigation and adaptation.

The National Strategy also includes support for the conservation of important species and the management of several protected marine areas including the Apo Reef Natural Park, the Turtle Islands Wildlife Sanctuary, and the renowned Tubbataha Reefs National Park, which is a UNESCO World Natural Heritage site.

In addition, we are carrying out a program, in cooperation with Conservation International, to prepare a master plan for a second priority seascape in line with the regional plan of action and our own national plan. That seascape is the South China seascape, it covers more than 800,000 square kilometers, so that is our second seascape. The first seascape being the Sulu-Sulawesi Marine Eco-Region. The seascape plans focus on the management of protected areas and networks and an ecosystem approach to sustainable fisheries management.

We are also working on a bilateral basis with our fellow Coral Triangle government partners, especially on the sustainable development of the fishing industry, and tuna in particular, with the help of our private sector who have major investments in our region. Together we want to protect the juvenile and spawning grounds of tuna in our own part of the Coral Triangle. We are also working towards the sustainability of the live reef fish trade in Palawan, which is a major source of livelihood for restaurants all over Asia and beyond.

We have made great strides in engaging the traders and industry players in Palawan with the help of WWF, and we look forward to the day when Palawansourced seafood is recognized as sustainable seafood. We can only achieve these goals on fisheries with the active participation and input of the private sector. So, I look forward to your involvement.

As you can see, the countries touched by the Coral Triangle are not sitting idly by as the marine resources of this vast and rich area are subjected to the challenges of human degradation and climate change. The very valuable work being carried out is being supported by our own resources and the resources of our development partners, NGOs, the private sector, and individuals. But much more needs to be done.

So, in that regard, I call on all who are concerned about the future of our oceans and our seas to share the story of the work being done to preserve the Coral Triangle. Of course, I would be honored if we could find a way to work with the power of the National Geographic Society to bring our story to the world.

So, let me quote in closing the late French undersea explorer and oceanographer, Jacques Cousteau. He said, “The sea, the great unifier, is man’s only hope.” Now, as never before, the old phrase has a literal meaning: we are all in the same boat.

Again, a special thanks to National Geographic and to each and every one of you for your concern about our good Earth.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the National Geographic Society Coral Triangle Initiative Program Stakeholders’ Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100446/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25854&Itemid=38

Message of President Arroyo on the death of former President Corazon C. Aquino Message
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
On the death of former President Corazon C. Aquino

[Delivered in Washington, D.C., U.S.A., July 31, 2009]

Today, the Philippines lost a national treasure. Cory Aquino helped lead a revolution that restored democracy and the rule of law to our nation at a time of great peril.

Our nation will mourn her passing.

History was thrust upon her when her noble husband was cut down in the prime of his life as he fought for democracy and the rule of law. She picked up the standard from the fallen warrior, Ninoy, and helped lead our nation to a brighter day.

I am announcing today that we will officially observe a ten-day period of national mourning.

Our hearts go out to the family in this hour of grief and sorrow. The nation prays for Cory and her family.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's message on the death of former President Corazon C. Aquino. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100430/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25858&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a dinner meeting with FILUSA (Filipinos International of the U.S.A.)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a dinner meeting with FILUSA (Filipinos International of the U.S.A.)

[Delivered in New York City, U.S.A., August 1, 2009]

Dakal a salamat, Ed.

And before I begin, please join me first in a moment of prayer for President Cory Aquino.!

Thank you. First of all, I'd like to thank our speakers earlier, Bert and Romy and Jackie for your very kind words. And I'd like to acknowledge some of the members of our official delegation: we have our two senators with us, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Senator Miriam Defensor Santiago and Senator Lito Lapid; we have Cabinet members who met with their counterparts headed by Executive Secretary Ed Ermita; we have members of Congress who certainly had many counterparts because we spent one whole day in different events with the members of Congress of the United States of America headed by Deputy Speaker Girlie Villarosa; and we have local governments: Governor Tet Garcia of Bataan and City Mayors Nitoy Durano of Danao in Cebu and Marides Fernando of Marikina.

I'd like to acknowledge also our officials from the Philippine Government but representing our government here in the United States. Our Ambassador to the United States, Ambassador Willy Gaa and Consul General Cecille Rebong and all the officials of the Embassy; and our ambassador to the United Nations, former Chief Justice Davide. And to all of you, magandang gabi sa inyong lahat.

At king kekatang 60 percent ngening attendees ngening bengi, mayap a bengi kekongan kabalen. Ug kaninyong tanan mga taga Visayas ug Mindanao, maayong gabii. Sa mga Bikolano, marhay nga bangi sa indo gabos. Ang mga kasimanwa sang akon bana kag ni Miriam, maayong gab-i sa inyo nga tanan. Ken dagiti Ilocano, naimbag nga rabii yo amin.

And of course, congratulations to the Filipinos International United States of America or FILUSA here in New York headed by Bert, in New Jersey headed by Romy, and in California headed by Jackie, thank you for your touching words — Girlie said her hair was standing when you are telling your story — and even George from Michigan. So, thank you all for being here and Congratulations to the FILUSA and to the other Filipino-American organizations here tonight! To our two wonderful singers, congratulations, bravo! To them and to you for coming despite the very short notice, maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Last month, we met with the FILUSA Chapter in Los Angeles and last Wednesday in Washington, D.C. I congratulated your organization, as I congratulate today FILUSA-New York and New Jersey, for your efforts in helping unify the Filipino community here in the U.S., and projecting the good news about the Philippines.

As Bert said, we are pleased to... and of Ed, to be the first Southeast Asian leader to meet with President Obama at the White House. The fact that he sought out the Philippines for this historic opportunity is a testament to the strong and deep ties between our two countries. Our two countries have a shared history, our two countries have a commitment to a vibrant democracy, but most of all today, our two countries have family ties. Four million Philippine-Americans here in the United States and four hundred thousand Americans in the Philippines, so those are our family ties. So you, the Filipino-Americans here in America are the strongest link between the Philippines and the U.S., and thank you for being that link. The meeting with President Obama, early meeting in his administration also reflects the ongoing relationship we have established through a series of phone conversations and correspondences reaching back to when he was a candidate for President.

Sabi ni Bert, sana marinig kung ano ang mga pinag-usapan doon. Well, President Obama and I high in our agenda — and Miriam was there and Ed Ermita was there — high in our agenda was peace and security issues. The U.S. is essential to our economic, diplomatic and national security. And our meeting, our visit here and our meeting with President Obama has served to ensure that these objectives remain front and center and on track between our two nations.

We discussed the strong cooperation between the U.S. and the Philippines to combat terrorism. That will continue to be strengthened. In addition to the ‘hard’ power of military engagement and intelligence sharing is the need for ‘soft’ power — the pressing need to win over the hearts and minds of the people. And we shared with President Obama the successes of this ‘soft’ power paradigm that we have developed with America in Southern Philippines.

I don’t know how many of you here are from Southern Philippines, from Mindanao, but like the rest of the country there is a very big difference between the Mindanao of eight years ago and the Mindanao of today. If we go to the whole country, there is a very big difference between the Philippines today and the Philippines of eight years ago. Eight years ago, Asia was surging but the Philippines was on the brink of bankruptcy.

Today, two-thirds of the world is in recession, but the Philippines just got upgraded in his credit rating by Moody’s. For Mindanao, eight years ago, I inherited an age-old conflict exacerbated by a popular but nearsighted policy of massive military retaliation. That only provoked the other side to continue the war.

Today, we were very happy to share with the Filipinos we’ve met, with the officials of America that we’ve met including President Obama, that the Philippine Government Panel and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front have just announced that they are working towards the resumption of formal peace talks and that we are now on ceasefire. So that is the difference between eight years ago and today.

And how did we get to where we are, mahirap yung umaabot doon. Nakikita natin doon sa Jakarta mismo, capital ng Indonesia, nagkaroon ng pag bobomba pero tayo’y pumapasok sa pangungusap sa kapayapaan at yun na nga yung ating pakikipagbalikatan sa America. Yung hard power trinaining yung ating mga sundalo at nakikipag-ugnayan sa intelligence. At tsaka yung soft power, nagtatayo ng mga eskwela, mga kalsada, mga tulay para sa ganun ay yung pamayanan ay maging mas maganda.

And another thing that we talked about is we applauded President Obama’s leadership on climate change especially because just recently, the U.S. House of Representatives — and their counterparts among our delegation congratulated them — just passed the ACES Act. What is this ACES Act ? This is the American Clean Energy Security Act. It is now pending in the Senate, in the U.S. Senate, but the important thing about this bill passing in the House after a longer date is that under the Obama Administration they recognize the pressing need for the U.S. to step up and take action against climate change by reducing carbon emission.

And that’s important to us, as a developing nation, we need to balance economic growth and environmental sustainability very seriously. Because we are an archipelago with a very long coastline, so the Philippines is particularly vulnerable to dramatic changes in our weather and our rising seas. I’ve often said, oceans rise and Florida gets wet; oceans rise and the Philippines and our nation is gone. So that is how important it is, for us to avoid climate change. We will do everything in our power, I said, to work with the U.S. on this vital issue that confronts the Philippines but also the entire human race.

This is but one example of efforts we are taking to preserve our environment. On another front, we have been active in the Coral Triangle Initiative. Itong Coral Triangle, ito yung “Amazon of the Underwater.” It covers the entire Philippines and parts of five other neighboring countries: Indonesia, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, Timor Leste and Solomon Islands. And this initiative is to bring together the food users of the world to protect the breeding grounds of the fish that feed the world. Yes, the Coral Triangle wherein those six countries are located is the one that provides the fish that feeds so much of the world.

And therefore we need to protect our natural environment. We also need to protect the livelihood of the fisherfolks, and we have to protect the source of food supply for much of the world.

A lot of you are very fond of tuna, and when you're eating tuna whether a nice tuna sandwich from a fast-food store or a fancied tuna meal in a fancy restaurant, if you're eating that chances are it comes from the Philippines. Or for sure almost it comes from the Coral Triangle, and that is what we are seeking to preserve.

In addition with President Obama, we met with Secretary Clinton and other members of the Cabinet. We also met with Speaker Pelosi and other Congressional leaders. And I hope that you don't mind, that I said in your behalf, we are thanking them for passing the recognition and benefits of Filipino World War II veterans that they included in the Fiscal Stimulus Package or the American Recovery Act, after 60 long years of waiting we finally got that stage. And as important as these official meetings are, I always meet with the members of the private sector, including financial leaders in New York.

This morning, we met with Coca-Cola, who had just bought back their plant just a couple of years ago with a hundred million dollars, but today they announced their expansion plan of — that will total including what they've put in since they bought the firm back and what they're going to put in in the next few years — they announced that their total investment is going to be one billion dollars. So they have joined our Billion-Dollar Club.

We also met with members of the ICT industry. You know, there's a World ICT Conference that was taking place here in Jersey City, Thursday and Friday. I couldn't attend that because I was in Washington but the big participants came to see me in New York today because they reported how this a world conference, they reported how the Philippines together with India dominated the Conference in terms of attractiveness as a destination for investment.

And it shows in the Philippines. When I first became President there were 6,000 employees in a virtually non-existent BPO industry. Today there are 600,000 workers, young Filipinos in a six billion-dollar industry. In fact one of the leaders of the ICT industry in the meeting I had today was saying about how he met me five years ago and how we were talking about ICT, call centers and BPO, and at that time nobody could imagine what a big driver of growth it would become. Now it has begun such a big driver of growth with unprecedented investments, and so it gives terrific jobs to young people, good paying jobs that keep them at home and not abroad.

You know, we really value how much you our Fil-Ams love the Philippines. We value your dedication to your family, to your nation, to your work like Jackie says, she brings her son to the Philippines so that he will be proud of being a Filipino.

But we are working for the day when there will be enough jobs at home, good jobs so that going abroad will only be a career choice and not the only choice for a hardworking Filipino. But we could not do that with the condition that I inherited eight years ago. As I said at that time even when Asia was surging, the Philippines was on the brink of bankruptcy. At that time, what was it? Our budget was like maybe 900 billion pesos and our tax revenues were 700 billion pesos.

And the tax revenues were only enough to pay the Local Governments' Internal Revenue Allotment, the salaries of the government workers, and the debt service, because for generations they have been living on debt. If we want to spend on infrastructure or for social services, we would have to borrow, we could'nt finance it from our own internal resources. And the more we borrowed, the bigger our debt service would become. And in fact there was a scheduled moment in 2004, had we not done our proper financial management, that our expenditures including debt service would have been bigger than our budget, than our tax revenues and that would have been really a financial collapse on our country. But quietly without headlines — because how do you headline restructuring of debt with foreign creditors, it's too technical — we did it and no financial crisis happened, and then in 2005 our senators and our congressmen helped us with our financial tax reforms.

Bitter medicine to raise taxes. We took the bitter medicine at economic reforms those years ago but those efforts have helped to create a firewall that softened the pressures arising from the global economic downturn. Why did they get a Moody's upgrade? Because we could spend on our own fiscal stimulus and at the same time our deficit is a smaller percentage of GDP compared to our neighbors. In fact in 2007, we virtually balanced the budget. And we could have balanced it in 2008 except that the world economic crisis happened. And what is the use of balancing the budget if it's going to be on the backs of the poor. So we had to do our own fiscal stimulus package, but our deficit this year of three percent is lower than the deficit of our neighboring countries, our peers which is why Moody's said that we are more resilient and we deserve a credit upgrade.

That is also why we were able to maintain positive economic growth during the global economic downturn up to the first quarter of 2001 while many of the rest in the region saw contractions. Our macro-economic stability is a major strength that will put us in a stronger position as an attractive investment and business destination.

In fact, to all those Brookline activists who say all those terrible things about our country and our administration, if during this crisis we were able to have a credit upgrade, if we are growing while many other countries are experiencing recession, if we had been able to create in this last twelve months 1.4 million jobs, while many other countries are losing jobs, we must be doing something right. Thank you.

That said, yes, we have additional pressures. We're working hard to keep the global economic wave from washing over the Philippines, so we have been tireless in securing our fuel, food and rice needs. Because of the revenues our senators and congressmen raised for us, we are investing in energy and rice self-sufficiency, we're building up our schools, we're jump-starting the economy with long-needed infrastructure. These projects are geared to investments in human and physical infrastructure including education and healthcare along with roads, bridges and ports. For instance in education, do you know that almost half of private high school enrollees are receiving government scholarships in private high schools?

And do you know that in skills training — that's why our work force continues to be so competitive — our administration is spending, investing three times more than the three previous administrations combined. And as far as roads are concerned, I guess many of you have just come back or who've been to the Philippines, have been on the Subic-Clark-Tarlac Expressway. Well, that's the corridor that's overseen by Ed Pamintuan. Its... everybody who passes it says, "Wow! its like being in the first world." And yes that's a preview because our vision is to make the Philippines ready for the first world in 20 years. These infrastructure investments, human and physical, will ensure also that we are well-positioned for higher growth once the global economy rebounds.

One of the drivers, growth drivers in Asia is our ingenuity and the ability to identify new opportunities and to play niche roles in the global economy. And in the Philippines, as I said earlier, a number of high growth, high potential industries that nobody ever thought could become a major driver of growth are now taking off and bringing unprecedented amounts of investment in our country like BPO, like the 6,000 workers which have become 600,000 workers. Have you ever heard of an industry that grew 100 times in an eight-year period? And so we are very happy that today the BPO and call center industry employs 600,000 young Filipinos. And another industry that is growing in a similarly dramatic manner is tourism. Nitoy Durano's son, Red Durano's brother, Ace Durano is the Secretary of Tourism, and since he became Secretary of Tourism in 2004 up to today, tourism has almost doubled and has become a five billion-dollar industry.

The good thing about tourism is that, Ace calls it a big tent industry, because you have employment opportunities from the least skilled to the most skilled, it covers everyone, it accepts everyone of all level of skills, and the jobs are very good. I remember the story of a single mother in southern... Oh, yeah, Lupita and I were there in Badjan Island. Remember, Lupita? Beautiful spa and there's the story of a formerly single mother, hand-to-mouth as far as feeding her child was concerned, she became a spa therapist and she's earning terrific now and she has no more problems about the future of her child.

So as I said, these are good paying jobs that keep our people home and not abroad. And I repeat: we are doing our best to create good paying jobs at home. So that if anyone of you want to go back home, or if anyone of you would want to stay, it's a choice, you can stay and have a good life, you can go back home and have a good life — that is our ambition for a Filipino-American.

Samantala, habang sinisikap natin na maging ganun and ekonomiya, sa hrap at ginhawa naman, kayo ang ating mga kababayan na nasa ibang bansa talagang pinapatatag din ninyo ang ating ekonomiya. Yung padala ninyong 16 billion dollars last year noong isang taon ay record. Record na nga noong isang taon, this year, tumataas pa kaysa noong isang taon. At pinakamalaking bahagi ng mga remittances ay nanggagaling dito mismo sa ating mga kababayan sa North America. Kaya maraming, maraming salamat sa inyo lahat.

I've given you a few pieces of good news. I have given you some news that Bert asked about our meetings in Washington. I hope that we can continue to exchange news and I count on the continuing support of FILUSA and the Fil- Am community. And thank you for being proudly Filipino.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a dinner meeting with FILUSA (Filipinos International of the U.S.A.). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100409/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25855&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 1st Philippine-Russian Business Forum

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the 1st Philippine-Russian Business Forum

[Delivered at the Cebu International Convention Center (CICC), August 7, 2009]

Thank you Secretary Remonde for your introduction.

To my dear friend, Honorary Consul General of Russia, Mrs. Armi Lopez Garcia, congratulations for steering this organization and this assembly!

To my other dear friend, Governor Gwendolyn Garcia, thank you for being here inspite of a very important day tomorrow; the Honorable Charge d' Affaires of the Russian Embassy, thank you for being here tonight also, this is a very important event for us and I hope it's an important event for your country; our visitors from Russia, welcome to the Philippines!; and the participants from the Philippine side, welcome as well to this beautiful convention center that Gwen Garcia built for the ASEAN Summit a few years ago, thank you.

The theme says, “ New Ties, New Markets, New Ways.” I would agree with new markets, new ways, but then maybe the ties are not necessarily that new. In the 19th century the Russian Grand Duke Alexis visited the Philippines.

In the 20th century, Manuel Quezon, who became the first President of the Philippine Commonwealth, traveled on the Trans-Siberian Railway from Vladivostok to Moscow.

So, I hope what we will have now will be renewed ties. I hope this centuries-old history of travel between our two countries will be revived and multiplied by this assembly.

We were in Russia recently, with Governor Garcia and Honorary Consul General Garcia.

After all, Russia is one of the world's largest economic powerhouses of the 21st century, together with the other BRIC countries: Brazil, India and China. And because geographically the most part of Russia belongs to Asia, we consider the fact that three of the BRIC belong to Asia and that is one of the drivers of growth of our region.

And indeed, we are fortunate to have these drivers of growth in our region, especially in the light of what has been happening to the world economy these past twelve months. I've often said the past twelve months had been a year for the history books. Financial meltdown in the West spread throughout the world. Tens of millions lost their jobs; billions across the globe have been hurt, the poor always harder than the rich. No one was spared.

We have learned a number of lessons as a result of this global economic crisis. The first has to do with the value of what we did before the crisis. In the Philippines, namely, to get our fiscal and financial house in order to prepare the nation to weather times like these. This involved making tough decisions on raising revenue, cutting down on tax cheats and smugglers, reining in our budget deficit, and working to balance our budget.

Next is that we made a conscious decision to bring increasing balance to the economy. We worked to expand and diversify our trading partners to spread the risk and diversify our economy. And that is why this is important — new markets. We want to increase our trade relations with Russia. At the same time, we worked to build up new industries such as the BPO industry, where today the Philippines is a global powerhouse, as well as to develop our mining sector, of course, in a sustainable manner.

And I'm sure Russia understands what we mean by sustainable manner because when we were in St. Petersburg one of the things we learned is that the carbon footprint of Russia is very small — you are a responsible people as far as environment is concerned. And I was so glad to hear from the speech of Honorary Consul General Armi Lopez Garcia that indeed among the industries that you are promoting it's BPO and mining.

The most important thing that we have learned though is that our economies are all closely interconnected. We sink or swim as one.

When the world faces unprecedented economic challenges, countries must work together to forge stronger relations, to keep trade open and to make greater strides in integrating the global economy so that we emerge from the crisis stronger than before, and so that we instill global systems that ensure that such a global crisis does not happen again.

That is why we welcome Russia and the Philippines working together.

During these challenging times we must stand up and be counted, continuing to work together to build a future that is based on mutual trust, respect and understanding.

I see here my old professor, Ernie Pernia, and I hope he will agree with me when I say that the story of the Philippines in 2008 is that of a country that weathered a succession of global crises in fuel, in food, then in finance, and finally the economy in a global recession, never losing focus and with economic fundamentals intact.

Last month our credit rating was upgraded, citing the resilience of our economy. We are one of the few nations in the region to have withstood the onslaught. Last year and up to the first quarter of this year we kept our growth positive. So, I would like to conclude that our economy is stable and strong. Inflation now is at the lowest in 22 years and we are ready for the economic rebound, especially with a new market, renewed ties and new ways of working together with Russia.

We consider Russia indeed as I said as one of our neighbors because a large part of you is in East Asia. We want to strengthen our economic ties and bring down trade barriers with each other. One of the most important barriers we seek to bring down is the barrier to travel.

I am happy to note the successful results of our Air Services Consultations in Manila last year. We have authorized our Ambassador to sign the resulting Philippine-Russia Air Services Agreement. I count on the Russian business community and the Russian Embassy, and our Honorary Russian Consul General to follow up with your Ministry of Transport to already give the clearance to the Department of State and Policy in Civil Aviation to sign for the Russian side.

I ask the Honorable Charge d' Affaires, is there a problem? He said, it's really technical. And they're trying to match the ministers to sign. I said I have no problem with that. I will send my transportation minister anywhere anytime just so that the two ministers can sign that agreement together.

I can just visualize how much tourism will grow when we have that Air Agreement because already Russia and the CIS countries are our fastest growing tourism market. Everytime I come to Cebu, almost everytime anyway, I always see in the... there in the apron a Russian plane, for Cebu is indeed a favorite of Russian tourists as it is the favorite of international tourists because Cebu is the number one destination for international tourism in our country.

So, we welcome you our friends from Russia and we welcome more Russian tourists to enjoy our sunny weather and our people's warmth, especially the Russian winter is about to come. We are an ideal counterbalance with your winter.

In this ever more globalized world, we must accept that no nation can remain an island. And I am glad, and this event tonight shows it, that the gap between our two countries has been closing slowly to our mutual interest.

So, I thank all of you who are here, who are helping the relationship between our two countries move up to the next level.

So, to all of you, thank you for being here. Enjoy your stay in the Philippines! Let us have renewed ties. Let us have a new market in each other. And let us have new ways of working together for our mutual interest. Congratulations and welcome again to the Philippines!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 1st Philippine-Russian Business Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100359/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25925&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 9th Maasin City Charter Day Anniversary and inauguration of Maasin City Wet Public Market

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 9th Maasin City Charter Day Anniversary and inauguration of Maasin City Wet Public Market

[Delivered at the Maasin City Integrated Market and Terminal Complex, Southern Leyte, August 9, 2009]

Daghang salamat.

Daghan salamat Congressman Oging Mercado sa imong pagpaila kanako ug salamat sa imong kanunay nga suporta sa aton mga balaod didto sa Kongreso, salamat.

Kan Governor Mian Mercado na sa una mayor dinhi sa Maasin City, daghan salamat sab sa imong kanunay nga suporta busa dako kaayo kanunay ang akon pagdaog dinhi sa Maasin City. Kan Vice Governor Maamo; sa atong bishop, Bishop Cantillas, dili lang Bishop sa Maasin kundili sab ang head sa Episcopal Commission sa mga ating OFWs at bishop. Ug kanatong host, si City Mayor Samaco ug tanan mga opisyaes sa Maasin City, salamat sa inyong imbitasyon kanako. Ug sa akong mga kauban sa national government, si Secretary Jun Ebdane ug si Secretary Gabby Claudio, ug si Chairman sa National Youth Commission si Richard Nalupta, ug kaninyong tanan, mga kaigsuonan diri sa Maasin, Happy Anniversary sa inyong Charter Day!

Nalipay ako nga nakabisita na gyud ako dinhi. Niadtong Hulyo pa sa Southern Leyte Day unta giplano na ang akong pagduaw apan gi-postpone. Apan maayo man sab tingali kay karon nakaduaw kita sa Charter Day sa Maasin ug alang sa probinsya naman Mian duna kay okasyon, oportunidad nga makit-an ang nahuman na nga Agas-Agas Bridge, ang flagship bridge sa atong probinsya.

Tingali murag ingon ni Congressman Mercado hibaw na ninyo tanan nga ang paginvest sa human and physical infrastructure usa ka central pillar sa atong plano sa ekonomiya. Ang mga lisod nga desisyon nga gihimo nato to raise revenue and to regain control of our fiscal condition sa tapos na daghan kaayo, dugay kaayo nga mga tuig sa neglect sa aton mga revenues is paying off ug nalipay ko nga Southern Leyte is benefiting.

Bisan kining atong covered court center, as reminded by Governor Mian, atong joint project ni ug ang Agas-Agas Bridge ug daghan pa ang aton nautical highway sa San Ricardo hangtod na sa Tacloban. Kasi gusto ko nga maka build-up sa aton mga probinsya aron ma-spread nato ang mga benepisyo sang ekonomiya beyond Manila. And to that end, ang Southern Leyte ug ang Maasin City dako ang inyong papel sa atong decentralized development.

Ang Southern Leyte ug ang Maasin City apil sa Central Philippines ang atong sentro sa turismo. And that alone makes Maasin, ang kapital sa Southern Leyte, usa ka importante nga parte sa atong Tourism Superregion master plan. Salamat nga bisan na ulahi ang among pag-abot you're still here. Medyo naulahi tungod kay didto sa Agas-Agas Bridge naa pay demonstration sa bungee jumping, sky diving ug lifeline trip kay ma-o gyud ang gusto nato na matan-aw ug tibuok Pilipinas ang atong mga unique nga tourism attractions diri sa Southern Leyte. Ug bag-o pa nining atong mga adventure sports sa Agas-Agas Bridge kaila na ang inyong diving didto sa Limasawa. So importante gyud ang Southern Leyte sa aton Tourism master plan.

Kauban sab kamo sa aton Eastern Nautical Highway kaniadto ang highway, hibaw ni Direktor Matugas ni kay taga-Surigao siya, kaniadto gikan sa Lipata hangtod sa Liloan, apan karon gihimo nato ang Surigao City hangtod sa San Ricardo ug ipaayo naton ang kalsada hangtod sa Tacloban unya Biliran unya Masbate hangtod sa Bicol ma-o ang atong Eastern Nautical Highway. Ug ang plano nato padayon kanunay i-update, enhance nining mga developments aron makahuman kita sa worldclass infrastructure sa tibuok nasud that will raise our competitiveness as an investment, business and tourism destination.

Bisan karon pa lang sa aton gi-inaugurate ang Eastern Nautical Highway 'no sa San Ricardo, gistorya na ni Governor Mian Mercado nga duna nay mga European investors 'no sa mga beach resorts so what more kay gwapo na ang mga kalsada, gwapo na ang Agas-Agas Bridge mag daghan pa ang mga investors na moanhi unta dinhi sa Southern Leyte. Kasi and aton gobyerno nakafocus like a laser beam sa aton mga economic fundamentals sukad sa adlaw na ako nahimo Presidente and kauban didto siguraduhon nato na naa ta ug maayo, solid ug realistic na budget nga nakatubag sa mga kinahanglanon sa atong nasud.

So sa umaabot nga tuig, murag sa nihimo nato sa mga recent years tungod sa mga additional resources generated by our fiscal reforms — ug salamat kang Oging kay dako ang iyang tabang sa mga atong fiscal reforms — padayon pa kita sa pagka-invest sa mga importante nga imprastraktura nga proyekto ug mga social services sama sa edukasyon, sama sa healthcare aron ang aton katawhan makabenepisyo sa atong mga reporma. Samtang gabilin kita nga committed sa fiscal reform ug sa pagbaba sa atong budget deficit aron siguraduhon nato na ang atong nasud mabilin sa kalsada or on the path of sustainable development sa dugay na panahon.

So, mobalanse kita sa aton gusto na fiscal prudence murag usa ka pamilya that does not overspend ug ang balansyado na budget ma-o ibalance nato sa atong kinahanglanon nga mo-invest sa katawhan.

Alang nini ganina, gilunsad nato ang atong National Youth Service Corps, aron mahatagan ang kabataan, gikan sa edad 18 hangtod sa edad 24, ug trabaho ug mga higayon alang sa panginabuhi. Kini ang mga edad kun diin gasugod sila ug huna-huna alang sa ilang kaugmaon. Gusto naton siguruhon nga mahatagan sila ug higayon nga motabang sa mga kahalukan alang sa pag-uswag sa nasod ug higayon sab aron pauswag ang ilang kaugalingon.

Busa on track kita sa atong proposed budget sa umaabot nga tuig. And as a matter of procedure, ang Presidente naay 30 days after Congress convenes, ang atong State of the Nation Address July 27. So, August 27 isubmit nato ang atong budget kan Congressman Oging Mercado ug ang imong kauban sa Kongreso.

Ug paagi sa budget na ihatag nila kanako padayunon nato ang pag-giya sa aton ekonomiya, ihatag nato ang tanan nga mahimo nato aron dili kita malunod sa global recession na naa karon sa tibuok kalibutan. Apan sa akong pagbisita diri sa Southern Leyte, murag ingon ni Roger fourth or fifth time na, fourth or fifth time isip Presidente apan isip DTI, isip senador, isip Bise Presidente countless na.

Kay siyempre nalipay ko sa pagbisita kaninyo kay namati ko ang inyong suporta kanunay sa akong una nga pagkandidato sa senador, sa akong mga... sa bise presidente, sa akong mga senador niadtong 2001, sa akong kaugalingon pagkandidato sa 2004, sa akon mga senador gihapon sa 2007 kanunay dako ang pagdaog dinhi sa Southern Leyte.

Busa kung gapadayon ang inyong suporta, ug hibaw ko nga padayon gyud, mahimo nato ang unsa ang kinahanglan alang sa kauswagan sa nasud ug espeyalmente dinhi sa Southern Leyte ug sa Maasin City.

Daghan salamat kaninyong tanan.

*Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 9th Maasin City Charter Day Anniversary and inauguration of Maasin City Wet Public Market. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100332/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=25928&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the commemoration of the 400th year of Christianization and founding anniversary of Baler

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the commemoration of the 400th year of Christianization and founding anniversary of Baler

[Delivered at Baler Municipal Plaza, Baler, Aurora, August 19, 2009]

Maraming salamat, Senator Ed Angara, former Senate president, sa iyong magandang pagpapakilala at maraming salamat sa laging suporta mo sa mga patakaran lalo na tungkol sa ekonomiya ng ating administrasyon. Thank you very much for that.

Governor Bellaflor Angara Castillo, maraming salamat din sa iyong mga ipinahayag na pag welcome at pagpapaliwanag ng ating pinagdidiriwang ngayon. Binanggit nga ni Ed yung aking pagpunta dito nung ako’y isa pang young matron, martial law pa noon nagsusurfing dito. Pero nung ako ay pumasok na sa public service isa sa unang aking pagbisita rito naalala ko nasa private sector pa si Bella at kasama kami nag helicopter dito. Kaya maraming salamat din Bella sa lagi mong magandang pag welcome sa inyong lingkod.

Kay Congressman Sonny Angara, maraming salamat din sa iyong pag imbita sa akin dito at sa iyong magandang mga ginagawa doon sa Kamara de Representante. At siyempre kay Mayor Arturo Angara at lahat ng mga mamamayan at opisyal ng Bayan ng Baler, Happy 400th Anniversary sa inyong lahat!

I would like to greet the members of the Diplomatic Corps, thank you for joining this 400th anniversary of the founding of Baler. And thank you in behalf of the officials of Aurora for the support that you are giving to the development of this beautiful province.

Meron tayong mga kasamang ilang mga opisyal ng national government, kanina nga tumindig na dito si Ambeth Ocampo at saka si Vic Badoy; at nandito yung aking assistant for Region III, si Reli Fajardo; nakikita... nakikita ko rin si Mike Romero ng Development Bank of the Philippines at yung Chairman ng Komisyon ng Wikang Pambansa nandito rin, si Jolad Santos; and we are very proud to have one of our favorite painters, Jovenal Sanso; at siyempre yung pamilya, yung pamilya ng pinagdidiriwang... ng bayani ng Baler at Aurora na pinagdidiriwang natin ang kanyang kaarawan ngayon yung mga kasapi ng Quezon family, lalo na si Ricky at si Pia at yung ibang mga apo sa tuhod ni President Manuel Quezon. At sa inyong lahat, mga tiga Baler isang mainit na pagbati sa mga tiga Baler sa inyong 400th Anniversary ng pinakamamahal ninyong bayan. Yung mainit medyo literal iyon, sabi nga ni Ambeth — naku! mainit — sabi naman namin ni Mayor Arturo Angara mabuti na’t mainit keysa umuulan kaya... kasi malayo ang Baler kaya pag umuulan mahirumunta dito.

And I would like also to greet our generals who are here headed by on the side of the military si General David, our Northern Luzon Commander, and on the side of the police, General Nilo dela Cruz, our Region III Director, at lahat ng mga officials ng national government regional na narito ngayon.

Kanina binuksan natin yung marker at doon in a very short, concise way nanduon ang kasaysayan ng Baler. Ang mga unang banggit ng ating kasaysayan tungkol sa bayang ito ay nuong itinatag ang Baler bilang isang friar mission nung taong 1609, kaya nga 400 years ago. At nanduon din nung magkaroon ng isang malaking tsunami na pinaglikasan ng labing-apat na pamilyang Balereño papunta sa kasalukuyang kinalagyan nitong mas mataas na lugar, at mula doon, pero ang akala mo pa rin ay kabilang sa mga pamilyang nakaligtas at itinuring nang mga nagtayo ng Bayan ng Baler ay mga ninuno ni Senator Ed Angara at Congresswoman Castillo at Mayor Angara at Congressman Angara — mga founding fathers nila, hindi ba? — ng Bayan ng Baler.

Tapos makaraan ang panahon, muling nabanggit ang Baler nang mapabilang ito sa komunidad na tinawag na El Principe, nanduon din yun sa marker. Naging matagumpay ang pagturo ng mga prayle ng Kristyanismo sa mga taga-rito — ayan, ang ganda-ganda ng inyong simbahan. At nung kami ni Ed Angara ay nagpunta sa España sa bayan ng Almonte ay meron silang museo na replika nitong simbahan ng Baler. Kaya doon tanda ito ng pagpapalaganap ng pananampalataya at kasama nito natuto rin ang mga taga-rito ng kultura at salitang banyaga. Eh yung kultura hanggang ngayon nakikita natin nung kami'y magkasama ni Ed Angara sa Senado. At even before that time nung naririnig ko tungkol sa kanya, wala pa ako sa Senado, talagang alam ko nuon pa si Ed Angara isang culture vulture siguro dahil nga sa tinatawag nating kostumbre at tradisyon dito sa Baler.

Ngunit ang pinakadakilang pangyayari siguro na nababasa natin ay bago naging ganap na bansa ang Pilipinas yung tinawag na Siege of Baler noong 1899 kaya nga nagkaroon ng replica ng Baler Church doon sa Almonte.

Baler is historic because it was here in Baler where a group of Spanish soldiers took their last stand against one of the longest sieges in Philippine history. It was also here in Baler where the enduring friendship between Spain and the Philippines took root through the magnanimity of the revolutionary General and President Emilio Aguinaldo, the first president of the Philippines.

And speaking of presidents, this town of Baler as we have heard today and many times over is also historic because it is the hometown of President Manuel L. Quezon, second Philippine president after Aguinaldo and the first president of the Philippine Commonwealth at Ama ng Tagalog bilang batayan ng Wikang Pambansa — kaya nandito si Jolad — and whose birthday we celebrate today.

Bilang pagpapahalaga sa papel ng Baler sa kasaysayan ng Pilipinas, sinuportahan natin ang resolusyon na pinasa ni Senador Angara sa Senado, at pinirmahan natin ang Proclamation 1696 noong nakaraang taon upang maghanda ang mga taga-Baler, sa pagdiriwang ng ginagawa natin ngayon, yung 400th Anniversary ng inyong bayan. And we have heard about all the beautiful events that had been taking place.

And gaya nang sabi ni Ricky Avanceña kanina, if President Quezon brought Baler back to the limelight in his time, the Angara family also have brought to this historic town a national prominence once more. Not only has Ed Angara made headlines with his achievements for the nation; he has also done a yeoman's job of bringing to Baler and the whole province of Aurora the development that it deserves. And I am very grateful to have the opportunity to be able to help him in his efforts.

We must also thank Senator Angara not only for what he has done here for Baler and Aurora, but I thank him as President of the country for his staunch support and sponsorship, as I said earlier, of many of the economic reforms and the financial reforms that gave the country an unprecedented 33 quarters of growth, hindi lang culture vulture si Ed, hindi lang educator kundi na rin isang napakadalubhasa sa ekonomiya. And with his support we have reinvested the gains of our growth in programs and projects that have enabled the country to survive the global economic slump and put us in an even better position to compete once the world's economies regain their health.

Kanina pinag-uusapan namin ni Ed yung ekonomiya ng mundo, and I congratulate the Chinese government because they are leading the world in economic recovery. And Ed and I were talking about this coco quire here, and China needs a lot of these. So, since China is doing a lot of pump priming on infrastructure including slope protection they're going to need these a lot. Sabi ko kay Ed, let us be ahead in taking advantage of the economic recovery of the world, ibenta na natin kaagad ang ating coco quire sa China.

Yung pag-uusap ng “Ramdam sa Kaunlaran,” palagay ko naman yung Aurora ay nararamdaman naman ang bunga ng kaunlaran, di ba? Kasi Aurora province has had its share of growth programs. May darating pa, yung Aurora Special Economic Zone Authority sponsored by Ed and Sonny, R.A. 9490 passed in 2007, this will hasten the entry of investments and the creation of more jobs.

Itong Aurora Economic Zone na ito ang vision ni Ed is that it will be the country's first "green" economic zone. It is taking shape to bring in investments in agriculture. In fact sabi ni Ed, merong malapit nang darating na aquaculture dito sa ating economic zone.

Also, eco-tourism and related services. It has already attracted the interest of Japanese — thank you, Ambassador — Spanish and other European investors. At dinig ko yung Mutya ng Pilipinas pageant ay naganap dito recently sa Baler, so it again rekindles the people's interest in Aurora and the economic zone. And we all hope that physical development will begin in the first semester next year.

Para dalhin din ang bunga ng kaunlaran sa taumbayan ng Aurora pinaibayo natin yung una yung airstrip sa Casiguran bilang isa sa ating priority programs. Sabi nga ni Sonny, ako lang daw ang pangulo na naglagay ng Aurora sa aking State of the Nation Address, and I am glad... I'm glad to note the improvements in the airport are now about 82 percent complete. Sana matapos itong airport itong taon na ito.

At katabi ng ating airport or para kumpletuhin yung mga infrastructure doon sa Casiguran dahil sa economic zone ay yung Casiguran Port project na inaasahan din natin ay matatapos sa loob ng ilang buwan.

Nung ako naman ay senador pa ay ako ang nakikita ko bilang taga Pampanga, taga Central Luzon ay kailangan ng pantalan sa Pacific Ocean, that is why it was in our interests to push also for the Dingalan Port. At yun naman kaya nung ako ay naging presidente iyon ang inuna kong ginawa, isa rin sa ating priority projects. Binisita natin ito nung isang taon at nakita pa natin ang isa sa pinakaimportanteng proyekto para papunta doon ay yung Tarlac-Nueva Ecija-Aurora-Dingalan Road project. Nagawa natin yung Dingalan Port to Dingalan Road at Gabaldon, Nueva Ecija nung 2007 tapos yung Bongabon to Gabaldon nung May. Pero palagay ko ang pinakaimportanteng imprastraktura para maramdaman ng mga taga Baler ang bunga ng kaunlaran ay yung SCTEX to Baler Road.

Kaya pag-upo ko sa coaster yun ang unang tinanong kong status kay Governor Bella, at mabuti naman kwinento na ni Senator Ed sa akin, nakausap niya ang Regional Director ng DPWH at tuloy-tuloy ang construction at inaasahan na matatapos yung kalsadang yun by the end of this year. Yun ang talagang bunga ng kaunlaran.

Pero dahil ang gusto natin ay yung economic zone ginagawa rin nating priority yung Baler-Casiguran Road na sinimulan natin nung 2007 at half-way through na ngayon.

Kaya ako'y nasisiyahan na kahit na maliit na Bayan ang Baler at Lalawigan ng Aurora makasaysayan naman at malaki ang potential, at yung mga mamamayan ay masisipag at matalino kaya karapatdapat lamang na pagbigyan kayo ng talagang... karapatdapat para sa inyo at kaya dito sa ating ika-apat na raang anibersaryo ng pagkakatatag ng Baler, ginugunita natin ang inyong kasaysayang bunga ng pananampalataya ng mga prayle, bunga ng pagkakaisa yung mga founding fathers, at mahusay na pamamahala na nakikita natin sa kaunlaran ng Baler itong mga kasalukuyang panahon.

At higit sa lahat, ipinagdidiriwang natin ang kaunlaran hindi lamang ng Baler kundi na rin ng buong Aurora. Happy 400th Anniversary and Happy Quezon Day sa inyong lahat!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the commemoration of the 400th year of Christianization and founding anniversary of Baler. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100300/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26021&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2009 World Breastfeeding Celebration

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2009 World Breastfeeding Celebration

[Delivered at the Heroes Hall, Malacañang, August 27, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you, Boboy for your introduction.

Our other Cabinet members: Espie and Jing. And we have, I see too, former Cabinet members in our audience, my Dad's NEC chairman, the former NEDA Larry Henares, and former DOT Secretary Tony Gonzales. Congresswoman Bondoc, City Mayor Bautista, Elvira and the other leaders of the Breastfeeding Movement, ladies and gentlemen:

Welcome to Malacanang on this year's celebration of World Breastfeeding Month!

Since our proclamation in 2005, every year, we have held a program in Malacañan Palace to celebrate this very important month for mothers and infants. We do it to show our endorsement of the most economical way to nourish infants. We do it to support natural family planning practices because breastfeeding is indeed a safe method of natural family planning. We do it because we want only the best for the Filipino child, and that includes the best source of baby's nutrition — mother's milk.

Breastfeeding as you have heard from our Department of Health representative is part of our five-year national program for Infants and Young Child Feeding. And for this cause let me say that our mentor is a gentleman I mentioned earlier, Larry Henares, my late father's chairman of the National Economic Council.

It is not only women who can be advocates of the breastfeeding movement. In fact, aside from Secretary Henares, there is an outstanding American gentleman who played a key role in the international movement to make people aware, more aware of the benefits of breastfeeding.

We offer the deepest sympathies of the Filipino people to the family of that gentleman, the late U.S. Senator Edward Kennedy, who just passed away yesterday. And it is fitting we hold this celebration today also to commemorate his memory and his contributions.

Senator Kennedy, Edward Kennedy was the youngest of the famous Kennedy brothers who contributed much to the U.S. advancement in human rights, in standing up to the Soviets during the Cold War, and in asserting the superiority of democracy over totalitarianism. Aside from what he did in common with his brothers, among Senator Edward Kennedy's greatest achievements were accomplished as chairman of the U.S. Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions. In this role he served the Philippines and the world when he chaired a session in 1979, that is 30 years ago, of the U.S. Senate Sub-Committee on Health to hear the testimony of a Filipina doctor, Dr. Natividad Clavano, about a 10,000-baby study on the experiences of the General Hospital in Baguio City. The study had shown a 95 percent decrease in infant mortality as the result of exclusive breastfeeding.

Reacting to this and related findings, Senator Edward Kennedy hurled a challenge to the World Health Organization. In two years' time, the WHO formulated the International Code on the Marketing of Breastmilk Substitutes and other Related Products.

For his singular role in promoting human rights and public health, including the passage of that International Milk Code, we honor the late Senator Edward Kennedy. And we will soon present to his family our highest Presidential award, through Special Envoy Dr. Elvira Lichauco Henares-Esguerra for the public health component of the award and Presidential Adviser Sonny Alvarez for the human rights component of the award.

We also recall the pivotal role played by Dr. Nicholas Alipui, who was in the audio visuals today, former UNICEF country representative to the Philippines and now the programme director of the UNICEF, his role was large in promoting breastfeeding in our country. So, also through Elvira, our special envoy, we will be awarding him the Order of the Golden Cross, rank of Maringal na Krus.

But, these are the men who have helped us very much in the breastfeeding movement. But let us not forget the women. We further commend Elvira and Dr. Nona Castillo for their herculean efforts, in fact, they have been behind the revival of interest in breastfeeding in the country. We also thank my cabalen Congresswoman Anna York Bondoc for today in the Philippines though we have a Milk Code, we have to strengthen that with a strong implementing rules and regulations which the Supreme Court has upheld. And now, thanks to the efforts in Congress of Anna, hopefully, those implementing rules and regulations can be institutionalized into a revised Milk Code.

Through the efforts of Larry, Elvira, Nona, Anna, our Cabinet members here, the breastfeeding movement has gained a lot of supporters in our country, including those in disaster prevention and mitigation — and earlier, Elvira already acknowledged them — the boy scouts, the nurses, the policemen, the firemen from different walks of life, that seem to have nothing to do with breastfeeding but a lot to do with disaster response. There is so much support for breastfeeding that, as pointed out earlier by Elvira, we even won the Guinness World Records for several first in breastfeeding. So, congratulations for all of that!

The more advocates we have, the stronger the movement becomes to reach out and convince every mother to breastfeed their child. The mothers who are the staunchest supporters of this movement are willing to breastfeed even infants who are not their own. We saw earlier the heroic effort, the heroic role that the Chinese policewoman played after the Sichuan earthquakes, when she breastfed nine of the surviving babies. Without her breastfeeding other mother's babies, those babies would also have perished in the aftermath of that earthquake. That is why, as you saw also in the audio visual, we presented to her the World Breastfeeding Gold Medal Award in Beijing last year.

So, once again, in closing, I thank and congratulate all of you for your support and leadership in the breastfeeding movement. And together, our message to the Philippines is — and this is a message that was carried by our media because they always carry my speeches:

“Muli, tinatawagan natin ang sambayanan: suportahan nating lahat ang Breastfeeding Movement. Ang gatas ng ina ay mas matipid at mas masustansya. Nakakatipid tayo, nakakatulong tayo sa natural family planning, at higit sa lahat mas nakasisiguro tayo na magiging malusog at matalino ang ating mga sanggol at anak.”

Mabuhay ang mga ina at mga sanggol ng Pilipinas!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100228/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26194&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Awarding of the Builders of Baguio in Celebration of Baguio's Centennial Anniversary

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Awarding of the Builders of Baguio in Celebration of Baguio's Centennial Anniversary

[Delivered at the Baguio City Hall, Baguio City, August 28, 2009]

Dios ti agngina unay, Apo Congressman Domogan, thank you so much for your very kind and very encouraging introduction. Thank you also for your good work as congressman and former mayor of the City of Baguio.

Mayor Rey Bautista and the other elected officials of Baguio City; the Baguio Centennial Commission headed by Chairman Bautista; our Builders of Baguio Awardees; our various leaders and representatives of the different communities of Baguio City, Happy Centennial Anniversary!

Congressman Domogan said that I'm always here in your important occasions. I'm also always here even in unimportant occasions, because we vacation here about two or three times a year every year since I was a young married woman.

Baguio is one of the most unique places in the country. You have your own climate and vegetation that is hardly found anywhere else in the country but now being imitated. And these were what attracted the Americans to Baguio.

When Baguio became a chartered city in 1909, a hundred years ago which is what we are celebrating, Baguio became a major tourist destination. It became the country's summer retreat from escape from the sweltering heat of the lowlands. It became the summer capital of the country. Even the Supreme Court chose to hold its sessions here during the hot season, and that practice continues to this day.

It became fashionable to vacation in Baguio during the hot months. My mother, Dra. Evangelina Macaraeg Macapagal, who hails from a town just an hour and a half drive away of Binalonan had so many stories of her high school vacations in Baguio in the early 1930s during the American period. She would come up every summer vacation and live in Engineer's Hill because her father was a District Engineer of the American administration. Everyday she would be fetched by a car of the Madrigal family to join her classmate and best friend, Macaria Madrigal who became Mrs. Macaria Madrigal de Leon, and they would go to Burnham Park and other places — remember they were teenagers — and they would watch popular young men like Carling Sevilla and Raul Manglapus who were very very popular on the dance floor — great memories of my mother.

And, even then, Burnham Park was the fashionable destination for the young people. The American architect Daniel Burnham, after whom Burnham Park was named, is remembered by outsiders as of now after whom Burnham Park was named but of course for oldtimers of Baguio and for us, for everybody else celebrating 100 years of Baguio one of the learnings is how the great Architect Daniel Burnham, architect and city planner, architect of the City of Chicago also became the architect of the City of Baguio and designed the city so magnificently, complementing not altering the natural contour of the land, and leaving Baguio with the distinct feel of an American city of the early 20th century.

And so I was telling Mayor Rey Bautista, Baguio and Chicago are both products of Burnham, both children of Burnham, how natural for Baguio and Chicago to become sister cities. (applause) But while that is being worked out in his honor and in honor of the Baguio Centennial as Mayor Bautista has said we have devolved Burnham Park to the city of government here in Baguio on the occasion of the start of your centennial celebrations last January 2009.

As part of your centennial celebrations also we... the Philippine Tourism Authority are contributing to the development of the Baguio Centennial Park where this beautiful statue is going to be unveiled on September 1, and that is also something that has been given even earlier by President Ramos to the City of Baguio. And indeed, I hope that with Baguio City owning these properties you can use your good income to develop and continue to sustain this beautiful attractions of Baguio City.

While Baguio is 100 years old as a chartered city, as Father Cosalan reminds us in his prayer, is really much older than that as a community. As we celebrate the centenary of Baguio City we're also made aware of its history of the 12 Ibaloi families, the Ilokano migrants, the German expatriate who founded Baguio. We are told that they were followed soon by the Spaniards. Then came the American colonizers who came here starting with Baguio as a hill station then getting bigger and bigger as a summer capital. And then the Japanese and other nationalities who helped build Kennon Road in 1905. One of the Japanese descendants is Mrs. Cecille Hamada Afable, and her son Yongyong became a member of my Cabinet.

The Baguio Centennial Commission as we saw earlier today is honoring the Builders of Baguio, pioneer families, and I congratulate Pauling Molintas for being a member of the Suello family; outstanding men including former Mayor Paraan; and outstanding institutions. One of the things we learn by celebrating the Centennial of Baguio is that Baguio Central School was the very first public school in the entire Philippines.

Mayor Rey Bautista tells us the story of his grandfather who was a teacher in Manila and then was recruited to teach in the new Baguio Central School at three times the salary of what the teachers in Manila were receiving, very attractive indeed, so he uprooted himself, started teaching in Baguio, and he's another third generation member resident of the City of Baguio. And the council as I look at you I also recognize other old families of Baguio City, so this is in honor of all of you as well and all your families.

One of the honorees is Eusebius Halsema. We outside know him as the man after whom was named the Halsema Highway which my father built as the major route to the northern towns of the Cordilleras. Now in this centennial celebration we learn more about Halsema as the mayor and architect of Baguio's transformation from 1920 to 1927. No wonder when my mother started to come here from 1928 to 1934 it was already such a destination for young people as it continues to be even today.

But speaking of Halsema, it is my honor as mentioned by Congressman Domogan to rehabilitate the Halsema Highway. I do it not only to honor the memory of my father Diosdado Macapagal who built it as a highway but also we hope it can be completed during this Baguio centenary as a tribute to Baguio as the center of the Cordilleras. In fact, the way to Baguio from the Halsema Highway is Magsaysay Avenue. And remember a few years ago, when Magsaysay Avenue was destroyed by a calamity, we immediately rebuilt it because it is a major artery not only for Baguio City but for the entire Cordilleras.

Also in furtherance of Baguio as a center of the Cordilleras, earlier this year, on your centenary, we inaugurated the Baguio-Aritao Road which connects Baguio to the rice terraces. So, therefore, all the more we make now Baguio-Banaue as one tourism package.

But that is Baguio of today, going back to Baguio of yesterday, we are not surprised to learn that the lure of Baguio and the Cordilleras was originally the rich minerals underneath its soil as well as the rich soil on the surface. The pioneers who developed Benguet mines also started the country's mining industry. The farmers of the province also found their gold mine in the vegetables and strawberries that came to be known as Baguio vegetables up to now even if they're producing Buguias and Baguio strawberries, even if they're producing La Trinidad. They're all known as Baguio because the way you know Manila as Manila even if it's in Quezon City or Bacoar for that matter it's Manila, anywhere here it's called Baguio.

But we want to promote this. To promote this tradition especially of the vegetables in the towns that surround Baguio, we have worked hard also to put value added. For instance, we funded the Benguet State University to start a Veggie Noodle Center so that the vegetables in the surrounding areas of Baguio can continue to be sustainable whether the bumper harvest... whether their harvest is bumper, whether there are many cheap imports the important thing is vegetables remain an important part of the culture of Baguio and its surrounding areas.

Remembering a hundred years of Baguio includes commemorating its great tragedies: the World War II, which started and ended in Baguio City; the earthquake of 1990. We recall the start of the war and the earthquake with mourning, but we also marvel at how Baguio bounced back after the war and bounced back after the earthquake to be the bustling center it is today.

Baguio is perhaps the only city in the Philippines whose development was supported by the mining industry and the tourism sector. That your city was nurtured by two seemingly incompatible industries is a testament that development is not an either/or proposition. Congressman Domogan is a testament to how mining has helped the community. He started as a janitor in Lepanto, rose up to be lawyer. And we were talking earlier about the Ms. Philippines of 2001 also who was educated to become a lawyer by her father who was working in the mines. And that has not stopped Baguio from being a tourism destination.

Up to today, when there are so many other tourist destinations in the country, my family and I try to take a trip to Baguio every New Year and Holy Week. And this is long before I became president because my husband's family was one of the many families who stayed in Baguio so often during the whole summer break that they built their second residences here in Baguio including my husband's family which built the Tuason compound for their own residence.

But to go back to mining and tourism as a combination, on Mirador Hill there is a property that belongs to the Presidential Management Staff, and I have given permission that this will be used to build a mining museum. For your Baguio Convention Center we want that the surrounding trees will be preserved. So I have instructed Secretary Ermita to instruct the GSIS that any development to be undertaken must be done only in the built up areas and not in any place that is still with plenty of trees.

Because I've been coming here as I said every year practically since I got married but even before I got married, you know, recalling the history of Baguio I'm trying to recall the first time I went to Baguio, I can't remember because I've been coming all my life. I remember when I was very very young — maybe like three years old or some, which is when most of our earliest memories are — we were house guests of my father's brother-in-law, Rogelio dela Rosa in his house which became I think the Girl Scouts House now and then later on we would continue to come and sometimes in my cousin's house, sometimes in my classmate's house and then in the Vice President's Cottage. When my father was congressman and chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Foreign Affairs House on Cabinet Hill, and then as vice president in the cottage, and then as president when my father were in The Mansion, that's why it's my second time now to be a resident of Mansion House.

And so, why do we keep coming here even if there are so many other tourism destinations that have developed over the last 100 years, because we love the mountains, we love the rice terraces of the neighboring provinces, we love the fresh air, we love the greenery of Baguio. These are the things that have been taken for granted not just in this country but around the world.

The environment — that is something that has been given to us by God but that are being ruined with mankind's own hands. But for the most part, environmental degradation is a result of lack of awareness that is happening. It's also therefore lack of making it a priority. That is why environmental conservation takes a very high priority in our development agenda. And we thank the leaders of Baguio for sharing this philosophy.

Together, we are finding ways to ensure that we balance economic and environmental interests exactly so that we can preserve our country's natural beauty found in such places as the beautiful City of Baguio, the City of Love as Father Cosalan says.

Isu nga kablawaak dagiti umili ti Baguio on your 100th year. Congratulations to all the people of Baguio City for 100 beautiful years! — that is what your streamers are saying. And may you have many many more not years but centuries of beautiful and sustainable development.

Agbiag ti Baguio! Dios ti agngina kadakayo amin.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Awarding of the Builders of Baguio in Celebration of Baguio's Centennial Anniversary. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100110/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26198&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the meeting with the Filipino Community
Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the meeting with the Filipino Community

[Delivered at the Golden Tent Hall, Tripoli, Libya, August 31, 2009]

Maraming salamat Secretary Roque sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin.

At siguro kilala na rin niyo si Secretary Bert Romulo ang ating Secretary of Foreign Affairs; si Secretary Cerge Remonde ang ating Press Secretary; si Secretary Bert Gonzales ang ating National Security Adviser; saka si Ambassador Paeng Seguis na siya ang Chairman ng ating Peace Panel na nakikipag-usap sa MILF.

Gusto kong batiin si Pangulong Makabinta at ang buong Philippine community, pati na rin kay Ambassador Vicente — welcome to Libya from being Consul General in Hongkong — and Mr. Jamal, our friend from Libya who's been taking good care of us since we arrived here today. Pwede na kayong maka-upo. Sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat.

Congratulations sa ating mga graduates! At doon sa iba maraming salamat sa inyong pagdalo dito. King kabalen kung Capampangan, dactal a salamat king pamanyatang yu ngening bengi. Sa mga kaigsuonan gikan sa Visayas ug Mindanao, daghan salamat sa pag-anhi. Dagiti kakabsat nga Ilocano, agyaman ti ... tatta nga rabii. Sa mga kasimanwa, salamat gid nga ari kamo subong.

At gusto kong sabihin sa inyo, siguro alam naman ninyo ito, sa nadidinig ko sa mga tiga rito, saludo sa inyo ang lahat ng mga taga dito sa Libya. Congratulations!

I'm happy to learn that companies in Libya compete with the Filipinos working for them whether as nurses in Libyan hospital — congratulations! sa mga nasa Medical Center — or engineers building the towers of Tripoli, our mechanics manning the oil fields in the desert, at yung iba-iba niyong mga trabaho rito, my hats off to the Filipino workers in Libya.

Talagang hindi matatawaran ang sipag at kalidad ng inyong trabaho, gayundin ang mabubuting asal at katapatan ninyo sa tungkulin. Kaya kahit narito si Ambassador Vicente kayo ang mga tunay na embahador ng Pilipinas sa Libya. At hindi lamang ito kung hindi lalong matimbang kayo sa ating bansa — pinagdadarangal at pinapahalagahan ang inyong sakripisyo at katapatan sa inyong trabaho, sa inyong pamilya at sa ating bansa.

Gaya na nang sabi ni Ambassador Vicente parati kong sinasabi nasa hirap at ginhawa pinapatatag ninyong mga OFW ang ating bansa. Yung padala niyong 16 billion dollars mga OFWs sa buong mundo nung isang taon kahit na nagkaroon na ng economic crisis yun ay record sa kasaysayan ng ating bansa. Pero itong taon mas mataas pa ang pinapadala ninyo kaya maraming salamat.

At alam ko na ito ay nanggagaling sa sakripisyo. It is not a sacrifice joyfully borne, it is lonely work, very hard work. Although here in Libya, I hear it is not as lonely for some of you especially those who are working in the oil fields compared to other countries because many of you have been allowed to bring your family with you, hindi ba? Isang malaking bentaha yan haming sa mga OFW ng ibang bansa. And this way you're even able to look after your family members yourselves.

Hindi ako nag-aatubiling bisitahin ang ating taong bayan at inyong mga host sa buong mundo mula sa Middle East hanggang sa American Midwest gaya ng Chicago, mula Libya hanggang London nakikinig sa inyong mga problema at pangangailangan. Inaalam kung papano kayo matulungan ng ating pamahalaan by working out better policies on migrant labor or by saving lives and restoring liberties.

And I'm so glad that here in Libya there are not too many problems with the law. And I don't have to come here to ask for salvation from the death penalty for any Filipino worker. My visit here this time, kasi meron sa inyo nakilala ko na nung nag state visit ako ng 2006, but this time my visit has given me the opportunity, to renew the opportunity to engage the leaders of Africa who are important to our country. We were invited by Libya, by the chairman of the African Union to come to their summit and also to the 40th Anniversary tomorrow of the Libyan Revolution.

Africa is becoming more important, more and more important to the Philippines. We are directly affected, our energy security is directly affected by the peace and order in Africa. But even more than that the safety and welfare of many of our Overseas Filipinos are also affected by the peace and order of Africa especially our seafarers. Malapit nang matapos ang East African monsoon, so we feel a surge of pirate attacks of the coast of Somalia where many of our seafarers work on board the ships that pass through the Suez Canal and the Gulf of Aden.

Bagamat marami na ang pinakawalaan mahigit dalawang daan Filipino seamen ang nagdusa sa kamay ng mga pirata kaya masigasig tayong nagsisikap para proteksyunan ang ating mga seafarer. This is one issue where it is crucial for Africa to work together to bring peace and order in the affected areas of the Coast of Somalia.

Earlier today I had the opportunity to speak with the President of Somalia. He is also worried, he is also concerned about the terrorists who harass the boats that pass through the Suez Canal and the Gulf of Aden of the Coast of Somalia. And he realizes how important it is to us because we are the number one seafaring people in the world.

So, one way by which we can help to address the problem of peace and order in Somalia is by institution-building. Halimbawa, palakasin yung kanilang civil service, palakasin yung kanilang coast guard, at alam naman ninyo ang mga Pilipino eksperto sa mga ganung bagay, yung mga human resource development. Kaya dahil mahalaga ito sa ating mga seafarer ang pinag-usapan namin ng pangulo ng Somalia kanina ay tutulong ang mga Pilipino sa pag training sa kanilang mga civil servants. Ikabubuti ng Somalia at ikabubuti din ng ating mga Pilipino.

On the part of Libya, Libya has always been standing by us. During my administration, Libya's help has been so big in bringing peace and hope to the Southern Philippines. And also, in helping to strengthen and form a deeper relation with the other Muslim countries. (applause) Together with Brunei and Japan, Libya monitors our ceasefires with the MILF.

And I am glad to see some of the students who are studying in the Islamic Call Society because that is a very important institution for us to teach the real Islam, the Islam that loves peace and abhors hatred. And it is our honor that during our administration we were able to accord the Libyan Islamic Call Society diplomatic status (applause) to make it easier for us to work together for peace and development.

Libya's role in our peace is also important because of the connection of peace to development. As we improve the security of the parts of the country that have known some degree of violence — and we are doing this together with the help of the international community, kasama na nga ang Libya — mas mabilis tayong kumilos para magdala ng kaunlaran sa mga lugar na yun na nung araw ay marami ang labanan. Marahil yun din ang isang dahilan kung bakit isa tayo sa iilan lamang mga bansa sa buong mundo na nakakaraos sa kasalukuyang world economic recession at tuloy pa rin na positive ang ating growth rate.

Itong pandaigdigang krisis ng ekonomiya ang isang naipakita ay yung ating ekonomiya ay matatag at malakas, mababa ang inflation, at handa na tayo para sa economic rebound. Yung ating mga business outsourcing at call centers tuloy-tuloy ang kanilang boom. Yung tourism, kausap ko lang si Secretary Durano kanina sa telepono, umaakyat yung ating manufacturing sector, umaangat na naman muli pagkatapos nang bumaba nung panahon ng world economic crisis. Yung mga bagong construction tuloy-tuloy walang tigil. Yung ating mga hotel punong-puno ng mga negosyante mula sa buong mundo.

Kaya tayo ay bullish para sa ating prospects for a solid recovery. At ito ay importante dahil nagsisikap tayong lumikha sa ating bansa ng mga trabahong maganda ang kita para sa ganun kayo overseas work will just be a career choice and not the only option for a hardworking Filipino.

Samantala, sa ating mga nag graduate ngayon at sa mga organisasyon na tumutulong dito sa programa gusto kong magpasalamat sa inyong lahat na mataas ang tingin sa Pilipinas dito sa bansang Libya dahil pinapakita ninyo ang excellence ng great Filipino worker.

Kaya sa inyong lahat, congratulations! More power to you!

Maraming, maraming salamat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the meeting with the Filipino Community. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412100052/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26199&Itemid=38

Message of President Arroyo on the death of Iglesia ni Cristo Executive Minister Eraño G. Manalo

Message
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
On the death of Iglesia ni Cristo Executive Minister Eraño G. Manalo

[Delivered at the Presidential Lounge, NAIA Terminal II, September 2, 2009]

Ang pagpanaw ni Ka Erdy Manalo ay isang malaking kawalan hindi lang para sa kapatiran ng Iglesia ni Cristo kundi na rin sa lahat ng Pilipino.

Bilang punong gabay sa ispiritwal na pamumuhay ng milyon-milyong katao sa buong mundo, nagpamalas si Ka Erdie ng natatanging pamamahala na puno ng pagmamahal at pagmamalasakit sa kapatiran. Siya'y huwarang Pilipinong nagpalaganap ng pananampalataya at pagkakaisa.

Nagpapasalamat ako sa mga payo at tulong na ibinigay ni Ka Erdie sa akin mula noong ako'y Senador pa.

Ako at ang aking Gabinete, kasama ang aking pamilya, ay taos-pusong nakikiramay sa naulilang pamilyang Manalo at sa kapatiran sa pananampalataya ng dakilang Ka Erdie.

Pasalamat nating lahat ang Panginoong Diyos sa ginawang paglilingkod ni Ka Erdie sa sambayanang Pilipino.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's message on the death of Iglesia ni Cristo Executive Minister Eraño G. Manalo. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412095903/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26200&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Filipino World War II Veterans Assembly

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Filipino World War II Veterans Assembly

[Delivered at Camp Aguinaldo, September 3, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Teodoro for your introduction. And thank you also for helping me fight for the cause of the veterans in the United States.

Undersecretary Carolina, President of the Veterans Federation Colonel de Ocampo, Chairman Diaz of the Veterans Affairs Committee. And we have here Congresswoman Roman and her husband Antonino Roman, Congresswoman Herminia Roman and her husband former Congressman Roman, and Congressman Roman Romulo — panay Roman tayo dito ah — and Congressman Dodo Mandanas. General Ibrado and the other members of the Armed Forces, our dear veterans, our sons and daughters of the veterans, ladies and gentlemen, good afternoon.

Una sa lahat, binabati ko ang mga beteranong narito ngayon. Kasi gusto kong ulitin na kinikilala ng buong sambayanan na malaking karangalan ang inyong binigay sa ating bansa. Kaya karangalan ko ngayon na makasama kayo, kayo ang mga bayaning nagtanggol sa kalayaan ng ating bayan at ng buong mundo. Dahil sa matinding pagtatanggol ninyo sa Bataan at iba pang bahangi ng Pilipinas nung yung mga kalaban ay pumunta rito, natagalan yung giyera dito hindi nakapunta sa ibang mga lugar na pupuntahan pa nila pagkatapos, kaya you saved not only the Philippines but the whole world.

At naalala ko kayo kahit na nung ako ay nasa Africa kung saan ako nanggaling, why? Because Africa today means so much to our peace and stability. The peace and stability of Africa means so much to our energy security, but more importantly, the safety and welfare of many of our overseas Filipinos, including our seafarers.

And on our part, like you during the Second World War contributing to the safety of the whole world, we also are an important contributor to peace and stability on the African continent. Because we have hundreds of Filipino soldiers and policemen in different United Nations missions in Africa including Darfur in Sudan and Cote d' Ivoire. And these were very important conflicts that were discussed during the African Summit on Conflict Resolution that I just attended. Our soldiers and policemen in Africa are helping to preserve peace and they are a tribute to the professionalism and dedication of our men and women in uniform. They are our nation's investment in global peace and they are your heirs, your spiritual heirs, they continue your tradition of courage for the cause of freedom.

And I know that their sacrifice in Africa is not a sacrifice joyfully borne. It is work where it can be found in faraway places, among strangers with different cultures and it is very lonely to be there in those distant outpost of the world. Kaya nagsisikap tayong lumikha dito sa atin ng mga trabahong maganda so that overseas work will just be a career option and not the only option for a Filipino.

And one of the things we try to do to be able to create good jobs here in the Philippines is to develop our PHIVIDEC Industrial Estate. So, for instance, I was asking Colonel de Ocampo, how is PHIVIDEC of which he is the chairman representing the veterans? And he said it's okay, doing fine. Thanks to the support of the national government and we are hoping that very soon — actually, they've already started to put up a training center. Hanjin which has a major project, a billion-dollar project in Subic and Bataan and Zambales will do its even bigger billion-dollar plus expansion in the PHIVIDEC area of Misamis Oriental.

Hindi ako nag-aatubiling bisitahin ang ating taong-bayan at kanilang mga hosts sa buong mundo mula Africa hanggang American Midwest — ngayon ang hometown ni President Obama — nakikinig sa mga problema ng ating mga Pilipino, mga pangangailangan ng ating mga Pilipino doon at inaalam kung papano sila matutulungan ng ating pamahalaan by working out better policies on migrant labor, for instance.

Halimbawa sa Libya, iniwanan ko doon nung ako ay umuwi kagabi si Secretary Nitoy Roque para mabuo niya yung kanyang labor agreement doon sa Minsitry of Labor ng Libya. Another thing we do is to save lives and restore liberty. Yung mga ating mga manggagawa, kasi kung by the law of average if we have eight million people abroad siguro naman may ilang magkakaroon ng problema sa batas at merong mga bansa na may death penalty. Yun ay malaking napapakiusap natin na kung hindi tayo pumupunta doon at personal na humihingi ng pabor sa mga pinuno nila ay marami doon ay nagkaroon na ng kanilang execution ng death penalty.

Our vigorous international engagement has also brought in foreign investments. Kaya tignan naman ninyo itong mga investments na pumasok sa ating administrasyon, 15 times over what we started with at kasama ng ating mga overseas Filipinos, itong mga investments natin ay nagdoble tuloy ang ating foreign exchange at pinalakas ang ating piso at naiwasan ang lubhang pagtaas ng presyo. In fact, our inflation rate is the lowest today in many many years. At sa gitna ng ating global recession na upgrade pa ang ating credit rating. Kaya habang yung ating mga kapaligirang bansa ay bumababa ang kanilang foreign exchange reserves over the past years, yung atin naman ay lumalaki by three billion dollars. At kahit na two-thirds ng mundo ay nasa recession during the last twelve months, tayo 34 quarters of uninterrupted growth. Yun ang ating nararanasan sa Pilipinas.

Pero yung global engagement natin ay hindi lamang para sa kapayapaan, hindi lamang para sa investment, it has also corrected historical injustice. Gaya nga ng sabi ni Colonel de Ocampo hindi pa ako pangulo ay pag pumupunta ako sa America parating bahagi ng aking agenda ay yung veterans rights from the beginning. And I was so happy that last February, the day that we visited Washington, Senator Daniel Inouye, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations sponsored the benefits for our veterans as part of American's stimulus package.

Mabuti sinabi nga ni Undersecretary Carolina nandiyaan yung language nung nasa batas mismo na provision that recognizes our veterans. Siguro para meron siyang kapareha, I will also give you what Senator Inouye gave me what he said when he defended the veterans provisions. But let me tell you what he said verbally first. He said: "On January 26, 1941, the President of the U.S., Mr. Roosevelt, issued a military order through General MacArthur calling upon Filipinos to volunteer in the Army to serve in the Navy, to serve in the Air Force, because the President sensed correctly that there was much instability and violence in Asia. He felt the time had come for the U.S. to be prepared for any eventuality. As a result of that call, 470,000 Filipinos stepped forward and volunteered to serve in the military under the command of General MacArthur."

As we all know, on December 7, 1941, Pearl Harbor was bombed, and then the forces of Japan began advancing to the Philippines. The first major target was the Bataan Peninsula. The 14th Japanese Army surrounded the peninsula. That peninsula contained at the moment 80,000 troops. We all assumed that the 80,000 were American troops, sabi niya. No, about 18,000 were American troops; the rest were Filipinos. Yes, the majority of the troops in Bataan were Filipinos, but somehow, sabi niya, if you look at Hollywood on the Bataan Death March, you will hardly see a Filipino marching. So kaya siguro hindi kinikilala ang ginawa ng mga Pilipino nung panahong yun. In fact, sabi niya sa akin sa ibang mga conversation, ang nakikita nila doon si Audie Murphy pero hindi yung ating mga magiging na Pilipino.

But anyway to continue what he said on the Senate floor: "Of the survivors of Bataan, 15,000 were Americans, 60,000 were Filipinos. The march took a little over a month. They were not given medicine or water. But the time it ended, 54,000 survived. Very few Filipinos survived. And then we had Corredigor. The same thing."

In March 1942, the Congress of the U.S. — the Senate and the House of the U.S.— passed a measure thanking the Filipinos for their gallantry, for their heroism, and said: "If you wish, you may become a citizen of the U.S. and get all the benefits." But the war ended, and in February of 1946, the U.S. Congress passed a bill rescinding, repealing the Act of 1942. Sabi nga ni Senator Inouye, believe it or not, Congress declared that the service the Filipinos had rendered was not active duty. So yun ang malaking insulto na nangyari sa ating mga beterano sa ating bansa.

And to go back to Senator Inouye, and he speaks for all of us when he said, we waited all this time. We have had measure after measure presented. We did so in the proper fashion but we got filibustered, we got ruled out and everything else. Yun ang sabi niya.

Well on my part, as I said, in my visits to the U.S. even before I became president and especially since 2001, I have been fighting for our veterans cause, for our veterans benefits. Naalala ko yung dating U.S. Secretary of Veterans Affairs ay talagang nahihirapan na siya sa akin kasi tuwing pumupunta ako doon I would call him to come and see me and we talk about this bill. Hirap na hirap siyang maipasa sabi niya, pero nagbigay sila ng mga interim measures. Kasama sa interim measures na binigay nila, the U.S. has been equipping our Veterans Hospital since my state visit of 2003 in America, another direct benefit of our engagement with the United States. In any case, after the sponsorship speech of Senator Inouye, on that day that we were in Washington, the U.S. recognized you our Filipino World War II veterans.

So last July, I accepted the invitation of President Obama to be the first Southeast Asian leader to meet him at the White House, partly in order to express our appreciation for recognizing our veterans in their fiscal stimulus package. And I told him that this long overdue recognition will hopefully go a long way toward rewarding you, our patriotic Filipinos who fought side-by-side with Americans under U.S. command during those heroic days.

I also thanked him and the U.S. government for equipping our military and training them to enhance their professionalism and effectiveness, and to advance “soft” power by helping build schools, roads, bridges and building our local economy through American development assistance in Mindanao and across the nation. These joint efforts have helped strengthen our paradigm for peace in Mindanao.

Andaming naitutulong ng mga Amerikano sa ating laban kontra sa terorismo lalo na tuwing nagkaron ng meeting ang inyong lingkod at ang Pangulo mas gumaganda ang tulong. Halimbawa ngayon meron tayong mga kaso kontra sa mga Abu Sayyaf, yung ating mga prosecutors ay tinutulungan ng American forces sa kanilang safety, sa kanilang transportation at lahat-lahat kaya gumaganda ang prosecution. Kasi nung araw halos walang gustong pumunta sa Sulu magprosecute dahil natatakot ngunit dahil tinutulungan sila sa mga facilities, while Americans cannot find on the ground, they can help in so many other ways. So those are some of the ways that many don’t know about by which they help our fight against terrorism.

Nung ako ay pumunta sa Washington kasama ko si Gilbert, Senators Inouye and Daniel Akaka, who is Chairman of the U.S. Veterans Affairs Committee of the Senate, visited us at the Presidential Suite to receive also our thanks for being most instrumental in having the veterans recognition included in the stimulus package.

Naalala ko nung hindi pa Democrats yung nanduon sa majority ng Senado at Congress, at Senator Inouye was the ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, naalala ko sinabi niya sa akin minsan dahil parati tayo nakikipag-ugnayan sa kanya dahil siya ang champion ng mga beterano sa package veterans compensation. Sabi niya sa akin, hayaan mo at pag bumalik na yung mga kapartido ko at magiging majority kami muli ako muli ang magiging chairman ng Committee on Appropriations at titiyakin ko magbibigay tayo ng karapatan sa ating mga Filipino veterans, at yun na nga ang nangyari.

I also met with the Philippine Friendship Caucus in the U.S. House of Representatives to thank them for all the years they have fought for our veterans benefits. Yung mga yun parati kong binibisita sa Kongreso para palakasin ang kanilang loob so that they will continue to fight for us, kasi remember yung mga lumalaban para sa atin ay yung mga kung saan maraming Filipino. Halimbawa San Diego, yung mga congressmen ng San Diego talagang pinaglalaban nila ang ating veterans benefits. Kaya lang meron din naman yung mga congressmen doon sa mga lugar na walang masyadong Filipino nagiging very protectionist sila ngayon doon sa recession ng America. Sila naman ay lumalaban, sabi nila, bakit mo bibigyan ng pera yung mga nandoon sa ibang bansa. Eh kaya nga natin dito kaya kailangan pinapalakas natin ang loob ng ating mga kaibigang congressman doon and that is what we have been doing. Last February, we did that and now this July, we thanked them.

At binanggit ng mga senador at kongresista, nang kami ni Gilbert ay nagpasalamat sa kanila, na yung lump sum payment na naisama doon sa stimulus package ay bukod pa sa mga benepisyong dating binibigay sa inyo. Sabi nga nila: "Please make sure to remind everybody that what we are providing for in the stimulus package is in addition to the present benefits they're already getting, not as a replacement of the present benefits."

Pinapaalala nila, in addition to the recognition of your military service and your lump sum payments, those enjoying the supplementary security income will continue with it. For instance, si U.S. Secretary of Veterans Affairs, si Eric Shinseki binisita rin kami ni Gilbert sa Presidential Suite. He pointed out that outside of the new veterans... when he called on us during our Washington visit that outside of the new veterans benefits his department has also been disbursing funds to veterans and their families, including death pensions in the amount of 17 million dollars a month. Sabi nga ni Kristie Kenney 12 million dollars, ang nag correct si Congressman Mandanas, sabi niya: "No, it's not 12 million dollars, it's 17 million dollars." So yung buong sum na yun, the aggregate sum is even bigger than the new stimulus package.

They're cumulatively more than what the stimulus package provides for. And he also assured me that the assistance to the Veterans Hospital would continue. He reported that the U.S. is providing an MRI facility to the veterans hospital. Tapos siguro I hope you don't mind sinabi ko rin sa kanya, sana sa mga darating if you can help put up facilities for veterans in the provinces where a lot of them live then that would be very helpful kasi matatanda na ang mga veterans. Sana hindi na kailangang magbiyahe pa sa Pilipinas para magkaroon ng treatment.

Alam ko kasi... alam na natin kasi ngayon kung saan nakatira yung mga nakararaming beterano dahil nung nilagda ni President Obama ang mga benepisyo, agad tayong kumilos upang masimulan ang proseso ng application at pagsumite ng dokumento, at kabilang sa direktiba ko tungkol dito ang pagpapatayo ng mga processing center sa mga probinsiya kung saan marami ang mga beteranong nakatira kaya alam na natin ngayon where the veterans live. And therefore I hope and I will ask Secretary Teodoro to make sure that that is carried out, that future facilities will not only be in the Veterans Hospital but in areas around the Philippines where we have many many veterans living there.

Nung ako ay magmimiting na kay Secretary Shinseki maraming mga beteranong nag text sa akin — although they went through friends whom they know have my text number — nag text sa akin, and their message was: that they look forward to the speedy implementation of the provisions for Filipino veterans. At yun ang sinabi ko kay Secretary Shinseki na sana hanapan ng paraan kung papano mas mabilis pa ang pagproseso ng veterans benefits. And he replied that his Department if needed would hire additional personnel to fast track the claims. When I apprised her, so ito kailangan din i-follow up nila Gilbert yung pangako ni Secretary Shinseki, na paparamihin nila yung mga empleyado nila na nagpoproseso ng claims para mas mabilis asikasuhin yung claims ng ating mga beterano.

When I apprised Senators Inouye and Akaka of the developments in the processing of the claims, he asked whether the funds for the processing of claims would be sufficient. And Secretary Teodoro reported that more than 31,000 claims have already been filed with the PVAO headed by Nessie Carolina, whereas the original estimate was only 18,000, so halos doble ang nag file compared to the estimate. So that is one of the problems, so now Senators Inouye and Akaka know about that. The first payment if you remember was issued last April 8. Now we expect hopefully the filing of claims to go faster now that Secretary Shinseki made his commitment and Secretary Teodoro will follow up on that commitment.

We must beat the February 16 deadline next year for the filing of all claims. And that is what I'm glad to be able to have the chance to meet with you about, to remind everyone, tell all your members they have to file the claims before the 16th of February.

You know Colonel de Ocampo was talking about our efforts for the veterans benefits. Kung hindi natin ginawa itong efforts baka hanggang ngayon wala pa ito. And therefore I was very honored, I am very honored that it was during our administration now that the U.S. Congress and the U.S. administration recognized more than 60 years of struggle endured by the surviving Filipino World War II veterans. I am also honored that it was under our administration that the veterans of WWII as well as of other wars finally received your old age pensions that were not paid by previous administrations.

Nung ako ay pumasok bilang pangulo nakita ko yung arrears, seven billion pesos, eh budget deficit na, malaking budget deficit natin nuon parang imposible na mababayaran natin itong utang na ito, but now we have paid them. And that is thanks also to our congressmen, they can always put a provision paying you, but if they don't help you with the tax measures we won't be able to pay you. But they have helped us with the tax measures, with the Value Added Tax, kaya nabayaran ang mga utang ng old age pensions ng ating beterano.

Now, that we paid the old age pensions, the arrears, we go to looking at the other debts that the national government has incurred because of unfunded legislation. Ang isa dito yung total administrative liability, ang laki-laki nang utang na yun. Kaya kausap ko si Nonoy Andaya kagabi at hanggang kaninang umaga, hanggang ngayon dito nung nakikita niyong nagtext ako, nagcellphone ako, si Andaya ang kausap ko. Papano natin masisimulaan na bayaran ito? Sabi ko kay Nonoy, at least bayaran natin yung total administrative liability ng World War II veterans for the year 2009 at doon tayo magsisimula.

Kaya magtulungan tayo lahat para maipaabot sa mga beterano natin, ang ating mga bayani ng kahapon, na dapat ituloy ang paggalang hanggang ngayon ang mga beterano na tulungan sa mga benepisyong nararapat.

Sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat sa pagkakataon maglingkod sa inyo. Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Filipino World War II Veterans Assembly. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412095511/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26202&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the closing ceremonies of the Mindanao Island Cluster Conference of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the closing ceremonies of the Mindanao Island Cluster Conference of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP)

[Delivered at Hotel Stotsenberg, Clark Freeport Zone, Pampanga, September 3, 2009]

Maraming salamat Mayor Monching sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin at saka sa magandang idea mong nagkakaroon itong mga ibat-ibang mga cluster meetings.

At dakal a salamat naman Mayor Tarzan Lazatin king masanting a pag magwelcome yu kiring kekatang a kaluguran manibat king a Mindanao. And I'd like to congratulate also Mayor Dennis for hosting some of the affairs here, and of course Mayor Abalos and all of the mayors of Mindanao. According to Mayor Abalos some of you it's the first time you come to Clark, so welcome to my home province of Pampanga.

We are meeting at a very important time in the history of our country when the world has been shaken by global economic crisis. But thank God, we are one of the few nations, out of the two-thirds of the world that went into recession, we are one of the one-third that have withstood the onslaught and kept our growth positive.

Part of the reason is that the bitter and unpopular medicine of economic reform that we did years ago — thanks to the help of our congressman like Congressman Tarzan Lazatin — helped to create a firewall that softened the pressures arising from the global economic downturn. Hindi ba madalas may sunog sa mga probinsya pati sa Manila, kung dikit-dikit yung mga barong-barong lahat nasusuno, pero kung meron kayong firewall hindi umaabot sa kabila ng pader yung sunog. And our economic reforms caused that firewall. That is why we were able to maintain positive economic growth not only during this global economic downturn when the world two-thirds went into recession but for 34 uninterrupted quarters of our administration.

Yung sinasabi natin noon na palalakasin ang ating economy nung mga tax reforms natin napatunayan dito sa recession because the world recession showed our economy is stable and strong. Yung growth natin sa second quarter of this year mas mabuti pa keysa sa growth ng first quarter. At yung ating inflation isa sa pinakamababa, halos zero ang ating inflation ngayon, sa buong kasaysayan ng ating bansa. So, we are ready for the economic rebound. And our macroeconomic stability is a major strength that will put us in a stronger position as an attractive investment and business destination.

Halimbawa, kahit na sa Mindanao umabot na yung ating mga business processing and call centers, doon sa Davao meron na, sa Cagayan de Oro. Our business process outsourcing and call center industry continues to boom. Our tourism is way up. Our manufacturing sector na bumaba nung recession it's picking up again. New construction continues unabated, kung dumaan kayo sa Metro Manila panay makikita niyo mga cranes, construction cranes, and our businessmen... our hotels are full of businessmen from around the world. So, overall I am quite bullish about our prospects for solid recovery.

Imagine two-thirds of the world went into a recession, tayo hindi, hindi lang ito nagkaroon pa tayo ng credit upgrade. At siguro dapat maalala natin ang situation ngayon compared to 2001 nung nagsimula lang tayo. Kasi ngayon kapaligiran natin marami nang naghihirap na bansa tayo umaangat. Nung 2001, Asia was surging but the Philippines was on the verge of bankruptcy. And do you remember before our administration you could not even get your IRA paid in full.

But since then, what did we do? What are those economic reforms? We put new tax revenues in place so that we could pay for better healthcare — nandiyan si Secretary Pingkoy Duque inimbata ko para kasama natin ngayon — so that we could pay for a strong education system, so that we could pay for more roads gaya nang mga sinabi ni Congressman Tarzan Lazatin na nawitness sa kanyang distrito, so we could pay for more roads and ports. Binanggit ko yung ports kasi yung ating RORO system that was for the very purpose of bringing Mindanao products to Luzon at a faster and lower cost, hindi ba, Mayor? Nakatulong sa inyo.

Doon naman sa Mindanao andami nating kalsadang mga itinayo o nakumpleto, isang halimbawa lamang, yung Pagadian-Zamboanga Road, kamusta na siguro tapos na by now. It used to be called the longest road because it took the previous administration so long to build so little pero nakumpleto natin. Tapos yung Cagayan de Oro-Surigao Road, we've also improved that and it has cut travel time and it has revived commerce in Agusan.

We designed with our tax reforms housing policies to lift up our poorest citizens so they can live and raise a family with dignity. Our tax reforms also even if agriculture is devolved, our tax reforms funded agricultural investments, and that is a lot of it went to Mindanao which is our food basket. They strengthened our farmers as the backbone of the nation, and they gave our farmers the modern tools to feed our nation and feed their own family. At higit sa lahat, siguro para sa inyo ngayon buo na ang binabayad na IRA ninyo, 'di ba? Hindi lang yun we even paid the IRA that past administrations owed you. At hindi lang yun dahil sa Value Added Tax kung tumataas yung Value Added Tax tumataas din yung inyong IRA. So, this year you participated in the biggest VAT increase in history of 40 billion pesos for the local government.

And I want to thank you for using your IRA bonanza to contribute to our country's economic resiliency. At dagdag pa sa inyong IRA tinanong ko kay Monching kung binriefing na kayo tungkol doon sa mga foreign assisted projects na nahahanap ng League of Mayors, League of Municipalities, so congratulations to Monching and the leadership of LMP because they found through their global engagement creative ways of having on top of your IRA additional projects funded by various development institutions. Tinanong ko kay Monching kung pinresent niya yung Canadian Executive Service Organization — so it was presented on the first day — kasama yun ng ating Commission on ICT, our own Commission on Information and Communication Technology. I understand that the Canadian Executive Service Organization and CICT helped to computerize the tax system of 43 towns in Luzon, so sana yung mga bayan ng Mindanao ay makinabang din.

Tapos tinanong ko rin kay Monching kung pinresent rin niya yung ILO program at — yes, he did — to enable mayors, the ILO-sponsored programs to enable mayors to share best practices on livelihood projects for your workers in your constituents. So para sa mga pandagdag sa IRA na programang ganito, congratulations sa League of Municipalities!

So the LMP shares the lesson that I have been imparting that global engagement is what has been an essential component of what has kept our country from getting pulled under the raging economic waves sweeping most countries. At bahagi nitong global engagement kadadating ko lang galing sa Libya. Ang Libya ay ay isang key ally na nagpapalakas ng ating paradigm for peace in Mindanao.

Ang Libya ay laging pinanindigan tayo. Nung una pang nagkaroon ng terrorists crisis tayo nung 2001, yung Dos Palmas, nakausap ko si President Khadafi at tinatanong nga niya kung anong tulong ang kailangan natin. At sinabi ko ang tulong na gusto ko labanan yung mga terorista dahil ayaw ko magbigay ng ransom. At sabi niya, “sige, tutulong ako,” and he has been helping. Malaki ang tulong ng Libya sa pagdala ng kapayapaan at pag-asa sa Mindanao, at hindi lang yun dahil si Khadafi ay isang leader sa buong Africa na napakaraming mga Muslim countries doon. Malaki rin ang kanyang tinutulong sa pagbuo ng ating mas malalim na relasyon sa mga bansang Muslim. At kasama ng Brunei at Hapon, ang Libya, silang tatlo ang ating international monitoring team ng ceasefire natin kasama sa MILF.

Bukod doon sa pagpapalakas ng relasyon natin sa kanila ay kausap ko rin yung Khadafi Foundation, na gustong tumulong sa pamamagitan ng investment sa Mindanao. Ang pinag-usapan namin, kagabi lang yun — ay, hindi makalawang kagabi pala — ay bago ako umalis ay yung maglagay ng investments doon sa mga paligid ng Liguasan Marsh at saka Agusan Marsh. Tulungan natin silang gumawa ng magandang proyekto.

That is a very important part of our poverty alleviation program which we want to do throughout the Philippines but especially in Mindanao where six of our poorest provinces are located, namely: Tawi-Tawi, welcome! sa ating mga mayors ng Tawi- Tawi; Zamboanga del Norte; Maguindanao, diyan welcome! nakita ko yung mga mayors doon; Surigao del Norte and Dinagat Islands; and Lanao del Sur. Likewise six of our most food-poor provinces, namely: Zamboanga del Norte, Tawi-Tawi, Agusan del Sur — nakita ko yung isang mayor ng Agusan del Sur diyan — Maguindanao, Surigao del Norte and Dinagat Islands. They're also in Mindanao. So, we are working to use the larger part, the biggest part of our resources go to our mission of alleviating poverty.

So, once again I ask you, mayors, let us work hard to fulfil our Philippine Reform Agenda until our terms end.

Let us fight for the Economy, Education, the Environment.

Bahagi ng ating poverty alleviation, we have a National Anti-Hunger Task Force — yun ang nasa ilalim ng panguluhan ni Secretary Pingkoy Duque kaya I ask him to come here today because six of the most food-poor provinces are in Mindanao. And I asked the National Nutrition Council to conduct more... no, the Anti-Poverty Task Force to conduct more frequent visits to the most food-poor provinces to identify the problems first-hand and to do what is necessary to address them as quickly as possible.

Ngayon dahil hindi naman makapunta kaagad ang National Nutrition Council sa lahat ng bahagi ng ating bansa, I asked them to create local Anti-Hunger Task Forces in the provinces to assist in locating the problems and resolving them as soon as possible. Gusto natin na yung sistema ng national and local Anti-Hunger Task Force ay palalakasin ang cooperation ng national government at local government para harapin ang problema ng kagutuman sa ating bansa sa paraang mas mabilis at mas mabisa.

There are already Regional Anti-Hunger Task Forces organized by the National Nutrition Council in such provinces as Sarangani, Zamboanga del Norte, Zamboanga Sibugay, Agusan del Sur, Maguindanao, Surigao del Norte at yung unang-una yung Lanao del Norte. Pinuntahan ko nga yung Lanao del Norte at sa interview pinaliwanag ni Governor Dimaporo, Kali Dimaporo kung ano ang ginagawa nung Anti-Hunger Task Force ng Lanao del Norte at sana magawa ito sa lahat ng mga probinsya ng Mindanao lalo na yung anim na most food-poor provinces ng Mindanao. And I hope that our mayors will be active in those councils.

Kaya tinawag ko si Secretary Duque dito para tiyakin na in those provinces that I just mentioned now we will organize local Anti-Hunger Task Forces kaagad. So meron kayong output nitong meeting ninyo dito on top of the ones that Mayor Guico was able to brief you about.

Dear Mayors, you have laid your own plans to make your respective constituents more productive and to bring your towns nearer to your growth targets. And it's good that you're the ones making your plans, it's good that the league is working together to help you make your plans better and implement them better. Because it is you rather than the national government that know best how to strengthen your respective local units.

Our part was to reform the internal revenue to assure you of funds to finance your projects. All of us are doing this, national and local, for our people. We are elected officials. They have placed us where we are so we cannot but give them the best of our efforts. And as you have enjoyed your two nights and three days of I hope pleasurable meetings here in Clark, I hope that you will go back home refreshed to continue to give your constituents the best of your efforts.

Welcome once again! Daghan salamat. Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the closing ceremonies of the Mindanao Island Cluster Conference of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412095714/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26201&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the official luncheon for H.E. Prime Minister Jan Fischer of the Czech Republic

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the official luncheon for H.E. Prime Minister Jan Fischer of the Czech Republic

[Delivered at the Aguinaldo State Dining Room, Malacañang, September 7, 2009]

His Excellency Prime Minister Jan Fischer, members of the delegation, leaders of the Philippine government and Philippine business, ladies and gentlemen:

Your Excellency, welcome to the Philippines! This is your second visit to the Philippines in a very short time, but your first visit as prime minister. Congratulations!

Although we are located far away from each other, it is natural for our two countries to cooperate with each other. We share similarities in our respected histories and culture. Our peoples are religiously devoted to the Sto. Niño. We have Sto. Niño de Praga and we have Sto. Niño de Cebu. We even have Sto. Niño de Praga and shrine in our Benedictine Abbey which you visited yesterday.

Our national hero, Dr. Jose Rizal, was a very good friend of Ferdinand Blumentritt, so much so that one of the important thoroughfares in our metropolis is called Blumentritt Street. And while the Czech people on the other hand have statues, plaques and a museum dedicated in the memory of Dr. Jose Rizal. And there's even a chapter of the Knights of Rizal in the Czech Republic.

In World War II, 14 Czech soldiers fought soldier-to-soldier with Filipinos and Americans, seven of them have their final resting place in Capas, Tarlac. Just about two hours drive north of Manila. We have a congressman from that area there today. Our People Power Revolution of 1986 was one of the world's 100 greatest events of the 20th century. Similarly, the Velvet Revolution was an event that became an inspiration for a wake of political changes in Eastern Europe. These links are a solid foundation for further strengthening our relations.

Thank you, Your Excellency, for bringing with you a business delegation and for addressing the business seminar this morning. Hopefully, this will lead to greater commercial ties between our two countries. And, as you mentioned, not only trade but joint ventures as well.

So far, among the results of our trade relations with each other are the train coaches for the MRT tracks on EDSA and the continued supply of their spare parts. Also, most of the grand chandeliers in this palace are from the Czech Republic. I understand that the Czech Republic has also supplied equipment for sugar cane mills in Negros, Luzon and Mindanao. For aircraft, for Zest Air, and rifles for Philippine sports' shooters. And we welcome the benefits brought to the rural communities in Bohol by the Czech hydro power company Geotest. We're happy to know that the Geotest is also conducting a feasibility study for a similar hydro power project in Baguio where you have provided Official Development Assistance for water along with Aurora province, another beneficiary of your Official Development Assistance.

Thank you also for your ongoing ODA projects on drinking water for Metro Manila and solid waste management in Naga City as well as your humanitarian aid on the oil spill removal in 2006 in connection with typhoon Durian.

Excellency, while our countries are far from each other, you have continued, your people have continued the friendship of the two great men of our countries — Rizal and Blumentritt. And we hope that your visit will lead that friendship to become even greater, wider and deeper by increasing economic and people-to-people contact with each other.

On that note, I invite our guests to join me in a toast to the continued good health, success and prosperity of Prime Minister Fischer and the enduring friendship between the Filipino and Czech people.

Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the official luncheon for H.E. Prime Minister Jan Fischer of the Czech Republic. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134432/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26206&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the closing of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization's (UNIDO) International Conference on Green Industry in Asia

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the closing of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization's (UNIDO) International Conference on Green Industry in Asia

[Delivered at the PICC, September 11, 2009]

Thank you, Secretary Romulo.

Mr. Director General and other U.N. officials, our two Cabinet ministers here: Secretary Atienza and Secretary Favila and the different ministers who are here participating in this conference, other participants, our foreign guests, welcome to the Philippines! Our Filipino participants, thank you for being here with us today.

It is a privilege for our country to host this first International Conference on Green Industry in Asia. And we thank UNIDO, UNEP, ILO, the Asian Development Bank and other international institutions for making this conference possible together with our Department of Environment and Natural Resources.

This International Conference on Green Industry in Asia comes at the most opportune time as our speakers have said earlier. We're only three months away from the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen where countries will seek agreement on a new multilateral framework to deal with climate change. And we are honored to host this conference because this issue is essential to us. As a nation of more than 7,000 islands, the Philippines feels the pain of natural disasters and rising seas more than most nations. Because of this we take every opportunity we can to call on all countries to collectively secure a positive outcome to the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change negotiations.

The Philippines as one of the key negotiators of the Group of 77 and China in the climate change talks is focused squarely on this objective as we travel on the road to Copenhagen.

We call on all the developed countries referred to as the annex one countries in the Climate Change Convention to table their firm post-Kyoto Greenhouse Gas Emission targets taking into account the ideal level suggested by the international scientific community and to do this without conditionalities.

We also call on them to assist developing countries to mitigate and adapt to worsening changes in climate by fulfilling their treaty obligations to provide. In our country, as Secretary Atienza said, we are pressing ahead with the massive Green Philippines Environmental Plan that is comprehensive in scope and thorough in execution. A plan that includes reforestation, preservation of our reefs and waterways. A plan that includes scrubbing the land and air of pollutants that endanger the health of our citizens. A plan that includes energy independence.

As part of our concrete contributions to green industry, last year, we enacted a landmark law promoting the development, use and commercialization of renewable energy resources. To stimulate investments in the renewable energy sector, the law provides generous fiscal and non-fiscal incentives. Feed-in tariffs provide reassurance to investors in wind, solar, ocean, run-of-river hydropower and biomass resources. The law also seeks to institutionalize a renewable portfolio standard requiring the country's electric utilities to obtain a certain portion of their electricity from clean homegrown renewable energy sources. It also exempts the proceeds from the sale of carbon credits from all taxes.

Our Green Philippines Agenda puts an emphasis on a sustainable economic model that brings economic opportunity and a concern for our environment, indeed, a model of green industry. It is devoted to a sustainable economic model that allows for growth, job creation, and environmental stewardship.

Too many nations have believed that the environment must be sacrificed at the altar of growth.

We have always believed otherwise.

And because we are on the take off stage, we have a unique opportunity in our country to get it right from day one, to introduce new industries that are clean and profitable. This includes, this ranges from furniture made with environmental friendly practices.

To eco-tourism, to developing a renewable energy industry that helps our energy independence creates jobs and keeps our nation clean for the future. For instance, in eco-tourism, we have a program called Grassroots Entrepreneurship in Eco-tourism, G-R-E-E-T or GREET that offers livelihood assistance to small and micro-tourism related enterprises with a green component.

For the larger companies, Secretary Favila and his Board of Investments have very generous incentives for environment friendly practices.

As for energy independence. During our administration we increase indigenous energy from 48 percent to 58 percent, and attained 67 percent self-sufficiency in electric power production. With our Renewable Energy Law we plan to double the amount of power generated from renewable energy by 2020.

Together with inroads in the use of indigenous energy, we continue to find ways to reduce fossil fuel consumption. We have initiated the switch from incandescent bulbs to energy efficient compact fluorescent lamps. Because if we could save up to 50 megawatts, we save ourselves the cost of having to build a new power plant.

This year, we aim to distribute five million compact fluorescent lamps in selected urban areas.

Our Biofuels Act is also making a significant contribution to our Green Philippines Program. It is expected to make our country one of the fifteen most attractive destinations for biofuels investments in the world but not at the expense of food. In February this year, we started phasing in the mandated biodiesel blend, starting with one percent which we have now increased to two percent. We've also started to mandate a five percent bio-ethanol blend for unleaded gasoline.

Furthermore, aside from biofuels, we want to promote the use of compressed natural gas among buses plying the region immediately south of Metro Manila. This involves pursuing investors in building a chain of compressed natural gas stations and a natural gas pipeline from the landing port of our indigenous natural gas to the various stations in that chain.

These are but a few examples of what we are doing to promote green industry. There is indeed a wide opportunity if the world is willing to change but that window is closing fast. In the phase of climate change we have to move quickly, and I am happy and proud that in this conference we have increased that phase.

Thank you. Mabuhay! to all the peoples of the world.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the closing of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization's (UNIDO) International Conference on Green Industry in Asia. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134445/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26205&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino Community Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a meeting with the Filipino Community

[Delivered in Istanbul, Turkey, September 16, 2009]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Romulo sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin. Thank you.

Maraming salamat rin Ambassador Pete Chan sa iyong magandang pagbati kanina.

At kasama ko ngayong gabi ang ilan sa mga opisyal ng ating pamahalaan na miyembro din ng ating delegasyon. Bukod kay Secretary Romulo na nagpakilala sa akin, at nandito siya nung March 2009, nandito rin ang ating Trade and Industry Secretary Peter Favila at ang ating Press Secretary, si Cerge Remonde. Meron din tayong kasapi ng business delegation, si Ginoong William Kho, nandoon.

Kaming lahat ay nagpapasalamat at bumabati dito sa ating mga kababayan sa Turkey. Salamat sa inyong pagdalo ngayong gabi. King kabalen kong Nilo dakal a salamat at karing aliwang Kapampangan, salamat king pamanyatan ngening bengi. Kay Catherine naman — tiga-saan ka Catherine? Ah, from Aklan — maayag-ayag nga gab-i kag salamat gid sa pag-ari karon... subong. Okay. Sa mga kaigsuonan gikan sa Bisayas ug Mindanao, daghan salamat sa inyong paganhi karon, karon gabiuna kag dagiti kakailyak ti bangir ni mamang ko nga Ilocano, agyamanak ta immay kayo.

At narinig natin yung pagkuwento nung ating dalawang leaders ng Filipino community. In fact, I'm very happy to Sid Nilo, my kababayan, na nandito ka rin nang pumunta ako dito nung ako ay Vice President, so nice to see my kabalen again. At yung mga kuwento ni Ms. Mirano tungkol sa mga iba't-ibang mga Outstanding Filipinos dito sa Turkey. Kaya sa pagkuwento nila labis ako natutuwa na ang ating mga kababayan dito sa Turkey ay patuloy na umaani ng papuri ng mga tagarito. Congratulations sa inyong lahat!

At nakatanggap naman ako ng report sa Department of Foreign Affairs na halos lahat ng mga Filipino dito, maganda ang pagtrato sa inyo at maganda naman ang inyong suweldo. At yung grupo nga, yung grupo nga ni Catherine, sabi ni Ambassador Pete Chan, ang inyong ginagawa talaga ay tumulong, mag-e-extend siya ng Embassy dito sa Istanbul, gawa ng nandoon sa Ankara, kaya kayo ang first line of defense kapag may problema dito ang mga Filipino. Kaya congratulations sa inyong mga ginagawa na nagkakaisa.

I would also like to greet Mr. Zaimuglo, our Philippine Honorary Consul to Istanbul, whom I met in Manila.

Itong biyahe namin dito, bahagi ito sa ating pangkalahatang stratehiya na ma-engage ang pandaigdigang pamayanan para makabenipisyo ang ating ekonomiya, pati na rin proteksiyunan kayo, ang ating mga Overseas Workers at para ipairal ang ating national security.

Napapanahon yung pagbisita ko ngayon muli, after nine years, dahil itong taon ang ating 60th Anniversary ng ating diplomatic relations sa pamamagitan ng Pilipinas at Turkey. At kayong lahat, kayo ay testigo sa magandang relasyon ng ating dalawang bansa dahil kayo ay nakatira at nagtrabaho dito sa Turkey. At alam ninyo na itong bansang ito, this is a great nation straddling the East and the West. Kanina nga, nung lumilibot ako ay at even the last time, gustong-gusto kong sabihin, "Ah, now we're in Europe. Ah, now we're in Asia, just crossing the bridge." Pero talaga naman, geographically and culturally, Turkey is a natural bridge for dialogue among civilizations and cultures, East and West, Asia and Europe, Islam and Christianity.

And we are greeting the gentleman who has the Turkish schools in Zamboanga and San Juan, and I understand our young people in the table over there are alumni of the Turkish schools in the Philippines. So we're very happy that you're all here pero talagang kayo ay masasabi nating bahaging-bahagi ng dynamic economy ng Turkey.

Kanina, nandoon kami sa Ankara, nakipagkita kay Pangulong Gul, ang pangulo ng Turkey. Bahagi nga ito sa ating pagdiriwang, sabi nga ni Ambassador Pete Chan, ito ang highlight ng ating pagdiriwang ng 60th Anniversary. Sabi nga ni President Gul kanina, merong isang commonality ang ating dalawang bansa, sabi niya, I mean, among the many commonalities. Ang Pilipinas at ang Turkey, sabi niya, pareho tayong milyun-milyong mamamayan ay nakatira at nagtrabaho sa ibayong dagat. At ako'y nagpasalamat sa kanya dahil maganda ang general working environment sa ating mga Pilipinong manggagawa na nagtrabaho dito. Sabi nga niya, they try their best to give a working environment dahil alam na ang damdamin ng isang bansa na maraming mamamayan ay nasa labas kaya sinisikap din nila na yung mga mamamayan ng ibang bayan na nandito ay maganda ang environment. At sabi nga nila, sabi nga niya, na kung may mga problema ay sisikapin nilang maging mas maganda pa ang environment dito para sa Pilipinong manggagawa.

Isa pang importansya ng Turkey ay malaki ang tulong at suporta sa ginagawang peace efforts natin sa Mindanao. Yung papel ng Turkey bilang kasapi ng OIC Peace Committee sa Mindanao, labingdalawang bansa sila na tumutulong sa ating peace process sa Mindanao on the part of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, ito ay pinapakita ang sensiridad ng Turkey na tulongan tayong makahanap ng solusyon sa ating mga pagsisikap para sa kapayapaan sa ating bansa.

And since we have students here, isa ring pinag-usapan kanina, ang Turkey ay nagalok ng scholarship para sa mga estudyanteng Pilipino. Importante ito para sa ating kapayapaan at seguridad dahil yung ating mga kabataan ay mai-expose dito, yung moderate, mainstream Muslim democracy, yun, pluralistic, secular — yun ang kinakampeon ng Turkey at importanteng ma-expose ang ating mga kabataan dito kaysa yung naee-expose sila doon sa mga nagtuturo ng radical Islam. Yun ang isang kinabubuti din ng relasyon natin sa Turkey.

Yung ating defense cooperation ay lumalawak. May kumpanyang Turkish na siya ang nag-a-upgrade ng ating armored personnel carrier, yung mga tangke ba natin, inaupgrade dito. And in November, magde-deliver sila ng anim na armored personnel carrier. At kanina, sa aming pagmiting ni President Gul, sabi nga niya, sana tayo ay makapagpirma ng kasunduan tungkol sa defense at military cooperation.

Maraming-maraming pagkakataon sana ng kalakal sa ating dalawang bansa. Kaya kaninang hapon, si Secretary Favila ay nakipagkita sa Istanbul Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Kasi gusto natin lumawak ang ating pangangalakal sa isa't-isa. Dito sa Turkey, nagpo-promote tayo ng precious and costume jewelry at pati rin yung halal food at saka yung fresh and processed food, lalo na yung sa mga saging at iba pang mga agricultural commodities. Yung jewelry ay inaalok natin dahil ang Pilipinas ay tinuturing bilang isa sa mga pinakamataas na exporter ng jewelry sa buong mundo, number 12 tayo sa costume jewelry exporting countries. Yung costume jewelry natin sa Pilipinas ay galing sa mga natural materials: sea shells, coconut shells, bamboo, fossilized stones, abaca, sinamay, amber. At mabuti itong negosyong ito, itong industriyang ito dahil yung costume jewelry labor intensive. At ang Philippine costume jewelry ay tinuturing ng marami na mas magaling kung ihahambing sa ibang bansa ng Asya sa ating mga handmade items na umagamit ng natural materials at coloring schemes. Kasi ang mga Pilipino kinikilala bilang very creative na mga tao.

So ito ang mga sinisikap natin na ma-promote pa at si President Gul mismo ang nagsabi na talagang malaki ang ating potensyal. Sabi niya kasi ay ginagalang nila ang Pilipinas dahil tayo'y isa doon sa ilan lang sa ating rehiyon na hindi nagkaroon ng recession nitong nakaraang world economic crisis. Kaya't tinuturing nilang matatag ang ating ekonomiya sa East Asia.

And on the economy, our trips — like what we are trying to do now here — in other places where we have gone, our trips have helped secure important trade opportunities and foreign investments, and this in turn have helped us to achieve yung sinasabi nila — 34 quarters or more than eight years of uninterrupted growth. At ito ang achievement kung bakit ay we were able to withstand the recession that is now raging around us.

Doon sa ating bahagi ng ating mundo, ang hindi natamaan ng recession, yung hindi nag-negative ang growth rate ay yung China, yung Indonesia, yung Vietnam at saka yung Pilipinas. Yung ating ibang mga kapit-bansa nagkaroon sila lahat ng recession. Kung naalala ninyo, September last year, doon nagkaroon ng crisis yung world economy. Kung naalala ninyo doon sa New York, siguro laman ng mga peryodiko pati dito sa Turkey yung collapse nung Lehman Brothers na napakaraming bangko sa buong mundo ay nalugi. Yung Merrill Lynch nagka-fire sale, yung American Insurance Group — yung may-ari nung Phil-Am Life sa Pilipinas, yung mother company — nagkaroon ng liquidity crisis. So yun ang simula nitong global economic crisis. Ito yung parang yung stock market crash nung 1929. Ito naman yung crash ng Lehman Brothers, Merrill Lynch at AIG.

At itong global economic crisis na ito, one year na, a long nightmare for many people and many nations. Pero yung mga pinakamahihirap, at marami doon sa mga developing countries, yun ang pinaka-apektado sa buong mundo. Yung mga headline, panay Wall Street or dahil kulang daw ang global regulation or maraming mayayaman na nalugi pero dapat tawagin din ng pansin yung pangangailangan na tiyakin na yung mga developing countries ng mundo ay mabigyan ng suporta na kailangan, the support they need to ensure na kung magkaroon man tayo ngayon ng economic rebound, na mukhang nagsisimula na, dapat ito ay talagang inclusive, sana sakop na rin yung mga mahihirap at talagang truly global, buong mundo.

Kaya gaya ng sabi ko nga, kung yung mundo ay hindi lang parating tinitignan yung mga banking capital — mga New York, mga London ganun, mga Singapore — if the world would take a minute to shift its sights from the banking capitals, baka magugulat na matuto, mapag-alaman yung mga quiet success na mahahanap sa ibang bahagi ng mundo kagaya ng Pilipinas. Kaya ako ay nandito at pupunta ako sa London para pag-usapan yung ating tagumpay at yung ating oportunidad na pwedeng maihandog sa mga investors maging dayuhan o maging Pilipino.

We have weathered, we are so far weathering the global economic storm without fanfare. Bakit tayo matatag? Dahil tayo ay handa. Bakit tayo ay handa? Dahil gumawa tayo ng mga mahihirap na desisyon ilang taong nakaraan para repormahin ang ating banking system. Halimbawa, yung Lehman Brothers nung bumagsak, less than one percent ng ating banking system ay exposed doon. At yung less than one percent na yun fully covered by reserves and capital, at alam ng lahat kung magkano dahil very transparent ang mga disclosure sa ating banking system. Yun ang isang ginawa natin, reforming the banking system.

Mas mahirap pa, we had to raise new revenues, taxes, yung tinatawag na Value Added Tax, very unpopular pero ginawa natin yun at lumaki ang ating revenue by 100 billion pesos every year at yung proceeds na yun ay ginagamit natin para mamuhunan, mamuhunan, mamuhunan sa ating taong-bayan at para sa maging competitive ang ating economy.

Kasi ang gusto kong mangyari ay makatulong para maging competitive ang ating economy para sa ganun darating ang araw na yung mag-a-abroad ay career choice at hindi lang the only choice for a hardworking Filipino worker.

Palagay ko yung aking kabalen, career choice yun, ang ganda-ganda ng trabaho niya dito pero merong mga iba kinailangan pumunta sa ibayong dagat dahil walang pagkakataon sa sariling pamayanan. Sana yun, yung pangalawa yun ay sana maging mas maging konti ng konti ng konti hanggang mawala yung ganung klaseng pag-aabroad. Sana career choice na lamang at yun ang dahilan kung bakit ginagawa natin ang mga reporma sa ating ekonomiya.

Samantala, habang pinagtrabahuan pa natin yung araw na yun, nagpapasalamat tayo, nagpapasalamat ang Pilipinas sa inyong lahat, mga Overseas Filipinos natin sa inyong malasakit, malasakit sa inyong pamilya, malasakit sa inyong trabaho, malasakit sa inyong bansa. Yun, para sa doon, maraming, maraming salamat.

At salamat sa inyong parating suporta at sana palaging Mabuhay ang Pilipino dito sa Turkey!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a meeting with the Filipino Community.
Retrieved
from https://web.archive.org/web/20100412095258/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26204&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo at The Economist's, "Emerging Markets Summit"

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
At The Economist's, "Emerging Markets Summit"

[Delivered at the Park Plaza Riverbank Hotel London, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, September 18, 2009]

Thank you for the kind introduction. Many thanks to the Economist for such a stimulating program.

Distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen: good afternoon.

This summit has been asking the question. What are southeast Asia's economic prospects?

The answer is that the region is doing well given the overall global economic picture. The prospects for growth in Southeast Asia are strong. This is reinforced by a recovery that has already started.

The nations of Asia are addressing the challenges of the economic crisis cooperatively and with confidence that the region will recover quicker and emerge stronger than ever. Asia's response to this crisis has shown that our region is well positioned to accelerate its growing share of the global economy once the storm clouds of this crisis have abated.

When the recovery comes, what form will it take?

Although all Asian economies have felt the pain of the global recession, that pain has not been evenly distributed. There are at least three "Asias" to consider when examining the depth of the current recession and the path that nations in our region are taking to return their economies to full recovery. These three Asias are: First, the nations of China and India; Second, the trade-dependent economies, such as Singapore, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Thailand, South Korea and Malaysia, and third, the domestic consumption states, which includes the Philippines, among others.

China and India will long remain regional and global outperformers. While they are growing at levels below their incredible pre-recession performances, that growth is still very respectable. Given that the global recession has led to a virtual collapse in international trade, the most trade-dependent states in our region have been the worst hit. They have endured months of recession that, fortunately, now appears to be easing. The consumption-driven states have been able to avoid recession altogether.

These states, the Asian states that have been performing best, and that are still enjoying positive growth, are those emerging markets where private consumption is a high proportion of GDP. Indonesia and Vietnam both have private consumption at 65%, the Philippines 70%, Sri Lanka 65%, Bangladesh, 75%. These states are outperforming the trade-dependent economies.

Looking to 2010, the three Asias will see differing pace of recoveries. The trade-dependent states will continue to underperform while China and India, as well as the consumption-driven states should be the region's outperformers.

Also, those of us who took the bitter medicine of reform some years ago have done better. That is certainly the case with the Philippines.

As much of the world sets its sights on the traditional global financial capitals, the world might be surprised to learn of the quiet successes to be found in other parts of the globe – in places such as the Philippines.

My friends, as the final Summit speaker, I want to leave you with an understanding of how your interest in emerging markets can be applied in the Philippines, a country that I am pleased to say has demonstrated the strength and resiliency of emerging market economies during this period of global economic crisis. In that regard, I cite the report of the UK Trade and Investment and the Economist Intelligence Unit that has tagged the Philippines as among the top ten key emerging markets beyond the BRIC countries.

Well before the global crisis, we were setting a new economic course for the Philippines. This course was at the core of our economic reform agenda. Our reforms generated 34 consecutive quarters of growth and the fastest growth in 30 years, they created 8 million jobs, and allowed us to maintain the lowest inflation in a generation. More importantly, poverty went down, revenue went up and the nation acquired the money to invest in human and physical infrastructure for the first time in a generation. We were rapidly heading toward a balanced budget.

Without the global recession, we would be in balance right now.

From the temporary setback in our plans due to the global financial crisis, we are back on track, to balance the budget by 2013. We are confident of our target because we have weathered the hardest part of the storm and we are poised for a rebound.

The rating agencies have upgraded our country's credit rating in the middle of a crisis. This saves millions of dollars in interest which we can pour into building up our nation.

Moody's Executive Vice President said: "The upgrade was prompted by the relatively high degree of resilience exhibited by both the country's financial system and external payments position in the face of the global financial and economic crisis."

The peso, the Philippine peso has also remained relatively strong and stable even amidst the global financial downturn. Goldman Sachs predicts that the peso will rise 4.7% in six months to the highest levels of 2008 as the growth of remittances from our overseas workers still defy expectations and because fiscal concerns are now recognized as overblown. This is a good indicator and reflection of the stability of our economy.

The Philippines, however is not alone. While many nations in Asia have been deeply affected by the global downturn, many have also been havens of stability and islands of calm during this period of tremendous volatility.

Which industry sector will bounce back the strongest?

In the Philippines, growth never left our outsourcing industry. It will now only gain in strength from 6,000 employees in 2001 to 600,000 soon in large part due to our efforts to continually modernize our infrastructure, the high level of productivity and English language skills of our workforce, and our ability to attract investment from some of the world's leading companies. Private construction has grown by 17% due to the surge in middle and low-income housing. Small retail businesses are gaining strength. Therefore, the services sector will recover quickly. Our mining sector is also showing strong growth of 16%.

So how is consumer confidence of behavior evolving?

Consumer confidence is coming back.

But we are not relying just on the consumption pattern of our 90 million people to keep our momentum of 34 consecutive quarters of economic growth going. We are relying on a mix of economic stimulus, sound economic and monetary policies, and pro-business reforms to keep our economy steady.

What is happening regarding Foreign Direct Investment flows?

Capital is returning to the region.

The Philippines' resilient economy, improved credit ratings, and continued fiscal consolidation efforts have produced a country with an economy that should be in every emerging market investors' portfolio. With Foreign Direct Investment posting an 86% increase in the first 7 months of this year, it is clear this message is getting across.

Are foreign and local banks doing enough?

Despite tight liquidity conditions in the global market, loan growth is particularly strong among the economies of emerging Asia. In Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea, and Taiwan, loan growth has improved since the last quarter of 2008. New loans in China make up 50% of its GDP growth. The loans in China in the first half of this year have reportedly exceeded the total amount for 2008. In the Philippines, bank lending growth has remained healthy.

We have one of the best central banks in the world. Its reforms have created the solid fundamentals that underpin our banking sector today. The fundamentals are reinforced by conservative banking practices. These values have significantly sheltered our country's finances.

We give our central bank team our full trust to implement a sound monetary policy conducive to growth and one that will help us manage volatilities arising from the global economy. The monetary policy of the Central Bank has ensured sufficient liquidity in the market and bolstered confidence in the financial system. This contributed to the resilience of our economy throughout the global economic crisis.

How is the mind-set at domestic and multinational firms currently? Is there returned appetite for risk?

Yes, there is. The EIU report has projected investor sentiment to improve in 2010 and 2011.

The overall business confidence index being tracked by our central bank has reverted to positive territory for the first time since the third quarter of last year. We expect this trend to continue.

But at the end of the day, if the global financial system does not learn from its mistakes and embrace reforms, we will all lose more than we have already.

Therefore, what remains to be done regarding financial sector reform?

As we move forward, we need to look closely at the values, or in some cases, complete lack of values, that led to the collapse of the financial system. A problem in one financial market can quickly become a problem in many others. We must work cooperatively to contain that contagion or, better yet, provide the inoculation that will keep it from happening.

As we are all aware, in the period leading up to the current crisis, there were many cases of inappropriate and misunderstood risks. This was compounded by financial engineering and disproportionate risk-taking in the financial sector that's motivated by the pursuit of short-term profits. It was also compounded by the emergence of unregulated and opaque financial instruments.

In the Philippines, we have implemented extensive financial and economic reforms. More can and should be done, but my biggest concern is with the lack of progress on global reform. Here we are a year after the Lehman Brothers collapse and subsequent economic contagion, and already some of the same firms that got us into this mess are pretending it never happened. In the euphoria of the emergence of the green shoots that we all hope are harbingers of economic rebound, we are losing sight of the calls early in the crisis for the overhaul of global financial regulations.

Governments the world over must insist that we come to grips with what happened and make sure we put in place rules so that it doesn't happen again. We cannot expect the poor in places like the Philippines to lose their shirt because someone on Wall Street made a bad bet.

It is my duty to our people to insist on drawing attention to the need to bring sense to a global financial system that is clearly not suited to the complexities of the current global challenges. That is why I am stepping up the call for action for governments to come to grips with the need for a new global financial regulatory regime. The G-20 leaders, in particular, will be meeting soon. They must take strong decisive action to push forward tough new regulations.

What about in the Southeast Asian region? What policy initiatives do we need?

As we did in 1997 and 1998, the region must continue to learn from what happened this time in order to make ourselves even stronger. Our region has made substantial progress with the Chiang Mai initiative that will provide liquidity support to governments in our region. We have taken it upon ourselves as a region to be more self-sufficient. While decoupling from the US and Europe cannot and probably should not occur, that doesn't mean we shouldn't take more firm steps to control our own destiny. We must continue to press for closer cooperation and consultation.

The global economic crisis has been a long nightmare for many people and many nations. The poorest – many of them in emerging market economies – have been affected the most. The headlines scream about Wall Street, the failure of government regulation, and the noise of lost wealth. But they should also scream about the need to ensure that the world's emerging markets – many of them committed free traders – are given the support they need to ensure that any economic rebound is truly inclusive and truly global.

To what extent has the experience of the 1997-98 financial crisis helped governments cope with the storm?

Painful economic slowdowns are not new to the countries of Southeast Asia. As you are all aware, our region went through a gut-wrenching financial crisis more than a decade ago. In retrospect, it seems very much like a dress rehearsal for today's turmoil. Companies defaulted; banks collapsed, stock markets tanked and economies shrank at double digit rates as foreign investment slowed to a trickle. In addressing this crisis, Southeast Asia dutifully swallowed the bitter medicine of austerity. It devalued currencies and worked off debts while banks restructured and companies patched up balance sheets.

Asia has benefitted, if you will, from the dreadful experience of the 97-98 Asian financial crisis. Thanks to the lessons learned by that crisis, and the actions taken by the government since then throughout Asia, As a nation and a region, most of us are much better prepared to cope with the challenges we have been facing over the past year. The previous crisis showed Asian governments that it was important to rebuild foreign exchange reserves. It encouraged major Asian companies to de-leverage their balance sheet, restructure their businesses and improve their cash flow. It led domestic banks to cut non-performing loans, improve liquidity and consolidate the industry.

This augurs well for our regional trading outlook – and for the development of the ASEAN regional trading bloc we will have in place by 2015. It also speaks well for the prospects of our emerging market economies.

Because of that experience, the prospects for growth in Southeast Asia today are some of the strongest in the world.

Regional and global investors I believe will step up their risks in our region because they know we have been through it before and that we emerged stronger than ever.

But will national rivalries preclude meaningful progress toward regional political or economic integration?

To answer this question I would look at what we have achieved rather than what is left to be done. ASEAN has made significant progress towards integrating our economies, breaking down trade barriers, and asserting macroeconomic control over our regional economies. Of course there are always issues, national issues and regional issues to overcome, but they are not greater than the threats to our region from global forces.

In sum, in spite of the need to urgently address global economic policy considerations, my outlook for emerging markets is very positive. The best opportunities for the medium-term are found in Asia for several reasons.

First, we have a healthy financial system that remains stable and ready to support growth. Our region's banks are virtually free of toxic assets. They have not needed government bailout money. Years of trade surpluses and high savings rates have contributed to record foreign reserves. Debt loads – for governments, corporations and consumers – are a fraction of those in the U.S. and Europe. Inflation and interest rates have fallen rapidly as our central banks have deftly managed this fluid global environment.

Second, while each market is different, the nations in our region represent a varied mix of opportunities for any investor. The governments in our region have an ongoing commitment to policy reforms which are crucial in any investment decision. They are also committed to address the challenges in the bureaucracy and infrastructure that will shape the direction of their economic growth over the next decade. Most of emerging Asia is addressing these areas and we will return to high rates of economic growth. Because of that, now is the time to prepare for the significant opportunities that will accompany this growth.

There is no better emerging market to take advantage of that growth than the Philippines. I encourage each and every one of our emerging market investors to consider the Philippines as you look for the best trade and investment opportunities that will come out of the return to high levels of economic growth.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech at The Economist's, "Emerging Markets Summit". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134412/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26261&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino Community in the United Kingdom

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a meeting with the Filipino Community in the United Kingdom

[Delivered at Intercon London Park Lane Hotel, September 19, 2009]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Pamintuan sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin. At gusto ko ring magpasalamat kay Ambassador “Tonet” Lagdameo, sa iyong pagbati, ating bagong embahador ngunit hindi ako nagugulat, very, very active si Tonet, nandito rin si Mrs. Linda Lagdameo.

At kasama rin natin ngayon ang ilan sa mga opisyal ng ating pamahalaan na bahagi ng ating delegasyon. Siyempre, nandito si Secretary Bert Romulo, ang ating Secretary of Foreign Affairs; nandito si Deputy Speaker Girlie Villarosa; at yung team ni Secretary Pamintuan ay nakilala na niyo yata kanina; nandito si Secretary Cerge Remonde, ang ating Press Secretary; si Congressman Martin Romualdez ng Leyte; si Congressman Dong Gonzales ng Pampanga; yung anak ko si Congressman Dato Arroyo; ayun sa kabila si Congressman Danny Suarez ng Quezon; si Congresswoman Ana Bondoc ng Pampanga rin; at saka si Chairman Rey Chua ng Commission on Information and Communication Technology. Gusto ko rin batiin ang ating staff mula sa Philippine Embassy a napakasipag sa paghanda ng mga events natin dito sa aking pagbisita.

And I understand, we have our Honorary Consuls from the different parts of the United Kingdom at siyempre yung ating mga lider ng Filipino Community na parating tmutulong, maraming salamat sa inyong pagdalo itong umagang ito.

Deng cabalen cung capangpangan, mayap a bat kekongan, dakal a salamat qng pamanyatang yu. Sa mga gikan sa Bisayas ug Mindanao, daghang salamat sa inyong pag-anhi. Cacabsat ken gagayyem nga Ilocano, naimbag a bigat yo amin. (applause) At marami raw sa inyo ay nanggaling hindi lamang dito sa London kundi sa mga malalayong lugar gaya ng Manchester, Birmingham, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland pati the Isle of Man for joining us here today, thank you very much.

Itong biyaheng ito gaya nga ng sabi ni Ambassador Tonet, apat na beses na akong napunta dito sa England. At ito ay bahagi ng ating pagkalahatang stratehiya to engage the global community, to benefit our economy, to promote the welfare of our overseas Filipinos and to enhance our national security.

Yung national security, nagpapasalamat tayo sa United Kingdom dahil tinutulungan tayo’t sinusuportahan ang ating peace efforts sa Mindanao. Kasama na nga rito ay pinapahayag nila at pinapamahagi nila yung kanilang sariling karanasan with securing peace in Northern Ireland. At tungkol naman sa mga karaniwang krimen at yung mga international crimes gaya ng terrorism, ay sa biyaheng ito, kahapon nakapag-conclude tayo ng extradition treaty at mutual legal assistance treaty sa pamamagitan ng ating dalawang bansa.

Tungkol naman sa ekonomiya, ang ating mga biyahe ay nakatulong na makamit ang mga importanteng oportunidad sa pangalakal at pamumuhunan that have in turn helped us to achieve, siguro lumabas na ito sa presentation kanina, 34 uninterrupted quarters or more than eight years of uninterrupted growth, a first in the Philippines at kahit na sa buong mundo, konti lang ang nakakakamit nito. And it is this achievement that enables us to withstand the recession that is now raging around us. Yung recession na palagay ko, kayong nakatira dito sa United Kingdom ay alam na alam ninyo at nararanasan.

Bagamat ang United Kingdom ay kasama sa mga nahihirapang ekonomiya dito sa Europe, still it is among the leading foreign investors in the Philippines. Kaya hindi dapat mawawala yung investment na yun sa atin kahit na nagtitipid sila at pinagpipilian ng husto kung saan sila mag-invest. Laging ang United Kingdom ang pinakamataas sa ating mga portfolio investors. At yung portfolio investors, madaling matakot yun, kapag merong economic crisis, kaya importante na sa panahong ito, when they have to be more choosy about their investments due to their fewer resources and the global crisis, we have to affirm to them that the Philippines resilient economy, improved credit ratings, and continued fiscal reforms have produced a country with an economy that should be in every emerging market investor's portfolio.

At ito ang ginawa natin kahapon, nakipag-usap sa Bloomberg, nakipag-usap sa influential economic publication The Economist. At ako'y nasisiyahan na kahapon doon sa komperensiya ng The Economist, they named the Philippines as one of the top emerging market destinations for investors.

So gaya ng sinabi ni Ed na nong araw, basket case ang tawag sa atin, ngayon, one of the top investment destinations among emerging markets. At nagpunta rin tayo dito para tiyakin yung mga pamumuhunan sa Pilipinas na mula sa mga British companies na sila ay malaking kakayahan pa rin na mag-invest in power, in energy, in water, financial services and other services.

Kahapon, maging mamaya, tuloy-tuloy ang aking miting, ating miting sa iba't-ibang mga kumpanya at business personalities na nandito sa Londres. Halimbawa kahapon, nakipagmiting tayo sa Bronzeoak group, sila ang nagtayo ng unang-unang bioethanol plant sa Pilipinas. Nong 2005 ay pumunta ako sa San Carlos City, sa Negros Occidental para i-groundbreak yung kanilang first bioethanol plant, at earlier a few weeks ago, dapat pumunta rin ako doon para sa inauguration kasi it takes years to construct and policy regulations have to be refined dahil bago itong mga patakaran na ito, hindi ako nakapunta because of bad weather. Pero salamat naman at nag-courtesy call sila dito at napag-usapan ang iba't-ibang mga kailangan upang dagdagan pa nila ang investments nila sa Pilipinas. At balak nilang magtayo pa ng mas malaking investment — bioethanol plant doon sa Capas sa Tarlac.

At dinala naman rin kahapon ni Lord Peter Mandelson ang kagustuhan ng ilang mga negosyanteng Ingles sa mamuhunan sa ating renewable energy sector at kung anong mga patakaran ang makakatulong para mas magaan ang pamumuhunan nila sa ating bansa.

Kagabi, nagdinner tayo kasama ng HSBC na napakamatulungin sa pinapahayag sa mga negosyante yung positive growth aspect ng Pilipinas. Malaki ang bangko ng HSBC sa Pilipinas, more than 100 years old sila sa Pilipinas ngunit isang malaking dinagdag nilang investment ay dinala nila doon yung kanilang business process outsourcing. Yung accounting nila, financial services nila dinala nila sa Pilipinas kaya ngayon 7,000 ang empleyado ng HSBC sa Pilipinas. At hindi lamang yun, dahil sa ating magandang pakikipag-ugnayan ay dadagdagan pa nila yung mga business process outsourcing nila sa Pilipinas. Kasi yung mga nanggaling sa ibang bansa ay ililipat nila sa Pilipinas.

In fact, we have become the favorite business outsourcing and call center destination of the British firms since I led a BPO investment mission here about four years ago, at nong panahong yun, nong pinakilala natin sa mga Ingles yung mga BPO at call center attractions natin ay ginawa nila ang Pilipinas na outsourcing destination of the year for British firms at patuloy-tuloy pa rin ito. Yun ay bunga ng isa sa ating apat na biyahe dito sa Englatera.

Ginagawa natin itong lahat because we are working to create high paying jobs at home so that overseas work will just be a career choice and not the only option for a talented Filipino in search of a better life.

Samantala, nakakatuwa na ang ating mga kababayan dito sa UK ay patuloy na umaani ng papuri sa inyong pagiging propesyonal, pagiging organisado, at yung inyong kaaya-ayang pag-uugali. And that is one of our competitive advantages, di ba? Whatever your work may be — doctors, nurses, senior carers, radiographers and other health workers; yung ating bedside banners ay napaka-importante. Yung ating world-class performing artists, nakikita natin doon sa theater. Yung ating mga chefs, mga hotel workers; yung ating domestic staff na nandito; yung mga IT experts, mga engineers; mga social workers, mga teachers; mga bangkero, mga financial analysts. Kahapon, nakilala ko yung isang mataas na nagtrabaho doon sa accounting services ng Harods halimbawa; artists, designers, aerospace workers — however you choose to serve, saan mang kumpanya kayo naglilingkod at naghahanapbuhay, humahanga ang bansang United Kingdom sa inyong dedikasyon — sa inyong dedikasyon, sa inyong talino, at kakayahan. At kanina nga binanggit ni Ambassador Tonet that one of our very own, Ms. Naty dela Cruz of London and Cagayan de Oro was just recognized as the “Amazing Carer” of the year for UK.

Kaya kung ang Pilipinas ay hanggang ngayon I think will hopefully will be named again outsourcing destination of the year, si Naty naman ay ‘Carer of the Year,’ so pareho tayung ‘of the Year’ Salamat Naty sa halimbawang ipinamalas mo at lalong pinataas mo ang respetong ipinagkakaloob sa manggagawang Pilipino dito sa UK. Isang libo ang kakumpitensiya ni Naty sa kanyang paligsahan pero siya ang nanalo.

And we hear that the professionalism and dedication of the Filipinos in the UK now cuts across not only different professions, but different generations. Nalaman natin na meron ng second and third generation Filipino-British nationals, ang tawag raw “Britnoys”, but we are happy to hear that these second and third generation British-Filipinos are rediscovering their Filipino roots and have in the process become active in promoting our country.

We are told that among the next generation of Filipinos, some have even formed an association called “Philippine Generations.”

Kaya sa inyong lahat, mga Pilipino sa iba’t-ibang mga propesyon, sa iba’t-ibang mga lugar ng United Kingdom, sa iba’t-ibang henerasyon, salamat sa inyong lahat dahil kayo ang ambassador ng ating bansa at ng ating taumbayan.

At higit sa lahat, mabuhay kayo sa inyong malasakit — sa inyong trabaho, sa inyong pamilya at sa inyong bansa. At dala ko ang pagpapasalamat ng buong sambayanang Pilipino maging na rin ang aking sarili.

Maraming maraming salamat! Mabuhay ang ating Pilipino dito sa United Kingdom. Thank you.

*Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during a meeting with the Filipino Community in the United Kingdom. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134422/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26266&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino community Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a meeting with the Filipino community

[Delivered at Movenpick Hotel, Al-Khobar, September 20, 2009]

Thank you. Maraming salamat. Maraming salamat, Secretary Roque sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin. At maraming salamat din Ambassador Villamor sa iyong welcome remarks kanina.

At kasama naman natin ang ilan sa mga opisyal ng ating pamahalaan sa ating delegasyon. Babanggitin ko yung mga nandito sa entablado natin. Unang-una siyempre yung ating Secretary of Foreign Affairs, si Secretary Bert Romulo, ang boss ni Ambassador Villamor; katabi naman ni Secretary Romulo ay si Secretary of Trade and Industry Peter Favila; at katabi niya ang Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary Artie Yap; at nandito rin ang ating Secretary of Agrarian Reform, Secretary Naaser Pangandaman. Two presidents have appointed Muslims of full cabinet positions — President Diosdado Macapagal and President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo. Well, kilala na ninyo si Secretary Roque, siya nga ang nagpakilala sa akin at ang katabi naman niya ang ating Press Secretary, Secretary Cerge Remonde; at gusto naming batiin — kaming lahat binabati namin — kayong lahat – mga leaders ng Filipino Community dito sa Eastern Province, si Mary Jane Tupas, congratulations! At yung ating ibang leaders ng Filipino Community at yung mga Bagong Bayani Awardees natin. At yung ating mga ang gagaling kumanta na mga kabataan ng Filipino Community. Gusto naming makilala ang mga magulang ninyo mamaya dahil ang galing-galing ninyo, we want to congratulate them also aside from you. At sa inyong lahat, dahil ngayon ang Eidl Fitr Eid Mubarak, Maraming salamat sa inyong pagdalo. Deng cabalen cung capangpangan, dakal a salamat qng pamanyatang yu.Uy karakal yu. Sa mga taga-Bisayas ug Mindanao, daghan salamat sa pag-anhi; kakabsat ken gagayyem, naimbag nga rabii yo amin.

Talagang ang saya-saya namin, ang saya-saya ko na makapunta muli dito sa Eastern Region. Hindi ko akalain na gaya ng sinabi ni Mary Jane, ako pa lang pala ang pangulong nakapagbisita dito sa iyo at two times pa at iniisip ko, natural lang yun kasi kung sinasabi natin na pinakamalaking Overseas Filipino Worker Community ang Saudi Arabia, eh one-third yun ay nandito sa Eastern Province – 400,000 kayo. Sabi nga ni Ambassador Villamor – “and growing”. Naalala ko nong akong huling magbisita dito sa Dammam, yung isang nilalakad ko ay magkaroon pa ng mga Filipino worker doon sa pagtayo nila ng 2, at mukhang natupad. Kaya mas lalong lumaki pa ang Filipino Community dito.

Itong biyahe ditto, as I said it’s always a pleasure to be with the Filipino Community in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and here in the Eastern Province.

Our trip here ay importanteng bahagi ng ating pangkalahatang stratehiya to engage the global community sa kinabubuti ng ating ekonomiya, sa kinabubuti ninyo, ang ating Filipino Overseas Workers at sa ikinabubuti ng ating national security.

Yung national security, malaki ang tulong ng Saudi Arabia sa pagkamit natin ng pangmatagalang kapayapaan sa Mindanao. Dahil siya ang lider ng mga bansang Muslim, ang laki ang impluwensya ng Saudi Arabia sa pananaw ng iba pang mga bansang Muslim. At matagal nang tumutulong sa atin ang Saudi Arabia upang tuloy-tuloy ang pagpapatupad ng ceasefire agreement sa Mindanao. Malaki rin ang tulong niya sa paghimok sa mga rebeldeng grupo na bumalik sa negosasyon.

Meron silang itinalagang Saudi Fund nong hindi pa ako Pangulo para sa mga proyekto natin para sa kapayapaan sa Mindanao. Ngunit ang ating administrasyon ang nakagamit noon, at Naaser, di ba isa sa malaking proyekto nila yung kalsada doon sa Camp Abubakar – na yung Camp Abubakar, yun ang kampo noon ng MILF, nong nagkaroon na tayo ng usapang kapayapaan, nagtayo tayo ng magandang kalsada don at funded by the Saudi Fund.

At isa pa, binabanggit ni Naaser doon sa kanyang probinsiya yung Lake Lanao, yung ... kasi, naalala ko yung tatay ko, sabi niya yung Lake Lanao mas maganda pa kaysa sa Lake Geneva. At isang proyekto niya ay gumawa ng kalsadang paikot sa Lake Lanao pero inumpisahan niya yun, ngayon ay natatapos natin sa pamamagitan din ng Saudi Fund. Lahat ito ay tulong para sa ating kapayapaan sa Mindanao.

Tungkol naman sa inyo, proteksyon ng ating mga Overseas Filipino. Kaya nga ako nagbibisita para makita ang inyong mga adhikain, inyong mga hinaing at kanina yung dalawang resolution na natanggap ko ay — yung isa nga ay nagpapasalamat dahil nagbibigay tayo ng Professional Licensure Examinations.

Actually, nong nagsimula yung global economic crisis last September, last year, don ko inannounce na magpapadala tayo ng Professional Licensure Examinations, pero ang community na rin ninyo ang humingi na ipostpone ito hanggang November this year para magkaroon kayo ng panahon para sa inyong review. At yung aking natanggap na resolution ay sinasabi kung puwede kong gawin itong taun-taon. Ngayon at even beyond my term kaya sabi ko, si Ambassador Villamor, igawa mo ako ng draft Executive Order na ginagawa itong taun-taon at sala na inuutos ang Philippine Professional Regulatory Commission na ilagay niya sa budget niya taun-taon.

Yung isang resolution naman ay hinihingi ang embassy on wheels. Kaya sabi ko kay Secretary Romulo, “o, humihingi ng embassy on wheels”, sabi nia, “puwede yun”. Pero siyempre, sabi ko “ang ibig sabihin non kailangan ang budget”. So “puwede rin yun,” sabi ni Secretary Romulo at mag-uusap sila ni Ambassador Villamor.

Dahil ang Saudi Arabia ang pinakamalaking Overseas Filipino Worker Community sa buong mundo ay talagang number one agenda kayo parati pag nagbibisita dito.

Yung binabanggit ni Mary Jane at marami sa inyo, sabi “welcome back”, ibig sabihin non, nagkita tayo noon. Yung pagbisita ko dito sa Al Khobar, Dammam at saka sa Dharan ay bahagi noon ng aking state visit na ginawa sa Saudi Arabia. At doon sa state visit na yun, palagay ko ang pinaka-importanteng nagawa ko ay yung hari ay nagbigay ng amnesty sa 700 na mga OFW na nasa loob ng kulungan.

In fact, marami sa kanila umuwi kasama ko kaya umuwi akong dalawa eroplano, hindi isa dahil yung isang eroplano, punong-puno ng Overseas Filipino Workers. Alam naman niyo naman ang batas dito di ba? May public crime, may private crime. So okay lang, “no problem”, sabi nila yung public crime they can forgive it, pero yung private crime ay medyo mahirap dahil kakausapin pa yung mga magulang ng biktima. Yun naman ay isang ipinagpasalamat ko kay Prince Muhammad, yung gobernador ng Eastern Province.

Kanina ay nagmiting na kami, sinalubong niya ako sa airport at ito nga ang pinag-usapan nmin. Kasi noon yung 700 na napatawad ng hari, may iba doon kinailangan nga na kausapin pa yung pamilya tungkol sa private crime. At natupad naman. At gaya ng sabi ko, malaking tinutupad yung ginagawa ni Prince Muhammad. Siguro alam ninyo yung kasaysayan halimbawa ni Sarah Dimatera, noon pa, di ba nandon na siya? Nandon na siya sa death row nong nagkaroon tayo ng state visit dito. Pero ang mabigat yung patawad ng pamilya ng biktima. At si Prince Muhammad ang nagsikap na kumbinsihin yung kanilang kamag-anak, pamilya at sa wakas, nakauwi na rin sya, napatawad na rin di ba, Nitoy?

At hindi lang yun ang ginawa ni Prince Muhammad, ininstitutionalized niya ito, gumawa siya ng Reconciliation Committee, malaking tulong yung tinayo ni Prince Governor ng Reconciliation Committee composed of Outstanding Religious men to help persuade the families of murder victims in the Eastern Province to forgive the perpetrators. At sabi nga niya sa akin sa nakikita niya, at least so far naman, meron silang 80% ... average, so masayang masaya siya at I hope you don't mind, sa pangalan ninyong lahat, ako'y nagpasalamat sa kanya, sa kanyang ibinigay.

Balita ni Secretary Roque sa akin, na yung ating Filipino Community Organizations dito sa Eastern Province, kayo ay nagkakaisa. At kayo ay laging handang tumulong sa mga programa't serbisyo ng embahada at ng POLO. Maraming salamat sa inyong tulong sa ating pamahalaan.

Dito raw sa Eastern Province sabi ni Nitoy, matatagpuan ang mga pinakamatatag na mga organisasyon ng mga Pilipino.

Sabi niya buong taon, hindi ba Nitoy? Buong taon, meron kayong mga proyekto at higit sa lahat itong mga proyekto ay sumusuporta sa ating mga programa ng administrasyon.

Kaya maraming salamat sa inyong malasakit para sa inyong pamilya, inyong trabaho at inyong bansa.

Yung sa bansa, napakalaki ang naitutulong ng inyong mga remittances sa pagpatuloy ng kaunlaran ng Pilipinas at alam ko, ito ay bunga ng sakripisyo, kasi naghahanap kayo ng trabaho, nagtrabaho kayo kung saan makahanap ng trabaho – sa malalayong lugar — sa pamamagitan ng mga hindi kilala at ibang mga kultura at kung minsan, lonely at mahirap na trabaho. Kaya naman tayo ay nagtatrabaho upang lumikha ng mga trabahong maganda ang sweldo sa ating bansa. Para sa ganon, yung mag-iibayong dagat ay magiging career choice lamang at hindi only choice para sa isang masipag na Pilipino.

Sa tulong ninyo at sa bunga naman ng ating mga reporma, we have weathered the storm of the global economic crisis. We've been resilient because we've been prepared, and we were prepared precisely because we've made very tough decisions several years ago to reform our banking system, to raise new taxes, naku! that was very unpopular, but to take the proceeds of those taxes para mamuhunan, mamuhunan, mamuhunan sa ating taumbayan para maging mas competitive ang ating ekonomiya.

At bunga noon, itong nakaraang taon, habang ang buong mundo, ay! hindi naman buong mundo, two-thirds ng mundo ay nagkakaroon ng recession, ang ating private construction ay umangat ng 17%. Bakit? Yung malaking pagpalawak ng middle at low income housing at marami don na housing na binili ng ating Overseas Filipino Workers. Salamat sa inyo.

Pati nga yung mining ay umangat ng 16% at yung Business Process Outsourcing or Call Center Industry ay lumaki ng lumaki — mula 5,000 workers nong 2001, ngayon paabot na sa 500,000 workers.

Ito ay dahil parati nating mino-modernize ang ating infrastruktura, siguro yung mga lately umuwi at nakatira sa north, siguro nakadaan na kayo sa bagong NLEX at SCTEX, ang ganda-ganda ng ating highway. Ang bilis ng pumunta ng Pampanga, ng Clark, ng Tarlac, ng Pangasinan, ng Baguio. At saka siyempre rin yung mataas na produktibidad natin at yung language skills ng ating mga Pilipino.

Pati nga government consumption ay lumaki dahil nagtaas tayo ng suweldo ng mga kawani ng pamahalaan. At siyempre isang malaking dahilan din kung bakit resilient tayo, yung sinabi ko kanina, yung remittances galing sa inyo.

Alam niyo, yung mga dalubhasa, sabi nila dahil two-thirds of the world is having recession, sabi nila, yung overseas remittances, lalo na marami don taga-America, I mean, although you are the biggest Overseas Filipino worker population, the biggest overseas Filipino population is in America. At they're very deep in recession. Kaya sabi ng mga dalubhasa, suwerte ang Pilipinas kung magiging flat yung growth ng remittances, same as last year pero baka bumaba pa nga, pero hindi bumaba, hindi flat, tumaas pa at magiging record ang remittances natin itong taon.

So you have defied, our remittances have still defied expectations, hindi bumaba, hindi nagstand still, record din, maraming maraming salamat.

Nanggaling lang ako sa London, at isang mabuting balita na nakuha natin doon, ay sabi ng The Economist, at saka ng UK Trade and Investment Office na ang Pilipinas ay isa sa pinaka-top emerging markets ngayon for investment.

Kasama ang Pilipinas don, kasama rin ang Saudi Arabia. Kasi Saudi Arabia hindi rin natamaan ng recession, di ba? Matatag din. At hindi lang matatag dahil matatag dahil mayaman na mayaman ang Saudi Arabia, maraming oil, at mabilis magdesisyon yung mga tagarito ay marami ring investment opportunities. Kaya magmimiting kami sa ilang mga interesadong kumpanyang mamumuhunan sa Pilipinas, maging dito sa Eastern Province at saka doon sa Jeddah. Kasi interesado sila. Pero ngayon at may krisis, may diprensiya sa interest at yung magbubunga sa desisyon. Meron ngang nagpunta sa Pilipinas na Saudi Investment Mission, di ang saya-saya natin. Yun pala, sampo ang pinuntahan nila kasi meron silang parang semi-finalists sa kanilang analysis. Tapos, pinuntahan – parang beauty contest, may mga semi-finals pero iinterbiyuhin at hindi lahat mapipili, magkakaroon ng finalists, magkakaroon ng winner. Kaya, yung investment mission na galling sa Saudi, sampung bansa ang pinagpipilian at siguro mga lima at the most ang talagang pupuntahan kaya importante na makasama tayo doon sa finalists at importanteng makasama tayo doon sa winners kaya yun ang isang pakay din natin sa pagbisita ngayon – to follow up and make sure na kung anuman yung mga duda nila, kung saan man sila diskumpiyado — sa proseso, sa patakaran ay masasagot natin yoon para matuluyan yung kanilang puhunan sa Pilipinas.

Pero bagamat yun ay isang malaking dahilan din sa pagbisita natin dito, higit sa lahat, ang pinaka-importanteng pakay ay ang inyong kapakanan.

Ang pagpapahalaga sa mga sakripisyo ng ating mga Overseas Filipino Workers ay malaking bahagi ng ating panunungkulan at ako naman ay taos-pusong nagpapasalamat sa lahat ng suportang binibigay ninyo sa ating mga sinisikap na gawin para umunlad ng tuluyan ang ating bansa. At asahan ninyo na gaya ng pagtugon natin sa inyong mga resolusyon, mula nong resolusyon niyo the last time at resolusyon ngayon, tinutupad pag may hinihingi kayong resonabli – resonabli naman ang mga hinihingi ninyo, laging tutulong ang ating pamahalaan upang mapabuti ang kapakanan ng ating mga Pilipino dito sa napaka-importanteng pangalawang tahanan ninyo, ang Saudi Arabia. (applause) because we have been prepared. We were prepared precisely because we made very tough decisions several years ago to reform our banking system, raise new revenues (very unpopular), and take those proceeds and invest, invest, invest in our people and the competitiveness of our economy.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Ang laki ng pag-angat ng private construction – 17% — due to the surge in middle and low-income housing; iyong mining naman ay umangat ng grew by 16.% at iyong business process outsourcing and industry ay lumaki mula 5,000 employees in 2001 hanggang mga 500,000. in large part due to our efforts to continually modernize our infrastructure and the high level of productivity and English language skills of our workforce; pati government consumption ay lumaki dahil nagtaas tayo ng sweldo sa pamahalaan; at syempre, the growth of remittances from you, our overseas workers, which are very important to our economy, have still defied expectations: sabi nila bababa or standstill, pero record pa rin ang inaabot. Maraming salamat.

There are also many opportunities for investment from Saudi Arabia. Kaya may meeting ako sa ilang mga kompanyang interesado mamuhunan sa Pilipinas. Dapat ang interes nila ay bumbunga ng talagang puhunan. Noong isang taon, may pumuntang investment mission sa Pilipinas galing sa Saudi. Ngunit mga sampung bansa ang binisita nila para pagpiian. Kailangan isa tayo sa mapipili.

Higit sa lahat, ang pagpapahalaga sa mga sakripisyo ng ating mga manggagawa, sa loob at sa labas ng bansa, ay malaking bahagi ng ating panunungkulan. Taus-pusong akong nagpapasalamat sa lahat ng suportang binibigay ninyo. Asahan ninyo na lagi akong tutulong upang mapabuti ang kapakanan ng mga Pilipinong nagtatrabaho sa ibang bansa.. Maraming salamat, at mabuhay ang mga Pilipino Saudi Arabia!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a meeting with the Filipino community. Retrieved

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134400/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26267&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino Community in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a meeting with the Filipino Community in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia

[Delivered at the Habitat Hotel, Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, September 22, 2009]

Thank you. Maraming salamat, maraming salamat, Secretary Nitoy Roque sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin. At salamat din kay Ambassador Villamor at Consul General Tago sa inyong welcome remarks.

Gusto kong ipakilala yung iba't-ibang mga kasapi ng ating delegasyon na nandito nakaupo sa ating entablado: katabi ko ay ang ating Secretary of Foreign Affairs, yung boss ni Ambassador Villamor, si Secretary Bert Romulo. Katabi niya yung Deputy Speaker ng House of Representative, si Girlie Villarosa; kilala niyo si Secretary Nitoy Roque dahil matagal na siyang... nong araw pa Labor Attache dito; sa kanan naman ni Ambassador Villamor ay si Congressman Danny Suarez; at yung aking kabalen, si Congresswoman Anna York Bondoc-Sagun; sa likod kilala niyo ito, palagay ko yung mga nandito ng matagal dahil matagal siyang Ambassador dito sa Saudi Arabia, ngayon, Chairman ng ating panel sa peace talks sa MILF, si Ambassador Paeng Seguis; katabi niya ang ating Press Secretary, si Cerge Remonde; tapos, ang ating Trade and Industry, si Secretary Peter Favila; ang ating Secretary of Agrarian Reform na ako ay malaki ang karangalan para sa akin na dalawang beses nag-secretary sa cabinet ang mga Musli — panahon ni Diosdado Macapagal at panahon ni Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo. at yung laki sa Saudi Arabia at balik Saudi Arabia bilang Consul General, yung inyong nag-aalaga sa inyo dito, si Consul General Tago, kilala na rin ninyo.

Kaming lahat ay bumabati sa ating mga kababayan dito sa Jeddah at sa Western Province. Maraming salamat sa inyong pagdalo. Karing cabalen kong Kapampangan, dakal a salamat qng pamanyatang yu, karakal yo keti. Sa ating mga kaigsuunan, gikan sa Bisayas ug Mindanao, daghan salamat sa inyong pag-anhi. dagiti kakailyak ti bangir ni mamang ko, naimbag a rabii yo amin, agyamanac nga inmay kayo amin. San saray kabaleyan, masantos ya labi ed sikayon amin. At meron tayong nakilala mga Bicol Association, good evening to all of you. Diyos mabalos. And sa atong mga Ilonggo, salamat gid sa pag ari subong.

Ako'y nasisiyahan na nandito na namang muli at ilan sa atin ang nagkakita noong nag-state visit ako nong 2006, ngayon nagbalik para tanggapin yung imbitasyon ng His Majesty The Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques para sa pagbubukas ng KAUST kung saan ang ating anim na scholar ay nag-aaral doon. Dinig ko anim kayo, anim kayo — limang masters at isang PhD. Sino sa inyo ang PhD dito. Congratulations! at ito ay Science and Technology, alam niyo, napaka-importante ito kasi sa ating bansa, two years ago, pinag-aralan natin yung ating Research and Development Manpower at kinailangan ang conclusion ng pag-aaral, we need a quantum leap sa ating Research and Development Manpower per number of population kung gusto natin na maging talagang maging sentro ng development. Kaya two years ago, nagsimula tayo ng programa para magkaroon ng scholarships yung mga estudyante sa masters and doctorate ng Science and Technology sa pitong unibersidad ng Pilipinas, kasama nga doon ung Ateneo kung saan kayo nanggaling. Pero dahil ito libre lahat, may apartment pa kayo bawat isa, nalibre ako ng anim na kailangan pang ipag-aral ng masters and doctorate, so congratulations sa inyo at maraming salamat sa Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Itong pagbisita natin, pagtanggap ng imbitasyon ay bahagi rin ng ating pangkalahatang istrategiya to engage the global community to benefit our economy, to enhance our national security and of course, to promote the welfare of our OFWs – the biggest community of which is right here in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Yung tungkol sa national security, malaki ang tulong ng Saudi Arabia sa ating proseso ng kapayapaan sa Mindanao, lalo na dahil siya ang lider ng bansang Muslim. Malaki ang kanyang impluwensiya sa iba't-ibang mga bansang Muslim pa rin natin sa ating mga Muslim sa Pilipinas. At malaki ang tulong ng Saudi upang umangat ang buhay ng ating mga kapatid na Muslim sa Mindanao, sa ganoon mabawasan ang isang malaking dahilan ng gyera. Halimbawa, yung Saudi ay tumulong sa atin para itayo yung magandang kalsada ngayon doon sa Camp Abubakar, yung dating kampo ng MILF na ngayon ay isang pamayanan na ng mga Iranon. Sila rin ay tumutulong upang matapos natin yung Circumferential Road ng Lake Lanao na siya ay mas maganda kaysa sa Lake Geneva, kailangan lang maganda ang kalsada para maenjoy natin lahat yung magandang view doon.

At pati na rin sa mga pagkakataon na magtrabaho dito sa Saudi. Kanina nga, I want to congratulate our Philippine Nurses Association dahil nagkaroon sila ng for the first time an organization here and they had their oath taking at ginamit ko yung pagkakataon na tanungin kung totoo nga ba na para maging nurse sa Mecca o Medina, para sa mga Pilipinong Muslim, hindi kailangang maging nursing board passer. Yun ay bahagi ng tulong para sa ganon, yung ating mga nursing students na Muslim ay magkakaroon ng pagkakataon doon sa Mecca at Medina. Pero yun ang para doon, pero sa ibang lugar, kailangan pa rin. Kaya kung siguro, several times, nagkaroon tayo ng board exam dito sa Saudi Arabia at Nitoy, November magkakaroon tayo ng board exam, di ba ? Last week of November, magkakaroon tayo ng board exam. Pero hindi lang yun, nagpapagawa ako kay Ambassador Villamor ng draft ng Executive Order para sa ganon, hanggang ito ay ma-rescind ng ibang pangulo, every year magkakaroon ng board exam dito sa Saudi Arabia.

Nong papasok ako, Philippine Nurses, PICPA, ang dami-dami ng iba't-ibang mga profession na narito sa Saudi Arabia, sa Jeddah, at natutuwa ako na yung 1.4 milyong Pilipino gaya ng sabi ni Consul General Tago ay pinupuri sa inyong sipag, sa inyong husay sa pagtatrabaho, sa inyong kagalingan sa pakikisama.

Bago ako pumunta dito, binisita ko yung mga Pilipino doon sa Red Sea Mall, maraming nurses doon, maraming mga chefs, maraming mga waiters, maraming iba't-ibang mga empleyado doon. Yung mga nurse hindi nandoon dahil nag-empleado, no, nagsha-shopping sila. Pero nagkaroon kami ng pagkakataon magkuwento tungkol sa kanilang buhay dito. At karamihan sa 1.4 milyon, maganda ang sitwasyon, pero siyempre kung 1.4 million kayo, by the law of averages, may ilang daan na nagkakaproblema ng malubha.

Kaya ito ang isang importanteng asikasuhin at noong ako ay nag-state visit tatlong taong nakaraan kung saan nagkita ang ilan sa atin, pinatawad ng Hari ang pitong-daang OFW na nasa kulungan noon. And a planeload of them came home with me.

Bukas naman, sa tulong din ng kanilang pamahalaan, an initial group – yung magkakasya sa eroplano ko – 120 workers na may malubhang problema, babalik sa Pilipinas, makakapiling muli ang kanilang mga pamilya. Inaasahan nating marami pang makakaalis, pagkatapos sikapin na maisaayos ang kanilang alitan sa kanilang mga employer.

Kaya inatasan ko ang DOLE na tuparin ang mga repormang ginawa natin kasi ang karamihan na may problema, yung mga household workers. Kaya sabi ko sa DOLE, pinaalala ko sa kanila, ipatupad ng husto yung ating mga repormang ginawa upang makapagbigay sa mga household service workers ng higit na proteksyon:

Number one, tinaas natin yung minimum wage. Nong araw, bago ako pumunta rito the last time, $200, dinoble natin kasi gusto natin na yung mga edukado lang at yung mga may kaya lang ang magha-hire ng household workers dahil mas maganda ang pagtrato.

Pangalawa, walang placement fee.

Pangatlo, mandatory skills certification upang tiyakin na kaya naman nong magpupunta dito yung household job. Kasi kung manggagaling ka kung saan sa Pilipinas, na ni wala kang karanasan na nagtrabaho sa isang bahay sa Maynila, tapos pupunta ka dito, hindi marunong magplantsa, hindi marunong magluto, hindi marunong maglaba, di siyempre, magkakaroon ng awayan, at magkakaroon ng sakitan, so kailangan ang certification.

And fourth, basic culture pre-departure orientation para maka-adjust sa kapaligiran ng pagtatrabahuan.

Inatasan ko rin ang DOLE na ang POLO ay dapat mas mabilis kumilos sa hiling na tulong ng ating mga manggagawang may malubhang problema. At inatasan ko na dagdagan ng DOLE ang kanilang tauhan sa Saudi Arabia bago magtapos ang taon upang mas mabilis tumugon.

At isa pa, inatasan ko rin si Ambassador Villamor na dapat magkaroon, kahit na mayroon kayong consulate sa Jeddah, dapat magkaroon pa rin ng Embassy on Wheels. para every two months, naglilibot yung mga consular officials sa iba't-ibang mga establishments kung saan marami ang Pilipino, para sa ganon, marernew yung passport ninyo at iba pang inyong pangangailangan.

Ngayon, bago ako pumunta rito, nabalitaan natin iyong kaso ng mga nasa ilalim ng tulay. Narinig na rin ba ninyo yun? Nasa ilalim ng tulay. So, siyempre pinaimbestiga ko ito kay Secretary Nitoy Roque, at ito ang kanyang report, maraming taon na palang ginagamit ng Jeddah immigration ang Khandara Brige bilang pick-up point para sa overstaying pilgrims galing sa iba't ibang bansa. At mula sa tulay, dinadala sila sa Haj Terminal para iproseso and for documentation. Pagkatapos binabalik sa kanilang bansa.

Ngayon ang nangyari, ginamit itong tulay bilang gathering point ng 300 OFW kasama ang mga batang napanganak sa Saudi. By the way mga batang Saudi, congratulations sa inyong napakagandang orchestra and chorus. Bunga pala ng kombinasyon ng iba't-ibang mga Philippine schools dito, congratulations!

So yan ang mas typical pero meron ding ilan na mga anak na namomroblema ang magulang, pati anak, namomroblema rin. At ito na nga, kasama doon sa mga nagpunta sa ilalim ng tulay. At marami dito raw ay takas sa kanilang employer o sponsor. At ilan daw sa kanila ay matagal nang nag-free-free-lance o nagpa-part-time o nagnenegosyo.

Kaya ang gagawin doon ngayon ay inasikaso natin itong problemang ito at ako naman ay nasisiyahan na dito sa 300, may report na mga 100 na kababaihan at mga bata ay nakauwi na. One hundred ! Ngayon, yung two hundred— mga lalaki ay prinoproseso na ngayon at siyempre dahil Ramadan, alam naman ninyo mahirap ang opisina sa Ramadan, pero ngayon na tapos na, at pagkatapos ng Edl Fitr ay inaasahan natin na mas mabilis ang proseso para sila ay makauwi na.

Pero ito ay isang leksyon, kaya inatasan ko si Ambassador Villamor na makipag-ugnayan sa iba't-ibang ahensiya ng pamahalaan upang mas mabilis ang pag-asikaso sa ating manggagawang may problema. At inatasan ko ang DFA, si Secretary Romulo; ang DOLE, si Secretary Roque; pati na rin ang NBI, tinawagan ko si Secretary Agnes Devanadera sa Manila na ipa-investigate ang NBI na asikasuhin itong mga manggagawa, hindi lang yung 66 women and 31 children who have rejoined their families in the Philippines. Pati na rin iyong nalalabing mga 200 na nasa final stage of processing para mai-uwi. Ano ba ang problema talaga, bakit tumakas? At sino ang nag-alok sa kanila na pumunta doon sa ilalim ng tulay na usually, ang nagpupunta doon ay pilgrims so lahat ito ay kailangan malaman natin, maimbestiga kaya iyan ang ating isang ginagawa.

Gaya ng sabi ko, may ilang daan na may problema. Kaya iyan ang ginagawa ko, nakikipag-usap, pati yung mga hotel workers natin dito ay kausap kanina at kausap ni Ambassador Villamor at gaya ng sabi ko, kung 1.200, may mga ilang daan na may problema at dapat asikasuhin yun.

But above all, ang pinaka-importante is to help make our economy competitive enough so that one day going abroad will just be a career choice and not the only option for our hardworking Filipino workers.

At ito din ang isa sa mga pakay ng ating mga pagbibiyah. Our trips have helped secure important trade opportunities and foreign investments that have in turn helped us to achieve 34 quarters — or more than eight years — of uninterrupted growth. And it is this achievement that enables us to withstand the recession that is now raging around us.

Ginagawa natin ang lahat, para mamantini itong growth na ito. At sa ngayon, bagamat meron tayong recession sa buong mundo, malakas ang pag-angat ng ating mining; malakas ang pag-angat ng ating construction lalo na't may surge sa middle and low-income housing; and by the way, marami doon sa housing, kayong mga OFW rin ang mga bumibili, maraming salamat doon. Pati consumption ng pamahalaan na nanggaling sa pamahalaan ay umangat din dahil tinaas natin ang sweldo ng mga nagtatrabaho sa pamahalaan, at mayroon tayong programang pantawid pamilya para sa mga pinakamahihirap na pamilya ng ating bansa; at umaangat din yung ating business process outsourcing at call center industry na lumaki mula 5,000 employees noong 2001 hanggang halos 500,000 employees ngayon. So ganon kalaki ang increase in an 8-year period. At syempre, isang malaking pinanggagalingan din ng ating GNP growth rate ay yung mga remittances galing sa inyo na napakaimportante sa ating ekonomiya at itong taon aabot sa record high sa kabila ng sinabi ng mga dalubhasa na bababa ang inyong remittances, tumataas at aabot record itong taong ito, maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Kaya ako ay naparito dito upang makipagkuwento sa inyo, upang malaman ang iba't-ibang mga pangangailangan lalo na yung pangangailangan ng mga malulubhang may problema. Mga pangangailangan din ng mga hindi masyadong malubha may problema gaya ng embassy on wheels, gaya ng board examinations dito pero higit sa lahat, para magpasalamat sa inyong malasakit para sa inyong pamilya, para sa inyong trabaho, at para inyong bansa.

Maraming, maraming salamat at Mabuhay ang Pilipino sa Western Province. Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech a meeting with the Filipino Community in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134322/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26268&Itemid=38

Message of President Arroyo on the drastic effect of Typhoon Ondoy

Message
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
On the drastic effect of Typhoon Ondoy

[Delivered at Camp Emilio Aguinaldo, Quezon City, September 26, 2009]

I am calling on our countrymen, especially residents in Metro Manila and other provinces in the path of typhoon Ondoy, to please stay calm, follow the instructions of your local officials and civil defense authorities, and be ready at all times to help others as we manage our way together out of this latest natural calamity.

Your government is mobilizing all its resources to rescue people from the floodwaters, attend to the food and medical needs of the displaced, maintain public utilities and other essential services, and preserve public order.

After the crisis is past, I ask you as well to donate clothes and blankets, foodstuffs, medicines and other essentials that will surely be needed by those among us who were victimized by the typhoon.

As ever, let us pull together and look out for each other in the finest Filipino tradition of caring and sharing.

Thank you and may God bless us all.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's message on the drastic effect of typhoon Ondoy. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134313/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26299&Itemid=38

Message of President Arroyo regarding “Oplan Sagip Center” in Malacañang in the aftermath of Tropical Storm “Ondoy” [Filipino]

Mensahe
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Ukol sa “Oplan Sagip Center” sa Malacañang para sa mga naapektuhan ng Bagyong “Ondoy”

[Ipinahayag sa Bahay Pangarap, Malacañang Park, ika 28 ng Setyembre, 2009]

Kahit na hindi natin inaasahang mangyari muli sa ating buhay ang tindi ng kalamidad na dulot ng kakadaang bagyong Ondoy, ito ay di masyadong nagbibigay ng gaang loob sa ating mga kababayang nasalanta ng bagyo, na ngayon nangangailangan higit sa kailanman, ng ating kalinga at ating tulong habang sinisikap nilang maitayo muli ang kanilang mga buhay.

Bilang kontribusyon sa pangkalahatang pagsisikap, pinabuksan natin ang Malacañang bilang emergency center para sa gawaing relief, bilang isa sa mga sentrong tanggapn at pamamahagi ng mga donasyon at bilang pansamantalang evacuation center ng mga pamilyang nawalan ng tahanan ng bagyo.

Ang mga evacuees ay bibigyan ng silong sa lugar na available sa mga gusali ng Malacañang at sa mga tolda na itinayo sa pagitan ng gusali. Kung kailangan, ang mga empleyado ay magsisiksikan upang may lugar ang ating mga kababayang nasalanta. Ako ay lumipat muna sa kabila ng ilog sa PSG compound.

Ang aking ama, si dating Pangulong Diosdado Macapagal, na ngayon ang kaniyang kaarawan, sa panahon niya, may “Common Man’s” day sa Malacañang tuwing biyernes. Ngayon, kahit hindi biyernes, dapat ganoon din sa ganitong panahon ng krisis kung kailan ang ating mga kababayan ay dapat nagkakaisa at nagtutulungan. Buo ang aking paniniwala ang lahat ng ating mga namumuno ay magbibigay ng tamang halimbawa, ano man ang kulay ng kanilang pulitika o partidong sinasamahan, habang tayo ay hinahamon ng na muling ipakita na ang sambayanang Pilipino ay hindi nagkukulang sa mga katangiang maglalabas ng kabayanihan nating lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s message regarding “Oplan Sagip Center” in Malacañang in the aftermath of tropical storm “Ondoy”. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134302/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26306&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching of “Nurse Assigned in Rural Service” (NARS) Project in Region 12 [Filipino] Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa paglulunsad ng “Nurse Assigned in Rural Service” (NARS) Project sa Rehiyon 12

[Ipinahayag sa Passenger’s Waiting Area, Cotabato Airport, Awang, Cotabato, ika 30 ng Setyembre, 2009]

Maraming salamat, Secretary Roque sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

Maraming salamat rin, Mayor Sema sa iyong words of welcome at words of comfort. Yung dinadanas ng Metro Manila ngayon, dinanas din ng Cotabato area nong bumaha yung Mindanao River. So, alam ko na alam ninyo yung damdamin ng mga taga-Metro Manila. Ating mga NARS trainees; other officials; friends; ladies and gentlemen.

Ewan ko kung naalala ninyo, anim na buwang nakaraan, sa tuktok ng pandaigdigang krisis ng ekonomiya, bilang bahagi ng ating Economic Resiliency Program, naglunsad tayo ng NARS, N-A-R-S. Ibig sabihin noon — Nurses Assigned in Rural Service.

Ang pakay niya ay resolbahan ang sumobrang mga nurses na walang karanasan — yung mga new graduates, wala pang experience — so, magamit sila, so mamobilize sila at ipairal ang kalusugan ng taong bayan at ipalapit sa pamahalaan ang taong bayan. Ang diwa nito ay i-mobilize sa trabaho yung mga nurses na naghihintay sa kani-kanilang bayan dahil dulot ng krisis sa America, bumaba ang demand for nurses kaya ang mga experienced nurses ang pinipili, yung mga walang experience, hindi kinukuha. Kaya gumawa tayo nitong programang ito — sa programang ito, hindi lamang natin nagagamit ang mga walang ginagawang professionals, nakakadagdag pa tayo ng sundalo laban sa sakit.

Ang panahon ng serbisyo nila ay anim na buwan. We started six months ago, ngayon, tapos na ang anim na buwan, and our nurses here in front with the tag are finishing their program today — last day, September. At inaasahan natin na ngayon at meron na kayong mga karanasan, yung sinasabi ni Secretary Roque na usually nga, kayo pa ang magbabayad para mag-training sa ospital, nagkaroon kayo ng karanasan, so, nadagdagan na yung inyong capability to be hired permanently at tutulong ang DOLE sa pagpili sa inyo ng permanent ng trabaho.

Ngayon at natapos na ang first six months — first batch, meron tayong pangalawang recruitment na magsisimula bukas, October 1.

At sa pagkakataong ito, ito naman yung ating mga nasa likod, sa pagkakataong ito, ipinag-iibayo natin ang programa.

So, DOH take note na itong instructions ko ay nasusunod. Inilulunsad natin ngayon ang pangalawang NARS, N-A-R-S. Ngayon ang tawag ‘Nurses Assigned in Rural Schools’. Ang mga sumasali dito ay maglilingkod bilang mga nurse na lilibot sa mga school districts kasi wala tayong mga school nurse sa public schools. At Wow! Hindi kayo magkukulang ng trabaho, magtuturo kayo ng hygiene, magtuturo kayo ng wastong pagkain, magtuturo kayo ng sanitation, at sa ibabaw ng tungkulin na ito, ito ay gagawin ninyo sa ibabaw ng karaniwang paglilingkod ninyo na nagbibigay ng paglilingkod sa mga nangangailangan ng health care, at referral.

At sa ibabaw ng paghandog ng presensya ng kalusugan ng pamahalaan sa mga paaralan, kayo naman ay dahil nandoon kayo, at least mababawasan niyo yung trabaho na ginagawa ng mga organic personnel tungkol sa pangalusugan. So, ito ang ating bagong NARS. So, inaasahan natin na itong second batch ay tutulong hindi lamang sa kalusugan ng komunidad, tutulong pati para gumanda ang ating school system.

Kaya sa inyong lahat, congratulations! Kayo ay bahagi sa 5,000 na bagong trainees ng NARS na magsisimula ng inyong six months bukas at pagkatapos noon, ay mas qualified na kayo at hopefully by that time, baka gumaganda na ang pandaigdigang ekonomiya at magkakaroon ng mas malaking demand para sa ating napakamagaling na mga nurses sa Pilipinas.

Maraming salamat at congratulations sa inyong lahat!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's speech during the launching of "Nurse Assigned in Rural Service" (NARS) Project in Region 12. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134230/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26352&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 95th Foundation Day Anniversary of Glan, Sarangani and the 10th Lubi-Lubi Festival

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 95th Foundation Day Anniversary of Glan, Sarangani and the 10th Lubi-Lubi Festival

[Delivered at the Municipal Gymnasium, Brgy. Poblacion, Glan, Sarangani, October 8, 2009]

Daghan salamat Secretary Dureza sa imong pagpa-ila.

Governor Miguel Dominguez daghan salamat sab sa imong pag welcome ug sa kontribusyon gikan sa probinsya sa Sarangani alang sa mga biktima sa flood victims didto sa Metro Manila, salamat sa tabang; Vice Governor Solon ug siyempre ang atong host diri si Mayor Yap ug si Mrs. Yap, daghan salamat sa inyong imbitasyon kanako; Vice Mayor Wata; tanan aton mga kaigsuonan opisyal diri sa Glan; our two national officials, Commissioner of Customs Boy Morales and Commissioner of Immigration Nonoy Libanan who are here to open the CIQ One-Stop Shop in our Glan International Port today. Aton mga kaigsuonan diri sa Glan, Malipayong Anniversary kaninyong tanan!

Mao nga ang akong ikatulo nga pagbisita diri sa Glan busa ang akong una isip senador karon duha ka beses isip Presidente. Ug usa nga rason gyud ngano nalipay ko sa kada pagbisita ko diri kay kamo tanan dako ang inyong suporta kanako. Ug murag ingon ni Secretary Dureza nga ako ang Presidente nagamahal sa Glan, ako naman ang Presidente nga gimahal diri sa Glan. Daghan salamat kaninyong tanan.

Salamat sa tabang kanako sa mga eleksyon kay murag ingon... sama sa ingon ni Mayor Yap kanunay daog ako dinhi sa Glan ug salamat naman sa inyong suporta sa eleksyon ug dili sa eleksyon kay daghan kaayo ang inyong suporta sa akong administrasyon labi na sa mga maayo na nahimo ninyo diri alang sa kauswagan sa lungsod, sa probinsya, sa rehiyon sa Mindanao sa atong nasud.

Nining inyong anibersaryo 95th Anniversary, we have a very important milestone, your new One-Stop Shop Action Center to serve the Customs, Immigration, Quarantine and Security needs of the BIMP-EAGA. Ug sa inyong security gusto ko sab ipaabot ang akong pag abe-abe kaninyong tanan kay ang kalinaw klaro diri sa inyong lungsod na Glan. Wala na kamong NPA, wala na kamong MILF, wala na kamong MNLF, wala kamong Abu Sayyaf, so congratulations sa kalinaw dinhi sa Glan. And we thank also our soldiers headed by General Rey Mapago here, our policemen and the other law enforcers.

Ug tungod kay gwapo ang inyong kalinaw dinhi ug meron na tayong magandang One- Stop Action Center sa ating pantalan, ang ating international port takos ganini ang panagkauban ug ang komersyo sa BIMP-EAGA, ang atong Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines-East Asia Growth Area. Sa akong niaging pagbisita gyud diri giabri nato ang inyong international port, and Governor Dominguez and I and Mayor Yap saw off the first boat going to North Sulawesi which is only 150 kilometers away. So bringing goods, coke and other beverages to the Northern part of Indonesia. Karon, now that we have the One-Stop Action Center for quarantine and immigration and customs the more there will be trade, and Glan will be one of the most important international ports for our BIMP-EAGA progress.

Busa ang akong tuyo lang kaninyo kay sigurado naman ako sa inyong suporta nga ipadayon nato ang mga imprastraktura nga mo-attract ug mga mamumuhunan ug magpaspas sa pagdala sa mga pagkaon ug gamit sa laing-laing dapit sa rehiyon, labi na ang atong flagship project diri ang Jose Abad Santos-Glan-Sarangani Cooperation

Triangle o JAGS-CT. Gisugdan nato kining proyekto niagi pang 2006. Uban sa atong pagsugod ang paghatag sa pondo alang sa Glan-Abad Santos Road, niaging 2006 pa nahuman na ang Sarangani portion, ang Glan portion, congratulations! Karon under construction ang Abad Santos portion. Apan para kanako ang usa ka dako nga resulta nining atong bag-o nga kalsada nga ang mga produkto nga gikan ug paadto sa Southern Davao del Sur, sa Abad Santos mo-agi na sa pantalan sa Glan tungod sa kalsada.

Gusto ko unta ipatuyo sab nga ipadayon nato ang pagbutang ug puhunan sa edukasyon, serbisyong panglawas, ug uban pang kinahanglanong serbisyo aron maabot sa tibuok nasod ang kauswagan. Apan diri diay sa Glan sa dili pa ako nakahangyo kaninyo nahimo na ninyo kay nahibaw ko karon nga diri dinha... sa diay sa Glan libre ang eskwela gikan sa grade school hangtod sa high school, hangtod sa college. So, congratulations kan Mayor Yap sa iyang pag puhunan sa edukasyon, ug dinhi diay sa Glan libre resulta ang pag pa-ospital so maayo sab ang inyong serbisyo sa health services sa aton mga katawhan. Ug tungod kay... so nangutana ko kan Mayor tingali kadako kaayo ang imong income sa lungsod kay nahimo ninyo kining tanan, mga nining tanan mga serbisyo inyo na dili lang ordinaryo lang compared sa mga laing-laing lungsod.

Apan ang importante ang prioritization, walay mga luxury sa operation sa gobyerno tanan sa development ug miniayo walay graft and corruption sa procurement so walay nga waste nga pondo so nakita nato sa maayong governance maayo ang kauswagan diri sa Glan. Angay gyud nga kamo ang mahimo nga aton international port sa Southern Philippines paadto sa BIMP-EAGA.

Daghan salamat ug congratulations kaninyong tanan!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 95th Foundation Day Anniversary of Glan, Sarangani and the 10th Lubi-Lubi Festival. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134147/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26442&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening ceremonies of the 24th National Convention of the Chamber of Real Estate and Builders' Association (CREBA), Inc.

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening ceremonies of the 24th National Convention of the Chamber of Real Estate and Builders' Association (CREBA), Inc.

[Delivered at the Grand Caprice Atrium, Limketkai Center, Cagayan de Oro City, Misamis Oriental, October 8, 2009]

Thank you Secretary Dureza for your introduction.

Governor Oscar Moreno whom I understand you visited earlier and he knows your industry very well because before he became a government official he was for a long time in your industry with Ayala and he knows your needs very well including securitization. Of course, Jimmy Cura thank you for the invitation for me to join you today and congratulations on holding this national convention and the theme of your convention. I would like to also congratulate the CREBA Chapter of Cagayan de Oro Edward Argayoso (applause) for hosting this convention of your very important national association. And I'm looking at your theme, "Pinoy Economic Stimuli in a Global Recession: — and you recognized two stimuli — the Mass Housing and the World Class Tourism." And so I suppose during your meeting this is what you will be talking about — how to avail of the many opportunities that await you in these two areas.

And as Jimmy Cura mentioned about our resilience let me quote The Economist Intelligence Unit which says: "Where the Philippines differs from its neighbors, and indeed from most crisis-hit economies, is that the crisis has generated less pronounced economic ups and downs. The economy has not contracted at all in year-on-year terms during the global current crisis."

How true this is, indeed.

Because we have achieved much in the areas of infrastructure investment, job creation, macroeconomic stability and improvements in our overall business environment — including your industry real estate and building — your industry has helped us through the worst of the global economic crisis. And I thank you for that. The result is a Philippine economy that is stronger and more able to withstand shocks such as those that the global financial crisis is throwing at us. Not only have we sustained positive economic growth throughout the global recession, we even exceeded expectations in the second quarter of this year.

Moreover, financial reforms — including the ones that Oca did when he was still in the Congress — have created the fundamentals that underpin our financial sector today, reinforced by conservative banking practices. And these values have significantly sheltered our country's finances and therefore allows our banking sector to continue to have the liquidity to finance your projects because we know in today's modern times real estate construction housing all are dependent on how smooth is the credit system of the country.

We know how the U.S. economy collapsed — the sub-prime credit. But here in this country we don't really have sub-prime credits the conservative banking practices have kept your credit clients and your own members as creditworthy. So, in recognition of this stability, Moody's Investors Service upgraded the Philippine credit rating last July.

And a lot of this is because of the bitter medicine of reform that we took early on and the economic resilience that it has in turn created, so we are today a stronger, more robust nation. And now that we are seeing some signs of a recovery in the world that we hope will be sustained, we are poised to ride the wave of the impending global economic rebound and to offer your industry what you have recognized these opportunities to capture the growth prospects provided by the impending world recovery.

So you mentioned world class tourism, indeed, there are more and more tourists coming to the Philippines and travelling even within the Philippines. For instance, within the Philippines, more and more people are flocking to the centers of commerce and tourism here in Mindanao as well as the Visayas, as tourist destinations spread to what we call the super region called Central Philippines which covers Bicol, Palawan, the Visayas, and the northern islands of Mindanao. The gateway to one of those islands, Camiguin, is Cagayan de Oro which by itself as well is the regional center and the most populous highly urbanized city in Northern Mindanao.

Very important project of ours — we talk about it everytime Oca and I see each other is the first thing we talk about — is the Laguindingan Airport. And I am happy to hear upon my arrival here that concrete is already going to start pouring on the runway this week. So, congratulations for that Oca! (applause) And that will make tourism even stronger here in Northern Mindanao when you will be able to have first the regional airlines coming, the international airlines that will take sometime because we have to wait for America and Europe to recover but the airlines around will be able to land in that airport, that runway that we are now concreting.

In fact tourism in the Philippines grew significantly in the past eight years, and our Undersecretary here who is one of your speakers — I see Undersecretary Palabyab. Have you done your speech? Not yet — can attest to that that in the past eight years we fleshed out our tourism plan. In the early part of our administration the DOT got Mc Kinsey to do a tourism masterplan, and that is essentially what we are following. And we have transformed that into what we call our Tourism Central Philippines.

One breakthrough for domestic tourism was when we completed the Western Nautical RORO Highway in 2003. It allowed travel by car or bus from Manila, not only to Boracay but also to Northern Mindanao.

And now with the Western, Central and Eastern Nautical RORO Highways, we have had busy tourist traffic in the past five years in Central Philippines and many parts of Mindanao. So I am glad that you are looking at world class tourism as an important opportunity because our tourism is growing and the only limit to its growth is the availability of the tourism establishments. All our resorts are fully booked all the time. So, Ace Durano tells me rather than promoting tourism he promotes tourism investments because what seems to be happening is you build it and they come. So that is a great opportunity.

Now, as you rightly recognized, mass housing is another good opportunity inspite of the global recession in the Philippines this past year. Jimmy Cura said you were so scared a year ago when the recession started in the world, but during this past year Philippine private construction grew by 17%. Congratulations to all of you! And why did it grow that fast because of the surge in middle and low income housing.

The primary cause of demand for homes is migration to urban centers in search of jobs or livelihood. And the most workable solution is not for the government to build the houses but for you private sector low-cost housing. And this trend is encouraging you, the land developers and the builders, to explore outside Metro Manila for more opportunities to build homes for our people.

And now that there is natural calamity our plan, and we will be discussing this some more on Tuesday in our next NDCC Cabinet Level Meeting, is that because we know that many years ago or over the decades people have been occupying riversides, creeksides and lakeshores — not the lake shore that is... that lakeshore that's an artificial lake, it's the shore of an artificial lake. What we're talking about lakeshores like Laguna de Bay, okay. The lakeshores, the dangerous places over the decades people have been staying there, not you know, not really your clients but rather informal dwellers.

And what we want is that those who evacuated should not go back to those places anymore. So we have to work very quickly on their relocation rather than returning to the same dangerous places that they have now escaped from. So, yesterday, we started the first relocation of the evacuees, from Marikina they went to Sta. Rosa and I will visit them tomorrow.

And I understand from Vice President de Castro — who I see is one of your speakers that... and he will maybe tell you more about it tomorrow — that several of you the developers have committed that in some of the areas that were already prepared for development by the government or even not yet prepared but the land is there a lot of the developers have said that within one month you will be able to have houses that people can move into. So we thank you very much for that because that is a great opportunity for your industry, it's also a great opportunity now to transform our informal settlers, dwellers in those dangerous places to legitimate homeowners in places where they will be safer from natural calamities.

And to ensure that your market will be sustained, that you will continue to have this market that market that made you grow 17 percent during a world crisis and maybe even faster when the world rebounds, we will continue to work aggressively to ensure that our growth that has been generating jobs and revenue to invest in new infrastructure and critical social programs will be sustained.

We will continue our Economic Resiliency Plan and its important components like the Conditional Cash Transfers of the poorest of the poor. This is the allowance we give to the identified 700,000 and now one million poorest families in the country. We give them a very modest allowance on the condition that they send their children to school and they go to regular public health services. Ang tawag na Pantawid Pamilya para makatawid sila para maging mas matatag ang kanilang pamumuhay and then they will begin to think of microfinance, microbusiness and begin to be able to hopefully afford their own modest housing coming from your industry.

Through the support of all levels of government, provincial governments for instance like Oca Moreno, and the hard work of our people, including your industry, we will not be deterred in our effort to maintain growth. We will intensify our investment in infrastructure. Because you're building houses you need infrastructure to go to the houses that you will build.

We will continue our Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program so that the people can continue to pay their installments and the credit system will continue to support your industry. In fact Secretary Peter Favila is meeting now in a Monetary Board Meeting, he represents the national government, and they will be discussing about how to provide, how to make credit easier. For one thing, they will maintain their interest rates so that your industry will continue to have this important facility. GSIS, SSS and Pag-IBIG have been instructed to give deferral of the repayment of their loans because that deferral increases their take home pay and therefore they can continue therefore to continue with whatever installments they need from you or to have additional new loans to repair their homes or to build new ones.

We will continue to work with you to ensure our public-private sector partnership. I think you know more than I, and Vice President will elaborate tomorrow I'm sure that HUDCC has dropped interest rates, it has increased the coverage of socialized housing loans and the maximum loanable amount. And as I said earlier, the Bangko Sentral even if during a calamity normally it would want to raise rates to avoid an inflationary pressure will be keeping the key policy rates unchanged.

So, because we are doing a public-private sector partnership as President Cura said even if we're very busy in Luzon on things to address the natural calamity. I'm here because CREBA is an important partner in our public-private sector partnerships. And I count on CREBA to continue to be the government's efficient shelter partner because that is the way by which we can move towards the first world in 20 years.

Once again to all of you, congratulations on your terrific growth during this global economic crisis and may you have more progress yet in the year to come.

Maraming salamat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134201/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26441&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 52nd anniversary of the Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines (RBAP) on the Base of the Pyramid

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 52nd anniversary of the Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines (RBAP) on the Base of the Pyramid

[Delivered at the Grand Plaza Ballroom, Sofitel Philippine Plaza Hotel, Pasay City, October 8, 2009]

Thank you Secretary Favila for your introduction.

Thank you also President Andaya and the other officers of the Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines for inviting me to be here with you today. I'd like to greet also President of PDIC, President Nograles — I hope you don't have too many clients from the rural banking system — and Gilda Pico, President of the Land Bank, I hope you have many, many clients from the rural banking system. All other officers and members of the Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines, guests, ladies and gentlemen, thank you.

First of all, Happy Anniversary to all of you!

And second, as President Andaya said, mentioned, congratulations for helping the Philippines to be number three in having the best microfinance system in the world and number one in Asia. And of course through you I thank the whole banking sector for your efforts to make your services available to your clients even at the height of typhoons "Ondoy" and "Pepeng."

And I thank your association for your donation, I believe especially to the flood victims of Rizal, which is the worst hit province of all in this past typhoon Ondoy. I have also my own pride in helping to strengthen the rural banking system to what it is today, because when I was a senator, I was the principal author of the law that help to rehabilitate and strengthen the rural banking system of the Philippines.

And now here we are in what we hope is the tail end of a global economic crisis; also in what we hope is the tail end of a once in a lifetime calamity. And with your support, we will I continue to work aggressively to ensure that our economic growth that has been generating jobs and revenue to invest in new infrastructure and critical social programs will be sustained. With your support we will continue our Economic Resiliency Plan and its important components like the Conditional Cash Transfers to the poorest of the poor. We hope that this poorest of the poor to whom we give allowances as long as they send their children to school and avail of rural health services will soon graduate from extreme poverty.

Kaya ang tawag Pantawid Pamilya, sana makatawid sila para sa umabot sa kalagayan na pag-iisipan nila na magnegosyo at humiram sa mga rural banks. And here in this response to the calamity, through the support of all levels of government and the hard work of our people, both you and your clients, we will not be deterred in our effort to maintain growth. We will intensify our investment in infrastructure, especially shovel-ready repair and rehabilitation.

Right now, three things need to be done: garbage collection, draining of flooded areas, and cash for work for the thousands displaced by Ondoy and Pepeng, initially in helping clean and repair the roads. And for this purpose, we will continue our Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program.

Going into the more medium-term, but we have to begin now — in fact, we started yesterday — we do not want to return the evacuees who came from the endangered areas. They have been living in the creeksides, riversides, lakeshores for decades now. And therefore, it's been a Herculean job for the local governments to convince them to stay out of those or get out of those endangered areas. But now that many of them did this is the opportunity to make sure they don't return. But the way to do that is to make sure that they have relocation sites. And that is what we have been doing. We'll be having a meeting again of the NDCC on Tuesday, and we will be having a report on this. But in the meantime, yesterday, the first batch of evacuees who will now be relocatees, and these are evacuees from Marikina, move to Sta. Rosa. And I will be visiting them tomorrow to make sure that they are well on their way to a new life. And we are continuing to do this and this is in fact the most important step that we have to take after the clean up and the draining.

But we work with you the private sector in the meantime because they need to have a new life to ensure that there is capital for our micro and SMEs to keep operating or even expand, and also to ensure public-private sector partnerships. And to make it easier for you to participate in rebuilding broken lives but also in continuing to build up the lives that were not broken.

In this regard, the Bangko Sentral, where Peter Favila is a member of the Board representing the national government, the Bangko Sentral has decided to keep the key policy rates unchanged rather than raising them to avert an inflationary pressure.

And as providers of banking services to the base of the economic pyramid, which is your theme, you play a key role as the primary conduit of funds to micro and small businesses and small farmers. And this, indeed, is an important component of the resiliency that we have been able to show during this global economic crisis.

Because during this crisis, although all economies have felt the pain of the global recession, that pain has not been evenly distributed. For instance in Asia, the economies that have been performing best and that are still enjoying positive growth and not negative are those emerging markets where consumption is a high proportion of GDP rather than exports. The Philippines has domestic private consumption 70% of GDP, Indonesia and Vietnam 65%, so with Sri Lanka, Bangladesh 75% even though it's very poor. But because of the strong domestic consumption of these countries with large population they had been keeping the economies afloat and these economies are outperforming the trade-dependent economies. And how can we sustain this private consumption, it is because of institutions like the Rural Banks that cater to the small and the very small.

So as our country comes to rely more heavily on the local market, because we have seen that the international market is really just too unstable and volatile. Your role as a major engine of local finance activity becomes more important. You help to keep business humming in the base and by doing so you prove once again that commercial viability and the social necessity of our rural banks.

Well, if you and we in government together were able to bring about a system that is third best in the world and best in Asia in microfinance, it is because we have both believed you and we in government in microentrepreneurship. We have campaigned actively for more Filipinos to become entrepreneurs. We have put great emphasis on micro enterprises which comprise maybe 90% of our total economic activity. In the last eight years, through the government, through the Land Bank mostly, about a P150 billion — is that right, Gilda? — has been unleashed for microcredit. Much of this amount, thought it came from Land Bank, the Land Bank does not retail. So, it has reached micro entrepreneurs in the countryside through cooperatives, accredited NGOs, and of course, the accredited rural banks.

Peter Favila sent me a text message on my way here — couldn't put it in my speech anymore — that the private banking sector, mostly rural banks, has provided... has an outstanding loan portfolio now for microfinance of six billion pesos to 900,000 clients with over 200 banks involved. And so I thank you all for taking care of them because your microclients are the same microenterprises that are helping enable the economies of our towns to remain active despite the global slump.

The report of the Philippines being number three in the world and number one in Asia in microfinance was also reported not only by the IFC but it was several multilateral financial institutions and announced by The Economist Intelligence Units. And may I add another quotation from The Economist Intelligence Unit which said: "Where the Philippines differs from its neighbors, and indeed from most crisis-hit economies, is that the crisis has generated less pronounced economic ups and downs.” Certainly, we had no economic ups and downs in the last eight years. We only had uninterrupted growth. I remember when I went to Washington with Secretary Favila and I met some senators who had been friends of U.S. senators who have been friends of the Philippines since the 1980s, one of them said, “The problem with the Philippines is you have your cycles, your ups and downs every...” “No,” I said, “Mr. Senator, not anymore, not since 2001. We have not had a boom and bust cycle anymore. It’s been boom, boom, boom and even during the crisis though our growth slowed down, it’s still positive.” And therefore that is one of the big differences, and private consumption and rural banks are a very important ingredient in that sustained growth. So, thank you very much to all of you.

And to continue what The Economist said, “The economy has not contracted at all during the current global crisis.”

How true this is, indeed. We have achieved much in the areas of infrastructure investment, job creation, macroeconomic stability and improvements in our overall business environment that has helped us through the worst of the global economic crisis. The result is the Philippine economy that is stronger and more able to withstand shocks such as those that the global financial crisis is throwing at us. Not only have we sustained positive economic growth throughout the global recession, but we even exceeded expectations for the second quarter.

Moreover, financial reforms including the bill that I authored which became law now since I’m a senator and later on through the Central Bank of the Philippines, financial reforms have created the solid fundamentals that underpin our banking sector today reinforced by your conservative banking practices.

Your values have significantly sheltered our country’s finances. And that is why you are among those who helped that in recognition of this stability, Moody’s Investors Service upgraded the Philippines credit rating last July.

Because of the bitter medicine of reform that we took early on and the economic resilience that it has in turn created, today indeed as I said earlier where a stronger, more robust nation. And we are poised to ride the wave of the coming global rebound because the signs are there for a global rebound. Let’s hope it is maintained. And therefore as the rebound comes because we are fundamentally strong. We’ve survived the crisis. The rural banks have an opportunity to capture the growth prospects that will come with the global recovery, especially for the base of the pyramid.

Therefore, we look to our rural bankers to continue to play an active role in promoting growth in the countryside. And I know you will not shirk from this role, because as a sector while some banks have failed as a sector, you have never yet failed our people.

So, side by side, let us continue to beat the odds so that with strong microfinance with a strong base of the pyramid, the rural banking system will be one of the institutions that will propel our country to the edge of the first world in 20 years when you turn 70 years old as an association.

To all of you, Congratulations and Happy 52nd Anniversary!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo’s speech during the 52nd anniversary of the Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines (RBAP) on the Base of the Pyramid. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134209/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26440&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Mid-Year Philippine Economic Briefing

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the Mid-Year Philippine Economic Briefing

[Delivered at the Rizal Ballroom, Shangri-La Hotel, Makati City, October 14, 2009]

Thank you Secretary Teves for your introduction.

Excellencies of the Diplomatic Corps, Cabinet members, Economic managers, Business leaders, ladies and gentlemen.

I start off by reading you a quote from The Economist Intelligence Unit: “Where the Philippines differs from its neighbors and indeed from most crisis-hit economies is that the crisis has generated less pronounced economic ups and downs, the economy has not contracted at all in year on year terms during the current global crisis.” How true this is indeed. And this is a story that many of you know but many outside don’t even know. In fact, when I made a visit to one of the countryside I’ve been to, one of the leaders there said, “you know, the problem with the Philippines is that you always have a boom and bust cycle.” And I said, not in the last eight years. We have had uninterrupted quarter growth every quarter and that is one of the important things we have achieved and which has enabled us to be resilient during the food global and now climate change crisis.

We have achieved much in the areas of infrastructure investment, job creation and macroeconomic stability that have helped us to the worst of these crisis. As I said earlier, first there was a global food crisis, then a global financial and economic crisis, and now we have a climate change crisis. But the result of our reforms is a Philippine economy that is stronger and more able to withstand shocks such as those that the global crisis, the three global crisis have been throwing at us. And our economic managers will be the ones to give the figures not me. But I can say in summary that we have sustained positive economic growth throughout the global recession and even exceeded expectations for the second quarter.

We have had important financial and fiscal reforms. The financial reforms have created solid fundamentals that underpin our banking sector today. They reinforce the conservative banking practices. These values have significantly sheltered our country’s finances. In recognition of this stability, Moody’s Investor Service upgraded the Philippine credit rating last July, and even the damage from the two recent typhoons that hit Manila and most of Luzon was “deemed manageable” so that rating and multilateral agencies maintained their outlook for positive economic growth this year. And let me give my appreciation to the banking sector. Aside from the fact that their innate conservatism together with our financial and Central Bank reforms have given us a sound banking system to the global financial crisis in the Economic Resiliency Program which we discussed in the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry Conference last year.

Where we asked the private sector to contribute — or not that we asked the private sector — the private sector committed to contribute 50 billion pesos to a 100 billion-peso investment fund, per the report of Secretary Favila to me, the private sector has complied with its 50 billion pesos, especially in financing the power investments. Thank you very much for that.

Aside from the financial reforms you’re of course familiar with the fiscal reforms, the bitter medicine of fiscal reform that we took years ago. Also you are familiar with the economic resilience that it has created so that as I said today, we have a stronger more robust nation. And therefore now, we are poised to ride the wave of the impending global economic rebound and to offer investors an opportunity to capture the growth prospects that come with that rebound.

For as we know there are already early signs or green sprouts that the long awaited global rebound is on the horizon. The Asian Development Bank has reported signs of return of investor risk appetite supported by such indicators as the Morgan Stanley Capital International Index showing a rise from its lowest level last November indicating that investor appetite for Asian equities is rebounding.

The Philippine Stock Exchange has risen by double digit is an understatement, and I'm glad to see that we are quite close now to the levels that we had before the financial crisis.

Meanwhile, foreign direct investment coming into the Philippines have also posted a double digit increase. The Business Expectation Survey carried out by our Central Bank shows that business sentiment continued to improve in the third quarter. The overall confidence index is back to positive territory compared to the third quarter of last year.

We will continue to work aggressively to ensure that the growth that has been generating jobs and revenue to invest in new infrastructure and critical social programs will be sustained. We will continue with our Economic Resiliency Program and its key components not just that fund for infrastructure, public sector fund but also Conditional Cash Transfers, the Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program and the bigger faster absorption of the budget by our agencies. Through government support at all levels and the hard work of our people, we will not be deterred in our effort to maintain growth. We will intensify our investment in infrastructure, especially post-calamity reconstruction.

I think you have seen in the news that I have just created a Special National Public-Private Reconstruction Commission whose task shall be: 1. To undertake a study of the causes, costs and actions to be taken in the wake of typhoons "Ondoy," "Pepeng" but not only those two, also last year's typhoon "Frank" from which we have not fully recovered; 2. Undertake the rehabilitation plan for wrecked infrastructure and other priorities; 3. Raise funds, especially grants to fund reconstruction; 4. Prioritize programs; 5. Oversee implementation; 6. Serve as a clearing house for international assistance which the donors themselves implement using the cluster approach. This has been used, for instance, in the reconstruction of typhoon "Reming" and we can do the same template for these three typhoons, and; 7. Coordinate an international pledging session with the World Bank and the United Nations I'm sure you also read that the Commission shall be headed by a leading businessman with the Department of Finance and a leader of the church as cochair. The government members of the Reconstruction Commission will be the user agencies, need agencies or implementing agencies. For instance, DSWD, HUDCC and the Office of Civil Defense.

But we will also be harnessing private sector, business leaders, NGO leaders both domestic and international. Harnessing domestic private initiatives into the governments overall reconstruction efforts — including business groups, the institutional church and civil society organizations — makes for good policy and better mobilization of external and incremental resources. It also allows us to be able to pick the brains or tap technical expertise and networks of the private sector and NGO leaders.

Depending on the recommendation of the special commission, we may issue reconstruction bonds. I've already discussed this with Peter Favila who supervises the NDC which seems to be the favorite recommendee of economic managers and business leaders as far as being an issuer of bonds is concerned whether peso or dollar, to which multilaterals such as the World Bank and the ADB may subscribe to.

Why the NDC? Why a government corporation? Because of the impact of the global crisis on the fiscal capacity of the national government of the Philippines. But even then, we'd rather that the primary response of our administration to the enormous calamities which climate change is bringing to our vulnerable country cannot just be another borrowing program. We don't want to let grant opportunities go to waste. Although lesser in size than loans, they remain substantial.

And even if we resort to bonds in bringing in exogenous resources, we will go beyond a mere borrowing program to provide the development framework that is required by ODA programs.

In sum, we will be pushing, first, for more grants or non-repayable inflows. The underlying doctrine is that: the Philippines is a victim of climate change, not a culprit. We are not a climate maker but we certainly are a climate taker. In fact, we can be proud of what we have been doing against climate change, to mitigate climate change. In our initiatives and legislation as well as in expenditure programs for environmental protection such as clean water, solid waste and clean air. We also can be proud of what we are doing on poverty reduction such as the Pantawid Pamilya conditional cash transfer program. And on disaster risk reduction such as the Climate Bill I am scheduled to sign on the 30th of this month and also the Disaster Risk Reduction Bill which has passed the Senate and which I hope the House will pass soon.

We will be having a LEDAC Meeting on Thursday so we can discuss legislative response to our calamities. As I said, we are a climate taker not a climate maker. We are not a culprit in climate change contributing only less than one percent to global warming. We are a victim. Victims are compensated, not penalized with high interest rates or conditionalities. And that is why we are very grateful to the United Nations for the flash appeal that they have launched to mobilize grants.

Second to grants, we will push for concessional loans. For instance, JICA's zero interest or 25 bases points yen loan package. But here, we do not forget that we can only spend from loans if there is a budget provided for loan proceeds, and not just the local counterpart. If we have a trillion peso budget, for instance, and we have maybe 800 billion pesos in taxes, the 200 will have to come from loans but they have to be part of the budget. Not just the local counterpart including the loan proceeds.

For our local counterpart, we count on Congress for a joint resolution authorizing us to avail of the so-called unprogrammed provision. I believe it has passed the committee level, Nonoy? and is up for plenary discussion.

So after in importance or in priority after grants and then concessional loans. Third, commercial borrowings either through bonds — the one that the business community and economic managers whom I'm expecting Peter to issue — or other instruments should be the last financing option. As I said, because borrowing with high interest rates or whatever the markets will give is the less preferred to grants and concessional loans!

I mentioned that one of the mandates of the new commission is to organize an international pledging session. And even before I organized the commission, actually, Gary Teves was already preparing for the annual World Bank led Philippine Development Forum coordinated by the Department of Finance. So many organizations that would be tapped or sounded off will be included. But I have asked Secretary Teves to work with the new reconstruction commission to make it a public-private sector partnership rather than DOF led and to coordinate a special exercise with a higher international profile.

This special pledging session would tap into the huge underlying global constituency for climate change adaptation. It would capitalize on the ongoing discussions and negotiations leading to Copenhagen. In fact, the Philippine case is being cited as proof for the need for adaptation financing. And that is why we should use the umbrella not only of the World Bank but also of the UN framework.

As we prepare to capture the opportunities presented by the cause of climate change adaptation, however, we must not lose sight of our longer-term economic reforms and the very real pain many of our poor have sustained not only from the typhoons but also as a result of the global downturn. While we may finally be emerging from the global economic crisis, much remains to be done not only to reconstruct but to ensure that the Philippines remains or sustains its path to long-term economic prosperity and that the Philippines builds a strong middle-class.

On the part of economic management, we want to reduce the debt-to-GDP ratio, which is why we would rather have grants than loans, and we would rather have a government agency issuing bonds than the national government itself. We want to reduce the debt-to-GDP ratio so we can stop wasting our resources on debt service, and so that we can maintain higher spending for infrastructure and human capital as we have done before and during the global food, economic and now climate change crisis.

Having the ability to invest, which we will be able to gain because our tax reforms, is a gift that we must not squander. Having money to provide a safety net for our poor, to invest in our children's future, and to lay the groundwork for long-term prosperity must be sustained in the years to come.

We must do this so that we will continue down the course we charted before the global crisis hit. That is the course that generated not only what I mentioned: uninterrupted economic growth for over 30 quarters but also the fastest growth in 30 years; growth that created 8 million jobs; and the highest level of revenues in decades. That is also the course that has enabled us to provide one of the world's most competitive locations for business process outsourcing, an industry that today employs 400,000 workers compared to only 4,000 in 2001. Many cite our BPO industry as a symbol that we have been able to move to a higher level in our economic development.

That is also the course that has enabled us to provide some of the most skilled and qualified workers in the world and one of the best values for investment among emerging markets. This Administration has delivered over the last eight years. And I am hopeful that our economic progress will be sustained, and that the Philippines will continue to be one of the havens of stability among the emerging markets of the world.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Mid-Year Philippine Economic Briefing. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134116/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26485&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Joint Membership Meeting of the Philippine Garments and Textile Industry Associations

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Joint Membership Meeting of the Philippine Garments and Textile Industry Associations

[Delivered at the Davao Room, Sofitel, Philippine Plaza, Pasay City, October 14, 2009]

Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Favila for your kind introduction.

Thank you also to the leaders of the garment and textile industry for inviting me to be with you today although we all know that I wanted to be invited by you. So thank you for accommodating my desire. Our other members of the Philippine government, ladies and gentlemen.

Well, why did I want to have the chance to be with you? Because I think you all know that the welfare of the garments industry is very special to me. I remember being appointed by Secretary Concepcion without much notice that I was going to be the new head of GTEB. And I was quaking in my shoes because there was this great woman named Siony Kalalo who had been the head of GTEB and who brought it to great heights and so I attempted to replicate her feats and I'm glad that during my term we were able to reach that benchmark of one billion dollars and the industry became the largest net dollar earner for the country.

But today, I'm seeing Mr. Tan of Luen Thai, and I was thinking that the industry has gone to so many changes. Because in the past if I would meet the leaders of the garments and textile industry I would see... when we see CONGEP, we will talk about novelty and all those other companies that were doing simple baby things because of our quota and because they were simple to do and the Philippines had plenty of labor.

But things changed very much after my term. For one thing, China received the Most-favored-nation status from the United States. And I heard about that news when I was a senator and I said, "Oh! there goes our market for baby wear." And sure enough soon we started to see them go away because we lost much of the low-skills, low-end garments market to China.

We had some reprieve from a total collapse because we still had, we could still rely heavily on quotas from our trading partners, even as our garments companies were losing their upstream support from a declining textile industry. Then the quota system ended. So we had to look for ways to enable the industry to survive. And why have you survived? We found those ways in the innate artistry of the Filipino, the natural ingenuity and craftsmanship, the sense of style and color that appeals to the upper end of the market.

These advantages allowed us to move upmarket, create new niches, and compete based on better quality rather than cheaper price. While we may have lost ground in the mass market, Filipino designers and Filipino manufacturers and even Philippine manufacturing of foreign names are making a name for themselves on the world stage with the good designs and the finely-worked garments. And that is your niche today — no longer the low-skilled, low-priced garments but rather the higher-skilled, better-priced and better quality garments.

Of course, when you go shopping abroad you see Josie Natori with her “underwear as outerwear” designs embroidered by Filipino artisans. But that’s the name and there are many others with foreign names but with great designs all made in the Philippines.

So, by late last year, the garments and textile industry had recovered again to become this time the country’s second largest net dollar earner. And I’m hearing about your targets of 3 to 4 billion dollars — what a way to move forward from those dark days of China’s MFN status, entering to MFN and the end of the quota system.

I wanted this meeting since my last trip to the U.S. because I wanted to report to you what we have done in the last two trips. The trip that I could not attend was supposed to be the third trip working for our garments industry. Our trips and our meetings with the textile industry and the leaders gave us a new ray of hope for our garments industry. And I was very happy that I was meeting with leaders of the industry and the lobbyists of their industry who used to be dealing with us also when I was in GTEB.

So, as I see old friends when I’m here, I saw old friends again working for the same cause in the United States. And that is as you know the filing in the U.S. Congress of House Bill 3039 otherwise known as the “Save Our Industries Act of 2009” or the “SAVE Act.” And in our last two trips to the U.S. we devoted much time and effort to push for this bill and what should have been my last trip we were going to continue with that as described by our gentleman here, by Lawrence. It was a very difficult decision for me to have to forego the trip to New York because it was a very important choice I had to make between making the trip and going to Saudi Arabia to see the King of Saudi Arabia about something that is also of great importance and that is our peace process.

Actually, I tried to negotiate to be able to make both events but the date with the King of Saudi Arabia was non-negotiable. And I felt that we would be very well-represented with your friends in the U.S. Textile Industry and your own leadership of the garments industry, and I think we did not lose any ground by my not being there.

You know what we’re talking about, but you know the media joins me all the time, so for those who are wondering what we’re talking about, this is a bill that was supposed to save the U.S. textile industry but it’s a win-win solution. And in the two trips I made before the last one that I wasn’t able to make, I was able to bring this up to the various congressmen, to the various senators, to the Speaker Nancy Pelosi, to Secretary of State Hillary Clinton because they’re all concerned about the recession in the U.S. However, they’re also concerned that in the longer run if they become very protectionist, it will become a “beggar thy neighbor” situation in the world. So I would point out this bill as an example of a win-win solution. And as I said for those who are not really familiar, the idea here is that the United States manufacturers will have a program to import garments sewn in countries like the Philippines but with fabrics coming from the United States and yarn coming from the United States.

As I said our textile industry is really no longer around even during my time it was already in it’s death rows, and so a lot of our products were using textiles from Japan, Taiwan, other parts of Asia and then being shipped to the U.S. with Philippine labors. But in this particular case now, we are encouraging through this bill there will be an encouragement of the Philippines using U.S. textiles to expand its industries. So what will happen here is that if a garment is made from U.S. made fisheries fabrics and yarns and cut and assembled in the Philippines it can enter the United States duty free. When I explained this to the leaders of Congress and the Executive they found that to be a very good combination. Of course, if it is made of U.S. fan or yarn formed in the Philippines, it can still enter the United States at a discounted duty.

And this covers cotton and manmade fiber knit shirts, trousers, underwear, swimwear, they are garments that our people can easily and readily design and make. So if this new bill is passed into law it will not only help the U.S. textile industry, because after all that’s what congressmen and senators in the U.S. are there for to protect their industry, but it will also be a boon to Philippine garment producers and exporters, and it will create new jobs, it will showcase Filipino talent to a wider public, it will differentiate further our exports from the cheap, mass-produced clothes being turned out by other countries in the region.

I remember that I met in one of the two previous trips that I went to — oh, yes the last one — because in the second to the last trip I made that was the day that Senator Inouye sponsored the Veterans Bill Provision in the Fiscal Stimulus Package. And in my next trip, I went back to Congress to thank the senators and the congressmen who sponsored and worked very hard to pass at last a veterans provision in the Fiscal Stimulus Package.

And I told them, thank you for that and now we have something else to ask you. And what I asked them was for the passage of this bill. So we are lobbying for the early passage of this bill with the same fervor with which we lobbied for the Filipino World War II veterans' benefits. And just as the U.S. was finally receptive to the plight of Filipino veterans of World War II, we also hope it will be sympathetic to the needs of Philippine garment makers who have supplied the U.S. market for so many years because it is a formula that will also help the U.S. textile manufacturers.

So my message for you today is: we are here and I'm happy we are altogether working for this. And I hope that we will continue to work hard together for the speedy reapproval of the Save Act by Congress, by the U.S. Congress. Just as the Filipino-American community and the Filipino veterans at that time worked very hard with the Philippine government for the veterans' benefits. Now let your industry and our government and our friends in the U.S. textile industry pour all of our dedication and talent into that common and noble effort.

So, I thank you all for helping many legislators see the light. Let's continue to work until that bill is passed into law.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Joint Membership Meeting of the Philippine Garments and Textile Industry Associations. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134128/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26494&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the National Nutrition and Gawad Saka Awarding Ceremonies

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the National Nutrition and Gawad Saka Awarding Ceremonies

[Delivered at the Reception Hall, PICC, Pasay City, October 15, 2009]

Thank you very much maraming salamat Secretary Pingkoy Duque, Chairman ng National Nutrition Council at host nitong ating gawain ngayon. I'd like also to greet the members of the Diplomatic Corps and congratulate Secretary Artee Yap, also the officials of the National Nutrition Council and the agriculture department as well as the Landbank of the Philippines; our recipients of the different awards congratulations sa inyong lahat! Mainit na pagbati sa mga tumanggap ng Gawad Saka at Nutrition awards.

Hiniling ko na makasama itong dalawang pangyayari ang gawad saka at nutrition awards dahil sila ay kapwa importante para sa pagkain ng ating bayan.

At sa pamamagitan ng mga parangal na binibigay ngayon, ipinapakita na maraming mahuhusay na Pilipinong opisyal, volunteer, magsasaka, nutrition worker na dapat tularan sa kanilang kahandaang tumulong upang maiwasan natin ang gutom at mapalakas ang ating laban sa kahirapan.

At isa pa yung kaninang gagawain sana pero iba yung nasa TV napakaimportante baka nanunuod kayo ng video iba naman ang ginagawa dito ngayon ay gagawain ko na rin. Hiningi kong isama sa ating selebrasyon ang isa pang pangatlong pangyayari—the P150 billionth na pautang ng Land Bank of the Philippines sa ating mga magsasaka at mangingisda sa loob ng ating administrasyon. So, now I would like to ask the Land Bank and to call on our recipient of the 150 billionth peso loaned out during our administration. So ito ay 50 million pesos para sa Cooperative Rural Bank of Bulacan. You are receiving the 150 billion peso of loans from the Land Bank during our administration, congratulations!

Tapos nun itong 50 million na pinahiram natin sa Cooperative Rural Bank ng Bulacan ay ipapahiram naman sa ating mga magsasakang humihiram sa Rural Bank eto na ang tseke sa kanila. So congratulations sa Land Bank congratulations sa Cooperative Rural Bank of Bulacan at congratulations sa mga magsasakang tumanggap ng lending! 150 billion pesos ganun na karami ang naitulong ng Land Bank, sa ating adminstrasyon at ako ay nasisiyahan na ganito kalaki ang naitutulong ng Land Bank dahil and Land Bank ay parang kapatid ko dahil sa inilka sa panahon ng aking ama, ang dating Pangulong Diosdado Macapagal, na siya ang ama ng land reform.

My father, President Diosdado Macapagal, wrote in his memoirs his conviction that the basis for achieving equitable prosperity is: to release the impoverished tenant farmers from bondage. He fought an uphill battle against several landlords to push his land reform programs, walong special sessions ang ginawa niya dahil hindi maipasa pasa yung programa tinitigil.. pumasa sa Congress, tinitigil ng mga landlords doon sa senado, but after eight special sessions, nakuha rin niya yung Republic Act 3844 or the Agricultural Land Reform Code and that included the creation of the Land Bank, the primary conduit of agricultural loans for our farmer sector.

Matagal na yung land reform 1964, 1963 siguro nakalilimutan na nain yung kalagayan ng mga magsasaka bago nagkaron ng land reform. Bago nagkaroon ng reporma sa lupa, ang umiiral na sistema ay share tenancy. Yung mag magsasaka ang tawag ay kasama— they share may kasama yung landlord sa kanilang ani. Malaki ang share ang landlord sa kanilang ani may porsyento malaking porsyento kaya tawag sa kanila kasama. At yung landlord din ang pinanggagagalingan ng pautang na mataas ang interes, tapos babayaran pagdating ng ani kaya pagdating ng ani halos wala nang naiwan sa magsasaka except for his own subsistence. Kaya walang insentibo o kakayahan ang kasama na mamuhunan upang tumaas ang kaniyang produktibidad.

Ngunit sa Republic Act 3844, tinanggal ang share tenancy. Sa ganoon, nagkaroon ng dalwang programa yung isa— bilhin ng pamahalaan ang sakahan para ibenta sa magsasaka ng mga magaang mga terms and conditions o kaya yung share tenancy magiging lease tenancy babayad na lang ng fixed rent para lahat ng kita ay doon sa magsasakamismo, hindi magsheshare bawat tumaas ng produktibidad me share parati yung landlord. At para hindi na kailangan parating sa landlord umaasa ng pahiram doon nga tinayo ang Land Bank para mapahiram sa ating mga magsasaka.

The ultimate goal of land reform is to fight poverty. By providing the incentive and the means for the farmers to be more productive, kaya malaki rin ang kanyang papel sa food security at hunger mitigation na importanteng ipinagdidiriwang natin dito. Yung mga nabigyan ng premyo dahil yun ang pangunahing trabaho ngayon special task ng Nutrition Council labanan ang kahirapan sa pamamagitan ng labanan ang pagkagutom.

And as I have said since two years ago when we gave this task to the Nutrition Council we approached the problem of hunger and food security from two sides— demand and supply.

On the supply side nga, malaki yung papel ng mga magsasaka at saka yung land reform— increase the production of food; bawasan ang wastage at spoilage; kagaya nung binanggit ni Artee Yap sa kanyang diskurso meron tayong mag binigyan ng premyo yung barangay bagsakan mga ganung bagay that's to provide effective delivery systems for farm products to the consumers, pati yung RORO yung ating mayor ng Roxas ay nandito at malaki ang inangat ng ekonomiya ng Roxas dahil sa ating RORO. At saka yung mga driers ... para hindi nilalagay sa kalsada yung drying at yun ang isang malaking programa na ginagawa ni Artee ngayon bilang rehabilitation ng ating mga magsasaka yung driers dahil maraming nabasa nga mga produkto.

On the demand side, we aim to increase the ability to buy food by increasing incomes; by educating our people on proper nutrition, kaya trabaho ng Nutrition Council yun nuon pa including I want to remind Bernie information on breastfeeding; because up to six months breastfeeding is the best kind of nutrition, and including managing our population through natural family planning.

Sa demand side at sa supply side, importante ang magsasaka nasa kamay ng magsasaka na iangat ang produksyon at kung ang magsasaka ay maganda ang kanyang kita siya rin ay consumer magkaron ng mas pagkakataon na makabili ng mga kakanin. Kasi hindi parating pareho yun parati nating pinag aaralan yung ten poorest provinces and ten most food poor provinces. Meron halimbawa Kalinga hindi siya mahirap hindi bahagi ng ten poorest provinces tapos siya pa ring isa sa mga exporters ng rice sa ibang probinsya pero kasama sa ten most food poor provinces. Hindi ko maintindihan bakit kasi yung iabng pagkain ang kulang doon hindi yung bigas so malaki talaga ang farmer mismo ay consumer din at dapat magkaron ng income sa kanyang kamay para mabili niya yung hindi lamang yung kanyang sariling produkto kungid yung iabng produktong kailangan niya para makakain siya.

Ang land reform ay importante sa produktibidad, and during our administration, I am very gratified that we have distributed almost a million hectares of privately owned land under the comprehensive agrarian reform program, over 800,000 hectares of public land for agricultural use, and almost 700,000 hectares of ancestral domain land. All in all 2.5 million hectares more than any other administration. So We have distributed much more land with our record of over 2.5 million hectares of private, public and ancestral domain lands for agriculture. At talagang nalampasan na natin yung ating target dahil yung isang sinabi ko sa SONA we will distribute a 100,000 hectares of land reform per year walong taon lang tayo nandito dapat 800,000 hectares yun nakaabot na ng 2.5 million so that is a SONA commitment that is over complied with.

Ang gusto natin narinig ko kanina the term agribusiness we want to turn our farmers into agribusinessmen. Kaya napakaimportante ang Land Bank pero napakaimportante rin yung panukalang batas na sana magamit ang agricultural land para sa collateral para sa pautang. Because that way our farmers can join the formal credit mainstream and not rely on loan shark or long for the days when they still had to count on their landlords even if they have to harvest to hock their harvest for them.

Naalala ko kasi nandito yung ating mga kaibigan sa Bacolod Talisay yung arian ng pamilya ng aking asawa niland reform natin maaga pa sa ating administrasyon a couple of years ago sa isang pagbisita ko sa Bacolod nakita ko sila di akala ko ang saya saya na nila nadistribute na yung lupa sa kanila ... ay hindi kasi ang problema nga nila wala na wala na kami wala nang magpapahiram at hindi naman sila makahiram sa bangko dahil hindi naman magagamit ang kanilang lupa sa collateral. So you see that is very important ... a new land reform we must allow land to be used as collateral.

This is part of our efforts in poverty reduction and also in hunger mitigation and I am very happy that these efforts are producing results. Kanina nung pumasok ako yung ating mga magagandang binibini ng Nutrition Council na maganda ang kanilang kimona at patadyong ay binati ako at nalaman ko na dito sa nakaraang bagyo nabaha ang Nutrition Council hanggang sa bewang sabi ko, I'm sorry to hear about that pero congratulations pa rin kasi kahit na nababaha kayo nababa niyo yung incidents of hunger from 20 percent three months ago to 17.5% today kaya congratulations sa inyo!

But speaking of the typhoons napag usapan na ni Artee given the destruction the two recent typhoons in the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle, na marami sa atin nakatanggap ng premyo belong to the agribusiness North Quadrangle nandyan si governor ng Cagayan, nandyan si governor ng Quirino, nandyan si Governor ng Ilocos Sur they are all producing our food. So we have to guard against food shortage and an increase in hunger. Kaya malaking bagay yun nasusubaybayan na naman ng Nutrition Council yung supply side thru the Department of Agriculture para tiyakin na meron kaagad na produksyon kasi nga maraming nasayang pero magtatanim muli sa Nobyembre di ba? Kaya sabi ko kay Artee Yap tiyakin mo na bago All Saint's Day yung seeds na kailangan paramagtanim muli ay nasa kamay na ng ating magsasaka.

Sabi ni Artee, bastat hindi nabaha ang lugar magmumudmud na kami ng mga seeds. So uunahin yung mga hindi nabaha kasi syempre kung baha pa eh bakit magbibigay ka ng seeds sayang lang hindi pa magagamit so yun ang gagawing timing yun ang gagawing sequence ni Artee yung mas nawalaan ng baha yun ang uunahin na bibigyan ng tulong for seeds.

And I hope that with your support our outstanding farmers we will continue with our reduction in hunger. And I hope that with our outstanding nutrition workers and nutrition government officials we will be able to continue to make sure that on the demand side your constituents will know how to spend their hard earned money to buy the right products for their food and the good of their family.

So I am very happy about the awardees and their accomplishments we thank the hardwork of many of our government agencies and officials. We thank the hardwork of the many selfless individuals like today's awardees who work hard—you are working hard not for yourselves but for others. You are working to give food to the people of the Philippines.

My late father said: unless the government acted decisively and speedily this is with regard to land reform— the goal of land for the landless would not become a reality.

We continue with our reforms, especially now that we pass thru a global crisis in 2008, a global economic crisis in between 2007 a global food crisis, 2009 a global climate change crisis. We must become more decisive and daring because we know that the world economy will recover and we hope it will be soon. We must be daring because we know that climate does not assure as of food supply that is sufficient every year. And we must be daring we know because as far as climate and weather is concerned, uncertainty is the rule and no longer the season that we can always rely on.

So we must combine the political will of the citizenry and the government and work on our goals together. Only then can we hope to realize our bigger goals of land for the landless, food security, and emancipation from poverty. At yung mga nakatanggap ng mga parangal itong araw na ito nagpapatunay kayo na kaya ng Pilipino magkaisa sa kanyang pamayanan para tiyakin na sapat ang pagkain at umangat ang kita ng ating mga magsasaka at lahat ng mamamayan. Congratulations to all of you!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the National Nutrition and Gawad Saka Awarding Ceremonies. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134111/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26503&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 58th “Handurawan” Charter Day Anniversary of Moises Padilla Municipality

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 58th “Handurawan” Charter Day Anniversary of Moises Padilla Municipality

[Delivered at the Municipal Auditorium, Moises Padilla, Negros Occidental, October 16, 2009]

Salamat Congressman Arroyo. Iggy sa mga pumuluyo diri at ang sa among pamilya Ignacito ang iyang nickname kay little Ignacio ang among... may Ignacio, Sr.

Governor Zayco, salamat gid sa imo nga mga ginsiling sa inyo nga diskurso; si Vice-Governor Yulo ug taga members sa Sangguniang Panlalawigan; ang silingan nga congressman diri, si Congressman Jeffrey Ferrer; siyempre ang atong host mayor, Mayor Nazareno, salamat sa imong imbitasyon; sa mga tanan opisyal sang Moises Padilla; ang silingan nga mga mayor; ang mayor sa amon nga banwa diri sa distrito, si Mayor Malabor; isa pa nga silingan si Mayor Bascon; mga laing-laing opisyal; mga pumuluyo; mga kasimanwa:

Malipayon nga anibersaryo sa mga tawo sang Moises Padilla!

Maayo gani kay maayo ang panahon diri samtang naga-selebrar kamo subong, because nakaabot ang imbitasyon ni Mayor Nazareno sa akon ug sa pag schedule abi ko na maka-ari ako indi lang sa selebrasyon kun hindi sa relief mission. Salamat sa Diyos nga ang gwapo ang panahon sa atong selebrasyon subong. Didto sa Metro Manila, Central kag Northern Luzon, gabangon pa sila asta subong sa epekto sang labing grabe nga mga baha sa sulod sang kwarenta ka tuig. Kag salamat nga ang typhoon na tani maga-agi diri, it stayed away, it went for a shortwhile sa Bicol kag sa Romblon but did not stay and went out right away through Palawan.

Madumduman ko pa sang ulahi ko nga pagkari sadtong 1994, senador pa ako, nagbisita ako diri, si Mayor Garcia ang mayor, sa inagurasyon sa bag-o ninyo nga Municipal Hall. Subong nga presidente na ako, salamat sa oportunidad nga makabisita sa liwat sa inyo selebrasyon. Ug subong pa bayaw ko ang inyo congressman, si Congressman Iggy Arroyo, so ako sister-in-law sang distrito kag Moises Padilla.

Nakita ko gilayon nga kinahanglan nga padaku-on pa gid ang serbisyo diri sang kuryente, sa ako nangin presidente, amo gani nga sang una nga tuig pa lang sa akon termino, matakod dayon ang kuryente sa duha ka barangay nga wala sini. So, subong tanan barangay sa Moises Padilla may-ara na kuryente.

Kag para magdako pa gid ang kitaon sang mga mag-uuma sang Moises Padilla, as the Mayor Nazareno said naka-benepiso sa iyang 5-year Agricultural Development Program nga upod ang national government sa 2,500 ka beneficiaries sang CARP nga taga-dir. Diin sila diri, wala diri kamo subong ang aton CARP beneficiaries, ha? Diin ang aton mga CARP beneficiaries diri? Congratulations sa inyo nga tanan.

Nabati-an na ninyo nga may economic crisis sa bilog nga kalibutan halin pa sang nagligad nga tuig. Apektado ang tanan nga pungsod, apan salamat naman sa Diyos indi parehas ang epekto sini sa mga pungsod. Kag ang Pilipinas isa sa pila lang ka pungsod sa bilog kalibutan nga indi nag-negative ang aton growth rate, salamat sa Diyos. Tungod kay una pa kita nga nagpatuman sang mga malisod apan kinahanglan nga reporma sa ekonomiya. Sa mga taxes agod makagastos kita sa inyo mga ginakinahanglan. Like for example, the kuryente and also the help for our land reform.

Sang wala pa ang global krisis, ginsuguran na naton ang bag-o nga dalan para sa ekonomiya. Ining dalan sang ekonomiya ginhimo sang aton reform agenda nga amo rason kun ngaa nakahimo kita sang eight ka milyon nga trabaho sa bilog pungsod tani diri sa Moises Padilla mayara naman nga damo nga gatrabaho diri tungod sa aton mga reporma sa ekonomiya.

Padayon kita nga nagatindog bisan sadtong panahon sang krisis sa bilog nga kalibutan. Handa kita kaysa iban pa nga pungsod. Sini nga adlaw, ang akon ginapangayo sa inyo nga tani masunod ninyo ang ginhandom sang founders sang inyo banwa nga mangin-progresibo ini kag makahatag sang dako ang kontribusyon sa pag-uswag sang aton pungsod. I am very glad that as part of the celebration today we have a ceremony that honored the founding fathers of your town. The mayors, from the first mayor elected in 1951 to the last mayor that sat up to 2007. They are the founding fathers of the town of Moises Padilla. And we congratulate also your outstanding municipal employee because he represents the hardworking people of Moises Padilla who will bring your town to greater heights of progress.

Sang nakaabot ang imbitasyon sa ako para sa inyong selebrasyon subong, may-ara nagsiling sa ako, why are you going to go to Moises Padilla, very very small town. Siling ko importante nga makaabot sa Moises Padilla. Labi na subong, today October 16 up to October 18, we are celebrating the International Day to Fight Extreme Poverty. Gani gusto ko nga sa adlaw sa selebrasyon sang Laban Kontra sa Extreme Poverty indi ko gusto sa Manila ang selebrasyon. Gusto ko makadto sa isa sa mga gamay mga banwa. And so, it was very providential that the invitation of Moises Padilla came so that I can celebrate the Day for Fighting Extreme Poverty with this small but very hardworking town of Moises Padilla.

So, gusto ko i-congratulate, pag-abi-abi sa aton bag-o nga mayor, Mayor Nazareno tungod kay naa na siya sa iyang 5-year Agricultural Development Plan may-ara na siya ang iyang prioritization sa pag laban kontra sa kapobrehan sa mga pumuluyo.

And so on this day, I am glad to hear about what the good mayor has planned. And I hope that we can all work together to fulfill those plans to fight poverty, extreme poverty especially diri sa banwa sang Moises Padilla. Nagasalig ako nga pamatian ninyo ang akon ginapangayo tungod kay pirmi gid ang inyong suporta sa akon.

So, thank you so much for your support to me all these years halin pa sa 1992 sa akon una nga pagkandidato sa senador asta sa subong. And I'm very glad to be able to spend this important day, important day for the whole world fighting extreme poverty, important day for this small but hardworking town of Moises Padilla. And on this day sa liwat, salamat sa inyo suporta kag Mabuhi ang mga taga-Moises Padilla!

Damo gid nga salamat sa inyo nga tanan!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 58th "Handurawan" Charter Day Anniversary of Moises Padilla Municipality. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134103/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26547&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 30th Camiguin Lanzones Festival and the 300,000th Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program (CLEEP) Milestone Celebration

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 30th Camiguin Lanzones Festival and the 300,000th Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program (CLEEP) Milestone Celebration

[Delivered at the Camiguin Tourism Center, Mambajao, Camiguin Island, October 20, 2009]

Daghan salamat sa aton Secretary of Tourism Ace Durano nga kada tuig mao gapaila kanako, hindi bala?

Sa akon mga higala ug dako ang ilang suporta kanunay gyud kanako. Congressman Romualdo ug Governor Romualdo, daghan salamat sa inyong imbitasyon kanako gihapon ining aton Lanzones Festival. Kan Vice Governor, kay Mambajao Mayor Romualdo, tanan nga opisyal sa diri. Kauban ko sab karon ang akon nga laing-laing Cabinet members, dili lang si Ace Durano, aniya sab si Secretary Nitoy Roque sa labor ug si Secretary Panganiban sa NAPC. Kauban nato sab mga laing opisyal gikan sa mga laing probinsya ug distrito nga nagaturista kami subong, si Governor Moreno gikan sa Misamis Oriental, si Congressman Aquino gikan sa Agusan del Norte ug si Congressman Pancrudo gikan sa Bukidnon.

Aton mga kaigsuonan, Malipayong 30th Lanzones Festival kaninyong tanan. Nalipay ko ug dako nga dungog nga makabalik usab sama sa kada tuig sa akon pag-Presidente. Nakumpleto nato ang record aron pagduyog sa inyong selebrasyon nga espesyal kining tuiga kay mao ang ikatulo nga dekada o Pearl Anniversary sa pagsaulog sa Lanzones Festival dinhi sa probinsiyang may labing tam-is nga lanzones sa tibuok kalibutan. Angay gyud ang pearl anniversary kay ang lanzones ang perlas sa Camiguin ug perlas sa Pilipinas.

Kauban ninyo ako karon sa pagpasalamat sa aton Ginoo nga bisan naay daghan nga kusog nga bagyo sa Luzon, maayo sa panahon sa Camiguin karong tuiga, (applause) busa daghan ug bunga dili lang ang lanzones kundili ang inyong uban nga produkto sa probinsya. Congratulations kan inyong tanan!

Apan siyempre sa paghitabo sa mga bagyo didto sa Luzon, dili naton makalimot nga niadtong 2001 gyud naeksperyensya sab ninyo ang dakong kadaot nga gidala sa pag-usab sa klima sa atong panginabuhì or climate change. Amo ang epekto sa climate change nakita nato for the first time sa aton administrasyon niadtong 2001. Diri sa Camiguin nga dili naman, wala naman sa path sa typhoon apan nahitabo ang typhoon niadtong 2001. Apan karon, sa aton natan-aw diri sa aton pagka-upa sa pagtrabaho sama sa mga giingon ni Governor Jayjay Romualdo aton mga laing-laing proyekto rehabilitated na ang Camiguin gikan sa katong bagyo sa 2001. At para doon sa mga nanonood sa Luzon, dahil parati kasama ko ang mga media dito siguro kahit na kayo ay abalang-abala doon sa mga bagyong nangyayari, siguro kung makikita ninyo isang maliit na probinsyang Camiguin na nagkaroon ng ganung salanta noong 2001 rehabilitated na ngayon at siya ay progresibo kaya huwag tayong mawalan ng pag-asa para sa Luzon.

Sa bagyong Ondoy ug Pepeng nga naghit po sa Luzon nahibaw-an ko nga dunay taga-Camiguin ang tuwa gapuyo sa Metro Manila ug probinsya sa Rizal ug nag-antos sab sila sa pagbaha sama sa uban nagpuyo didto. Gusto gyud nako pasalamat si Cong. Loloy ug si Gov. Jayjay sa ilang hinabang pinaagi sa DSWD alang sa mga Camiguinon ug uban pa nga naapektohan sa baha. Daghan salamat Congressman ug Governor.

Nagpasalamat sab ako kaninyong tanan sa inyo mga pag-ampo alang sa mga biktima. Katong mga Camiguinon nga nagapuyo sa... kasi nangutana ako kan Congressman, kaninong mga taga-Camiguin nga nagapuyo sa Metro Manila ug nahimo biktima sa flooding? Asa sila nagapuyo sa endangered areas o sa usually safe areas? Ingon ni Congressman, naay sa mga ordinary ug okay nga areas apan naay nagapuyo sa mga endangered areas. So, sa mga nagapuyo sa endangered areas sa Metro Manila o Rizal unta ayaw na mubalik sa ila mga balay, o kung gusto nila mubalik sa Camiguin naa kita ug programa “Balik Probinsya.”

Balik probinsiya entails the DSWD providing transportation and other assistance to families desiring to start anew in the province or city of their choice. Aside from transportation they are provided with food supply good for one month and household items such as beddings and clothing. At destination, diri sa Camiguin, they are linked to appropriate government agencies that will help them get started. For instance, DA for farm implements and seedlings, DOLE under the leadership of Secretary of Labor Nitoy Roque for employment, and also microfinance to start a small business.

NHA also has its own program, which they are using now for those that have to be resettled from the endangered areas. They give cash assistance equivalent to 60 days times minimum wage to families that have to relocate involuntarily from those endangered areas.

Pwede sab nato tabangan sila sa aton Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program o CLEEP. In fact kanina, karong adlaw, sa inyong festival, usa sab ka importanteng panahon aron ilaunch nato kag hatagan ang taong dili na lang 300,000 jobs kundili 350,000 nga taong nakadawat ug benepisyo sa CLEEP, usa sa aton mga programa apil sa Economic Resiliency Plan.

Ang aton mga nurse kauban sa CLEEP. Katong mga 100 plus nga gidawat ni Mayor Romualdo ang certificate nga 500,000 pesos apan ang importante ang katawhan, so 111 na katawhan, 'no? Okay, katong 111 na katawhan plus ang aton mga nurse karon usa sa ila ang 350th beneficiary sa atong CLEEP Program.

So, nalipay ko nga nakatabang kita diri sa Camiguin dili lang sa atong emergency employment, dili lang sa balik probinsya — kung kinsay gusto mabalik — kundili sa aton mga laing-laing imprastraktura aron gyud dako ang progresso sa probinsya sa Camiguin. But, murag ingon... sama sa ingon... murag ingon ni Congressman Romualdo mutual naman ang aton pagtinabangay sa usat-usa, busa sa akon nga... sa ako gusto ko ipaabot gihapon ang akon dako nga pagpasalamat sa suporta nga kanunay gihatag kanako ang mga taga-Camiguin opisyal ug katawhan.

Ug wala akong duda nga magpadayon kamo sa inyong suporta kanako, busa dili na ako nagahangyo, nagapasalamat na lang ako kaninyo.

Salamat sa inyong tabang kanako sa pulitika sukad pa sa 1992, ug salamat sa inyong padayon nga tabang sa atong paningkamot paadto sa kauswagan alang sa tanang Pilipino, alang sa mga taga-Mindanao, ug alang sa mga taga-Camiguin. Sa akong 9th time nga pag-abot sa inyong Lanzones Festival, daghan salamat gihapon ug malipayong pagsaulog sa 30th Lanzones Festival sa akon mga pinalanggang Camiguinon!

Daghan salamat kaninyong tanan.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 30th Camiguin Lanzones Festival and the 300,000th Comprehensive Livelihood and Emergency Employment Program (CLEEP) Milestone Celebration. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134056/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26548&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 35th Philippine Business Conference and Expo (PBC&E)
One.Global.Filipino “Regional Economic Development: Frontline to Sustainability”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 35th Philippine Business Conference and Expo (PBC&E) One.Global.Filipino “Regional Economic Development: Frontline to Sustainability”

[Delivered at the Fiesta Pavilion, Manila Hotel, October 21, 2009]

Thank you very much, Mike for your very kind introduction.

Ed Lacson, President of the PCCI; Bobby Amores, Chairman of this conference; Donald Dee; Don Emilio Yap, our host in this hotel and Dr. Laya who gave us the welcome remarks; Jun Ortiz-Luis; Francis Chua; of course, my fellow member of the government in charge of taking care of our business sector, Secretary Peter Favila; our very, very deserving awardees; ladies and gentlemen; members of the business community.

Before anything else, my heartfelt thanks to the members of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the provincial and regional chapters, and the other affiliate business chambers for your assistance to the victims of typhoons Ondoy and Pepeng. Maraming salamat sa inyo.

And as we have a respite between those two typhoons and the coming one, I’m very happy to see all of you again. The Philippine Business Conference is an important platform from which to launch milestone policies. I remember when I first addressed you as your new President in 2001, the U.S. had just come out of the tragedy of 9/11 that shocked everyone and redefined national security throughout the world.

Because of the dangers posed by terrorism to our own politically vulnerable economy, I said then to your assembly that our deliverance from event risks such as 9/11 was best assured by finding our place among the emerging economies of our Region.

Now, I am gratified that because of our partnership over this last eight years, we are now considered indeed a frontline among emerging economies not only of Asia but of the world, no longer the sickly economy of the Region. To emphasize my point, the day that I addressed the Emerging Market Conference of The Economist in London last month, we were recognized as one of the top emerging markets in the world. Thank you to the business community.

In 2004, it was again at the Philippine Business Conference where I warned of the steps we needed to take to strengthen our strained fiscal position. Our fiscal capability was being weighed down by the burden of short-term loans contracted by previous administrations but coming due in 2004. It was before you that I broached the idea of undertaking difficult but necessary fiscal and tax reforms — a proposal which was met with resistance by many who were uncomfortable with change. But though many resisted, I was fortunate to have the PCCI on my side. You and the Executive branch and brave souls in Congress pushed for these reforms. We implemented some of the toughest fiscal and financial reforms in our history. But they became the building blocks for 34 quarters of uninterrupted and unprecedented economic growth. In other words, with those reforms supported so wholeheartedly by the PCCI, we were able to tame the boom and bust cycle that had plagued our economy for generations.

Last year, when most of the world was shaking in its boots because of an economic recession, a world economic recession, I unveiled before you our Economic Resiliency Plan. I remembered then that the private sector offered to finance half of a proposed P100 billion-peso public-private sector infrastructure program to unlock the liquidity of our banking sector held. And I am proud that one year later, I am proud to acknowledge that the private sector has honored your P50 billion-peso end of the bargain, especially for financing power projects. Thank you and congratulations! Now that lock liquidity is there building up power projects for our increasing competitiveness.

Indeed, our reforms and our partnership have provided our economy with the resilience to bear the heaviest blows of the crisis and still remain standing rather than have our economy contracting like many others in the world and in the region. In fact, we would have balanced our budget this year, had the global economic crisis not intervened. But I think with everybody else, going into deficit, ours is quite understandable as well.

So, let us continue with our partnership not only on the Economy but on what I call the three E's: Economy, Education, Environment.

On the Economy, Ed Lacson made a presentation of the many aspects of our partnership. This partnership has helped maintain our domestic demand-driven economy. In fact, one of the things in common, among the economies that have survived this crisis, are that they are domestic-demand driven, and we are one of them. While the export-driven economies continue to reel from the economic crunch, economies like ours are kept afloat by the size and buoyancy of our domestic market. In other words, our large population with our middle-income level $2,000 per capita and our investments enabled by our reforms — that provided us domestic demand.

Aside from domestic consumption, indeed, one big source of domestic demand has been our investment in infrastructure. As pointed out in the President report of Ed Lacson, PCCI is a member of the Pro-Performance Steering Committee that monitors our infrastructure projects. And in that capacity, PCCI has witnessed how the projects were planned, bidded out and implemented. And I hope that the PCCI members on the Committee have also seen for themselves how the projects have impacted positively on the lives of the people in addition to providing the domestic demand that has kept our economy surviving during the world crisis.

Another fruit of the partnership between the government and the PCCI resulted in Nonoy Libanan being awarded today especially. The PCCI and the Bureau of Immigration partnered for the visa-upon-arrival of the Bureau of Immigration, and this helps in increasing tourism as one of the factors boosting our GDP this year.

Still another fruitful private-public sector partnership is in the skills training for Business Process Outsourcing. And I remember in 2001, not in the PCCI meeting but in my State of the Nation Address, ayes predicted that the growth sectors of our future would be the skills intensive service sectors like information and communication technology and tourism. And looking back, it has come true. But this is not to negate the importance of our export manufactures and agri-export, and I was looking at the latest macro-economic figures — Peter, am I not right? — That now even our hard-hit export sector is starting to recover month-on month? But Bobby Amores is still very worried in behalf of the exporters, so he asked me to assure the business community, many of whom are in the export sector, that the export support fund is still there and Peter Favila has just received the request for the next tranche for release and we have to examine that each one, each peso of those hundreds of millions of pesos in the balance will go to something that will directly increase our exports, but the fund is there for you.

Regained confidence in our economy is also indicated not only by the inflow of tourism receipts, or the inflow of BPO receipts, or even the reviving inflow of export receipts, but also by the net inflow of $200 billion dollars of investment into our capital markets during the first semester of this year. In sharp contrast to the negative outflow during the height of the global crisis last year. And of course, there is our upgraded credit rating which has been maintained despite the onslaught of the recent typhoons.

On Education; again, in the report of Ed Lacson, he talked about the active involvement of the PCCI in our Education System Task Force which gave us and pointed out what you call the Philippine Education Highway. This highway is a framework for seamless education from early childhood education to basic education to tertiary education, whether it is college or vocational school. And for PCCI's quiet but steady work in this Commission or Task Force on Education, where you're in improving industry-academe linkages, curriculum upgrading and skills development, in order to resolve the long-term mismatch of jobs and skills, I thank the PCCI and I congratulate you.

On the Environment, there is much to do. But, if we speak about urgency, the most urgent concerns we must now address have to do with adaptation measures to cope with the adverse impacts of climate change. For instance, the increasing frequency and intensity of typhoons due to global warming. I have created — I think you've all read in the papers and heard it in the news and saw it on TV — a special national public-private sector reconstruction partnership, which is tasked with the following:

First, undertake a study of the causes, costs and actions to be taken in the wake of typhoons Ondoy, Pepeng, Frank and now Ramil;

Second, undertake the rehabilitation of damaged infrastructure and other measures for the reconstruction of the areas, industries, and the population affected by the calamities, and this includes agriculture as the first item that was presented to me by Bobby Amores in your resolution — the rehabilitation of agriculture;

Third, tap the resources of the private sector and enhance and facilitate the cooperation and coordination between government and the private sector in formulating and implementing the reconstruction strategy;

Fourth, raise funds, especially grants to fund reconstruction;

Fifth, prioritize the projects and programs for the reconstruction efforts;

Sixth, oversee the implementation of the reconstruction program;

Seventh, serve as the clearing house for the international assistance implemented by the donors themselves — and I would like to acknowledge the presence of the diplomatic community here — using the cluster approach; and Eighth, request the UN and the World Bank to coordinate an international pledging session.

On the government side, the Reconstruction Commission will be chaired by Finance Secretary Gary Teves. The membership will be the agencies that will use the funds: namely, the National Disaster Coordinating Council, the Department of Social Welfare and Development, and the Housing and Urban Development Coordinating Council. The private commission, as you all must have read, heard or seen will be chaired by PLDT Chairman Manny Pangilinan with Cardinal Vidal as co-chair, and I am happy that PCCI President Ed Lacson has agreed to be one of the members of the private sector commission. The NEDA and the Office of Civil Defense will provide the Secretariat which will be headed by Ric Saludo.

The public-private sector partnership has been very busy already, it has scheduled meetings with JICA tomorrow, the World Bank the day after, and others in the donor community and the private sector in the weeks to come. They will present the partnership and update them on the work program. And then this will be followed by an expanded dialogue to seek support in the reconstruction efforts. The public-private sector partners will interact regularly with our development partners and with media.

But, even as we are organizing for reconstruction, typhoon Ramil is approaching. And therefore I would not want to end my remarks to you today without asking you to join me in a prayer.

I ask you to rise, bow our heads and put ourselves in the presence of the Lord as we pray:

Almighty Father, we raise our hearts to You in gratitude for the wonders of creation of which we are part, for Your Divine Providence in sustaining our needs, and for Your Wisdom that guides the course of the universe.

As we face typhoons, floods, volcanic and other calamities we trustingly seek Your help, aware that You are the Master of Creation.

We acknowledge that as an entire humanity we have not been good stewards of Nature. We have confused your command to subdue the earth.

The environment is made to suffer our wrongdoing, and now we reap the harvest of abuse and indifference.

Global warming is upon us. Natural calamities occur in increasing numbers and intensity. We turn to you, our loving Father, and beg forgiveness for our sins.

We humbly beg that we be spared from the dire consequences of calamities.

We beseech you to inspire us all to grow into responsible stewards of Your creation, and generous neighbors to those in need.

Amen.

Thank you all for joining me in this prayer.

Thank you for continuing our partnership.

Mabuhay ang PCCI! Mabuhay ang business community!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 35th Philippine Business Conference and Expo (PBC&E) One.Global.Filipino "Regional Economic Development: Frontline to Sustainability". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134029/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26599&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 3rd Philippine International Sisterhood and Twinning Association, Inc. (PHISTA) Region IV-A (CALABARZON) Chapter Assembly Cum Seminar Workshop and 1st Tourism Summit [Filipino]

Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas

Sa Ika-tatlong Philippine International Sisterhood and Twinning Association, Inc. (PHISTA) Region IV-A (CALABARZON) Chapter Assembly Cum Seminar Workshop at Kauna-unahang Tourism Summit

[Ipinahayag sa Batangas Provincial Auditorium, Provincial Capitol cmpd., Batangas City, Batangas, ika 22 ng Oktubre, 2009]

Maraming salamat. Maraming salamat Secretary Mendoza sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin. Bagay na bagay na si Secretary Mendoza ang magpapakilala sa akin dahil siya ay isang tunay na anak ng Batangas, tiga-San Juan, Batangas. At hindi lamang yun yung kanyang bayan ng San Juan naroon yung pinakabagong tourism attraction ng Batangas at ng CALABARZON, yung Laiya Beach. Congratulations!

Pero bago sa lahat, pagkatapos ng aking pagpapasalamat ay gusto ko rin batiin ang ating mga opisyal na nagbuo nitong pagpupulong na ito: unang-una ang ating host governor, si Ate Vi, si Governor Vilma Santos Recto; at ang ating host city mayor naman, si Mayor Eddie Dimacuha. Naalala mo Eddie nung ako ay senador biglang sumisipot ako sa iyong bahay para magbreakfast, thank you for accommodating me when I come uninvited for breakfast. Pero salamat din kay Benny Brizuela, ang pangulo ng PHISTA Region. Salamat sa iyong imbitasyon at salamat din sa expression of support na binigay sa akin itong araw na ito ng mga opisyal ng PHISTA.

Congratulations! kay Mayor Sandoval, siya pala ang namamahala sa mga twinning na napakaimportante at malaking tulong sa ating mga local government. At binabati ko rin si Governor Mark Leviste, ang ating napakabatang vice governor dito sa lalawigan, at si Undersecretary Palabyab ng... undersecretary in Department of Tourism, pati na rin ang mga ibang opisyal ng Tourism na narito. At kayong lahat mga opisyal, mga mamamayan, nakita ko maraming estudyante, magandang umaga sa inyong lahat.

Bagamat maganda ang umaga ngayon hayaan niyong manawagan naman ako sa inyo, para sa lahat na tayo ay magdasal para sa ating taong-bayan sa buong Luzon. Unang-una yung mga nawalaan ng mga minamahal, mga tahanan, pagaari, at para sa marami yung nawawalaan ng pag-asa sa kinabukasan dahil sa mga kalamidad ng kalikasan that is still wreaking havoc on parts of our islands.

At magdasal tayo na itong bagong bagyong parating ay maligtas naman tayo sa malaking mga kasakitan kasi parating tina-track ko ito. At suppose to be nung midnight nung isang gabi nararamdaman na sana ang ulan at hangin, at suppose to be na itong araw na ito darating na yung landfall at may threat nuon na maging super typhoon. Pero sa ating panalangin sa huling balita from 195 kilometers per hour na akala natin ay aakyat ng 200 plus mukhang bumaba na sa 160 kilometers per hour. At lumiit yung rainband suppose to be kahit na tatamaan niya ang Cagayan province ang kanyang ulan at hangin ay aabot hanggang sa Central Luzon pero ngayon lumiit yung kanyang rainband at humina ang pagpapatakbo dahil may high pressure area ang pumipigil sa kanya so baka sa Monday pa maglandfall so mas mahaba ang panahong paghahanda. At magdasal tayo para tuluyang humina at tuluyang pagdating dito or maiwasan sana tayo ay mahinang-mahina na sana at wala nang masyadong sakuna na dadalhin sa atin.

Pero ang ganda ng panahon ngayon nagkaroon kayo ng pulong in between supposedly big typhoons at magandang-maganda ang panahon yun ay isang malaking pagpapasalamat sa ating Panginoon, ibig sabihin nuon blessed itong PHISTA General Assembly ninyo. Kaya salamat sa PHISTA at kay Ate Vi sa paghost nitong Tourism Summit. Sa inyong kagandahang loob, pinapaalala ninyo ang lahat ng kagandahan ng CALABARZON. At dahil nandito kayo sa Batangas ang kagandahan ng Batangas na napakaraming magandang beach resorts at kilala hindi lamang sa pagiging makasaysayan kung hindi pati sa kagandahan ng inyong kapaligiran.

Kaya ang ganda-ganda ng inyong tema: “Together, we will Build CALABARZON LGUs’ Economic Growth through Community Partnership, Education and Tourism.” Hindi ba, Benny yun ang inyong tema? Napapanahon ang tema ninyo ngayon para sa rehiyon at para sa ating bansa dahil ang makakamit natin para sa turismo ng CALABARZON na ito ang pinakamalaking rehiyon sa buong bansa ay magkakaroon ng epekto sa buhay hindi lamang ng mga tagarito kung hindi sa buong bansa at hindi lamang sa ngayon kung hindi sa ibat-ibang mga henerasyon.

Alam niyo nung una nasa schedule ko itong affair na ito, pagkatapos nakansel sandali yung aking presencia dahil supposedly pupunta ako sa Espanya sa imbitasyon ng gobyerno doon. Pero dahil sa mga sakuna kinansel ko at nakapunta uli dito ngayon. Pero binanggit ko ang Espanya kasi ang Espanya ang kanyang kayamanan ay nanggagaling sa turismo at umabot pa ang panahon na mas malaki ang kita ng Spain sa tourism kaysa sa kita ng Saudi Arabia sa langis kaya ganun kalaki ang pwedeng mangyari sa turismo sa isang ekonomiya.

Kaya importante itong gawaing ito at importante rin napapanahon dahil ang gawain natin ay ginaganap sa panahon ng isang krisis ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya na hanggang ngayon umiiral pa rin sa maraming lugar ng mundo, at nangyayari rin sa panahon ng krisis na nanggagaling sa kalamidad ng kalikasan. Sabi nga nila, in 2007, nagkaroon, nagsimula yung food crisis, tapos in 2008 nagkaroon ng financial and economic crisis — buong mundo itong pinag-uusapan natin — at ngayon nagkaroon ng krisis ng climate change.

Ang krisis ng ekonomiya aminadong galing sa tao dahil masyadong madalas ito ay bilang resulta ng maling pagpapasya ng ilan sa ating mga kasamahan sa mundo. Halimbawa, yung doon sa Amerika yung sobrang pagpapahiram, yung kung anu-anong klaseng pagpapahiram kahit na hindi maganda ang credit, yung mga dalawampung credit card ang hawak ng isang tao. Ewan ko kung yung mga kabataan napanood ninyo yung Confessions of a Shopaholic, yung dalawampu yung kanyang credit card at bili siya nang bili kahit na hindi niya kayang bayaran. Yun ay talagang may katotohanan yun at yung ganung klaseng credit ang pinanggalingan ng krisis una sa Amerika, at dahil ang Amerika ang pinakamalaking bansa sa buong mundo umabot sa ibat-ibang lugar ng mundo. So galing sa tao yung krisis na yun.

Pero dumadalas ang kalamidad ng kalikasan din. Sa ating rehiyon ay nabibintang na rin sa global warming na sino naman ang gumawa ng global warming — sangkatauhan din. Dahil masyadong gumagamit ng langis, coal, dahil yung mga basura pinapabayaang, dahil mga puno pinapatay mga nagkocontribute yun sa global warming.

Kung ang mga tao ang gumawa nitong mga problema, sa ganun din mga tao rin ang dapat magsolba nitong mga problemang ito. At walang ibang panahon higit ngayon na kailangan ang higit na kooperasyon at pagkakaisa, at ang laki nang kinalalaman ng turismo hindi lamang sa ekonomiya kung hindi na rin sa kalikasan kasi mas maganda ang kalikasan mas nakakaakit sa mga turista ang isang lugar.

Kaya binabati ko ang mga LGU na may mga town twinning. So over 60 na pala kayo ngayon Benny at inaasahan ninyo maging 100 kaya magandang advertisement ito sa twinning kaya binabati ko ang PHISTA Chapter ng CALABARZON. Congratulations sa ginagawa ninyo! Malaki ang maitutulong ng konsepto ng twinning ng mga bayan at lungsod. Madalas ang ka-twin, gaya nang binanggit ni Benny naka-twin ang Lucena, ay mga lungsod sa mga mauunlad na ekonomiya, kaya ka-twin ninyo yung mga ganung klaseng ekonomiya may matututunan ang mga bayan natin ng mga bagong pamamaraan mula sa mga bayan sa ibang bansa, lalo na tungkol sa mga makabagong sistema at teknolohiya na nagaganap na sa mga mayayamang ekonomiya.

Sila naman meron din silang matututunan sa atin, lalo na sa naipapakita nating maaari tayong sama-sama upang harangin ang hamon ng pandaigdigang kalamidad sa ekonomiya at magkabalikat upang maghandog ng tulong at maglaan ng mga bagong paraan para labanan ang mga kalamidad ng kalikasan.

Eh, yung sa ekonomiya hindi ako makakapunta sa Batangas at hindi ako pwedeng makipagpulong kay Ate Vi kung hindi pag pinag-uusapan natin kung papano tumatag ang ating ekonomiya kontra sa global economic crisis dahil na rin sa mga sakripisyong gawaing ginawa ni Senator Ralph Recto sa ating fiscal reforms.

Bagamat tinamaan ang daigdig ng krisis sa ekonomiya, tayo naman ay matatag pa rin haming sa ibang mga bansa. Kaya inaanyayahan ko ang mga taga- CALABARZON na paghandaan ang muling paglago ng ating pangmundong ekonomiya. Kasi marami nang natutunan na mga leksyon yung mga reporma na kailangan bumalik uli ang ekonomiya ng mundo ay ginagawa na. Meron namang maliliit na senyas na pagbalik ng ekonomiya ng mundo, halimbawa, dito sa CALABARZON — eto ang heartland ng industriya ng ating bansa — ang ating export sector yun ang bumaba. Bagamat ang ibang bahagi ng ekonomiya ay nanatiling matatag yung export natin ay bumaba. Pero ngayon unti-unti bumabalik na.

Kaya tiyak na makakasama muli ang CALABARZON sa mangunguna sa kaunlaran sapagkat kayo ay may malakas na pananampalataya sa Panginoon, kayo'y masisipag, kayo'y malalakas ang loob. Hindi ba yung mga Batangeno kilalang-kilala sa katapangan at may tiwala sa inyong sarili sa community partnership na siyang tema ninyo dito sa inyong assembly, partnership para sa kaunlaran. Kaya binabati ko kayong lahat, ang CALABARZON ay kilala sa industriya pero hindi ibig sabihin na hindi rin niyo gagamitin yung kagandahan ng rehiyon na binigay ng Panginoon.

Alagaan ito at ito ang magdadala pa ng dagdag na kaunlaran sa pamamagitan ng turismo sa CALABARZON.

Sa inyong lahat, maraming salamat at Mabuhay ang CALABARZON!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 3rd Philippine International Sisterhood and Twinning Association, Inc. (PHISTA) Region IV-A (CALABARZON) Chapter Assembly Cum Seminar Workshop and 1st Tourism Summit. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134019/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26595&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP) General Assembly

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP) General Assembly

[Delivered at the Fiesta Pavilion, Manila Hotel, City of Manila, October 28, 2009]

Maraming salamat.

Maraming salamat Secretary Claudio sa iyong pagpapakilala sa akin. Maraming salamat at congratulations Mayor Monching Guico sa iyong napakagandang mga ginawa para sa League of Municipalities of the Philippines! Don Emilio Yap, maraming salamat din dahil ang Manila Hotel ay parating matulungin para sa ating LMP tuwing meron silang gawain dito sa Maynila. Mayor Escalante, Mayor Tiu, other officials of the LMP, local chief executives, guests, ladies and gentlemen.

Una sa lahat, pagkatapos ang congratulate ko kay Mayor Guico pinupuri ko naman kayong lahat sa tulong na inihandog ninyo sa mga nasalanta ng mga nakaraang bagyo. Maraming salamat sa inyo at sa inyong mga mamamayan.

Tama yung sinabi ni Mayor Guico, sa loob ng walo o halos siyam na taong nagkasama tayo — kayo bilang punong-bayan, ako naman bilang punong-bansa — sa tuwing idinaraos natin itong General Assembly may nakikita akong bago na dapat purihin sa LMP. Napaka consistent kayo doon.

And through all of these, I am thankful that through all these years, a great majority of our mayors have always been by my side. Together, we have been seeking ways to improve the quality of governance and the delivery of services down to the grassroots. And the LMP has been, as Monching said, a key instrument in the effective performance of our municipal local government executives. Congratulations LMP!

Mayor Guico enumerated in his report the many accomplishments in these years of his watch. Most impressive has been the single-mindedness of the mayors and the LMP leadership to gain credibility as an organization devoted to good governance, and not merely a social club of politicians. Kanina doon sa ating exhibit, exhibit 'A' talaga, that tells us no nonsense performance has been your key to earning the support of various international organizations, among others — and many of them have exhibits to show how they had been working with you — the UN, the ILO, the USAID, the Asia Foundation, CIDA, ADB, the European Union, AusAID, them and many others. They support and their support continues to fund your development, capability-building and livelihood training programs for your towns as well as the LMP itself.

Kaya naman lalong ginaganahan ang pamunuang nasyonal na hanapan ng paraan parati para magkasama tayo. Noon ngang unang LMP meeting nung 2001 maraming long list, pero sabi ko kay Monching, antay muna ang pera ng gobyernong namana natin ay wala at... pero kaya nga nung mga nakaraang pamahalaan ni hindi kayo nakakakuha ng buo ng IRA ninyo. So sabi ko, Monching, maghanap kayo ng paraan, magsariling sikap pero ang masasabi ko yung IRA ninyo ay tatanggapin ninyong buong-buo, yun ang isang repormang ginawa natin. At hindi lang yun na nagkaroon tayo ng mga konting pera binayaran ko pa ang utang sa inyo ng mga nakaraang administrasyon. At nung nagkaroon tayo ng mas malaking pondo dahil sa VAT, aba kasama kayo doon, 40 percent ay pumupunta sa inyo three years later, and since it was implemented in 2006, yung three years later is 2009, kaya itong taon palagay ko naramdaman niyo ang pinakamalaking taas ng inyong IRA — 40 billion pesos para sa mga LGUs.

At dito mula sa mga reporma ng VAT nagkaroon kayo ng mas malaking pondo. At sa ibabaw pa ng mga sinasabi ni Monching na nagawa ng Liga mismo, inaasahan kong gagamitin ng mga mayors yung malaking dagdag ng inyong pondo para makipagbalikat pa rin tayo sa mga programa laban sa kahirapan.

Halimbawa, sa microfinance. In the last eight years, a P150 billion pesos has been unleashed for microcredit. Much of this amount came from the government and reached the microentrepreneurs in your jurisdictions through cooperatives, accredited NGOs and rural banks. Ngunit ang mga LGU ay korporasyon din, meron kayong corporate powers. Kayo rin pwede kayong mag microfinance sa inyong... yung inyong development fund.

Isa pang panlaban sa kahirapan ay yung conditional cash transfer na tinatawag nating Pantawid Pamilya. Our firewall against economic recession includes this emergency protection for the poorest of our poor. Itong conditional cash transfer program sa kasalukuyan tumutulong sa 700,000 families among the poorest of the poor. At bago matapos ang taon, we will expand the coverage of this Pantawid Pamilya to one million families by the end of the year. Pero ang listahan natin ng poorest of the poor ay two million families. Baka naman ang mga munisipyo ay makapag-angkin ng ilan doon sa mga over and above the one million na hindi pa nakakatanggap ng conditional cash transfer.

Isa pang importanteng panlaban sa kahirapan ay ang reporma sa lupa. Sa pamamahagi ng milyun-milyong ektarya mahigit isang milyon sa inyong mga constituents na magsasaka ay naging CARP beneficiaries at 700,000 sa mga katutubo ng inyong mga upland municipalities ay may-ari na ng sariling lupa. Malaki ang maitutulong ng mga LGU para alalayan sila dahil ang Department of Agriculture ay devolved sa inyo. So, yung mga dating tenant na wala ng landlord, nag-iisa na lang sila, naninibago, baka yung Municipal Agricultural Officers ninyo ay maka-alalay sa kanila para magpatuloy ang kanilang pagsasakang maganda.

At dahil sa Philhealth naman, sakop na sa health insurance ang 86% ng ating populasyon na sila ay mga constituents ninyo ngunit gusto kong ipaalala na ayon sa batas ng Philhealth ang obligasyong na bayaran ang premium ng mga pinakamahihirap ay nasa LGU at hindi nasa national government. Kaya lang para ipakita natin kung ano ang mga biyaya ng Philhealth nagbigay ang national government ng mga premium. Pero ito ay dapat obligasyon ng local government, kaya ngayon ay malaki na ang inyong IRA dahil sa ating VAT starting this year, sana naman sa mga susunod na taon ay saluhin ng mga LGU yung inyong obligasyon na bayaran yung premium ng pinakamahihirap sa inyong mga ibat-ibang bayan.

These are some of the things that I hope that the LGUs, the municipal governments will do in our fight against poverty and of course all the programs that Monching mentioned. We could go on and on about the numerous programs that allow you to effectively cascade basic services to the most vulnerable of your constituents. And indeed, as you have been applauding as Monching mentioned your different accomplishments, you deserve the accolades because the harvest of mayors we have had over these past years has raised the bar of local governance. Kung gagamitin natin ang jargon ng mga kabataan, municipal governance has leveled-up. And much of this has come together with the reforms of the League of Municipalities of the Philippines.

Inaasahan natin that you will be able to institutionalize your best programs and methods, improve on any systems that have rendered less than satisfactory results, and seek new methods for the new challenges we will face, and Monching has identified several of them.

And so, my wish is for LMP to go forward as a stronger, more confident and more effective organization.

Let us continue to work aggressively to ensure that the growth that has been generating jobs and revenue to invest in critical social programs both of the national and municipal level to fight poverty will be sustained. Through government support at all levels and the hard work of our people, let us not be deterred by any calamity, man-made or natural, in our effort to remain growing as an economy.

Once again, Monching, maraming salamat for your exemplary leadership of the LMP. And once again, to our mayors thank you for your unwavering support.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the League of Municipalities of the Philippines (LMP) General Assembly. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134005/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26649&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2009 Sangguniang Kabataan National Congress

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2009 Sangguniang Kabataan National Congress

[Delivered at the Subic Bay Exhibition and Convention Center, Subic Bay Gateway Park, Subic Bay, Olongapo City, Zambales, October 28, 2009]

Thank you. Thank you.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat at maraming salamat din Jane sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin. At congratulations sa inyong lahat dahil doble ang attendance itong taon compared to last year, congratulations!

At narito ang mga matataas na opisyal ng inyong host jurisdictions to greet you all: from Bataan, si Governor Tet Garcia; from Zambales, pero tignan mo sa kanyang kabataan, kagandahan, black t-shirt at saka jeans na akala niyo SK siya, hindi, siya ang Congresswoman Mitos Magsaysay; Congressman Tony Diaz, sa kabila ng Zambales; mula sa Bataan, si Congresswoman Hermie Roman, Herminia Roman at si Congressman Abet Garcia.

Kasama ko rin si Secretary Gabby Claudio na nag-aalaga sa ating mga SK at saka si Chairman Salonga and Administrator Arreza, your host here in Subic, they're all here to welcome you. So, all our SK leaders dito sa entablado at saka nandiyan sa harap wearing your black, green, and our student leaders over there in Luzon, congratulations to all of you for being here!

Parati niyong naririnig sa mga matatanda, youth development is vital to nation building. And I think you have heard from me that we are in fact a young nation: our people are young; you are young and you make up 65% of the population. So, we are a young nation: even our democracy is young, 60 years old and the growing pains are still with us. We are young because of our character — we love life, we sing, we dance, we love sports; and even in science we love innovation, creativity, technology. We are young because we are true citizens of the world, part of the rapid changes that is taking place around the globe. That is why we are on the cutting edge of the global workforce.

And as I said before, it is you the youth of this nation who have the energy to make your dreams come true. That it is now time for you, the next generation, to get involved in civic life, whether in the SK or in student leadership to speak up, to take action, to take responsibility for your own fortunes. To work to make a better world. And of course to use the tools afforded you by government, your family, your country, to become doctors, lawyers, farmers, healthcare workers, and many other noble professions and also to become leaders in high technology and green technology and many other noble professions.

Kung naalala ninyo nung isang taon, when half of you were present — ngayon, double present today — doon sa Bohol, di ba o sa Cebu? ako ay nagbigay ng sampung milyong piso para sa inyong 'Sama-Sama para sa Kalikasan.' So last year, we launched a Green Philippines campaign and I'm so happy that your teacher says, "think green because together we have been taking back our forests, we have been replenishing fallen trees with new protected forests to protect our land and our people."

Together we have been reforesting the land and bringing back the beauty of the Philippines we all love and want. At dahil narinig ko na active na active ang SK na ginamit itong pondo para sa inyong reforestation and tree planting, itong taon... no, last year binigay ko galing sa PSF kasi walang budget for reforestation, pero itong taon may budget for reforestation sa ating GAA kaya kagabi sinabi ko sa DBM at sa DENR na mag release muli ng P10 million pesos para sa SK para sa inyong reforestation.

Pero itong taon palagay ko hindi lamang yun ang pwedeng panggalingan ng inyong mga proyekto kasi nung ako ay naging pangulo... nung mga nakaraan kasi kulang ang binibigay ng national government ang IRA pero nung ako'y naging pangulo ay binigay ko ng buo ang mga IRA ninyo. At alam naman natin na may bahagi ang SK sa IRA pero sa ibabaw nuon nung 2006, sa tulong ng mga congressmen na narito sa atin ngayon ay gumawa tayo ng reporma ng buwis, yung Value Added Tax. So, aside from binayaran ng buo ang inyong IRA ay nagkaroon tayo ng reporma ng Value Added Tax, at nung lumaki yung kita ng pamahalaan dahil sa Value Added Tax, with the three year lag tumataas din ang IRA, so we implemented the Value Added Tax 2006.

So 2009 ay nagkaroon ng malaking dagdag ang IRA ng LGUs of P40 billion pesos at may bahagi ang SK doon sa IRAng yun. Kaya I hope naramdaman niyo na yung SK budget ninyo ay lumaki itong taon, yun ay dahil sa Value Added Tax three years ago. Kaya nagkaroon kayo ng di hamak mas malaking pondo itong taon, at inaasahan ko na gagamitin ninyo itong dagdag na pondo para makipagbalikat pa tayo sa mga programa hindi lamang para sa kalikasan kung hindi na rin para sa laban sa kahirapan.

Halimbawa, sa microfinance. During my administration, P150 billion pesos has been unleashed for microcredit, malaking bahagi nito nanggagaling sa pamahalaan umaabot sa mga microentrepreneurs sa inyong mga barangay sa pamamagitan ng cooperatives, NGOs at rural bank. Ang isang pwedeng gawin ng SK pwede rin niyong gawing proyekto na tulungan yung mga young, would-be microentrepreneurs na gumawa ng mga proposal para humiram sa mga microfinance institutions. Yan ay isang pwedeng magawa ng SK laban sa kahirapan.

Isa pang panlaban sa kahirapan ay yung conditional cash transfer, yung Pantawid Pamilya, na binibigyan ng tulong, maliit na allowance sa pinakamahihirap na pamilya sa ating bansa. Right now, 700,000 yung beneficiaries na yun. Binibigyan sila ng maliit na allowance pero may kundisyon dapat laging pumapasok ang kanilang mga anak sa eskwela at dapat laging nagpapatingin sa Rural Health Unit. Yung 700,000 na ito ay gagawin nating one million families poorest of the poor by the end of the year. Sana makatulong ang SK na subaybayan yung mga pamilyang tumatanggap para tiyakin na ginagawa nila yung kundisyon, para tiyakin na talagang pumapasok sa eskwela yung kanilang mga anak at yung mga bata ay pumupunta sa Rural Health Unit for check up. In other words, maging bahagi kayo sa community monitoring team.

Isa pang importanteng panlaban sa kahirapan ay yung reporma sa lupa. Sa pagpapamahagi ng milyun-milyong ektarya ng land reform mahigit isang milyong benepisyaryo ng CARP at 700,000 na katutubo ay taas-noong may-ari na ng sariling lupa. Maaaring makatulong ang SK sa kanilang mga pamayanan, lalo na sa isang proyektong inaasahan ko sa inyo at sinabi ko na rin nung isang taon, yung solid waste management kung saan ang organic waste ay pwedeng gawing organic fertilizer. Magandang proyekto rin yan para sa kabataan and that is also thinking green.

At isa pa, dahil sa Philhealth naman, sakop na sa Philhealth sa health insurance ang 86% ng ating populasyon. Ngunit gusto kong paalala na ayon sa batas ang dapat nagbabayad ng premium ng pinakamahihirap para sa Philhealth ay yung local government. Inumpisahan ng national government bayaran ang premium para mademonstrate kung gaano nakakatulong sa mga card holders itong Philhealth. Pero sana dahil ang SK nakaupo sa Sanggunian sana ang SK ipaalala sa inyong mga Sanggunian na may tungkulin ang local government ninyo na bumayad ng premium ng mga pinakamahihirap na mamamayan ninyo para manatiling kasapi ng Philhealth. So yun ang ibat-ibang pwede pang magawa ng mga SK sa ating laban sa kahirapan.

Para sa mga kabataan naman, we have created the National Youth Service Corps and the Youth Conservation Corps coordinated by the National Youth Commission, some of whom are present here today, to provide jobs and livelihood opportunities for those aged 18-24. 'Di ba sakop ng jurisdiction ng SK yung mga edad na yun? And right now, more than 15,000 young individuals are working under both programs. Sana makipag-ugnayan ang Youth Commission at ang SK para maging matagumpay pa rin itong programang ito.

So, andami nating pwedeng magawang magkasama, at yung sinimulan niyong reforestation ay sana tuloy-tuloy pa rin itong taong ito.

I thank you for your continuing support. When I look at you I see not only that you are thinking green, I see determination and enthusiasm in your faces. I see sound leadership, I see hope, I see a brighter future for your generation.

Kayo ang mga mukha ng kinabukasan. At ako bilang isang lola na ikinararangal kong makabalikat kayo, mga kasapi ng SK. So muli... muli, maraming salamat sa ating pagkakasama, sa ating mga reporma.

Mabuhay ang Kabataan!

Mabuhay ang Kalikasan!

Mabuhay ang Laban sa Kahirapan!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech 2009 Sangguniang Kabataan National Congress. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615134012/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26662&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 37th General Assembly Bishops-Ulama Conference

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 37th General Assembly Bishops-Ulama Conference

[Delivered at the Aguila Grand Ballroom, Waterfront Insular Hotel, Davao, Lanang District, Davao City, Davao del Sur, October 29, 2009]

Maraming salamat Secretary Gonzales sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

And Archbishop Capalla and our other Reverend bishops including the incoming president of CBCP, Bishop Otchimar. Thank you also for inviting me to be here with you today.

Dr. Barra, Dr. Gomez and the different members and leaders of the Protestant and the Muslim community who are here with us; Father Alejo and your very good team; Secretary Dureza, our Presidential Adviser for Mindanao and I'd like to introduce our new adviser on the Peace Process, Secretary Annabelle Abaya. And of course you have mentioned him, you know, our chairman of the Peace Panel with the MILF, Ambassador Paeng Seguis. Well, you know him... Paeng you were not here in the room when they said that the people of Mindanao want to know you more. But as far as Archbishop Capalla said that you are happy to be with me today, I am also very happy to be with you today. So, thank you for inviting me here.

And I'm very happy to meet the academicians and other professionals who comprise 'Consult Mindanao.' And I thank you for making the rounds of your consultation and for coming up with a very professional piece of work that add on not I but also the Presidential Adviser on the Security and on the Peace Process can I'm sure receive us a lot of inputs for the work that they have to do. And very prevalent, pervasive in your report is that the confirmation that understanding the belief, faith and culture of people from diverse background is a major step in reducing tension and conflict. And you have said again through dialogue, we can reach out and understand the condition of those that are differently placed because of culture and religion, so that appropriate culturally-sensitive interventions to address their needs are developed and undertaken.

And, of course, you have also said that hand-in-hand with dialogue is the need for economic development especially at the community level. And, indeed, this has been what we have been trying to do. These are what we call the main elements of our "soft" power.

All the programs and actions for peace and development, of course — and we have been reminded by the Supreme Court — must be framed by our being a sovereign nation, by the integrity of the national territory, and by our fundamental law, the Constitution. And it is quite significant to learn — no, not to learn because we know it intuitively — but to have a confirmation that it's difficult for the people to see the difference between the different groups. For instance, the different branches of government, the different factions of the Bangsa Moro, but it is important that we point out that though we may differ with one another there is something that we must all reject — and that is terrorism in any form.

We have as I said earlier a new Presidential Adviser on the Peace Process, Secretary Annabelle Abaya. Father, you were saying that the women were complaining how come there is no woman in the GRP-MILF Peace Panel. Well, there is none but there boss is a woman and that's Annabelle Abaya. And she and Paeng Seguis who is from Mindanao, in fact from Surigao, are here today. All the members of the peace panel for the MILF negotiations in fact are from Mindanao. Paeng Seguis is a Mindanaoan from Surigao, a constituent of Bishop Otchimar. And maybe during the conversation today and in succeeding conversations, Annabelle and Paeng can brief you more on what is happening in the peace process with the MILF. But what I can say in general is that we are hopeful that the formal resumption of the GRP-MILF Peace Talk is imminent. Is that the right word, Paeng?

Paeng has just been back from Kuala Lumpur, but before that I had directed him to conduct massive consultations and dialogues with our people especially in Mindanao. And I'm glad that he has now the output of the consultations of Consult Mindanao, so that what he brings to the negotiations will be truly reflective of the people's will.

Part of what Paeng has been able to do this past weeks are two very important achievements: one, the GRP and the MILF have concluded an agreement to operationalize, what Father Bert referred to, the International Contact Group for the GRP-MILF Peace Process, and I'm sure that the inputs that you put here will be a very important... ah, the output you've put here will be a very important input as he moves forward to operationalize this International Contact Group. And just a few days ago, the two panels have also come to an agreement on a civilian protection component of the International Monitoring Team. And we are happy that to date the respective declarations of the GRP and the MILF on the suspension of military offensives and actions continue to hold firmly.

You have given us a very pithy output on the report, very substantive, much to be studied from the national government, from the OPAPP and the peace panelists, the National Security Adviser and even the Adviser for Mindanao who supervises the MEDCO.

So, we thank you very much and my speech is not the main event, the main event is the presentation of the output. So, I would like to thank you, Archbishop Capalla and all the members of the BUC, for being consistent champions of peace and sustainable development. And we will very carefully look at what you have done what you have presented us and seek to do what we can practicably carry out. But we thank Consult Mindanao for giving the opportunity to be able to reach out to more Mindanaoans and also for keeping them aware of the path to peace.

So, to all of you, thank you, whether you are Muslim, Christian or Lumad. Thank you for keeping the peace through your hard work and steady faith in the Almighty.

Daghan salamat kaninyong tanan.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 37th General Assembly Bishops-Ulama Conference. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133940/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26713&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 1st Mindanao Cooperative Peace Forum

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 1st Mindanao Cooperative Peace Forum

[Delivered at the Xavier University Gymnasium, Cagayan de Oro City, Misamis Oriental, October 29, 2009]

Thank you very much Chair Juarez for your introduction.

I would like to begin by greeting all our awardees today and to greet also the officials of Northern Mindanao who have come to be here with us and the cooperative movement. We have the mayor of the City of Cagayan de Oro, Mayor Jaraula, thank you for your welcome; we have a congressman from Cagayan de Oro, Congressman Rufus Rodriguez; from the province of Misamis Oriental, we have Governor Oscar Moreno and Congressman Bambi Emano; from Agusan del Norte, Congressman Joboy Aquino and from Agusan del Sur, Governor Tina Plaza. And to all of you leaders of the cooperative movement especially here in Mindanao, congratulations for convening this very 1st Mindanao Cooperative for Peace Conference!

Makasaysayan kining atong okasyon karong adlaw, ug usa sab ka importanteng adlaw kay gipauban nato ang espiritu sa kooperatiba sa mga pundasyon sa kalinaw. Nalipay ako nga gipasugdan ang paggamit sa diwa sa kooperatiba paingon sa kalinaw.

Because especially in Mindanao, I think we all know — those who are here today — the development must come hand to hand with peace, because the problem is rooted in economic exclusion. Kulang diri ang mga oportunidad alang sa pagpapalambo labi na sa mga ethnic communities ug mga communities sa laing-laing kultura kini ginikan ang mga giyera sa pila ka dekada.

Ako mipuyo dinhi sa Mindanao, didto sa Iligan niadtong bata pa ako. Nakitan ko kaniadto ang panagkauban sa mga tao gikan sa lain-laing sektor o laing-laing ethnic origins ug mga relihiyon. Sa ako bata pa ang akong lola na akon kauban diri, busa ako gapuyo sa iyang balay, taga-Pangasinan ang iyang mga ig-agaw, Pangasinan ug Ilokano. Ang akon mga laing-laing mga batan-on nga higala mga Bisaya, ang trainer nga gapalit sa among copra Chinese, ang tag-iya sa electric company mestizo Espanyol, ang daghan sa mga nagabaligya sa tiangge sa palengke mga Muslim. Kami tanan kanunay kauban, walay giyera, walay conflict. Apan karon lain na ang aton sitwasyon, masabtan ko ang kasakit nga gibati sa taga Mindanao karon nga gipag away! away naman ang mga Muslim, Kristiyano, Lumad. Kauban ko busa sa gibati sa mga taga-Mindanao ang dakong paglaum samtang gigamit nato ang mga prinsipyo sa kooperatiba alang sa kalinaw.

Ingon ni Director Ravanera, ang aton convenor — ug ikaw ‘di ba ang nagimbita kanako, nagsulat nga unta makaabot ako diri — ang mga prinsipyo sa kooperatibismo mahimong gamiton sa pagpa-uswag sa nagkalain-laing serbisyo ug sektor. Ug dinhi sa Mindanao duna kamo’y mga agricultural cooperatives nga gapahulam kapital nga ipalit ug mga farm inputs. Importante ni labi na karon adlaw kay karon ang anibersaryo sa Indigenous Peoples Rights Act nga daghan sa ila mga mang-uuma.

Unta dako ang motabang ug mga kooperatiba sa reporma sa ancestral domain ug ang aton mas dako nga reporma, the bigger reform kay ang ancestral domain law kauban sa reporma sa yuta o land reform. Ug nalipay ko ug garbo para sa atong administrasyon sa pagpapamahagi ng milyun-milyong ektarya ng lupa sa buong Pilipinas, mahigit isang milyong benepisyaryo na ng CARP at halos ganun din karaming katutubo ay taas-noo na may-ari na ng sariling lupa sa ating administrasyon.

Sa tibuok nasod, sukad sa pagsugod sa atong administrasyon, kay ang aton administrasyon lang ang nakahatag ug CADTs ug CALTs, nakahatag na kita ug 3.6 million hectares alang sa labaw sa 800,000 nga benepisyaryo. Busa ang mga Lumad sa Mindanao naman... busa mga Lumad naga control na sa ilang mga yuta ug ila mga natural resources. Kay diri sa Mindanao dunay CADTs alang sa 1.7 million hectares alang sa hapit 400,000 nga benepisyaryo. Busa ang mga Lumad sa Mindanao naa nag control sa mga yuta ug sa natural resources apan tingali kinahanglan nila ang mga kooperatiba aron makatabang sa ila to be able to practice the rights that they now have according to law.

I understand that in Region 10, we have 40 cooperatives of Lumads and 15 cooperatives of Muslims including cooperatives of former MNLF combatants. And indeed, that is a concrete way by which we can say cooperatives promote peace. Several cooperatives of the Lumads are into Community-Based Forest Management Agreements with the DENR.

Apan adunay pila ka kooperatiba na they were formed kay gusto nila magnegosyo ug kining mga kooperatiba na gi-organize alang sa negosyo sa mga Lumad dunay pila nga nagalisud kay wala kaayo nga experience ang mga miyembro sa pagmaneho sa kooperatiba. Unta ang usa nga akong hangyuon sa mga dagko nga kooperatiba labi na katong mga experienced sa mga gintawag nilang millionaire cooperatives kay dako na kaayo, dugay na kaayo, experience na kaayo, successful kaayo, unta kamo ang makatabang kining mga bag-o nga kooperatiba.

We see cooperatives as an important instrument to fight poverty and therefore because poverty and conflict go together, peace and progress go together, it also becomes an important instrument to be able to bring about peace. And it is important that we integrate our efforts to fight poverty in order to promote peace.

In the national government, we have been integrating the programs of the DSWD, the DOH and other Anti-poverty agencies into a National Social Welfare Program to protect the poorest from the global crisis, to help those whose earnings are limited whether by illness, disability, loss of job, old age, and also those who are poor because they live in marginalized communities sama gyud sa aton mga IPs na sila ang labing kabus nga mga community sa atong nasod. And we seek to support them and help them through an integrated social welfare program that includes livelihood projects, skills and technology transfer, emergency and temporary employment, pension funds, food aid, cash subsidies, child nutrition, adult health care, medical missions, salary loans, insurance, housing programs, educational and other savings schemes, cheaper medicine — thanks to our congressmen who are here today and their colleagues — and microfinance ug diri gihapon importante ang atong mga kooperatiba.

Kinahanglan ang mga kooperatiba nga gapahulam sa kapital sa mga microentrepreneurs. During our administration, there is an unprecedented P150 billion pesos unleashed for microcredit. And much of this, though it came from the national government, reached microentrepreneurs through rural banks, accredited NGOs and cooperatives. And there again is your important role in fighting poverty and promoting peace.

Nalipay ko nga mahibaw-an nga 60% sa mga kooperatiba dinhi sa Mindanao gatabang sa mga microenterprises, congratulations kaninyo. Kini epektibong panginabuhian sa kadaghanan sa aton katawhan. Nakahatag na ug hapit three million nga trabaho sukad sa 2001 hangtod Hunyo sa tuig 2009 ang mga microentrepreneurs ug daghan sa ila nagasalig sa mga kooperatiba aron makatabang sa ila not only from financing microfinance but also from... in order to learn the management skills that cooperatives labi na ang aton mga millionaire experienced cooperatives dako na ang experience.

Busa kining adlaw, mga kooperatiba, mga leaders sa aton cooperative movement ang atong tuyo karong adlaw ang tuyo sa national government sa amon bahid busa niuban kami nining aton nga okasyon karon ipadayon nato ang mga programa nga makatabang sa tanan sektor ug makatabang sab sa pagpalambo sa kalinaw sa Mindanao ug sa nasod.

Ug mosalig ako nga ang mga programang gisugdan sa mga kooperatiba mao gyud ang inyong tuyo, and that will also be your accomplishment — prosperity and peace sa tibuok Mindanao ug busa sa tibuok nasud.

Daghan salamat kaninyong tanan.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 1st Mindanao Cooperative Peace Forum. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133957/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26685&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 26th General Meeting of the Asian Bankers Association (ABA)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 26th General Meeting of the Asian Bankers Association (ABA)

[Delivered at the Carlos P. Romulo Auditorium, Yuchengco Tower, RCBC Plaza, Makati City, October 30, 2009]

Thank you very much.

I'd like to thank my Presidential Adviser, the Honorable Alfonso Yuchengco, for introducing me and also for inviting me to be in this very, very important event.

I'd like to also acknowledge Dr. Jeffrey Koo, the founder of the ABA, a well-known personality in the APEC Business Advisory Council and a renowned banker, and Madame Susan Chang. And I'm sure Secretary Favila and the other officials of the Philippine government join me in welcoming all our guests. Welcome to the Philippines!

I would also like to acknowledge, I see in this gathering three former Cabinet members: I see former Prime Minister Cesar Virata, former Secretary of Finance as well; I see former Trade and Industry Secretary Roy Navarro, of course, because RCBC is the host and he is also the incumbent chairman of the Clark Development Corporation; and I see my former Secretary of Finance who with great pain and suffering worked to do the reforms that are now making our economy resilient today, Secretary Lito Camacho.

The backdrop to this summit, as we have heard from Presidential Adviser Yuchengco, is an economic crisis that still grips much of the world, complicated by natural disasters that have left and are still leaving a tragic scar in our part of the world. The economic crisis is surely man-made, too often as a result of the poor judgment of some of our fellow global financial citizens. And increasingly even our natural disasters are being laid at the feet of manmade global warming.

I was just reminded that the last time I was here in this building was when we heard "The Inconvenient Truth" that was being preached then about global warming, and here we are today. Today, we have again a momentous event, a discussion on what's ahead for Asian banking. Of course, you are the bankers, you are the experts, you will be the ones to come up with the answers, but what I can say is that if men and women make these problems, then men and women must solve them, too. And at no time has the need for greater cooperation been demanded of the international community than now.

But, I congratulate the Asian banks, because as Ambassador Yuchengco said, you have shown that you can come together to beat back the challenge of economic calamity. Compared to other regions, Asia has a healthy financial system that remains steady and ready to support growth. Our region's banks are virtually free of toxic assets. In general, you have not needed government bailout money. Years of trade surpluses and high savings rates have contributed to record foreign reserves. Debt loads for governments, corporations and consumers are a fraction of those in the U.S. and Europe. Inflation and interest rates have fallen rapidly as you the Asian banks have deftly managed this fluid global environment. So, we can say looking at the Asian banking sector that given the overall global economic picture, the region is doing well and therefore prospects for Asian banking are strong. This is reinforced by a recovery that has already started.

The nations of Asia are addressing the challenges of the global economic crisis cooperatively, and your meeting here together is an example of that. Asia's response to the crisis has shown that our region is well-positioned to accelerate its growing share of the global economy once the storm clouds of this crisis have abated.

Although all Asian economies have fought the pain coming from the global recession, that pain has not been evenly distributed — Do I see also Gabby Singson, former Central Bank governor? How are you, Governor? — To go back to the different Asian economies, China and India as we know and we expect will long remain regional and global out-performers. Their growth continuous to be remarkable. The most trade-dependent economies in our region have been the worst hit because the global recession has led to a virtual collapse in international trade. They have endured months of recession, fortunately, that now appears to be easing.

The Asian states that have been performing best, that are still enjoying positive growth are those emerging markets where private consumption is a high proportion of GDP. Indonesia and Vietnam have private consumption at 65%, the Philippines 70%, Sri Lanka 65%, and Bangladesh 75%. These states are outperforming the trade-dependent economies. Also, those of us who took the bitter medicine of reform some years ago have done better. That is certainly the case with the Philippines, which is why I mentioned Secretary Lito Camacho earlier, he was the one who started those reforms.

The Philippines is therefore a country that I am pleased to say has demonstrated the strength and resiliency of emerging market economies during this period of global economic crisis. The Economist magazine has tagged the Philippines as among the top key emerging markets beyond the BRIC countries, because as I said earlier, well before the global crisis and before Lito went back to the private sector, to banking sector, we were setting a new economic course for the Philippines. This course was at the core of our economic reform agenda. Our reforms have generated 34 consecutive quarters of growth, the fastest growth in 30 years, created 8 million jobs, and allowed us to maintain the lowest inflation in a generation. More importantly, poverty went down, revenue went up, and allowed the nation to invest in human and physical infrastructure unprecedented in a generation.

The rating agencies upgraded our rating. Moody's said: "The upgrade was prompted by the relatively high degree of resilience exhibited by both the country's financial system and external payments position in the face of global financial and economic crisis."

The peso has remained stable and strong even amidst the global financial downturn. The growth of remittances from our overseas workers still defy expectations, a good indicator and reflection of the stability of our economy.

The Philippines, however, is not alone. While many nations in Asia have been deeply affected by the global downturn, many have also been havens of stability and islands of calm during this period of tremendous volatility. And I am glad to see that capital is returning to the region.

This is a good setting in which to ask not only what's ahead for Asian banking but to influence what is ahead for Asian banking. These are good setting in which to step up the formation of a new global financial regulatory regime that can accommodate the new scope and complexities of the world's financial transactions today.

And I am confident that the Asian bankers will be a catalyst having been successful through this crisis, a catalyst in the gathering groundswell for the reforms in the banking system of Asia and the world to make the new financial order more responsive to the needs of the 21st century.

So, my very best wishes for your success. Congratulations in the previous successes and all the best once again for the future.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 26th General Meeting of the Asian Bankers Association (ABA). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133928/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26712&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2nd National ICT Confederation of the Philippines (NICEP) Summit

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 2nd National ICT Confederation of the Philippines (NICEP) Summit

[Delivered at the Jasmine Hall, Fontana Convention Center, Clark Freeport Zone, Pampanga, November 5, 2009]

Thank you very much Chairman Ray Chua for your kind introduction.

I'd like to thank also Chairman Sorio for his very kind welcome remarks and also Mr. Rosenberg for your being the host of this event, Cyber City Teleservices president. Of course, our host developer is Mr. Benny Ricafort, president of CDC, and our host congressman, Congressman Tarzan Lazatin. And I see our host city mayor, Mayor Blueboy Nepomuceno also here with us today. Thank you, Blueboy. Because Clark is made up of Angeles City and Mabalacat, we have other host mayor, Mayor Boking Morales, also here with us today. We have other national government officials, our president of the NorthRail and chairman of the Subic-Clark Corridor, Secretary Ed Pamintuan, and a number of mayors of Pampanga who are here today. And I'm very glad that they're all here with us. And of course, I greet not only George Sorio and Mr. Rosenberg but all the officers and leaders of the National ICT Confederation of the Philippines or NICEP for this very important summit.

And I congratulate not only Ray Chua but the other commissioners and all the other colleagues in the Commission on ICT for your partnership with the private sector. Congratulations also to all of you, all of us for being selected again by the National Outsourcing Association of the U.K. as the off shoring Destination of the Year.

Indeed, the Philippines ranks as among the best off shoring hubs in the world because of cost competitiveness and more importantly our highly trainable English proficient IT enabled management and manpower. Our having won the off shoring Destination of the Year Award again also highlights the growing importance of the Philippine IT-BPO industry in the global market.

If in previous administrations electronics was the big ticket item for our dollar earnings, today we are creating wealth by developing the labor-intensive, skills intensive service sector like BPO and tourism as the key growth sectors, just as I predicted during my first State of the Nation Address in 2001. At that time, 2001, the Philippine ICT industry was virtually nothing — 4,000 workers. Well, there was a small one here, AOL. But we gave ICT a central role in our Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan.

We initiated efforts in three areas:

First, we built up the telecommunications infrastructure and opened the market for internet phone calls. In 2001, I said that interconnectivity is a must. We supported wider public access to communications and information services promoting interconnectivity and also establishing IT internet connections in public high schools which should serve, hopefully, as internet cafes during off school hours and through encouraging the provision of more broadband services in cities and identified growth areas. As a result of our push for telecommunications infrastructure and connectivity, international calls went down from 40 cents to today in VOIP, Rey Chua just told me, it's down to two cents from 40 cents for IDD.

But when I saw that we all had our interconnectivity done, and the cost of connectivity had gone down, then the BPO operators gave us a new requirement for infrastructure redundancy. These demand came after the Taiwan tremor so that no Taiwan tremor could ever again cut off our cyber services from their global clients, we encouraged the telecoms giants — PLDT and Globe — to invest billions in international redundancy.

I remember groundbreaking the one of PLDT in La Union, and I remember the ceremonial groundbreaking which was held in Makati for the Globe which enters through Ballesteros in Cagayan. And because that Ballesteros has to have a connection all the way to Manila, any point from Ballesteros, Cagayan — is that Ballesteros? Yeah — all the way up to Manila can now have an internet connection because of that backbone.

And just to show how our redundancy and our infrastructure has caused us to be resilient and to have uninterrupted services, I remember a few years ago — was it typhoon Milenyo that hit NCR? — and I went to Convergy's and I was talking to the Philippine president of Convergy's and I asked her how did the typhoon affect you. Well, she said, "well, my roof in my house was blown off but the BPO services continued 24/7, no problem with that."

Now we had Ondoy again and I went back to the same company for yet another expansion and I asked them, so how did the last typhoon affect the services? Nobody... ah, the first day of Ondoy when the floods were very high there were some absences, but the next day everybody was on the job and our infrastructure was not affected at all. So that is one of our joint accomplishments. Congratulations to the industry!

The second area for our efforts was to ensure an appropriate policy and legal environment. We've been asking Congress to create a Department of ICT, but while we still don't have that, we started with the Public-private Sector Task Force on ICT with myself as chairman. Then, I created by Executive Order a Commission on ICT, and we are guided by the philosophy that it is the market, not the government that should determine technological outcomes. For instance, when we started in 2001, we thought that we would become very, very big in programming but the market provided that we will become very, very big in contact centers.

That is market determined, that is private-sector determined, and the job of the government is not to dictate which sub-sector will grow the fastest. Our job whether it is fast growth of contact centers relative to programming, our job in accordance with our philosophy is that the ICT sector should be driven by the private sector with minimal government intervention and regulation. So our job, our role is to provide the environment to create the growth of ICT.

As part of that enabling environment, we created a new title in the investment priorities plan called IT parks for purposes of giving incentives, and we assisted investors in identifying promising provincial sites, and we built more transport facilities and telecoms facilities to the sites where investors wanted to go. For instance, I recall investors were very happy and impressed with the English that is spoken in Baguio but they did not have good connectivity. So, I talked to the telecoms giants to provide the connectivity. We still continue to follow the market and make it move more smoothly — that is our work. Now the market is leading us to train our sights on growing the higher value added segments of the off shoring and outsourcing industries like accounting, legal, human resources and administrative services.

Geographically we identified a Cyber Corridor as one of the country's five super regions for economic development, together with Mindanao for agribusiness, Central Philippines for tourism, the Luzon Urban Beltway and North Luzon also for agribusiness. Our cyber corridor started with Metro Manila up to Metro Cebu. This hub now according to our public-private sector task force which drew up our road map for RICT, this is now the core but not the only elements of the strategic plan... oh, I wouldn't even call it the core but the opening, the original seeds for the future development of business process outsourcing. And as part of this road map, you in the private sector together with the government expanded that cyber corridor from the two centers of excellence: Metro Manila and Metro Cebu, to span what you call the 10 next wave cities — and because we're talking about a corridor I'll talk about it geographically from South to North — Davao, Cagayan de Oro, Bacolod, Iloilo, Lipa; that's five. The others are Metro areas: Metro Laguna consisting of Sta. Rosa, Calamba, Los Baños, Cabuyao and San Pablo; Metro Cavite consisting of Bacoor, Dasmariñas, Imus and Cavite City; South Bulacan consisting of Malolos and Calumpit; Central Bulacan consisting of Baliuag, Marilao and Meycauayan; and we are very happy Central Pampanga consisting of Clark, Angeles and Mabalacat. In fact, I congratulate Clark for your fast ICT growth, you have now 15,000 ICT workers.

We are now number three. In other words, after Metro Manila and Metro Cebu comes Metro Pampanga. That is where the market has brought us and as far as infrastructure is concerned telecom infrastructures, infrastructure needed for a good ICT operation, BPO operation, Rey Chua tells us, wala nang makakatalo sa Clark. Congratulations!

Finally, the third area to support the growth of ICT is the development of human capital to close the digital divide. Well, George mentioned to us the term of digital divide, not only the digital divide but also the voice culture divide. In technical education and skills training, one of the sources of pride of our administration is that we have invested three times that of three previous administrations combined. A very large portion of this investment goes to our call center training partnership with the Business Process Association of the Philippines represented here by Oscar Saniez.

TESDA partnered with BPAP to train near-hires for call centers and other IT related fields. Since 2006, that was when this partnership was drawn up; TESDA has provided more than half a million training slots in various fields of ICT, including more than a hundred thousand directly supervised by the BPAP. In fact, if you're going to talk about how much government has invested directly for ICT development, we have invested five billion pesos for ICT development particularly R&D, manpower, infrastructure, including the U.P. Science and Technology Complex, which we hope will become a premier technology and business IT incubator.

So today, where are we? Eight years later from when I said that ICT will be a growth sector of the future, from 4,000 BPO workers in 2001, now it's like around 400,000 with good paying jobs that keep our young people at home rather than having to go abroad for a nice job. The BPO phenomenon speaks eloquently of our competitiveness and productivity.

But, it also happened because you the private sector and we the government sector shared a belief in ICT as the growth sector of the future, and we shared our vision of nurturing this sector.

So, I thank you all for having achieved this together. Thank you for forming the NICP and may you have more success.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 2nd National ICT Confederation of the Philippines (NICP) Summit. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133923/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26742&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening ceremonies of the 35th Top Level Management Conference of the Kapisanan ng mga Brodkaster ng Pilipinas (KBP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening ceremonies of the 35th Top Level Management Conference of the Kapisanan ng mga
Brodkaster ng Pilipinas (KBP)

[Delivered at the Ballroom 1, East Wing Bldg., Taal Vista Hotel, Tagaytay City, Cavite, November 12, 2009]

Thank you. Thank you.

Thank you very much Cerge, former National Chairman of the KBP, the first KBP Chair to be elected to six terms, the first broadcaster to rise from the ranks of the provincial reporters to become KBP Chair, and I just found out he still has a title in the KBP, KBP Chairman Emeritus. Congratulations, Cerge!

Greetings to our host officials, Governor Maliksi and City Mayor Tolentino. And of course greetings to the officers of the KBP once again headed by Butch, Herman, Rupert Nicdao and March, and all the other officials and leaders of the broadcast industry who are here. I say greetings again because as Butch is asking me how long have you been attending our KBP fellowships. Oh! from the time I was still a senator every year: national, regional NCR, Region III, sometimes other regions. I'm probably the one official who has attended the biggest number of KBP conferences.

In fact, as Butch said in his very nice way of putting it, what he said echoes what many pillars of the KBP say that no other president has been as close to this organization as me. So, I hope you will not begrudge me for wishing that the broadcast media will be kinder to me during the rest of my term as president. But although certain individual broadcast institutions and personalities have been very much against me, as an organization, I do acknowledge that KBP has been supportive. And I thank you for that.

KBP as an organization is the voice of moderation, reason and professionalism. Years ago you developed a code of standards and business practices. That is a good start for a self-regulating industry.

You meet in very challenging times today, as Butch says, as the broadcast industry prepares for wide-ranging technological changes. These are brought about by the ICT revolution. If centuries ago there was an agricultural revolution, then there was an industrial revolution, now we have an ICT revolution. And there is no stopping ICT from becoming the wave of our future, whether in your industry or in any other industry. Our country should use it to enhance our competitiveness. And I know you will use it to enhance yours.

The most basic step to achieve this is to build up telecommunications infrastructure. That is why part of the ten-point program of our administration, one of the ten points, is to develop a network of not only transport but digital infrastructure to connect the entire country. And the most cost-effective way to do this would have been to set up a national broadband network, and that is why we obtained financing from China for that purpose.

But when the NEDA Secretary alleged to me a bribery attempt attending the deal, involving a constitutional officer not under the administrative supervisory jurisdiction of the President of the Philippines, I advised the Executive Secretary and the DILG Secretary about it with the view of having the matter discreetly investigated. ES directed the National Security Adviser to carry out the investigation while the DILG Secretary conducted his own. The findings reported back to me were “inconclusive.” Nevertheless, for the sake of propriety, I moved to cancel the project after explaining the matter to the President of China.

Unfortunately, there are a lot of unsubstantiated allegations and gossip and innuendos mixed up with the facts of the case. This is part of our immature political system. It is part of our immature institutions. And this immaturity hurts the growth of the nation. That is why after economic reform, I have long called for fundamental reform of our political system and our institutions.

I have worked tirelessly to change our economy, and I have set it on a path of reform. That is why the World Bank in 2008 upgraded our income standing from a low-income country to that of a middle-level income country. With our rise in status, from low-income to middle-income the expectations for accountability and transparency arise. Per the benchmarks of the U.S. Millennium Challenge Corporation, we pass the score card of a low-income country standard for ruling justly including control of corruption, investing in people and economic freedom. But now that we have moved to middle-income level status, we must hurdle a higher benchmark.

That is why once again I call for fundamental reform of our political system to ensure greater accountability and transparency. But also reform to make politics less destructive.

The media can also do so much to ensure greater accountability and transparency, and you can also do so much to make politics less destructive. Of course, I do not expect you to be part of a government propaganda machine. But I and certainly our people expect you to deliver truthful stories based on facts. And that is I’m sure the guiding principle of your self-regulation as an industry.

You are self-regulating because you are free, except for the martial law period; the Philippines have always had one of the freest media environments in the world. What has changed, however, between then and now is the speed in which news travels. This is again part of technology and this is part of what your conference is all about. This newly competitive news that utilizes so many fantastic technologies has the upside that you must seize but there is also a downside. The downside is the huge temptation to get the story out quickly rather than spending time to get the facts right. And this can lead to innuendo and rumor presented as facts.

So with the great power of the new technology comes the great responsibility to be evermore mindful that your primary duty is to tell the truth, exercising objectivity and impartiality, always with an eye to the repercussions for the country that your stories may create. And again, that is your great responsibility because you are a self-regulating industry.

You are performing a function not only of your media institution as private sector business institutions but a function that other countries sometimes exercise from the regulator’s point of view. But you are the one exercising that, so you are also in that sense — public servants.

And as you continue to render your services to our people, I wish you well in responsibly exercising this self-regulating function that becomes even more compelling with the growth of technology. And on top of that, I also wish that media would spend more time imparting a message of hope and of renewed opportunities. Everyday there are numerous stories waiting to be told that inspire our people.

So, as you continue to render your services to our people, I congratulate the KBP for upholding loyalty to professional standards. You have become a valuable partner in development, congratulations!

And when Butch was talking about “Beyond Broadcasting” we’re not only talking about how the different media are now converging but also what you do as KBP beyond your broadcasting business, you have your own corporate social responsibility as KBP. And in this connection, I am supporting your nationwide tree planting project that you have called “Broadcastreeing.”

This is a welcome contribution to our efforts to confront the challenges of climate change. For KBP to have pioneered in this I am sure of your success and in advance, I am most grateful. I also congratulate the many members of the KBP who keep to the straight and narrow path because of your loyalty to your professional standards, you have indeed become among our heroes who are gathering the stones to help build a strong republic.

Sa inyong lahat, maraming, maraming salamat. May you have a successful convention.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the opening ceremonies of the 35th Top Level Management Conference of the Kapisanan ng mga Brodkaster ng Pilipinas (KBP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133907/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26807&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino community

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a meeting with the Filipino community

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, The Fullerton Hotel, Singapore, November 13, 2009]

Thank you. Maraming salamat.

Maraming salamat. Thank you.

Thank you Secretary Romulo for your introduction.

Thank you Ambassador Mindy Cruz for your very, very eloquent warm words of welcome and tribute to our quality Pinoys here in Singapore.

I'd like to introduce also the members of our delegation who are here on the head table. If I may go from my left to my right: Our Press Secretary is Cerge Remonde, gikan sa Cebu; our congresswoman from the BUHAY Partylist, Iyay Coscolluela; our Secretary of Finance, Secretary Gary Teves; our congresswoman from Pangasinan, Congresswoman Rachel Arenas; and then next to Secretary Romulo, our Deputy Speaker of the House of Representatives, Girlie Villarosa; ing congresswoman kong kabalen, si Congresswoman Anna Bondoc; our congresswoman from Manila, Naida Angping; and our Secretary of Trade and Industry, Peter Favila.

At naman sa inyong lahat, magandang gabi, mayap a bengi king kabalen kong Kapampangan. Dagiti kakailay ti bangir ni mamang ko, naimbag nga rabii yo amin. San saray kabaleyan, masantos ya labi ed sikayon amin. Sa mga taga-Visayas ug Mindanao, maayong gabii kaninyong tanan.

Maraming, maraming salamat sa muli ninyong mainit na pagsalubong, na kasing-init ng pagbati ninyo noong 2007.

Natutuwa ako at muli tayong nagkaroon ng pagkakataon na magkasama muli, na ako'y nagkaroon ng pagkakataon na makadalaw muli sa inyo at makadalaw dito. Actually, Dr. Reyes mentioned the times that I have visited, I visited one or two more times but I come here for lunch, for a business lunch and then I leave, so hindi ko kayo nakikita sa mga ganung panahon. Pero ngayon, masarap naman at nagkasama tayo at ako naman ay masayang-masaya dito sa ating "Salute to the Filipinos in Singapore." Thank you for giving me the opportunity to join in this Salute.

At talaga naman, balitang-balita yung kabutihang ginagawa ng mga Pilipino dito, at ang laki ng inyong kontribusyon sa ekonomiya ng Singapore, ang laki din ng inyong kontribusyon sa inyong mga pamilya at sa ating mga kababayan sa Pilipinas. Kaya kapuri-puri ang lahat ng ginagawa ninyo.

What you have shown here, totoo yun. Kilalang-kilala ang taga-rito. You are hardworking, you are talented, you are truly quality Filipinos. Nakita natin sa diskurso ni Mindy, ni Dr. Reyes, sa ating video yung iba't-ibang klase ng manggagawang Pilipinong nagtrabaho dito. Siyempre, yung unang nakararaming Pilipino na nagpunta rito in the earlier — maybe like ten, fifteen years ago — yung mga kasambahay. Ngayon, nakita natin may mga Pilipinos nasa industriya ng transportasyon kasi dinig ko kay Mindy, bahagi doon sa mga gumagawa ng inyong train system na pinagmamalaki ng mga Singaporeans ay mga Pilipino.

Sa IT, yun na nga yung isa sa mga kasunduan natin nung nag-state visit ako ng 2001, at naalala ko noong nagpunta ako rito in one of my visits and we had a chance to meet with a smaller group of the Filipino Community — one table only — grabe yung mga IT talents dito, ang babata. Noong bumalik ako sa Pilipinas, sabi ko doon sa aming ICT, at that time, Private-Public Sector Task Force, naku! ang tatanda na natin, yung mga genius doon ng IT na Pilipino, who are earning so well, they're all so young, they are all young enough to be our children, talagang bagong henerasyon, quality Filipinos and I'm sure that there's more of you in the generations to come.

Yung mga bangko, nabanggit nga si Lito Camacho at saka si Ding de Guzman. Yung mga ospital, naku! di lang nurse at doctor, noong nagkaroon ng SARS dito sa Singapore, yung mga nurse kasama sa mga bayani ng Singapore na pinagmamalaki ng Pilipino.

At pati nga yung mga kasambahay, mas mahusay ngayon, piling-pili at karamihan dumadaan pa sa training. At I'm so happy that that Bayanihan Center that we worked hard for — I remember even when I was still Vice President asking the Singapore government na sana ilibre yung lupa tapos tinayo ng mga Filipino community dito, sila Ding de Guzman very active doon — I'm so happy to see in the video na napakasagisag pa ang kanyang paglilingkod sa ating mga Pilipino dito.

And as we have seen our OFWs in Singapore have moved up the value chain to higher-paying jobs that require more complex skills. We have seen that Filipinos here excel in various fields, yun na nga si Rico Hizon kasama doon, si Vice President Bonilla ng Citibank.

The OFW community over the years has experienced such a significant improvement in your quality of life as well. Even the once who used to earn less are earning more because they are more skilled, and of course, first and foremost in importance, you continue to uphold the reputation of Filipinos as excellent and dedicated workers. Congratulations!

Natutuwa rin ako na nakikilala na ngayon ang kulturang Pilipino dito sa Singapore dahil sa inyong pagpupunyagi, dahil kilala kayo, dahil matagumpay kayo dito, nakakatulong kayo na magdala at magpakita ng kultura ng Pilipinas. On this 40th Anniversary of our Diplomatic Relations, one of the... no! not one but three or even four of the exhibits are happening right now about Philippine Culture in three different places because we came from the other two exhibits and it's so good to know that the Singaporeans are getting to know more about our culture. One of the exhibits is dedicated to the fiesta, kaya kilalang-kilala, nakikilala ang fiesta at iba't-ibang mga kultura at kaugalian ng iba't-bang mga rehiyon ng Pilipinas.

Early this evening, we were with Lito Camacho, one of the sponsors of the exhibit of Philippine Art at the Singapore Art Museum. And I am so happy and I encourage everyone to support these events. Maybe you can invite your Singaporean and other friends to see and experience the wealth of our culture.

As you know, I will attend the APEC Leaders' Economic Meeting here in Singapore starting tomorrow. The theme of APEC 2009 is "Sustaining Growth, Connecting the Region." We will discuss four priority areas:

First, addressing the crisis and preparing for recovery; Second, supporting the multilateral trading system; Third, accelerating regional integration; and Fourth, strengthening APEC.

Yung una nga, yung pinag-uusapan, addressing the crisis, preparing for the recovery, yun naman talaga ay isang napakaimportanteng pag-uusapan dapat.

Noong unang tumama ang global economic crisis, maraming mga ekonomista ay nangamba na baka tayo sa Pilipinas ay babagsak din. At isang dahilan sabi nila na baka babagsak tayo ay baka raw bumaba ang mga remittances ng OFW dahil marami sa mga OFW ay nagtrabaho sa mga bansa na naapektuhan ng krisis. Halimbawa nga dito sa Singapore, ngunit sa kabila ng maraming mga Pilipino ay nagtrabaho sa maraming mga bansa na natamaan ng krisis, pinakita ninyo na hindi ninyo pinapabayaang hindi pinapabayaang ng Pilipino ang kanyang pamilya at kanyang bansa, kahit na dumanas pa sa maraming hirap. Kaya sa halip na bumaba ang remittances ay tumaas pa. And now, as of the month of August, remittances in fact reached already $11 billion dollars.

At alam ko na ito ay nanggagaling din sa mga sakripisyong pinapasan niyo sa ibang bansa upang makapagtrabaho at makapagdala sa inyong pamilya. I'm glad that there are several of you, especially the expat executives who can have your families here, pero marami din ay hindi puwedeng magdala ng kanilang pamilya. Yun ay malungkot na trabaho at batid ko ang hirap at lungkot na dinadanas nitong mga ganitong uri ng pagtrabaho na hindi madadala ang pamilya dito.

And so my vision is to help make our economy competitive enough, and I've said this to you before, so that one day going abroad will just be a career choice, not the only option for our hardworking Filipino workers. And how to do that in this ever interconnected world? Well, the world is safer, more secure and more vibrant when leaders from so many nations come together to solve problems and look to the future together. That is the strength and the hope of the APEC meeting that will start tomorrow: to work hand in hand with our Pacific neighbors to forge a more perfect world.

Here, I know that every person has felt the devastation of the setback in the global economy that affected even such a strong economy as Singapore. At lalo na yung mga hindi naman executive ang trabaho or hindi naman IT expertise and trabaho, mahihirap na pamilyang mga pinanggalingan sa Pilipinas, yung mga kamag-anak nung mga nagtrabaho na nanggagaling sa mga mahihirap na pamilya sa Pilipinas, their relatives back home are the most vulnerable to the global shocks; their relatives are the most price sensitive. They feel the real pain when prices surge, when jobs are lost, when food prices are out of reach.

But one of the things we can say in APEC is that at least here in Asia, we are on a solid comeback; we have weathered the storm better than other regions and with greater resilience. Even the Philippines, with the challenges of a developing nation was prepared for the global shocks. It could have been worse if we had not taken the hard and unpopular but necessary economic and fiscal reforms several years ago. Kasama nga doon si Lito Camacho when he was still Secretary of Finance at kasama rin doon yung isang dating Singapore expat din, si Vince Perez who was BOI Managing Head for a while and move to other Economic Ministries like the Department of Energy later on. These reforms have what we could say, have kept the wolf away from the door. But the wolf is still out there. Isa nga sabi nung nag-meet yung mga nagsalubong sa akin na Singaporean officials — because they had meetings of the finance ministers, isn't it, Gary? the trade ministers — pinag-uusapan on when the fiscal stimulus should start to be taken but because all the countries did fiscal stimulus including us. And I said: no, it's too early for an exit plan. But then yes, they all agree. Sabi ko, actually, ang isang malaking problema kasi lahat naman tayo I think agreed that it's too early for an exit plan. It's too early to stop the fiscal stimulus, ang problema, how do you finance the stimulus? Yun ang problema at at least masasabi ko sa Pilipinas, we can still finance the fiscal stimulus, our bonds are still very, very marketable. So, yun ang dahilan kung bakit among many other things, I believe we are resilient and we will bounce back to that growth that Dr. Reyes has talked about, was talking about when I came here in 2007 that rapid growth that we achieved before it slowed down somewhat but at least never turned negative during the global economic crisis.

Our trip to attend the APEC Summit reflects the commitment of our administration to active engagement in trade, commerce and economic cooperation among nations. This energetic engagement, for instance, my many visits to Singapore has helped us in the country lift up the poor and feed the hungry. And so, it is important that we continue to engage globally.

Now, one of the things that I would like to point out tomorrow in the Summit is that one of the major dynamics of the 21st century is likely to be not just the flow of financial capital, not just the flow of goods and services but human capital, and I say that from experience. Tignan niyo, yung ating quality Pinoys na narito. You are just the pioneers of what will become, I believe in this coming century, a real global phenomenon.

The flow of labor will determine much about how the world grows and works together. So we have had a lot of trade now in goods, we're having a lot of trade in services like air services, for instance, telecommunications. We are also now about to enter a great age of global labor.

Today, it is the Filipinos among the leaders but tomorrow it will be many, many countries doing this. But we are pioneers here and we can tell the world that we have the chance to make sure we tap the possibilities. It is very important I believe that as we must recognize that as trade has expanded in goods, as trade has expanded in services, trade will expand as far as labor mobility is concerned. And the world might as well recognize it for one thing to make it orderly and the other one also, the more you recognize it, the more orderly you make it, the more you stop the abuse that sometimes preys on global laborers of all walks of life in economic strata.

Dito nga sa Singapore sa mga nakaraang taon, naririnig natin yung mga karanasan ng ating mga manggagawa, mga domestic helpers, di ba? nagkakaroon ng abuso kontra sa kanila but as the market becomes more sophisticated with the entry of the professionals, the CEOs, the COOs, mas napoproteksiyon ang ating mga manggagawa, lalo na yung manggagawa in the more manual kinds of work that are more vulnerable to abuse. So we need to put order there, the way that WTO was intended to put order in trade, and we need to put order also in the flow of human capital. Kasi, yun na nga, because we are pioneers in this new age of global labor, it is our obligation to make sure that we protect our workers wherever they may be.

Talagang gusto kong pasalamatang ang mga Pilipinong nagtatrabaho dito sa Singapore. Una sa lahat nga, tinaas ninyo ang antas ng mga Pilipino dito, nakakatulong sa proteksiyon ng kapwa niyong Pilipino dito. At patuloy, gaya ng kwenento niyo kanina, ang malasakit na pinapakita ninyo para sa ating bansa. Tunay kayong mga kaakibat, katuwang, kapuso sa pagkamit ng ating mga layunin sa isang magandang kinabukasan.

Ako'y nagpapasalamat doon sa nagpadala ng mga tulong dito sa ating mga nasalanta doon sa ating mga bagyo na nangyari itong nakaraang Setyembre at Oktubre. And that again shows how you Filipinos here in Singapore never forget the folks back home no matter how successful you are here. And so I am very grateful that our global Filipino, our quality Filipino — global, quality, Filipino pa rin. And you love your country and I really thank you very much and appreciate you for that.

Ipagpatuloy natin nawa ang ating pagtutulungan at pananalig sa ating mga programang pangkaunlaran, sabay-sabay nating kamtan ang magandang hinaharap para sa lahat.

I thank you very much for your words of appreciation, Dr. Reyes in behalf of the whole Filipino Community, and may I tell you that you are also very, very much appreciated not only by me but all the folks back home.

Maraming salamat. Mabuhay ang quality Pinoy ng Singapore!

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a Meeting with the Filipino community. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133854/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26860&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Kongreso ng Pamahalaan (Congress of Government Beneficiaries)
[Filipino] Talumpati
ng
Kagalang-galang Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa Kongreso ng Pamahalaan (Congress of Government Beneficiaries)

[Ipinahayag sa Ninoy Aquino Stadium, Rizal Memorial Sports complex, Manila, ika 16 ng Nobyembre, 2009]

Maraming salamat Secretary Pamintuan sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

Maraming salamat din kay Congresswoman Nayda Angping na sa ngalan ng kanyang kabiya, si Chairman ng Philippine Sports Commission Harry Angping ay nagamit natin itong lugar para sa ating gawain. Maraming salamat din at welcome Congresswoman Nikki Teodoro, at maraming salamat kay Ginang Daisy ang kinatawan ng mga benepisyaryo na nandito sa entablado, pero sa inyong lahat maraming, maraming salamat din at nagkasama tayo dito. Maraming salamat din kay Congresswoman Nayda Angping na sa ngalan ng kanyang kabiya, si Chairman ng Philippine Sports Commission Harry Angping ay nagamit natin itong lugar para sa ating gawain. Maraming salamat din at welcome Congresswoman Nikki Teodoro, at maraming salamat kay Ginang Daisy ang kinatawan ng mga benepisyaryo na nandito sa entablado, pero sa inyong lahat maraming, maraming salamat din at nagkasama tayo dito.

Natatangi ang araw na ito. Sa higit walong taong panunungkulan ko bilang Pangulo, ngayon lang nagkatipon-tipon ang mga kinatawan ng iba't-ibang mga sektor upang patunayan ang walang tigil nating pagsisikap na mapabuti ang buhay ng mamamayang Pilipino.

Maraming salamat doon sa mga resolusyon na inilatag ninyo na kumikilala sa mga nagawa ng ating pamahalaan para matulungan ang inyong mga sektor. Noong ako ay naging Pangulo sinabi ko, ang hamon natin ay labanan ang kahirapan ng taumbayan.

Mula noon hanggang ngayon, patuloy tayong nagsisikap na harapin ang hamong ito. Ang pagkikilala ninyo sa mga pinagpaguran natin ay nagpapataba sa puso at nagbibigay ng karagdagang lakas upang lalong maging masigasig ang ating ginagawa.

Noon pa'y ating nakita na kailangan nating ipatupad ang malawakang reporma na magsasa-ayos sa iba't-ibang aspeto ng ating pamumuhay. Ang pangangailangan agad ng pagbabago ay ang katayuan nuon ng ating ekonomiya at pinansiya. Ang naabutan kong kalagayan noong una ako umupo bilang Pangulo ay habang umaangat ang ekonomiya ng maraming mga bansa sa buong daigdig, ang ating ekonomiya naman ay humihina. That was the start of 2001, Asia was surging but our country was on the brink of bankruptcy.

Kaya gumawa tayo ng mga masusing reporma. Ang ating planong pangkabuhayan ay nakatukoy, una sa lahat, sa taumbayan — sa inyo. Higit sa lahat, ang layunin ng ating mga patakaran ay tulungan ang karaniwang Pilipino — tulungan kayo.

Sinimulan nating ipatupad ang mga mahihirap ngunit kailangang-kailangang repormang pinansiyal at pang-ekonomiya. Marami ang umayaw, nagalit sa akin ngunit ang mga bagong buwis ay nakatulong bayaran ang mas mabuting kalinga sa kalusugan — sino ang mga benepisyaryo dito ng Philhealth? — galing yan sa ating mga reporma. Mas magandang kalsada — sino yung umakyat dito sa Tarlac na gumanda ang kanyang negosyo dahil gumanda ang mga kalsada, ang SCTEX, sino yun? Yun! yang mga gumanda ang negosyo dahil gumanda ang mga kalsada na magdadala sa inyo ng customer at makakapaghatid ng inyong mga produkto — galing yan sa ating mga reporma.

At yung mas malakas sa sistema ng edukasyon — sino diyan ang ating mga scholar na nagtapos (crowd cheering) at nagkaroon ng trabaho — yan din ay nanggaling sa ating mga reporma. Hinubog ang mga patakaran ng pabahay upang iahon ang higit na mahihirap para naman manirahan at alagaan ang pamilya sa paraang may dignidad. Sino ngayon ang nakinabang sa mga pabahay natin? Yan din ay galing sa ating reporma.

Ang ating mga puhunan sa agrikultura ay naglalayong kilalanin ang ating mga magsasaka bilang backbone ng ating bansa, at bigyan ng mga modernong kagamitan para pakainin ang ating bansa at pakainin din ang mga pamilya. Sino diyan ang mga magsasaka na nakinabang sa mga programa ng ating pamilya? Oy! nakita ko si Ariel. Yan din ay galing sa ating mga reporma.

At itong mga ito ang ibat-ibang mga detalye ng kabuuan na sa loob ng tatlumpu't apat na sunod-sunod na quarters ay lumago ang ating ekonomiya hanggang sa umabot sa pinakamabilis nating paglago noong taong 2007. At siguro kasama kayo doon sa bilang ng masasabing mahihirap sila na bumaba mula nung 59% bumaba ng 47% yung nagsabing sila ay mahihirap.

At yan ay kahit lumaki ang ating populasyon, kahit lumaki ang ating populasyon dalawang milyon ang umahon, dalawang milyon ang nag graduate mula sa bilang ng mahihirap, naging middle-class na sila at hindi na mahihirap. Isang dahilan din kung bakit may mga umahon ay sa walong taon lumikha tayo ng walong milyong trabaho o isang milyon bawat taon, di hamak mas mahigit kaysa anumang ibang administrasyon. Sino diyan ang nagkaroon ng trabaho sa ating administrasyon? Meron kaninang umakyat, tinanong kung anong biyayang nakuha mo — employment. At yun ay isang napakaimportante para umahon mula sa kahirapan. At yung pagtaas ng ating presyo ng bilihin, kahit nagkaroon tayo ng bagyo. Dati-dati kung magkakaroon ng bagyo grabe ang taas ng presyo ng bilihin, pero ngayon pinakamababa ang inflation natin sa loob ng isang henerasyon, at yung piso ay lalong tumatag.

Tumaas ang tingin sa atin ng mga nagpapautang at namumuhunan, importante yun kasi pag mataas ang ating credit rating bumababa ang interes sa pautang. Kaya mas maraming nakakapagbukas o nagpapalawak ng negosyo. Sino diyan ang nakapagtayo o nakapagpalawak ng negosyo? Ayun! Kasama yan sa ating mga reporma.

Dumagsa pabalik ng bansa ang mga investors. Sino diyan ang mga nagtrabaho sa mga bagong mga investments dito? Ah, dapat i-recruit natin sila sa mga darating na panahon bilang Class 2010 dahil sila rin ay nakabiyaya sa ating administrasyon.

Higit sa lahat, dahil sa paglaki ng kaban ng bayan, nagkaroon tayo ng mas malaking pondo na ginagamit upang ipatupad ang programang imprastruktura at mga serbisyong kinakailangan, kasama na ang mga programang inyong napapakinabangan. Yun ang bunga ng ating mga reporma.

Ngayon alam nating lahat, noong isang taon hanggang ngayon, bumagsak ang pandaigdigang ekonomiya. Di ba alam natin lahat yun? At alam ko na bawat isa sa atin dito sa stadium na ito ay naramdaman ang sakuna na nanggaling dito sa pagbagsak ng pangmundong ekonomiya. At ang mga pinakamahihirap na mamamayan ang pinakanapapanganib sa mga kasindakan ng pandaigdigan. Ang mga pinakamahihirap ang pinaka-nakakaramdam pag tumataas ang presyo ng bilihin o pag nawawala ang trabaho o pag yung pagkain ay wala na sa abot-kaya. Ang pinakamahihirap ang nakakaramdam ng tunay na kasakitan pag yun ang nangyayari pag nawawala ang trabaho, pag nawawala sa abot-kaya ang presyo ng pagkain.

Ngunit nanggaling nga ako doon sa Singapore, nakipagkumpara sa ibat-ibang mga bansa, ano ang epekto ng krisis sa ibat-ibang mga ekonomiya haming sa maraming ibang bansa. Dito sa atin, higit tayong nakaraos sa bagyong dinanas ng pandaigdigang ekonomiya.

Ang Pilipinas, sa kabila ng mga hamon ng isang bansang umuunlad pa lamang, ay nakahanda para sa mga pandaigdigang kasindakan. Mas malala pa sana ang nangyari dito kung hindi natin ginawa ilang taon nakaraan yung mga kailangang reporma sa ekonomiya at kaban ng bayan. Nakapigil itong mga repormang ito, yung papasok sana na impakto ng pandaigdigang krisis napigil natin siya sa ating pintuan.

Hindi natin nakalilimutan na kasama kayo sa mga suporta sa ating mga reporma. Kaya't nararapat lamang na ibalik sa sambayanan, na ibalik sa inyo ang mga bunga ng reporma na bunga rin ng ating sama-samang sakripisyo. Kaya umaasa ako na simula dito sa ating kongresong ito magtutulung-tulungan tayo upang mahatak paitaas yung mga hindi pa rin umaangat sa ngayon. At natutuwa ako na naalala ninyo na magpasalamat kanina sa mga biyayang natanggap ninyo.

Kayo mga kinatawan ng milyun-milyong nakabiyaya sa ibat-ibang mga programa natin. Siguro wala nang ibang administrasyon na ganun kalawak ang mabibilang niyong nakabiyaya sa ibat-ibang mga programa natin. May mga wala rito siyempre dahil milyun-milyon yun — ang laman lang naman nitong lugar na ito, ang stadium ay limang libo lamang — so, meron ding nasa labas na kumikilala rin sa maraming magagandang nangyari sa buhay nila sa nakalipas na walong taon. At sana marinig natin ang kanilang mga tinig sa inyong pamamagitan.

Kayo, kasama ng mga tahimik na sumusuporta sa atin, ang inaasahan kong magtataguyod, magtatanggol sa ating mga reporma upang bumalik at manatili ang sigla ng ating ekonomiya at magtuloy-tuloy ang ating kaunlaran.

Ang hinihiling ko sa inyo, manalig tayo sa Panginoon. Manalig tayo sa ating sarili at magkakatotoo itong ating mga hinahangad para sa ating bansa. Pero higit sa lahat, Class 2010, inaasahan natin, inaasahan ko ang inyong suporta. Kaya maraming salamat sa inyong pagtitiwala sa pamahalaan at sa inyong lingkod.

Mabuhay ang Class 2010! Mabuhay ang lahat ng nagbenepisyo sa mga programa ng ating pamahalaan!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Kongreso ng Pamahalaan (Congress of Government Beneficiaries). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133828/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26861&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the LAKAS KAMPI CMD National Convention, November 19, 2009

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the LAKAS KAMPI CMD National Convention

[Delivered in PICC, Reception Hall, Pasay City, November 19, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Claudio.

Our leaders of the party, those on the head platform and those of you who are all on the floor welcome to the National Convention of LAKAS KAMPI CMD. Our party is the dominant party of our generation. Our party has been the largest political party in the country for 15 of the last 17 years. Seventy two percent of the country's elected leaders are part of us. Think of it: almost three out of every four elected leader is a party member. This overwhelming majority confirms that our party is the true party of the people.

We were a coalition of LAKAS-CMD and KAMPI. Now, this coalition is a full-fledged national political party. The Commission on Elections has upheld the validity of our merger. We have successfully hurdled the legal challenges thrown our way by those whose personal interests were prejudiced by the merger. It is now time to consolidate our ranks and fortify our Party for the electoral battle ahead.

Let us transform LAKAS KAMPI CMD from the "Party of the present" to become the "Party of the future." To that end, I am relinquishing today my position as National Chairperson and handing over the reigns of the Party top leadership to the brilliant young standard-bearer selected by the our National Executive Committee, Gilbert Teodoro.

Our Constitution and By-laws reserve the power of nomination to the National Executive Committee acting as the National Electoral College. Nonetheless, though that Executive Committee have sufficed to choose and nominate our standard bearer, our Party leaders have decided to involve a wide membership of the Party, through this convention process represented by you, the National Council today assembled here.

I congratulate the Executive Committee for this far-sighted decision to share the selection process and made that process truly a process of the party leaders from all over the country. This is a far-sighted decision and it keeps the tradition of free, democratic, and transparent selection of candidates that our Party holds sacred.

Thus, we have convened today to nominate and then to proclaim the Party's presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

Over and above the legal qualifications imposed by law, what we want to do today is to nominate presidential and vice-presidential candidates who possess the idealism, the confidence and even the youth to move our nation forward to win the fight against poverty and bring our country to the verge of First World within a generation.

In the fight against poverty, in the quest to bring our nation to First World within a generation to bring prosperity to the greatest number of our people, our Party has initiated reforms especially economic reforms that were due in no small measure to the vision and determination of our party members in Congress and across the local governments. Our congressional leaders passed much-needed reform legislation. Our local government leaders using your fully released IRA and also your own earnings of an increasingly active business environment, our local leaders stayed on the course of reform, exercises firm political will, and on top of their own local initiatives replicated the national programs in the countryside and in the urban centers. At a time when others, other parties were succumbing to the temptation of settling for the populist line, our Party sustained the reforms and emerged vindicated by an unprecedented 34 quarters of growth that the country enjoyed on our watch, and further vindicated by the resilience that our economy has demonstrated in the face of the global financial crisis. Our sacrifices to achieve these results attest that indeed our Party is the party that holds the nation's best interest at heart.

The people deserve, and our party is delivering, investments in three critical areas, what I call the three "E's" — the Economy, the Environment and Education. These issues are central to lifting up our nation and getting it ready for the next generation of leaders. And that is our battlecry — the next generation of leaders.

With our selection of capable, competent, energetic leaders to lead us into the next generation, our national initiative to fight poverty and reach the First World within the generation can succeed. But, first things first. Let us get them elected, elected with as big a mandate as you our leaders in the countryside and urban centers can win from our people, so that they can go beyond building on the gains of the programs of this administration and lead a new reform agenda on pro-people reforms, ever guided by the institutional ideology of our Party, the ideology of Christian democracy enriched by your interfaith dialogue with our Muslim brothers and sisters.

This is a big and arduous task. But our Party has been challenged many times before and has won. The presence of so many familiar faces, recognizable names, walang hinakot na kung saan-saan lang nanggaling, all leaders, genuine leaders who are all here as many as it can fit in this room, kasi marami diyang mga leaders halal na hindi pa nga makahanap ng upuan dito. So many leaders here from all over the country with a genuine mandate from their own people demonstrate that indeed our Party is a party that can win. With the hard work of party stalwarts, with the hard work of party grassroots, our Party can win the future for our nation.

To further enable to transform our Party from the 'party of the present' to the 'party of the future,' even before I made my offer to relinquish my position as chair, our Interim President Ed Ermita and our Interim Secretary-General Gabby Claudio, even ahead offered to step down and give way to other dynamic, capable and young representatives of the next generation. I thank them for the hard work that they have done as party caretakers. I congratulate the National Executive Committee for the choices you will make today for the new Party President and the new Party Secretary General. But let it be said, that though we are turning over the highest leadership of the Party to the next generation, our present generation and even the generation before me in our 17 year-old party have much to contribute the shoulders, the backbone will be the party stalwarts who have been there with us all these years.

Partymates, it is you representing the wide membership of the Party, who are selecting our new leaders and our new national standard bearers today. Inaasahang paninindigan ninyo ang mga desisyon na gagawin itong araw na ito. May each and every party leader and each and every party grassroots member work hard and work together for the victory of our Party, our party's standard bearers, and all our party's candidates in 2010.

To you all, Mabuhay ang LAKAS KAMPI CMD!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Lakas-Kampi CMD National Convention. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100409181028/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26889&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 10th World Chinese Entrepreneurs Convention (WCEC) with the theme: “World Prosperity Through Chinese Entrepreneurship” (addressing the challenges of the global crisis)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 10th World Chinese Entrepreneurs Convention (WCEC) with the theme: “World Prosperity Through Chinese Entrepreneurship” (addressing the challenges of the global crisis)

[Delivered at the Plenary Hall, Philippine International Convention Center (PICC), Pasay City, November 20, 2009]

Secretary Favila, xie, xie.

To all of you, ni hao!

Welcome, especially to Chairman Jia Qinglin of the Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference. And thank you for your very comprehensive review of China’s role in the world economy and the role of the Chinese entrepreneurs all over the world.

Filipinos have been visited by China’s most important officials in the last eight years. President Hu Jintao in 2005, Premier Wen Jiabao in 2007, NPC Chairman Wu Bangguo here in 2003, and now we have Chairman Jia Qinglin. Congratulations!

Welcome to the overseas Chinese entrepreneurs from all over the world, headed by Mr. Huang Mengfu, Chairman of the All China Federation of Industry and Commerce; and Dr. Jonathan Choi, thank you not only for being President of the Hong Kong Chinese Chambers but also for your pushing for this conference to be held here in Manila.

Congratulations for making that push on the part of the Philippines to Special Envoy Francis Chua; thank you Dr. Lucio Tan for being such a big sponsor of this event; as well as to the other members of the organizing committee, especially of course, the Federation of the Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry of the Philippines headed by President Alfonso Uy. They ensured the great honor for the Philippines of hosting this Convention.

In a world that has been made smaller, much smaller by technology, there is still no substitute for face-to-face contact to strengthen old ties and form new ones.

The world is more safe, secure and vibrant when business leaders from so many nations come together, as you, the world Chinese entrepreneurs have done today to solve problems and look to the future together. That is the strength and the hope of this World Chinese Entrepreneurs’ Convention: to work hand in hand among the Chinese entrepreneurs from different countries and with your respective governments to forge a more perfect world.

Every entrepreneur has felt the devastation of the setback of the global economy. Our collective commitment must be to make sure to learn from our mistakes, whether they are mistakes of government policy or mistakes of business and financial practices and make sure it never happens again.

As such, we must diversify our economies, work on greater cooperation while becoming more self-sufficient, and we must participate in the reform of the global financial system. It would be a travesty for finance entrepreneurs to revert to the old ways and not look back at the destruction that the financial system wrought through reckless disregard for the global good.

At least among economies with a very strong Chinese business community, especially the People's Republic of China itself, we are on a solid comeback. In the Philippines and the other countries, the other economies with a very big Chinese business community, we weathered the storm better and with greater resilience. Even the Philippines, with the challenges of a developing nation, was prepared for the global shocks. It would have been worst if we had not taken the hard and unpopular but necessary economic and fiscal reforms several years ago, but we can only have done that and we were able to do that because we had the support of the Filipino-Chinese business community.

Filipino-Chinese entrepreneurs — and that means over 90% of the Filipino-Chinese population — possess a sharp business sense, the keen ability to discover opportunities to offer goods and services that improve lives, the courage to take risks, the work ethic, focus and determination to attain your goals. These are the qualities that have made the Filipino-Chinese crucial to Philippine development and have made them also major contributors to our country's unprecedented growth over 34 successive quarters during my administration.

The sterling qualities of the Filipino-Chinese entrepreneur are on display even in activities that do not directly create wealth or even in activities that are not directly business. For instance, the generosity behind their federation's outstanding civic program to build classrooms or the efficiency of the Filipino-Chinese fire volunteers who are recognized as our country's best firefighters.

The Chinese have been an integral part of Philippine life for a millennium. Centuries before Spain laid claim on the Philippine archipelago, the Chinese had already established a strong presence in these islands as traders. Some intermarried with natives and were assimilated. We all know that the Philippine national hero, Dr. Jose Rizal, descended from a migrant from Jinjiang in Fujian province.

My husband's ancestor, Son Tua, also came from Fujian. During the Spanish period, the British came and invaded the Philippines and my husband's ancestor fought the British and was rewarded by the Spanish government with a nobility title along with vast tracts of land. I am proud to say therefore that my husband and my children are part Chinese.

Many of our leaders in government are Filipino-Chinese. For example, my Secretary of Agriculture, Arthur Yap, is Chinese; my Chairman of the Commission on Information and Communications Technology, Rey Chua, is Chinese; my Chairman of the Philippine Sports Commission, Harry Angping, who is with us today is Chinese; his wife, Congresswoman Naida Angping is the Representative of the District of Manila that covers the Filipino-Chinese Community or Chinatown. She's also here with us today. They come from Chinese entrepreneurial families.

Chinese entrepreneurs are resilient. And you Chinese entrepreneurs from all over the world are one reason why the world will bounce back from the global economic crisis.

So, my message to you today is let us do everything in our power, in government and in business, to ensure that we do not slip back into the same patterns as before.

We, in government are altogether all over the world looking for solutions to reform the global financial and economic system and as far as the business sector is concerned, I believe in the Chinese entrepreneurs and what you can do to change the world.

So, I am more hopeful than ever today that the more than 3,000 overseas Chinese entrepreneurs here from more than 20 nations are testament to the vitality and promise of a strong world business community that can help breathe new life into the world economy.

May you therefore have a productive and memorable stay in the Philippines, and may the outcome of your convention serve to make our world better and better.

Xie, xie.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 10th World Chinese Entrepreneurs Convention (WCEC) with the theme: "World Prosperity Through Chinese Entrepreneurship" (addressing the challenges of the global crisis). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133806/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26913&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening ceremony of the Philippine Tourism Congress and the Php 555 Billion investments in tourism infrastructure milestone

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening ceremony of the Philippine Tourism Congress and the Php 555 Billion investments in tourism infrastructure milestone

[Delivered at the Marriott Hotel, Resorts World Manila, Newport City, Pasay City, Metro Manila, November 25, 2009]

Thank you very much.

I'd like to thank my Presidential Adviser, the Honorable Alfonso Yuchengco, for introducing me and also for inviting me to be in this very, very important event. I'd like to also acknowledge the principal sponsor of the Tourism Act which we are now implementing with this Tourism Congress, congratulations!

Our former secretaries of Tourism who blazed the trail that has now become a road and our other officials of the Tourism family and of course the very valuable private sector members of the tourism industry which are officially recognized by the Tourism Act, the very first law on Tourism in our country as pointed out by Congressman Chatto. To all of you, congratulations!

In my State of the Nation Address in 2001, I said, we have the competitive edge in tourism in the natural wonders of our country and the natural warmth of our people. I said, we will provide roads to those wonders and the means to take the tourists there. I said, we will continue to liberalize the airline industry.

At that time, the global tourists knew us only for Boracay, Palawan and Cebu. We needed to reintroduce ourselves. Thus, the Department of Tourism commissioned the international consultants McKinsey and Co. to study Philippine tourism with a view to increasing our market share in the booming tourism industry of Southeast Asia. McKinsey recommended, among other things, developing the northeast Asian market in addition to our traditional U.S. market. As a result, the biggest numbers of our tourists now come from neighboring Asian countries, with Koreans topping the list for several years. Also impressive is the 500 percent growth since 2001 of tourists from China.

Around that time also, on another issue, in order to lower the cost of transporting food from Mindanao to Luzon, we built a nationwide network of RO-RO-capable ferry routes. In the process of bringing down the cost of transporting food, the RO-RO connections also encouraged more tourists to take the bus trip to Boracay, which costs one-tenth the price of a plane ticket to the same destination.

We formed our Super Regions, with each super region emphasizing a particular growth track and therefore a particular priority for investments. The Central Philippines Super Region, which extends from Bicol, to the whole of the Visayas, to Palawan and to the islands of Northern Mindanao, has tourism for its core growth strategy. That means giving higher priority to infrastructure that will provide access to tourism destinations in that super region. For instance, we have completed new airports in Iloilo and Bacolod-Silay. We also fixed the airport in Busuanga. We're working on the airport in Panglao; the airport in Guiuan, we also improved; the airport in Siargao which is part of Central Philippines because it's an island in Northern Mindanao. And we fixed the roads going to the favorite tourism destinations.

Policy reforms in infrastructure and transport, including the progressive liberalization of the airline industry, also had given our tourism a boost. Liberalized policies increased air access from major tourist markets, including new flight from Incheon, Busan, Shanghai, Guangzhou, and Kaohsiung.

And while the national government readied the infrastructure, the DoT likewise escalated its tourism investment promotions, encouraging establishments to build more hotels and other facilities. A variety of financing schemes and a stronger pitch for tourism investments facilitated the building of new hotels and other facilities in favorite destinations and up and coming tourist attractions. And that is part of why we are also here today not only to convene this Tourism Congress, the first activity in compliance with the new Tourism Act, but also to celebrate 555 billion pesos of investments in tourism. And this is Marriott which represents the 555th billion pesos of investments.

So far, the Andrew Tan Group has already spent 500 million dollars in this complex, and they will be spending 700 million dollars before this complex is completed. And there is another group that Andrew has gone into partnership with, with the Shimao Group, one of the biggest groups of China. Shimao had originally wanted to put up a one billion-dollar investment in BCDA but the land available that they wanted was not all available for them. And so they entered into an agreement, they looked for a good Filipino partner, they found one in Andrew Tan and they are putting up another 700 million dollars investment in Fort Bonifacio. So the Andrew Tan Group here and in partnership with Shimao in Fort Bonifacio will give us 1.5 billion dollars in tourism investment, a member of our Billion-dollar Club.

But today, we are celebrating that the private sector has poured 555 billion pesos into building accommodations and tourism utilities.

Investments in tourism transport also expanded. In 2004 it was a 163 million; in 2008 it became 30.5 billion with the airline sector undertaking aggressive re-fleeting programs to meet the growing demand.

Today, three to four major airlines service tourist destinations with flights of at least two to three times daily, giving tourists greater choices of time and more value for their money. Your participation, the private sector participation in tourism has taken a new promising turn in recent months, with major players pouring investments not only in resorts, not also in airplanes but even in infrastructure projects. For instance, the expansion and modernization of the Caticlan Airport is not being done by government. It's being done by the private sector. The waste water treatment facility in Boracay Island is being done not by the government but by the private sector.

And of course we must thank even the agencies outside the DoT family for doing their share to facilitate tourism. For example, the Bureau of Immigration's Visa on Arrival program has effectively reduced the document requirements and the hassle that tourists detest.

And so because of all of these efforts, all of us together, we have witnessed an impressive increase in our tourism arrivals. Our tourists for the first six months of this year are more than double the tourists for the whole year of 2001, congratulations to all of you!

With the rise in tourist arrivals has come an increasing job opportunities. Employment in tourism and related industries account for almost 10 percent of total employment. The industry directly employs more than three million Filipinos now, more than three times the job it created in 2001. So tourism has doubled but has created three times the job.

With Republic Act 9593, the Tourism Act of 2009, we shall not only strengthen the Department of Tourism, but we shall also strengthen a strategic partnership between government and the private sector. And that is why we are gathered here today to cement in accordance with the law that strong government-private sector partnership.

And so on this day, as we convene this Congress, I thank you for all the hard work that you in the private sector had given to bring Philippine tourism to where it is today. And I congratulate your partners in the government sector as well.

I am pleased to witness this Congress convene for the first time, and I trust that your success will be repeated again and again in the future.

Mabuhay ang Philippine Tourism! Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the opening ceremony of the Philippine Tourism Congress and the php 555 Billion investments in tourism infrastructure milestone. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133754/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26956&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening program of the 3rd Ministerial Forum of the East Asian Seas (EAS) Congress 2009

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening program of the 3rd Ministerial Forum of the East Asian Seas (EAS) Congress 2009

[Delivered at the Summit Hall, Philippine International Convention Center (PICC), Pasay City, Metro Manila, November 26, 2009]

Thank you, Secretary Atienza for your introduction. And thank you for the good work you've done in hosting this conference, forum and congress in behalf of the government of the Philippines.

Mr. Chairman Chua; Miss Badcock; and, of course, my former Cabinet member, PEMSEA Executive Director Lotilla; members of the Diplomatic Corps; ministers; delegates; ladies and gentlemen.

Welcome! The Philippines is honored to host this forum and congress of the Partnerships in Environmental Management of the Seas of East Asia or PEMSEA. Congratulations on your tireless efforts in continuing dialogue and coordinated actions to protect the seas and rebuild coastal communities in this part of the world.

The backdrop to this forum is that with representatives meeting in Denmark to advance cooperation to stop global warming, we here in East Asia are literally treading water from the last blow of typhoons that have increased in ferocity as global warming has increased in scope. Island nations such as the Philippines and many in this room, are particularly vulnerable to rising tides and shifting sands.

And increasingly, our regional natural disasters are being laid at the feet of man-made global warming. If men and women make these problems, then men and women must solve them, too. The path to sustainable global growth is a low-carbon economy, better energy efficiency, cleaner and renewable energy, and good coastal resource management.

That is why our position in the Philippines on climate change is very strong: we are calling for a binding outcome in Copenhagen. We can no longer afford to play the blame game while we are mired in a climate debate. Climate change does not make a distinction between developed and developing economies when it hits. Both have respective roles and responsibilities in addressing this challenge, based on the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capacities.

It is of primary interest to us that to ensure that any outcome in Copenhagen includes a cohesive and comprehensive financing mechanism to support climate change adaptation, such as disaster control and management, and integrated coastal management.

When we were having an impromptu summit in APEC on climate change, the President of the United States said that even as the developing countries, the G-77 of which the Philippines is a very active member, are demanding binding commitments in carbon reduction from the Annex I countries. The developing countries too should go to Copenhagen with their own commitments so that the financing can be transparent and accountable. And I have said the Philippines is ready to go with its commitments.

One of the commitments that the Philippines is prepared to comply with is that we must have a certain percentage of our municipal coastal waters in every municipality, 15 percent set aside as a sanctuary. And that is something we can bind because it is accordance with our laws.

As leaders of the world's fastest growing region, we should set the tone for the success of Copenhagen and marshal the resource to secure the survival of countries, cultures, and ecosystems that are threatened by climate change.

At no time has the need for greater cooperation and connectivity been demanded of East Asia than now. We can come together to work hand-in-hand to provide assistance and put in place new measures to combat natural disasters. PEMSEA has a big role to play. And the Philippines is happy to have hosted for the last many years PEMSEA as a regional program funded by the Global Environmental Facility as implemented by the UNDP. But we are very happy that today PEMSEA gets its own legal personality with the Philippines as its headquarters. Congratulations!

Our country's support for PEMSEA foreshadowed the Philippine position, as mentioned by Popo Lotilla earlier, to place the oceans in the mainstream of climate change discussion, a stand similarly taken by the Manado World Oceans Conference in May this year.

In Manado we also adopted the Coral Triangle Initiative Plans of Action that affirm the valuable role of Integrated Coastal Management in climate change adaptation.

PEMSEA has, indeed, been a major influence in making the peoples of this Region aware that as stakeholders all of us are expected to contribute to efforts to stop the degradation of our marine waters.

In 2006, I issued Executive Order 533 adopting Integrated Coastal Management as a national strategy to ensure the sustainable development of coastal marine environment and resources as a means of achieving food security, sustaining livelihood, as well as reducing poverty.

This Executive Order has been applied in several important coastal and ocean management programs in the Manila Bay, in Batangas, Cavite, Bataan and Guimaras. The Manila Bay area, the bailiwick of Secretary Lito Atienza where we are now, is part of the urban beltway that generates 52% of our country's GDP. PEMSEA's invaluable assistance, along with the support of scores of national government agencies and local government units, NGOs and financial institutions, resulted in the crafting of the ICM plan for the bay that was later replicated in all coastal provinces comprising the Manila Bay area. And I thank PEMSEA for your central role in doing that master plan.

As the tragic aftermath of the recent typhoons have shown, global warming and the impact mankind has made on our global environment is no longer a hypothetical issue. And while global warming is not the root of every change in climate, it is here, the rain is falling, the tide is rising, and we must all stand up and take action.

There are many things each individual nation can and will do. Certainly, in the Philippines, as I have mentioned with some of the examples that I gave earlier, we are forging ahead to invest and plan accordingly. But our individual efforts will not suffice. This is an issue for everyone. We must rise and fall together; we are all interconnected. Your supply of fish may come from the rich fishing grounds in the Philippines; our supply of steel may come from a coastal port in a neighboring nation. Each dependency will be threatened if we do not act together.

Global economic recovery which is the other big challenge we have today does not mean restoring the global economy to what it was before. It also requires a climate change response and a new paradigm for growth. That paradigm means that every country must fundamentally transform the structure of its economy and create growth that is truly 'green.' And for us to create growth that is truly 'green,' we must create seas that are truly 'blue.'

So to all of you, congratulations on the role of PEMSEA!

Thank you for coming and Mabuhay!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the opening program of the 3rd Ministerial Forum of the East Asian Seas (EAS) Congress 2009. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133724/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26991&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the 34th National Prayer Breakfast (NPB)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 34th National Prayer Breakfast (NPB)

[Delivered at the Malago Grounds, Malacañan Park, PSG Compound, November 26, 2009]

Thank you, Isabel.

Congressman Joe Tan Ramirez, Mayor Lim, and I see some other elected officials here. I see Congresswoman Thelma Almario, I see Governor Sally Lee, many other government officials who are part of our Executive Branch, Honorable bishops, our speakers and readers, Ambassador Choi and their Korean delegation, to all of you, welcome to Malacañan Park!

In 1997, I attended a National Prayer Breakfast here as well, and it was held in Malacañan Park. And I thought that I would repeat that because I felt that in the grounds of this historic site we can be inspired, we can have profound insights that come only from prayerful communion with the Lord.

Actually, I wanted it under those trees but I understand that the organizers wanted you all to be more compact here. So I said, let's transfer the tent, they don't have to cover the food, they have to cover the people. So the tents are coming here so you won't feel the heat of the sun so much because it is important that we have some peace and comfort as we pray and we meditate on the things that we should pray and think about today.

We gather here today in the shadow of the tragedy that was recently visited upon so many of our brothers and sisters in Mindanao.

It was a blight on our nation.

Men and women, young and old, political battlers and journalists: all were victims of a shameful crime that has no place in civilized society. It cries for the fullest measure of retribution from our institutions of justice.

Yes, there is no condemnation in the Lord but on the other hand, on earth, there is a system of justice and the perpetrators will not find a way to escape justice.

Political violence has been a sad legacy of our nation; we had made considerable progress in protecting our people from such violence in the last few years. Now, let us pray today that the events of this week will not deter this nation from breaking the bonds of violence that plagues our political system.

Let us pray today that peace will prevail in the Philippines.

Let us pray that commitment to human rights and human dignity will prevail.

We are a civilized nation. We are a nation, we're children of God.

Let us pray for the grace not to allow a travesty of our nation's commitment to uphold the basic humanity of every single Filipino.

Today is our National Breakfast Prayer Day and I have asked Secretary Ermita to do the appropriate documentation that today on this occasion of our National Prayer Breakfast we declare: a National Day of Prayer and Mourning for the victims.

That crime is too outrageous not to prick the conscience of the nation. So on this day, let us pray that the grieving relatives and friends of the victims be granted the solace of faith and peace of mind.

Let us pray that the burden of anger and revenge be lifted from their hearts, so that they may become instruments of a return to peace rather than the continuation of violence.

Let us pray that they will be uplifted by the continuous support of their communities and the sympathies of a bereaved nation.

Let us pray that outrage is overcome by reason and the need to live our lives in peace, honor and human dignity. And that is what I can discern from the reading of today that Joe Tan read: that there is no condemnation in the Lord.

Let us pray for peace in Mindanao. It will be a blessing for all its people, Muslim, Christian and Lumads. It will show other multi-faith communities that there can be common ground on which to live together in peace, harmony and cooperation that respects each other's religious and even political beliefs.

Ang tanong ay hindi, "Sino ang mananalo?" kung hindi, "Bakit pa ba kailangang mag-laban laban ang kapwa Pilipino tungkol sa mga isyu na alam naman natin lahat na 'di malulutas sa dahas, at ang paraang pangresolba ay paraang demokratiko."

Let us pray for the grace to improve the security of those parts of the country that have known much violence, so that as we move quickly as we're able to move quickly to develop the economy of those areas when there is peace when we do that we ensure a lasting peace as well that ensures that security is no longer an issue.

The darkness of the human heart must submit to Divine law and Divine will. We cannot escape moral responsibility to restrain the darkness in our imperfect hearts from striking out a conscienceless behavior. It is God Himself we heard speaking to Joshua, the son of Moses, who admonishes us: "To be strong and courageous. To be careful to obey the laws he has given us." It is God Himself who warns us that there are laws from Him that are intended to be obeyed at all times.

And so even if there is no condemnation in the Lord, there are also the commandments that he wants us to follow. Not the least of these laws, as set forth in the two tablets brought down by Moses is a very clear commandment: "Thou shalt not kill."

But we have two readings today because there is the question: "Is there more to our experience of the Divine than the structures set forth by the Old Testament, by the Mosaic law? Is this the only place where God's voice may be heard by the families of the victims, inconsolable in their grief or impassioned with revenge? Is this the only venue of redress for our countrymen seeking to understand what happened and to commiserate with their afflicted brethren? Is this the sole source of comfort vouchsafed by God to us?"

We share with our Muslim brothers the Old Testament. On top of that, we Christians have the New Testament. And the New Testament through the New Testament, it is through these larger questions that again the Creator speaks, where the disciple St. Luke assures us that "the Son of Man came to seek and to save what was lost."

In the reading that was read earlier, when the crowd complained about Jesus seeking shelter in the house of the hated tax collector Zacchaeus, they had to be reminded that the redeemer of souls turns away no one. But let us not also overlook what Zacchaeus said in order to be deemed worthy of receiving Jesus into his house. The tax collector gave away half his possessions to the poor and offered to recompense four times over anyone whom he may have wronged.

Indeed, we are directed by our conscience. We are hounded by our conscience to make sure that the heart and spirit who receive God's grace must seek always to be pure and worthy.

It is our common aspiration to such purity and worthiness that binds us together as Filipino Christians and makes our nationhood worthwhile. It is an aspiration that is also shared — in another vocabulary, perhaps, but with no less passion — by our fellow Filipinos of other faiths, especially our Muslim brethren in the South. Their religion is just as offended — no less than others — by criminal actions and the suffering of families victimized.

We are entering our election year. This is the last National Prayer Breakfast I will be joining you as president. This time next year another leader of our country will hopefully break bread with you in common prayer and fellowship. As we go about the process of selecting that leader and others like him next year, I ask for your prayers that the process shall no longer be marred by violence and strife.

Let us pray that this will be a time to empower the people, not to cower the people. And in the meantime, though this is my last National Prayer Breakfast as president, I asked Joe Tan, "Do you only have a prayer breakfast once a year?" He said, "No. One big one once a year but we have many other frequent small ones."

Isabel and I were discussing that our administration would like to be more involved in your little prayer breakfast. And as I have hosted this prayer breakfast here in Malacañang — the bigger one — I hope that there will be other occasions before I step down to have to be able to host other little prayer breakfast with you.

We must do this more frequently now in the next few months because we must stand together as a nation, holding hands as one, to fight malevolence in every form and beyond fighting malevolence, to promote the good that is in every one of us.

Nawa'y lagi tayong bantayan, basbasan at patnubayan ng Poong Maykapal nating lahat.

Maraming salamat sa inyo.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 34th National Prayer Breakfast (NPB). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133732/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=26990&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 2nd Public-Private Sector Dialogue on Post-Disaster Assistance

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During the 2nd Public-Private Sector Dialogue on Post-Disaster Assistance

[Delivered at the Grand Ballroom, Hotel Intercontinental, Makati City, December 2, 2009]

Thank you very much Secretary Teves.

Other members of the Cabinet, members of the Diplomatic Corps, Chairman Manny Pangilinan, Archbishop Vidal and the other members of the private sector, multilateral and bilateral organizations, ladies and gentlemen.

Good afternoon and thank you all for what you are doing here today.

If you recall, during the Mid-year Economic Briefing last October, I announced the creation of a special public-private reconstruction partnership to study the causes, costs and actions to be taken in the wake of typhoons Ondoy, Pepeng and Frank, and to seek fresh aid to fund reconstruction.

The idea was to harness domestic private initiatives, including business groups, the Church and civil society, into the government's overall reconstruction effort. We felt this was good policy and we felt it would be a better way of mobilizing external and incremental resources, technical expertise and networks.

On October 22, if you recall, I issued an Executive Order creating the public sector portion, the Special National Public Reconstruction Commission. Correspondingly, the private sector headed by Manny organized the Philippine Disaster Recovery Foundation to serve as the counterpart organization of the public sector for post-disaster rehabilitation and construction efforts. The commission and the foundation then immediately signed a cooperation agreement to carry out the purposes that I announced during the Mid-year Economic Briefing. And I am very glad that all these have happened. And I thank Cardinal Vidal; I thank Gary for their leadership in this urgent and crucial task. And of course I thank the representatives of international organizations and foreign governments involved in this vital undertaking.

I reiterate the gratitude of the Filipino people for your speedy, and I must say, substantial response to our appeal and for your continuing desire to help us. Substantial because the pledges that Gary mentioned are even more than the needs assessment that have been made, so I really thank you for that.

Your support is crucial in meeting the needs identified not only by the private sector but also by the DSWD, the Housing and Urban Development Coordinating Council, and the Office of Civil Defense. And I hope that we will be able to tap also the huge underlying global constituency for climate change adaptation, because our recovery from those typhoons is certainly part of climate change adaptation.

Because of the impact of the global crisis on the fiscal capacity of the Philippines, the primary response of our administration to the enormous calamities which climate change is bringing to our vulnerable country cannot be just another borrowing program. And so, though we have an annual Philippine Development Forum, I ask Gary to replace that for this year with this session, with this forum that we are having now, which I said to Gary should also weigh very heavily on grants because we don't want to let grant opportunities go to waste though less in size than loans, they remain substantial as we have seen from the collection of pledges that Gary has pointed out.

And even if we resort to bonds in bringing in exogenous resources, we want to go beyond a mere borrowing program to provide the framework that is usually required by ODA programs. And I am very grateful that Gary presented the summary of the work on the need assessment because that is going to provide the framework for the things that we will source funds for.

So in sum, I hope that we can push, first, for more grants or non-repayable inflows. The underlying doctrine, as I said before, is that the Philippines is a victim of climate change, not a culprit. Victims are compensated, not penalized with high interest rates or conditionalities.

Second to grants, we want to push for concessional loans.

And third, commercial borrowings either through bonds or other instruments as may be recommended by this partnership should be the last financing option.

As we prepare to capture the opportunities presented by this partnership, this private-public sector reconstruction partnership and the resources that it is tapping in this session to recover from recent national calamities, we must not lose sight of our longer-term economic reforms and the very real pain many of our poor have sustained as a result of the global downturn. While the world may finally be emerging from the global economic crisis, much remains to be done to ensure that the Philippines continues on its path to long-term economic prosperity and that we are able to build a strong middle-class.

As our development partners know the story of the Philippines in 2008 and 2009 is that the country weathered a succession of global crisis in fuel, in food, then in finance and finally the economy in a global recession, but we never lost focus and we kept our economic fundamentals intact.

Our GDP is still in the block.

We will continue to work aggressively to ensure that the growth that has been generating jobs and revenue to invest in new infrastructure and critical social programs will continue. And I am very grateful to all of you, for your sincere and invaluable efforts to help the Filipino nation.

With your help, as summarized by Secretary Gary Teves, we will be on track very soon. And I hope, indeed, that as the people know that this is happening and that they can look forward to a meaningful reconstruction. I hope indeed that everyone, the nation will have a Blessed Christmas and a Joyful New Year!

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 2nd Public-Private Sector Dialogue on Post-Disaster Assistance. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133717/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27019&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the conferment of the 2009 Galing Pook and Bagong Bayani Awards

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the conferment of the 2009 Galing Pook and Bagong Bayani Awards

[Delivered at the Rizal Hall, Malacañang, December 4, 2009]

Thank you. Maraming salamat.

Maraming salamat Secretary Remonde sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin.

I'd also like to greet Mr. Rene Cristobal and the other officers of the Bagong Bayani Foundation; Lito Coscolluela, SRA Administrator and other officers of the Galing Pook Foundation; Nitoy Roque and the other government officials who are here with us today. Siyempre yung ating mga awardees, mga namuhunan ng mga Magaling na Pook at ating mga Bagong Bayani.

Isang mainit na pagbati sa mga lokal na pamahalaan at mga OFW na nagkamit ng parangal na Galing Pook at Bagong Bayani.

Binibigyan natin ng parangal ngayon ang pinakamahuhusay sa dalawang sektor na bagamat magkaiba ay nagkakaisa sa layunin — ang tumulong sa pag-unlad ng ating bansa.

Sa pagkakataong ito, kasi narinig natin yung kanilang mga nagawa at hindi na natin kailangang ulitin kahanga-hanga, sana rin batiin natin yung iba pang mga tunay na bayani nitong bansa those who have gone unsung. Those unsung heroes don't demand the spotlight or expect red carpet treatment. These men and women are motivated by the simple but profound values that drive this nation forward. Kapayapaan, pag-asa, charity, pagmamahal sa pamilya, hangad sa mabuting edukasyon at karapatan tungo sa magandang trabahong may disentang sweldo na magbigigay sa kanila ng kakayahang pakainin ang pamilya at pag-aralin ang mga anak.

Sino ang mga bayaning ito? Yung mga tumanggap ng awards ngayon, siyempre bayani sila, pero bayani rin ang karaniwang Pilipino.

Ang nars na sumisikap alagaan ang matatanda.

The farmer who fights flood and famine to deliver life-saving crops needed to nourish our nation.

Yung taxi driver who literally drives our nation forward, bringing people to their places of work, worship and friendship.

And of course yung ating mga overseas Filipino workers, the overseas worker who is making the ultimate sacrifice by seeking career opportunities overseas and sending back remittances to celebrate the holiday season with their families, at gumagawa ng mga kontribusyon upang manatiling lutang ang ating ekonomiya itong mga panahon na mahamon.

Kaya ang ating mga overseas Filipino workers ay lagi nating tinatawag mga bagong bayani ng ating bansa. At sa inyong mga nagtanggap ng Bagong Bayani Awards itong taon, congratulations sa inyo!

Among our heroes are also the dedicated public servants who reach higher year after year to raise our governance standards so that our government can better serve our citizens. Kabayanihan din ang maayos na pamamahala ng mga barangay, bayan, lungsod at probinsiya natin. Kaya sa ating mga Outstanding Local Government Executives sa mga Galing Pook, congratulations sa inyo!

But as I said sa araw na ito, as we honor our LGU and OFW awardees, we also celebrate the unsung heroes who are our country's source of strength, our backbone, our hope for the future. They are a reminder to all of us that we must never lose sight of the importance of growing our economy, providing peace and security, and now more than ever, ensuring peaceful elections and a smooth transition so that the gains of the last eight years will be locked in and our nation will remain strong.

Just as we celebrate our hardworking heroes, both the ones who received the awards so deservedly today and those who are unsung, your government is doing everything in its power to put food on the table and protect the paycheck from high prices and high inflation.

Patuloy rin tayong namumuhunan sa mga sistema ng ating bansa para sa kalinga sa kalusugan, edukasyon at mga serbisyo sosyal. Gaya nang ginagawa ko sa nakaraang walong taon, patuloy akong nagigising araw-araw, hanggang sa huling araw ng aking panunungkulan, at masipag na nagtatrabaho at masiglang ipinaglalaban ang karaniwang Pilipino. Our people deserve no less.

Habang pumapasok tayo sa panahon ng Pasko, kailangan bilangin natin ang ating mga biyaya and look to the future with hope and optimism. We must come together in this season of peace and celebrate faith and family at ipagdasal iyong mga hindi kasing-palad.

Kailangan magkaisa tayo upang magdala sa ating mga pamayanan ng kabutihan, hindi pananakit o pagbibintang. We must put aside our differences, be they personal or political. And I say this at a critical time in our nation's history as we prepare for the elections next year.

Ang pinakaimportante, kailangan ihandog natin ang sarili natin sa mga mahihirap na kasama natin lalo na sa panahon ng Pasko, gaya nang ginagawa araw-araw para sa atin itong ating mga bayani, na binigyan natin ng parangal ngayon, as well as our unsung heroes.

Sa kabila ng mga hamong hinaharap natin bilang bansa, I am optimistic about our future due in large part to the optimism and resilience of the Filipino people.

Titiyakin natin na ituloy ng ating pamahalaan ang masipag na pagtatrabaho para dalhin ang mga serbisyo ng pamahalaan sa taong-bayan. Importante na ang pamahalaan ay nagtatrabaho para sa taong-bayan. Again, I will repeat — the people deserve no less.

Kaya sa inyong lahat na naglilingkod sa taong-bayan maging kayo ay private citizens working overseas o kayo ay public servants lahat ng mga binibigyan natin ng parangal ngayon at sa lahat ng mga namamahala ng mga barangay, bayan, lungsod at lalawigan na sumusuporta sa ating mga reporma at sa lahat ng mga OFW, karangalan kong makasama ang mga buhay na bayani sa pagtahak sa daan tungo sa magandang bukas.

Dahil sa inyo at sa iba pa nating mga bayani, sumusulong ang bansa.

Kaya sa inyong lahat, maraming, maraming salamat and congratulations!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the conferment of the 2009 Galing Pook and Bagong Bayani Awards. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133709/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27051&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the lecture series for Quezon City public school teachers

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the lecture series for Quezon City public school teachers

[Delivered at the Heroes' Hall, Malacañang, December 15, 2009]

Maraming salamat Secretary Jing Lapus sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin. And to all of you beloved teachers; welcome to Malacañang!

Thank you for participating in this lecture series which, as has been explained earlier, is part of the continuing education of teachers. We're holding this event in the Palace of the People because of my partiality for the teaching profession.

After all, I was a teacher. At nung ako ay teacher marami akong naabutan at nakilalang mga napakatalinong mga estudyante at isa doon sa estudyante kung yun ay mas magaling na ekonomista kasya sa akin, si Joey Salceda, kaya siya ang magpapaliwanang sa inyo ng mga bagay tungkol sa ekonomiya.

Kaya napunta ako rito, hindi upang magbigay ng lecture tungkol sa ekonomiya, gagamitin ko itong pagkakataon, I'll take advantage of this occasion to address not only you but through you all our people on another very important and timely subject.

My fellow countrymen and countrywomen, people of the Philippines:

Being a President is about making tough choices, sometimes the path to those choices is very clear but sometimes it is shrouded in fog. Yet one thing is always true, there is no shirking the responsibility to make those decisions. There is no place to hide if they are not made, many of the decisions to keep our nation moving forward rest solely on the shoulders of the President and no one else. The challenges that go with being President are with me every second of the day. It's a big responsibility, I sought it out, and I have always been humbled by it.

But I am always aware of my obligation to serve the people, abide by the Constitution and follow my faith as I seek the wisdom and the guidance to do what is right for our nation each and every day.

Just a few shorts weeks ago, on November 23rd, there was a terrible slaughter in Maguindanao. It shocked this nation. The images and details of the carnage also shocked the world. It was a dark day in our nation's history. When arrests started to be made and witnesses started to surface the ring leaders and their followers took up arms with heavy weapons to thwart justice, bring governance to a halt and challenge national authority.

The nation faced a rebellion that could have ignited total chaos in Maguindanao and likely spread throughout Mindanao.

As President, I have a constitutional obligation to defend this nation from internal rebellion just as I do external aggression. So based on careful consultation with advisers on the ground, with our National Police, with our military leaders, with our National Security Council, I took decisive action and declared Martial Law on December 4th. This action was consistent with our obligation to our nation. No one will ever be allowed to bring rebellion to this country, let alone murder and go free.

The objective of our government from the moment Martial Law was imposed was to maintain it only as long as required and to work to lift it once crucial objectives had been met. That included arresting the leaders of the rebellion and their accomplices including the murderers, restoring the rule of law, disarming those who raised arms against our government's prerogative to ensure law and order, ensuring the proper functioning of the provincial government and protecting terrified witnesses so that justice would truly be served.

Since imposing Proclamation 1959 the results have been substantial. They met the objectives set by our government, these include the ability of justice officials and the police to mount and carry out a comprehensive investigation into the tragic crimes of November 23rd and the rebellion that followed. The investigation has so far resulted in the arrest or taking into the custody of more than 600 individuals including the alleged masterminds and many of the alleged triggermen.

The seizure of over a thousand high powered weapons and armaments and over 500,000 rounds of ammunitions that presented a continuous challenge to the security of our nation.

It also included the replacement of key regional government and law enforcement officials to ensuring that justice will be served as investigators continue to pursue all those responsible for the crimes in Maguindanao. Those individuals who have come forward to provide testimony as witnesses to these crimes have been given the protection they require as they prepare to testify in the trials for murder and other illegal acts that will follow the completion of this thorough investigation.

Throughout the imposition of Martial Law many critics found fault with our actions. They had no faith in our Constitution. They had no faith in the men and women in the military and the police to do their job, in fact, I'm not sure they had faith in democracy itself. Our critics dragged their feet and took their time grandstanding when the situation demanded decisive action. Yet we must act quickly to secure the peace and ensure justice and safety for the people. That is what we did.

Unfortunately, if the critics had their way, rebels could have taken over the province and lawlessness would have spread to other parts of Mindanao and murder suspects could have slipped away from justice as witnesses cowered in fear for their safety due to the breakdown of law and order governance in Maguindanao. Inaction would have had dire consequences; we would not let that stand.

At the end of the day, we made the tough choice. I made the tough choice. It was based on sound information, a clear reading of the Constitution, and a deep desire to quell rebellion and restore order. The results vindicate the choice we made. We make no apologies for acting where others fear to tread.

Wanton murder was followed by act of rebellion. The very moral and legal core of this nation was on the line; we would not let it be crossed.

My heart, our hearts go out to the people of Central Mindanao, particularly the friends and families of the victims. To them, we say, your loved ones have not died in vain. Justice shall be served, peace will come to the province of Maguindanao, and our nation will be stronger for the pain.

To those who stood with us in the pursuit of justice and upholding the Constitution, I thank you. To those who honestly questioned my decision, I respect the fact that you cherish the Constitution just as fervently as I do. For those seeking higher office, it's time for action, not just tough talk.

If anything positive can come out of the terrible tragedy in Maguindanao, it is that the heartbeat of peace is very much alive. This is clear by the very passion by which people across the nation condemned the violence and by the positive developments we are once again seeing in our efforts to restart peace talks in Mindanao. Only lasting peace will bring true justice to Mindanao and ensure that these crimes cannot be repeated.

Thank you.

Sa inyong lahat, dear teachers, thank you for allowing me to take this opportunity to speak to the nation through you. I hope you will find the rest of your day in Malacañang meaningful.

Have a Blessed Christmas! And may we all have for our country a Prosperous New Year!

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the lecture series for Quezon City public school teachers. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133702/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27128&Itemid=38

Departure Speech of President Arroyo for her participation at the High Level Segment of the 15th Conference of Parties (COP-15) to the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen, Denmark

Departure speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
For her participation at the High Level Segment of the 15th Conference of Parties (COP-15) to the U.N.
Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen, Denmark

[Delivered at Terminal 2, NAIA, Pasay City, December 16, 2009]

Sinasagot ng ating bansa ang hamon ng bagyong pandaigdigang ekonomiya, ngunit may higit na mabagsik na bagyo ang humaharap sa atin: the devastation of Mother Nature accelerated by the mistreatment of the fragile environment by human beings all over the world.

The long-term security and prosperity of our nation and, indeed, the world, relies on coming to grips with the man made devastation that is warming our planet. Everyday we delay is a day the glaciers melt, the waters rise, food supplies are threatened and the poor suffer. That is why the Global Warming Summit in Copenhagen is vital for our nation, for the future of our children and for the fate of the world. Let us pray that progress will be made at the Summit.

Ilang buwang lamang nakaraan ang mga pag-asa para sa Copenhagen ay lumalabo. But today, developed and developing nations alike seem closer to assuming their burden and doing something positive about solving one of the great issues of our time.

In recent weeks, we have been meeting with our Global Warming Task Force in preparation for the talks in Copenhagen. We want to make inroads in Denmark based on science that shows that our nation is being battered by global warming even if we ourselves have a very good carbon footprint. In fact, with my meeting with the multilaterals the other day, the World Bank country representative pointed out that, in fact, we are where we want the rest of the world to be. But our carbon footprint is already there. We are doing our part for the environment. And yet, while we are not a climate maker — because we are not a source of climate change — we are a climate taker.

The typhoons are becoming more horrific; the rains more violent; the seas more savage. Global warming is affecting our agriculture, our fishing stocks, our forests and our cities. Kailangang magtrabaho tayo kasama ng buong sangkatauhan para makipagbalikat, gumawa ng mabibigat na desisyon, at palitan ang direksyon upang sagipin ang Inang Kalikasan at sa ganoon, sagipin ang sanlibutan.

Pupunta tayo sa Copenhagen na may patunay kung paano ang pagpapalit ng klima ng mundo ay negatibong inaapektohan ang Pilipinas. Gaya nang sinabi nating maraming beses na, the greatest human tragedy that will arise from climate change will be the migration that will be forced by sinking coastlines and in some cases, such as Tuvalu and the Maldives, sinking countries. As more and more sites are rendered inhospitable to human life and economic activity, it is estimated that as many as one billion people may be affected globally. Kalahati sa kanila ay manggagaling sa Asya. Habang nagkakalat ang mga pamilya sa mga matataas na lugar sa iba't-ibang bahagi ng mundo, climate change will spawn global change. Ito ay isang bagay na kailangan sama-samang tugonan ng mga bansa ng mundo. Bilang bansang may higit pitong libong pulo, ito ay bagay na malaking abala sa Pilipinas. Kailangan linawin din natin ito sa mundo.

Panahon na para ang mga bansa ng mga mundo ay angkinin ang ating mga tungkulin gaya nang sabi ko ang Pilipinas inaangkin na natin ito kaya nga maganda ang ating carbon footprint. Ang ating trabaho ay ipasulong at ipagtanggol ang interes ng Pilipinas. Ang paglutas sa problemang ito ay kakailanganin ang maraming taon, ngunit ibig nating tiyakin na simulan natin ang proseso ngayon, upang sa ganoon ang mga sumusunod ay maaaring ipagpatuloy na tulungan ang ating bansa ngayon at sa darating na mga taon.

Ito ay lalong importante dahil sa panahon ng paghihirap ng pangkabuhayan, the pressures are greatest to abandon the obligation to the environment or to loosen the rules and put economic objectives above environmental interests. This is precisely why at this point in time we must call on the world community to be even more vigilant in advancing efforts to tackle the global challenge of climate change.

Para sa Pilipinas, we will not go to Copenhagen looking for a handout. We will go to join hands with other nations to band together to solve this problem imposed by man. Lagi nating sinasabi na para sa makatarungang resulta, it is essential for developed countries to lead in reducing emissions, in accordance with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. A financial mechanism must also be established to meet the costs of adaptation for developing countries and for an effective development and transfer of technology.

Ngunit habang ang mas mayayamang bansa ay may higit na responsibilidad at pasanin, iyan ay hindi dahilan para ang mga umuunlad pang bansa ay iwasan ang kanilang responsibilidad. Kailangan gawin nating lahat ang ating bahagi at yan ang ating pakay para sa ating summit sa Copenhagen.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's departure speech for her participation at the high level segment of the 15th Conference of Parties (COP-15) to the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen, Denmark. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133653/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27142&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a meeting with the Filipino community

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During a meeting with the Filipino community

[Delivered at the Ballroom, Hilton Hotel, Copenhagen, Denmark, December 16, 2009]

Thank you.

Maraming salamat Ambassador Buensuceso sa iyong magandang mga sinabi. Salamat sa iyong pagpakilala sa akin. Salamat na pinakilala mo yung mga leaders ng Filipino community rito at ang ating Honorary Consul General. Salamat din na maganda ang pag-alaga mo sa ating mga Filipino dito at pati na rin sa relasyon ng ating mga bansa. Si Ambassador Buensuceso ay talagang ang kanyang swerte ay naroon siya bilang embahador pag pumupunta tayo sa isang importanteng pulong. Halimbawa, nung nagkaroon ng ASEAN Summit sa Laos siya ang ambassador natin doon. Ngayon itong napakaimportanteng Copenhagen Climate Change Summit siya na naman muli ang ambassador dito kaya congratulations sa iyo.

Kasama ng aking asawa, si Atty. Mike Arroyo, ang ibat-ibang mga bahagi ng miyembro ng ating Philippine delegation, so if I may introduce them starting from the left of my husband, si Deputy Speaker Girlie Villarosa, congresswoman ng Mindoro Occidental; sa kanyang kaliwa naman, si Congressman Ignacio Arroyo Jr., na siya ang chairman ng Committee on Natural Resources na napakaimportante sa ating climate change meeting; at sa kanyang kaliwa ay si Secretary Angie Reyes, ang ating Secretary of Energy, na malaki ang kinalaman tungkol sa climate change; at sa kanyang kaliwa siguro masasabi natin member na rin ng inyong Filipino Danish community, si Secretary Cerge Remonde, dahil ang kanyang maybahay ay taga Denmark, si Marit Remonde; dito naman sa kabila narito si Secretary of Trade Secretary Peter Favila dahil sa ibabaw ng ating pag-uusap tungkol sa climate change ay meron tayong mga kauserp na mga investor at mga negosyante rin dito sa Denmark; at sa kanyang kanan naman ay ang congresswoman ng Bulacan, si Congresswoman Neneng Nicolas na siya ang Vice Chairman ng Appropriations, at kung ano ang ipinangako natin na gagastusin natin para iwasan ang climate change, lubhang climate change o kanyang mga epekto, siya ang magtatrabaho doon sa Kongreso; sa kanyang kanan ang ating bagong Vice Chairman ng Climate Change Commission, si Secretary Sonny Alvarez, siya ang pinaka workhorse ng ating delegasyon dito sa Copenhagen; at sa kanyang kanan naman ang namamahala sa ating Reconstruction Commission, yun bang commission na nagbubuo ng mga kailangang gawin para sa ating recovery mula sa typhoon Ondoy at Pepeng na siya'y dala naman sa ating bansa ng climate change, si Secretary Ric Saludo.

Kaming lahat ay bumabati sa inyong lahat, magandang gabi sa mga Pilipino dito sa Denmark. Keni pu kabalen kong Kapampangan mayap a bengi kekongan. Oh, at yun pala. Okay. Kadagiti kakailayak ti mamang ko naimbag rabii yo amin. Adda ti Ilocano 'toy? Oh, you are an Ilocana. And sa mga gikan sa Visayas ug Mindanao, maayong gabii kaninyong tanan. Oh, labing daku. Maraming salamat na kayo ay pumarito dito sa ating salu-salo kasi nga alas siyete ang dating namin alas otso ang ating party pero nung ako ay pumasok nandito na pala kayo. Kaya sabi ko sige akyat na lang tayo sandali hihintayin na lang natin yung luggage para makabihis kasi gusto ko sana magsuot ng Filipino attire kaya lang medyo natagalan yung luggage at kusot din ang damit ko kaya sabi ko hindi bale kahit na nakatravelling clothes basta lang huwag na maghintay ng lalo pa yung ating mga kababayan dito. Dahil alam ko na nagsakripisyo naman kayo weekday ito para sa ganun ay makapunta kayo dito ngayong gabi. At ako ay natutuwa na makita kayong lahat dito.

Sabi ni Ambassador Buensuceso matagal na niyo ako hinihintay. Totoo nga, eto ay unang pagkakataon kong nakapunta dito sa Copenhagen bilang pangulo at ako ay nasisiyahan na magkaroon ng pagkakataon na magpasalamat sa inyo sa inyong malasakit sa ating bansa at magbigay din ng mga ulat or salita or pahayag kung papano kayo hinahangaan ng atin mga kababayang Pilipino doon sa ating bansa.

Kasi yung sinasabing kayo ay bagong bayani ng ating bansa katotohanan talaga yun at hindi natin talagang makakalimutan ang katotohanang yun. Tahimik kayo sa inyong kabayanihan, hindi kayo naghahangad ng parangal, hindi kayo nagpapabida, you are motivated by the simple but profound values that drive our nation forward. Kapayapaan, pag-asa, pagtulong sa kapwa, pagmamahal sa pamilya, paghahangad ng mabuting edukasyon at karapatan tungo sa magandang trabaho at disenteng sweldo na maghahatid ng pagkain sa pamilya at edukasyon sa mga anak.

Kabilang ang maraming karaniwang Pilipino sa ating mga bayani kasama siyempre kayo na mga overseas Filipinos o yung sabi ng mga Filipino sa ibayong dagat. You make the ultimate sacrifice sa pagsisikap sa ibayong dagat upang makapagdala ng ikabubuhay ng inyong mga pamilya na hindi naman ninyo makakapiling sa araw ng Pasko. At sa bisa ng inyong mga kontribusyon walang patid ang pagsulong ng ating ekonomiya sa halos siyam na taong nagdaan pati sa kasalukuyang panahon ng hamon sa pandaigdigang ekonomiya. Kaya kayo ay laging tinatawag na mga bagong bayani ng ating bansa. At hindi yun cliché, hindi yun corny, katotohanan yun. Kayo ay bagong bayani ng ating bansa.

Dito sa Denmark napag-alaman ko na di gaanong malaki ang komunidad ng mga Pilipino, mahigit lamang kayo ng sampung libo sa bansang ito. Ganunpaman, gaya nang sabi ni Ambassador Buensuceso, katangi-tanging pamayanan kayo sa bansang ito dahil tinataguyod ninyo ang ekonomiya ng Denmark habang sinusuportahan din ang ating ekonomiya sa pagdala ninyong kabuhayan sa inyong mga pamilya. Tunay na kapuri-puri ang inyong mga ginagawa at talagang hinahangaan kayo ng mga tiga rito sa Denmark. Kaya maraming salamat sa karangalang binibigay ninyo sa ating bansa dahil ang gagaling ninyo at pinapakita ninyo ang kagalingan ninyo dito sa Denmark.

Kaya naman pinarangalan kayo ng ating pamahalaan pati na rin ng ating taong-bayan sa inyong sakripisyo at malasakit sa inyong trabaho, sa inyong pamilya at sa ating bansa. But I want you to know that we are working to create a strong and competitive Philippine economy na may magagandang hanapbuhay so that one day going abroad for a job will become just a career choice and not the only choice for a hardworking Filipino worker. Yun ang ating hangarin para sa ating bansa.

Mahalaga rin para sa taong-bayang Pilipino itong mga negosasyon sa Copenhagen. Yung aking mga asal na narinig natin kanina ay puno ng asal na maging matagumpay itong mga pag-uusap dito sa Copenhagen. At yung dalawang ating Filipino na nagwagi ng gantimpala sa CNN debate on climate change, congratulations! Pinapatunay ang importansya ng isyung ito sa ating mga Pilipino. Tayo sa Pilipinas binibigyan natin ng halaga itong problema ng climate change at ginagampanan natin ang ating tungkulin upang iwasan ang pandaigdigang krisis ng klima. Napakamunti ng pagbuga ng karbon ang Pilipinas.

Yung average carbon emission ng buong mundo ay six tons per capita at dapat raw kung gusto natin iwasan ang lubhang epekto ng climate change by 2015 dapat three tons per capita lamang ang average emission, tama ba yun Sonny? Pero ang Pilipinas ang kanyang ating emission ay 1.6 tons per capita lamang.

Kaya tayo ay maganda ang carbon footprint, we are responsible for our environment. Pwede nating ipagmalaki yun, di hamak mas maliit key sa average sa mundo at maging sa kailangang gawin. Kaya gaya nang sabi ng World Bank sa atin, “where we want the world to be on carbon emissions, the Philippines is already there.” Kaya pwede tayong magsalita, meron tayong ‘k’ na magsalita dito sa Copenhagen.

And yet kahit na responsable tayo tungkol sa ating kalikasan, the Philippines is disproportionately vulnerable to the devastation of Mother nature accelerated by the mistreatment of the fragile environment by human beings not in our country but all over the world. Kasi pag umiinit ang mundo hindi lang yung bayan nagpapainit sa kanyang bansa, ang naiinitan umaabot sa buong bansa. At isang dahilan kung bakit lubos pa ang epekto sa atin mangyari kapuluan ang ating bansa na may mahigit pitong libong isla at naninirahan sa mababang lugar ang higit na nakararaming mamamayan natin nakalantad sa mga panganib ng panahon.

Malagim ang mga hamong hinaharap ng Pilipinas dahil sa pagbabago ng klima ng mundo. Ayon sa mga sayantipiko ng Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change at iniulat ng United Nations na kabilang ang Pilipinas sa labindalawang bansang pinakananganganib dahil sa pagpalit ng klima. Sa katunayan nangunguna tayo sa listahan ng mga bansang namimiligro sa mas madalas at mas mababagsik na mga bagyo sa pag-init ng klima ng mundo. The changing global environment is really dramatically and negatively affecting the Philippines in spite of the fact that our own carbon emissions are very small.

Tropical storms of historic scale have inflicted devastation and a tragic loss of lives upon our country. Alam naman niyo yung dalawang unos na tumama sa bayan natin, yung Ondoy at yung Pepeng, sumira ng halagang apat na bilyong dolyar. Eto ay halos tatlong porsiyento ng ating GDP at walo hanggang sampung porsiyento sa produksyon ng ating mga rehiyong pinanggagalingan ng pagkain ay nasira rin dahil mahigit anim na daang ektarya ng pananim ang nasira. At anim hanggang walong porsiyento ng GDP ay nawala sa mga lugar ng industriya ng ating bansa. Siyam na milyong katao ang naapektuhan, sigurado ako lahat kayo may kamag-anak na naapektuhan. Higit siyam na daan ang namatay. Higit dalawang daang libong tahanan ang nagkapinsala o nawasak. At dumating pa itong kalamidad na ito habang nakikipagbuno tayo sa hagupit ng unos ng pandaigdigang krisis sa ekonomiya.

Ngunit nagkaisa tayo bilang sambayanan. Sinimulan na natin itayo muli ang mga apektadong bahagi ng ating bansa, malaking dahilan dito ang pandaigdigang tulong na tinatanggap natin nitong mga nakaraang buwan, nagpapasalamat tayo sa ating mga kaibigan at kabalikat sa kaunlaran sa oras ng pangangailangan. At doon sa mga Pilipino dito sa Denmark na tumulong, na nagpadala ng tulong maging sa mga kamag-anak, maging sa mga NGO, maging sa pamahalaan para tumulong makaraos sa mga bagyo, maraming maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Ngayon narito ang delegasyon ng Pilipinas sa Copenhagen kabalikat ang ibang mga bansa upang bumalangkas, alam naman ninyo ito dahil narito kayo, upang bumalangkas ng plano para mapigil ang mababagsik na epekto ng pagpalit ng panahon, yung tawag na climate change, at iwasan ang pandaigdigang krisis ng klima. Sa ilalim ng bagong kaayusan sa mundo dapat sana maging magkaanib at hindi magkaaway ang pag-unlad ng ekonomiya at ang pangangalaga ng kalikasan. Panahon na upang akuin ng lahat na bansa sa mundo ang ating sama-samang pananagutan.

Tiyak na aabutin ng maraming dekada ang paglutas ng problemang ito. Ngunit kailangan simulan natin ang pagkilos ngayon. At upang magkaroon ng makatarungang kasunduan karapatdapat manguna ang mga mauunlad na bansa sa pagbabawas ng buga ng carbon dioxide kasi nanggaling naman sa kanila ang marami dito sa global warming. Yung industrialization, kasi nung mga unang panahon lalo na yung industrialization, mga smokestacks, kung anu-ano, yung paggamit ng gasolina ng coal, yun ang malaking kontribusyon sa climate change. Kaya yung mga mauunlad na bansa sila ang dapat manguna sa pagbaba ng carbon emission. Eh tayo ano ang ibababa natin sa ating carbon emission, we're already in fact one-half of what is needed, what should be the goal of other countries. So, siyempre we want to do our own part, we want to contribute pero napakaliit naman ang kontribusyon na magagawa natin because right now we're already even below the maximum that they would want the world to have.

Kailangan din pero tayo ang magandang halimbawa ng climate taker, hindi climate maker; hindi tayo nagsasala sa climate change pero tayo ang biktima. Maraming ganun kaya kailangan din ng matimbang na sistema ng pananalapi upang mapondohan ang gastos sa paghahanda ng umuunlad na bansa para sa pagbabago ng klima, yun ang tinatawag nilang adaptation kasi naapektuhan tayo, we have to adapt to climate change na nanggagaling sa ibang bansa. At para na rin sa paglikha, paghahatid ng mga makabagong teknolohiya sa mga nangangailangang bansa kagaya natin isa sa mga biyaya natin sa relasyon sa Denmark ay ang paggamit ng mga windmill, hindi ba ang Denmark ang pioneer ng windpower? 'Di ba Denmark isa sa mga... kaya nga nag host sila nitong climate change meeting kasi may 'k' rin sila, mababa rin ang kanilang carbon footprint dahil matagal na silang gumagamit ng windpower renewable energy, at mga Danish companies meron silang investments ng windpower sa Pilipinas. Meron sila sa Bangui doon sa Ilocos Norte at saka doon sa Batanes at marami pang iba na pinaplanong ilagay sa Pilipinas.

Yung mga bagong teknolohiyang yun ay mahal. Sabi nga nila yung windmill ay 15 years ang payback period kasi malaki ang initial capital. Kung iiwanan mo lang sa ekonomiya or sa mga computation ng payback lahat gagamit ng coal kasi yun ang pinakamaliit na investment. Kaya kailangan na tulungan ang mga bansa gaya ng Pilipinas na ma-afford itong mga bagong teknolohiyang ito at malaki naman ang tulong sa atin ng Danish financing dahil pinifinance sila yung sarili nilang mga investor.

Kaya ito ang mga kailangan nating gawin, tiyakin na yung mga mayayamang bansa na sila ang nag contribute sa climate change ng malaki ay bawasan ang kanilang emission at tiyakin din na tayo na mga biktima ng climate change ay magkaroon ng sapat na kakayahan na gawin ang kailangang gawin para maka adapt tayo sa mga problema ng climate change.

At hindi tayo dapat lumikas sa Copenhagen nang walang kasunduang mahigpit alinsunod sa mga pananagutang dapat tanggapin ng lahat bagamat iba-iba ang nakaatas sa bawat bansa. Tao ang lumikha ng suliraning ito at tao rin ang lulutas nito.

Kanina nga yung dasal sabi nung ginawa ng Panginoon ang ating mundo walang polusyon kaya itong polusyon ay nanggaling sa tao at tao rin ang dapat makahanap ng solusyon.

At ang hinihingi ko sa inyong lahat ay... ang panawagan ko sa inyong lahat, itaguyod ang ating gobyerno sa ating pagsusulong sa ating bansang Pilipinas ng kaunlarang gumagalang sa kalikasan. Ako ay nagpapasalamat sa lahat ng tulong ninyo at suporta ninyo. Nasisiyahan akong marinig kay Ambassador Buensuceso na kapag may magandang balita tungkol sa Pilipinas kayo ay nasisiyahan at kung may malungkot o masamang balita tungkol sa Pilipinas kayo naman ay nagdadamay at nagdedepensa. Sana ituloy ninyo itong paggabay sa ating pamahalaan at kayo rin naman, siguro naman ay nararamdaman din niyo ang pagmamahal ng ating bansa para sa inyo.

Salamat kay Ambassador Buensuceso. And we thank our Honorary Consul General, salamat sa mga leaders ng Filipino community dito na tumutulong sa pag-aalaga ng ating mga Pilipino dito. Kayo ay over 10,000 Filipinos sa Denmark. I hope that you are 10,000 happy Filipinos because you are 10,000 beloved and respected Filipinos, respected not only in Denmark but in your home country the Philippines.

Maraming salamat at Maligayang Pasko sa inyong lahat!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a meeting with the Filipino community. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133647/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27149&Itemid=38

Message of President Arroyo on Christmas Day

Message of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines On Christmas Day

[Delivered at the Malacañang Palace Garden, December 23, 2009]

On the very first Christmas, we were gifted by the Almighty with the greatest present of all – His only Son Jesus Christ, who brought us new hope as the living proof of God’s unequalled love for mankind.

On this Christmas, we call to memory once again this Sacred Gift. We draw renewed strength from the certainty that within our hearts and around us dwells the likeness of the Son of God.

This year, every test we faced carried with it an opportunity to lighten the burdens of life. We experienced God’s love for us in the charity and hopefulness that Filipinos gave to each other in their time of need.

This Christmas, let us remember the lessons that we learned this year. Let us remember that we can be assured that God will understand and comfort us.

Let us come together for the Almighty this Christmas. Let us fill our hearts with gratitude and share with our fellowmen the gift of love and hope, so that we may become worthy of God’s Greatest Gift.

I humbly thank the Almighty for the opportunity He has given me to serve our people the best that I can. And I thank the millions of Filipinos who love our country for their dedication to achieve our common dream of a better future.

I wish all of our countrymen a Christmas filled with love and a New Year full of peace.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s Christmas Message. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133619/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27178&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 74th Armed Forces of the Philippines' Day

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 74th Armed Forces of the Philippines' Day

[Delivered at Camp Aguinaldo, Quezon City, December 24, 2009]

Thank you General Ibrado. Senate President Enrile; Senator Biazon, Executive Secretary Ermita; Undersecretary Santos representing Secretary Gonzales who is on temporary medical leave, Major Service Commanders, members of the diplomatic corps, Former Secretary de Villa, Bishop Tumalak, Congressman Arbison, other government officials present, officers men and women of the Armed Forces, General Icarma give “tikas pahinga”

Isang mainit na pagbati sa ating mga sundalo sa pagdiriwang nitong ating anibersaryo.

Espesyal na pagbati rin sa mga nagkamit ng parangal itong araw na ito.

And I thank you all once again for the many ways that the great Filipino soldier renders service to the Filipino people.

Those who were assigned to implement martial law in Maguindanao showed our people that the Philippines is a law abiding democratic nation that upholds the rule of law and respects human rights. I thank our soldiers very much for that. I have instructed the Secretary of National Defense and the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces to give medals and promotions to the deserving men and women who were in that assignment. Congratulations to all of you!

Today we started that process by giving unit awards to those who were involved in the implementation of Martial Law in Maguindanao. Soon to follow will be their individual promotions and also their individual awards. If anything positive can come out of the terrible tragedy in Maguindanao, it is that the heartbeat of peace and human rights is very much alive. This is clear by the passion by which people across the nation condemned the violence, but also by the admirable behavior of our troops who implemented Martial Law, and by the positive developments we are seeing once again in our peace talks in Mindanao.

We are gratified that even in the midst of Martial Law in Maguindanao; we were able to resume formally our peace negotiations with the MILF. The ceasefire we broken years ago in 2003, six years ago with the MILF continue to hold. And as I said, we have resumed formal peace negotiations.

Let us pray that this will result in a permanent peace. I can't think of nothing more desirable for the people in Mindanao and for our nation than peace at the soonest possible time. Only lasting peace will bring true justice and ensure that crimes such as those that were committed in Maguindanao and those that were committed also in Basilan cannot be repeated.

During our administration, we have made several important captures and the elimination of key figures of the Abu Sayyaf and Jemaah Islamiyah terrorists. You, the great Filipino soldier have hit them hard and with much success. As reported to us earlier by General Ibrado, the Abu Sayyaf strength has been significantly reduced, but there is more to be done if we are to attain long-lasting peace.

Let us continue to strengthen our relations with the people in those areas by literally building bridges with the local population as well as schools, medical facilities and other infrastructure that wins over the people and narrow support for the terrorists. The Kalayaan Barangay Projects that you are putting up have improved the quality of life in those areas rendered vulnerable to the serene songs of rebellion or terrorism because of poverty, maraming salamat para doon.

And I am glad that the unit heads of those involved in the outstanding Kalayaan Barangay Projects also received their awards today.

Those who have been or are now involved in the various campaigns against armed communist groups are showing how to put to rest the destruction and violation of human rights by the communist rebels so that the nation can move ahead. Again, as reported by General Ibrado, insurgent strength has been on the decline since three years ago because of the faithful implementation by the great Filipino soldier of our hard and soft power strategy. Indeed, hard and soft powers go together, peace and development go together.

As we improve the security of the parts of the country that have known some degree of violence, we had quickly able to move to develop the economy in those areas. When we do that, we ensure a lasting peace and order that ensures that security is no longer an issue. Witness the rapid increases in development, in formally infested areas such as Ifugao and Sulu. But also witness that nationally, there is no question about the crucial role that the AFP has played in keeping the peace that has brought us an unprecedented continuous growth for 34 quarters.

Those who participated in the rescue and the rehabilitation efforts in the aftermath of typhoons Ondoy and Pepeng and now in the Mount Mayon explosions showed our people the meaning of courage and sacrifice outside the battlefield. I am very gratified that today, we honored the units that were involved in those rescue and rehabilitation efforts and also we honored the two great Filipino soldiers who gave up their lives in this effort, thank you from a grateful nation.

In my years as your Commander in Chief, I am proud to have presided over the training and the equipping of our military to be more professional and effective. But I am most especially proud to have presided over the biggest increases in benefits in the history of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

Barely three months into my term, I gave you my commitment to the modernization program, including the adjustment of salaries and other benefits for our soldiers. At that time, government was scraping the bottom of the cash barrel when I first assumed office, but together with the Congress and the Senate, we worked for a salary increase starting with making the soldiers' pay equivalent to that of a teacher. Our soldiers did not deserve to wait any longer. They did not deserve to wait until we would be able to have more fiscal reforms.

But after that, with successive gains in our economy and with the fiscal reforms, the great Filipino soldiers has had three more increases in basic pay, hazard pay and subsistence allowance. As mentioned by General Ibrado, we have also expanded housing and other benefits for our soldiers, including more scholarships for your family members and more protection for your retirement benefits. So, I am also glad that during these awarding ceremonies, we gave awards to the association of state universities and colleges who have been a good partner in providing those scholarships. We also make sure that the families of those who were killed or wounded in battle will be provided for at least during the grieving period.

Yes, we have modernized or we have started to modernize and we are at the process of modernizing our armed forces, but I am even more proud that we have started to modernize and continue to modernize the benefits for the great Filipino soldier.

Hindi lang sa salita kayo pinasasalamatan. Kaya sa ating mga sundalo, ipagpatuloy natin ang pagtugis sa mga kalaban ng bansa na sumisira sa katahimikan at kabuhayan ng sambayanan. Huwag kayong titigil hangga't napapayapa ang lahat ng kabayanan. Ipagpatuloy din natin ang gawaing iniatas sa mga sundalo sa panahon ng kalamidad at para sa kaunlaran. At upang matupad ang lahat na itong kakayahan, dapat ipagpatuloy ng AFP ang modernisasyon at pagtataguyod sa kahandaan ng dakilang sundalong Pilipino.

So on this, your anniversary, our anniversary; I thank the great Filipino soldier once again for your professionalism, your courage and your dedication to duty and the chain of command.

Ipinagkakapuri ko kayo. Kayo ay dakilang dangal ng lahing Pilipino. Kaya ako'y nasisiyahan na kasama kayo itong Christmas eve. Kayo ay nagbibigay ng magandang Pasko sa ating bansa.

Maganda at mapayapang Pasko!

Kaya sa inyong lahat naman, maligayang Pasko at mabuhay, Maraming maraming salamat sa dakilang sundalong Pilipino. Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2009). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 74th Armed Forces of the Philippines' Day. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100615133615/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27186&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 55th General Assembly of the League of Cities of the Philippines

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 55th General Assembly of the League of Cities of the Philippines

[Delivered at Coral A Room, Manila Pavilion, Maria Orosa St. cor. U.N. Ave., Manila, January 14, 2010]

Thank you.

Thank you, Secretary Puno.

Mayor Abalos and the other officers of the League of Cities, city mayors from all over the country: Happy New Year to all of you, to all the members of the League of Cities of the Philippines!

And let me say, you know, Benhur was talking about the past years of his presidency of the League and reviewing these past years, let me say that the cities have been among the most efficient and effective of the National Government's LGU partners.

You have many successful programs, and your most successful programs ensured not only the economic viability of your cities, they also helped to enable our country to escape recession last year even as two-thirds of the world was devastated by the worst economic slowdown in 60 years. Not only with our growth stays positive, but Business writer Tony Lopez even quoted Han Sy, many of you know him because you have SM malls all over the cities. Han Sy said, that SM malls had their best year ever in 2009. That means that whatever the macro figures are about positive growth are translated into spending power for the ordinary Filipino.

But not only SM but also your cities are to be congratulated for their success because most of the SM malls and other major businesses for that matter are located in the cities. And your governance plays a big role in business friendliness. In fact, Benhur was talking about the different things you've been doing to make your cities more business-friendly. Certainly here in Metro Manila, we have been proud to tell the world about the cutting down of red tape because of the shortened and also synchronized licensing and permit system. And I understand that there is a continuing effort that every city achieves ISO certification. These efforts, these achievements are particularly impressive.

And the success of the cities is due in no small part to the leadership of the League of Cities. So for the hard work, Benhur and the other officials of this League have put to improve the quality of governance in our cities, congratulations and thank you. Hindi matatawaran ang naitulong ng League of Cities sa kaunlarang tinatamasa ng iba't-ibang mga siyudad.

And therefore, what the nation has achieved in the last nine years is not only a record of the achievements of national government, but it's also a story of your success. Why? For one thing Benhur is right about the number of persons who now lived in cities and urban areas. When my father was in politics seventy percent of the people were in the rural areas but now that's no longer the case, the people are in the cities.

Urbanization is a joint product of demographic growth and economic development. It is they say an irreversible feature of modern life. I remember a few years ago there was a book about trends in the 21st century, and one of these trends is increasing urbanization. This presents opportunities, and you know more than I do, as well as problems. It presents rewards, and you know more than I do, together with the risks. And that's why I can understand the concerns that the League has over the increasing urbanization, including the increasing number of cities.

At the end of the day the issue is performance and results. And if we are to review what we did together, Benhur previewed some of the things we did together. All of the things that Benhur said I did for you were an implementation of what together you and I set out to do nine years ago. And that is to get our economy moving again, to regain control over the fiscal insanity that we inherited, and invest in the people for the first time in a generation. By any measure, our economy has performed better than any economy in the Philippines over the past 30 years — peaking at more than 7.0 percent growth in 2007 before the global recession.

I will quote Tony Lopez again who points out: during this period, per capita GNP more than doubled — one thousand dollars in year 2000 to over 2,000 by 2008. Even if 18 more Filipinos were born, still per capita income doubled. And the economy itself more than doubled. It was 75 billion dollars in year 2000; it's worth 189 billion dollars today, that's more than double.

And how does it translate into the lives of ordinary Filipinos? The best measure is the people who buy from SM. Why do they buy from SM? Because there are more jobs available. We've created nine million new jobs including creating an entire new industry almost from scratch — the call centers and BPO industry that has put the Philippines on the global map. I just came now from yet another call center and BPO center located in Eastwood, and there they have a thousand employees now, they're going to double that and that is the story of almost every call center here. India's BPO business is at nine billion dollars; ours is seven billion dollars, we're not very far behind. And if it comes to call centers themselves we have more workers, half a million in call centers, than India does because India has more in the IT portion of it. So that is only one source, half a million people of the nine million new jobs created. Nine million new jobs is certainly a substantial result.

One of our key legacies in terms of steering the Philippine economy forward in the new millennium is the sheer momentum of economic growth on our watch: 34 straight quarters of growth and that is unprecedented, capped by continued positive growth as I said even through the depths of the worst global recession in decades. And as Benhur said, we've also stabilized inflation, strengthened our currency, and we have increased the access of three million children to education through investments in schools, classrooms and textbooks. And I must thank the cities, because even if education is not yet evolved, you the cities use a lot of your own IRA and your income from licenses and real estate taxes in order to put up more classrooms, hire more teachers and buy more textbooks. So we can say that together, we have invested in the people as a result of our tight fiscal controls, as a result of our new revenues both national and city, and because of all these the lower cost of borrowing and the bigger empowerment of the cities to borrow as Benhur said. Now you can go straight to the financing institutions, get your own terms and borrow on your own credit rating. That has led to more and better schools, more healthcare, and more economic opportunity.

Another legacy is the fiscal reforms we instituted, capped by the Expanded Value Added Tax which brought down our deficit ratios. You see, when people talked about deficits, it shouldn't be the number itself. When people talked about our loans, it shouldn't be the loans themselves. It should be as a ratio of our own total production and certainly that ratio has gone down tremendously. Because a big corporation can borrow more than a small company, because they can absorb the debt servicing more. And it is a way by which you can expand the economy more. And that is why even if our critics point to absolute numbers, our ratings have been upgraded, our cost of borrowing has been lowered, that means we have much better credit and economic rating than ever. And our revenues have funded economic stimulus and social safety nets against the worst of the global recession. Yes, these reforms were bitter and unpopular but they have spared our country the worst of the global financial shocks.

And equally important, they gave you and me the resources to stimulate the economy. Kinuwento ni Benhur kung papano lumaki ang IRA, ang kalahatang IRA over the past years pero ang pinakamalaking laki ng IRA ay nangyari noong isang taon, 2009, the first year that the LGU shared in the new EVAT, that's why last year the IRA increased by 40 billion pesos. It went up to 249 billion pesos from barely P210 the year before. And this year it will be P265 billion, imparting strength throughout the country at every level of government, and I can understand your concern about how the cities will share in this new IRA. Of course, I can't comment on it in sub judice but we respect whatever the League of Cities and individual cities will do as far as that is concern.

The immediate challenge coming up now is for you to make your respective cities a model of free, fair and open elections. With the help of our newly established automated polling system, let's work hard to help the COMELEC ensure this for the people of the Philippines and the people of your cities.

Meanwhile, until June 30th we are in our respective offices so there should be no respite in our efforts to make our cities more and more liveable. Let us look forward into the future to see what more we need to do in the next six months to ensure that the Philippines and your cities continue down a path of growth in the long-term.

With your unceasing hard work and with your support and with our supporting each other, I know that we will beat the odds and bring most of your cities to the first world in twenty years.

Maraming salamat. And on this last meeting of yours, congratulations to the League of Cities!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 55th General Assembly of the League of Cities of the Philippines. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100410090039/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27286&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the opening ceremony of the Coral Triangle Initiative Business Summit with the launching of the photo exhibit “New Partnership for Sustainable Growth in the Coral Triangle”

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the opening ceremony of the Coral Triangle Initiative Business Summit with the launching of the photo exhibit “New Partnership for Sustainable Growth in the Coral Triangle”

[Delivered at the Rizal Ballroom, The Makati Shangri-la Hotel, Makati City, January 19, 2010]

Thank you, Secretary Yap.

Secretary Yap together with Department of Agriculture and Secretary Quinto of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources are the two lead Cabinet members in charge of the Coral Triangle in our country. But I'm happy that Secretary Gary Teves of the Department of Finance is also here with us today.

Chairman Vince Perez, chair of this first ever Business Summit in an eco-region, the very first in the world. Congratulations Vince for putting this together. Dr. Lida, who conceived of the Coral Triangle a few years ago, I understand, in Tagaytay over lechon and green mangoes. Congratulations for where we are today.

Ladies and gentlemen, a warm welcome to the Philippines, and thank you for joining us here today.

We gather here today because of our shared commitment to sustain the viability of the world's largest and most important marine nursery and sanctuary, the Coral Triangle. Convening this business summit for the Coral Triangle Initiative is one among many activities we have this year to support the United Nation's declaration of the year 2010 as the International Year of Biodiversity. As a party to the Convention on Biological Biodiversity, it is our obligation to raise awareness on the importance of biodiversity conservation.

Of course, all of you are stakeholders in the Coral Triangle. So, all of you know that the Coral Triangle spans a vast area of six million kilometers. Its waters wash the shores of seven nations, six of whom are members of the Coral Triangle Initiative — Indonesia, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, the Solomon Islands, Timor Leste and the Philippines. It also washes the shores of Brunei, whom we have invited and who has accepted to be a member of the CTI. The Coral Triangle is home to an estimated 80% of the total known species of corals. It is a major source of food not only for our countries located in the triangle but also for many other countries to whom we supply our marine products. It is likewise a significant provider of the livelihood and trade of our countries located in the triangle.

This makes it imperative for us to work together and protect and enhance the sustainable development of these shared coastal marine resources.

The Coral Triangle Initiative, as I learned last night, was conceived in Tagaytay City. But it was first officially proposed by Indonesian President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono at the 2007 summit of APEC. Since then, the countries involved in the CTI have approved important agreements for concerted and bilateral cooperation that will contribute to the sustainability of the Coral Triangle's resources. Each of our countries went through extensive consultations with our different constituencies to ensure that our collective plans embodied the aspirations of our people and answered the most daunting challenges we face through solutions that we will endeavor to work on together.

For this CTI's Businessmen's Summit, we aim not only to gather the businessmen's commitment to protect the Coral Triangle, but also to look for ways to support businesses and industries dependent on the resources of the Triangle. We want to show that environmental protection on the one hand, and economic growth and poverty reduction on the other hand, can co-exist side by side and mutually prosper by exploring business initiatives that support both goals.

We want to change the traditional thinking that forces us to choose between economic growth and environmental protection. We want to infect businesses throughout the world with our enthusiasm and show hard evidence that businesses can thrive, not in spite of, but because of sound environmental practices. To this end, the government of the Philippines hereby announces its support for the mainstreaming of the use of circle hooks to dramatically reduce turtle by catch in long line fishing operations.

We thank the Philippines and other corporations who are already doing this, and we urge more to do this as well. This should be not only by our successful private tuna fishing companies, but more importantly by our small fishermen and fisherfolk groups.

We want to add our organized businessmen's voices to the growing clamor for nations, particularly the developed countries, to take more responsibility for the damage they have wrought on our environment all these past years. They must contribute more to arrest climate change.

The Philippines is a climate taker, not a climate maker. We are buffeted by terrible typhoons and terrible droughts and yet our carbon emissions constitute less than one percent of the world's total toxic gas emissions to the atmosphere. We are not complacent about our responsibility to the environment.

The environment is in fact one of the three E's, together with Education and the Economy, of our development agenda that has been the focus of our Administration for the last nine years. We have worked hard to create a Green Philippines agenda to ensure that our economic growth is balanced with the need for environmental conservation that our growth is sustainable.

Secretary Arthur Yap in introducing me mentioned some of the important legislation we have done to promote the protection of the environment. The culmination or the latest of which is the Climate Change Act of 2009 which provides a framework for climate change planning. This includes prioritizing the issue of climate change in the national development planning process.

We've also as he said, enacted the Solid Waste Management Act, the Clean Water Act. We have also enacted a Biofuels Law and a Renewable Energy Law that altogether forged a new energy and environmental policy that creates more jobs, provides a blueprint for a green, sustainable economy and decreased reliance on foreign sources of energy.

Some of our achievements include: Successfully raising our energy self-sufficiency levels from less than half in year 2000 to almost 60% today; Fruitful investment promotion in renewable energy and bio-fuels which has led to more than 3,000 new megawatts of renewable energy the past year.

This may be part of why in Copenhagen, the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank made available for us 250 million dollars from the Climate Technology Fund.

I mentioned this to point out that as saving the world from fossil fuels can be profitable, so also can saving the Coral Triangle be profitable.

Therefore, I call on you today to join the new breed of businessmen who believe that profit and environmental protection can co-exist. I invite you to look at the opportunities for environmentally sound business opportunities in the countries comprising the Coral Triangle. There is no other way to go for you and me.

Mabuhay and thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the opening ceremony of the Coral Triangle Initiative Business Summit with the launching of the photo exhibit "New Partnership for Sustainable Growth in the Coral Triangle". Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100410085959/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27308&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the launching of the PGMA projects on modernizing agriculture in Region I

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the launching of the PGMA projects on modernizing agriculture in Region I

[Delivered at the Teatro Ilocandia, Mariano Marcos State University, Batac City, Ilocos Norte, January 27, 2010]

Dios ti agngina unay, Apo Secretary Esperon, anak met ti amyanan, naggapo ti Asingan, Pangasinan.

Apo Governor Keon; Apo Congressman Ablan; Apo Mayor Nalupta; amin nga mayors ti probinsiya ti Ilocos Norte addadtoy tatta; Secretary Vic Domingo, anak met ti Laoag, Secretary ti Public Works; amin nga opisyaales, of course, President Pascua; dagiti opisyaales; maestra; maestro; ken estudyante, naimbag a bigat yo amin, Apo.

And congratulations to Apo Pascua and the whole MMSU for your leadership in Agribusiness, Research and Education in the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle.

But I am very proud to say that in our administration had a great deal to do with that leadership. When President Pascua return to our seat, after she enumerated all the things you've done and with all the funds, I asked her, "Has any administration ever helped you as much as my administration?" She said, "No one. I'ts been in this administration."

We are undertaking a thorough and aggressive tour — which I'm starting today — to each region to review our legacy of accomplishments in each of our super regions, and that's why I'm glad that we started with the review of the accomplishments of MMSU which is a vital element in our agribusiness development.

Our super regions are the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle, where we are; the Luzon Urban Beltway; Central Philippines; Agribusiness Mindanao; and the Cyber Corridor. Agrugi tayo ti Regional tour tayo toy Region I, nga nagapoan ko met ti bangir ni mamang ko nga taga- Binalonan, Pangasinan. Ken ti Apong ko, naggapo ti Bacarra ti Ilocos Norte. And I'm happy to visit you in this school because your school is an essential backdrop to any visit, to any review of accomplishments in the Ilocos Region.

Congratulations! to the Ilocos Region. You're one of the four... top, you're number one... ah, no. You're number four among the most progressive regions of our country. Idi year 2000 nga awanak pay, your per capita income was 23,000 pesos. Itatta it's more than 30,000 pesos.

Adayun iti nadanon ti Pilipinas haan laeng ti Ilocos, manipud idi Enero iti 2001. Ub-ubing pay kayo idi year 2000, year 2001, ten years ago, you were all very, very young. You were children, idi ken agyaman tayo nga binura iti panawen, memories of that tumultuous time nga awan pay sangapulo nga tawen iti napalabas, idi nga iti pagilyan teetered on political chaos and financial bankruptcy.

Iti ekonomya was jammed in reverse. Bassit iti agipupuonan, bassit iti baro nga trabaho. The national debt was 3.6 trillion pesos, bigger than the gross national product of 3.3 trillion pesos. Itatta, haanen. It's much, much lower.

Iso nga idi nadadakkel iti uppat nga porsyento iti produksyon tayo magastos kada tawen tapno mabayadan laeng dagiti interest ti foreign debt tayo. Nakaing-ingpis iti foreign reserves tayo idi ten years ago.

Para kadagiti tattao, panawen isuna iti manmano nga trabaho laeng, nababbaba nga tangdan, nababa nga sweldo ken nangato nga inflation. In the Ilocos at that time ten years ago, unemployment was double digit. Not anymore today. Idi ten years go, gapu iti kulang ti kwarta ti gobyerno ken dakkel ti utang, agkurang iti naipaay nga puonan tapno mapalawa ti healthcare, mapasayaat iti edukasyon, makaited iti nadalus nga danum ken masapul nga kuryente kadagiti adayu nga barangay.

Internationally, nabatin iti Pilipinas, ken adayu ti radar screen. It had forfeited its strategic importance, weakened iti alyansa na iti rehiyon ken iti lubong, ken iniklat iti bagi na iti pagpilpilian dagiti mangipuonan kas lugar nga para iti puonan ken iti baro nga trabaho. Ngem itatta, I'm glad, courtesy of Congressman Ablan, we have here an investment from the Middle East who is looking at where to invest in the Ilocos.

Kadagitoy dismal picture tayo idi 2001 sumrek tayo. Idi 2001, saan ko nga dinawat iti Office of the President; it was thrust upon me. But instead of shirking from this onerous task, I rolled up my sleeves, nga determinado nga baliwen iti Pilipinas.

Kas maysa nga laser beam iti imatang ko nga makaited iti real results tapno mapasayaat dagiti biag iti kadawyan nga Pilipino. Kas maysa nga ekonomista, ammok nga tapno mabaliw iti adu nga tawen iti economic decline, masapul to instill fiscal discipline, parang-ayen iti ekonomya ken mangipuonan iti human ken physical infrastructure.

Manipud iti immuna nga aldaw, dagitoy nga aramid iti nagbalin nga building blocks panagbaliw nga nangted iti 35 nga agsasaruno nga quarter iti panagrang-ay, iti panakaaramid iti siyam nga milyon nga trabaho, iti addition of 53 milyon nga healthcare, ken iti stable fiscal situation.

Nangted tayo ti sangkailian nga sistema iti transportasyon that binds the nation together, tapno dagiti tattao ken produkto can be delivered faster, cheaper, and safer from one end of the nation to another.

Region I kasla kunak pay itattay, kadua ti North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle. Here, that is why MMMSU is doing so much agricultural research, agribusiness research and education is because we prioritize agribusiness investment in North Luzon. The agricultural and fisheries potential of Ilocandia, the Cordilleras and Cagayan Valley can feed Luzon affordably. And nearness to North Asia holds the rich promise of agricultural exports and tourism. Haan laeng agricultural exports, even mineral exports like the sand in Sarrat which is an export to China.

Well, we have provided MMSU with more assistance than any other administration. But I'm also proud that we have built more roads and bridges than three previous administrations put together.

For Region I, that means more than 1,000 kilometers of roads, including farm- to-market roads and 15 major bridges, and improved highways such as the Patapat Road linking Ilocos and Cagayan.

Last December, I inaugurated two half-kilometer bridges: the Amburayan Bridge in the La Union-Ilocos Sur boundary and the Quirino Bridge in Ilocos Sur. And today before coming here, we inaugurated the Sarrat Bridge, also half a kilometer. These bridges cost about half a billion pesos for each bridge. S 500 million pesos for the Sarrat Bridge of half a kilometer. And why did that 500 million pesos well invested? It used to take one hour just to cross the river in Sarrat, and you had to go through Laoag to go from the farms of Sarrat to the market of Sarrat. But now, with that bridge it's only five minutes — a very important farm-to-market bridge.

We have other big ticket items such as the Laoag River Flood Control. In Pangasinan, the Agno River Flood Control. In fact later today, we will visit the Agno River project in Pangasinan.

We have not yet even counted in this 1,000 kilometers the La Union-Pangasinan-Tarlac Expressway which will make it so easy to come to Ilocos when that is done years from now. Later today, we will go to Rosario, La Union to launch that build-operate-and-transfer project.

Well, of course, Ilocos is quite far, we want to make it nearer with this improved roads but we also need upgraded airports and we have done that. Two of the upgraded airports have been elevated to international status: Laoag and Poro Point International Airports. Those are important for the transport of people and the transport of our agricultural products.

For instance, our friends from the Middle East, why are they coming to look at the Philippines? And the Philippines is I understand was one of the top five choices for investments from the Middle East on agribusiness and food. They started doing this in 2008 when there was a food crisis. Of course, you remember the food crisis two years ago. That affected the whole world including the Middle East, which is mostly desert. Therefore, it is not self-sufficient in agriculture and they experience a very great difficulty in importing their food requirements. So after that they made a decision that they would use their accumulated petro dollars to look at other countries where they can produce agribusiness products for exportation back to the Middle East. They went to maybe like 20 countries, brought it finally down to five countries as finalists, and the Philippines is one of them. And I am glad that Agribusiness North Luzon Quadrangle is one of the choice areas for these investments.

Iso nga para dagiti mannalon tayo, importante ti tulong ti imprastruktura. So we have filled especially for our farmers or rehabilitated irrigation systems to water a 156,000 hectares; in 2001 it was only 16,000. One of the important irrigation projects is in Ilocos Sur, the Banaoang Irrigation Project which we will also visit today. And to further encourage agricultural development, we distributed 48,000 hectares of agricultural lands.

Whether in agriculture or in other sectors, the people of Region I have benefited from increased release also to finance Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises. In the last five years, haan pay counting the last ten years, P5 billion has been loaned out to 200,000 clients in this region. And to help in the skills, TESDA has enabled almost 60,000 trainings just for one year 2009. We have attained gains in the quality of education in Region I. And I am glad that MMSU is one of the centers of excellence for education.

Going to basic education, the biggest gains are in the retention rate in elementary grades, meaning keeping children in school because. In the past, in grade school, there was a 9% dropout rate; now it has gone down to 4%. So the dropout rate has gone down to one-half. That is in grade school. The same thing in high school, it used to be 8% dropout rate; it is now down to 4%. Among the reason for this, sapay kuma are the scholarships. I don't know if you know it, young ones, but even in private schools, half of the students are on government scholarships and that is something that is new, that quantity is new.

Nangaramid met tayo iti energy and environmental policy nga nakaaramid met iti ad-adu nga trabaho, nangibaba iti reliance iti energy aggapu kadagiti sabali nga pagilyan, ken nangited iti blueprint para iti green ken sustainable economy.

I'd like to congratulate Region I for hosting the first commercial wind mill farm, the Bangui Bay Wind Project in Ilocos Norte, (applause) which now provides electricity for the whole town and has reduced the oil dependence of the region and the country as a whole. And for rural folks, if you remember the beginning of my statement, idi year 2000, ado nga barangay nga awan ti kuryente. I'm very happy that today in Region I, all the barangays already have electricity.

Iti pagpili iti nasayaat nga trabaho wenno clean economy is a false choice: mabalin tayo maaddaan iti rumangrang-ay nga ekonomya ken iti berde, healthy economy. And we have achieved that in our last nine years in office.

Mangibati tayo iti legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, a renewed global engagement, kaduwaan dagiti sumsumrek nga investors, major investments in healthcare and education kasla dagiti investments tayo ti education toy MMSU, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure as I was mentioning some examples earlier.

In fact, I was so happy driving from the airport to Laoag to Sarrat to see how many things there are now in the skyline of Laoag. Now, many new dormitories for students which means bustling education, very nice developments for housing like the one of Robinsons, beautiful malls and so these are signs, visible signs of progress not only government infrastructure but private sector investments.

Adu pay iti masapul nga aramidin, ngem determinado tayo nga ipasa to a new government, anew Philippines, one that is ready for bringing our nation to the verge of first world in 20 years.

But to do that, free and fair elections are important. And you, the students, need to get involved in a positive way in the civic life of the nation. That is why I felt that for a regional tour, I must have a visit to a school and I chose MMSU to be the school to visit.

So, one that I ask you to do is to involve, be involved in civic life. Two, that I ask you to do is to encourage a “no guns, no violence” campaign. I think it is the young people who can do this campaign, so we can try to change the culture of violence.

Young people of this region and all of the youth of the land, we, your elders, count on you to be bold — not for yourselves only but for others: for your family, your friends, the generations after you, and for our beloved Philippines. I remember when I was young long ago, full of dreams — and I know you are full of dreams — dreams that will bring our country to greater glory and give the Filipinos the quality of life that we deserve. And I can only pray that during this past nine years of our administration, we gave you the means to be able to dream those dreams and the foundation on which you can make your dreams for yourselves and for our country come true.

Dios ti agngina kadakayo amin.

Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo’s speech during the launching of the PGMA projects on modernizing agriculture in Region I. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235329/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27372&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during a visit to the College of the Holy Spirit

Speech of Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo President of the Philippines During a visit to the College of the Holy Spirit

[Delivered at the 163 E. Mendiola St., Manila, January 28, 2010]

Thank you.

Thank you very much, Commissioner Defensor for your introduction. I think you know Commissioner Defensor's sister also, Senator Miriam Defensor Santiago.

Sister Salva and the rest of the sisters, faculties, students and staff of Holy Spirit, thank you very much for the warm welcome.

Thank you for receiving me at short notice. I invited myself to come here. I wasn't able to attend the concert where we featured the piano from Malacañang but I thought that I would therefore do one of my first visits to the students in your school which is just across from where I lived and worked.

I'm doing this visit because one of my New Year's resolutions is that before the end of my term I should continue to reach out to the youth of this nation. And you, why? Because you're the future. You, the youth are our future. And that is also why education is essential.

I think you all know, I think you're all here in school because you know that a good education is the ticket to a better life. You know that education is the great equalizer which will allow every young Filipino a chance to realize your dreams. That is why our administration has invested so much in education and skills training. I don't know if you know it, but from 90 billion plus pesos before my administration, the combined budget of DepEd, NEDA, CHED and the state universities and colleges has doubled to over a 180 billion pesos.

And what did we do with this money? For one thing, we built over a 100,000 classrooms, and many of these are in about a thousand barangays where there used to be no schools at all. And what is the reason why we're doing this? Because the U.N. Millennium Development Goals is for us to reach... to achieve primary universal education by 2015. It's very hard to reach this; in fact the U.N. says probably no country will get to reach this except Cuba — small country, so easy to build classrooms for everyone.

And why do we need to build schools, classrooms especially in the thousand barangays where there were none? Because if you're in a far away barangay and the next school is two hours walk away, and your child is six years old, you won't send your child to school. And we found out that 58% only is the enrollment of six year-olds to enter primary school, others enter much later, others don't enter at all. So we've got to get them when they're six year old and the best way to do it is to build a school at least for grade 1 and 2 in the same barangay where the children live.

It is important so that you can save on transportation going to school and also on the safety and the comfort of the parents whose children have to walk to school. We asked many parents, why don't you send your six year old to school? And they've said, well, transportation is one problem, the other thing is although school is free as far as tuition is concerned in public schools, they cannot pay for the miscellaneous fees and they cannot pay for the uniforms. So we have removed in the public schools the requirement for uniforms and in primary school we have removed the miscellaneous fees. That's why the government has to spend more. In fact, what would be covered by miscellaneous fees? In fact, one time, the Girl Scouts of the Philippines came to see me. Now that miscellaneous fees are taken out, they said — at least miscellaneous compulsory fees — what happens now to our Girl Scouts fees?

And I said, well, in grade 5 they can start paying, but in grade 1 to 4 they shouldn't, otherwise they might not go to school because of the pressure to pay for all these miscellaneous fees. And they said, but it's the grade school, it's the primary school fees that keep the Girl Scouts going. So I said, well, we'll just have to contribute more to the Girl Scouts from the government rather than getting them from our students.

We also have another program to have the poorest one million families in our country send their children to school. This is our Pantawid Pamilya program which provides them with an allowance. One million poorest families in our country have an allowance of 800 pesos to P1,400 a month, depending on the size of their family, but depending on certain conditions. One of them is that the children from 3 years old up to 16 years old should go to school, whether day care, pre-school, elementary or high school. And we hope that will increase our access to universal primary education. Because as I said, you know more than I do that education is the ticket to a better life.

So, aside of course, the most basic is to make sure that children go to school, the nearest next thing is once they go to school, we've got to make sure that they have a good education. And today I was just having lunch with the newspaper, Business Mirror, and one of the columnists who are a foreigner said he sent his children to public schools in Makati. And he was saying that although he's from Hong Kong, although he is a foreigner, the school facilities may not be as nice as they have in America, one big difference is that our Filipino teachers are much more devoted to the teaching profession than teachers in many other schools. So, a tribute to our teachers.

The quality of teachers is indeed important and if you are going to have additional schools, classrooms, we certainly need additional teachers. So in our administration, we increased the number of teaching jobs by 60,000 and we also increased the salaries of public school teachers. A teacher who used to receive 9,000 pesos now earns 14,000 pesos in the public school. But one of the things that we need to do is to make sure, as far as a good quality of education is concerned, that if you're going to have a good chance for a job after college, you must be good in English. This is a great... a very competitive world.

During our generation, and maybe even in Sister Genoveva's administration and Commissioner Nenalyn's administration, the medium of instruction was English. We were very competitive; we were second only to Japan in economic development in Asia. Then sometime later, in the 1970s, that was removed as the medium of instruction and we started to lose one of our big sources of competitiveness. Now the world is even more competitive, and one of our big assets is the Business Process Outsourcing where you would have a very good job, a very chance to have a good job if you speak good English. Unfortunately... so what we did was to restore English as the medium of instruction but one of the problems we found is that our very devoted teachers grew up in the generation where English was no longer the medium of instruction, so some of them did not even had their own problems with English. So we had to spend 1.5 billion pesos for teacher training, especially in Math, Science and especially in English.

So, we had now increased the use of English as a medium of instruction from 40% of hours to 55% in elementary school and from 45% to 70% in high school. I guess you are noticing that in your own school. And we also increased Science and Math hours by 50%. Well you wouldn't be able to notice that, because when we talk about 50%, I mean from ten years ago when you were still very young, so you're having much more English training now, you are having much more Science training now, you're having much more Math training now than about ten years ago because we want to make sure that you will be more competitive and you will have a better job when you get out of school.

I was talking about what we spend on public schools, but we also spend a lot on private schools. You know because we have had an increase in teachers' salaries in public high schools, we've had spending classrooms in public high schools. In my father's time, when he was still very young, he had to go to San Fernando, Pampanga to go to high school because there was no high school in Lubao, our hometown. Now there is a high school in every barangay in Lubao. One of the problems here is that private education has started to suffer because you have to pay your way through private high school but your public high school is free, but we don't want the private schools to die especially schools that give a good Catholic education like the College of Holy Spirit. And the way we've done this to help out is to increase the scholarship funds of GATSPE and education vouchers for private education. In fact, in private high schools — I don't know if the ratio is that way here in Holy Spirit — almost half of all private high school students are government scholars. And I asked Sister if the College of Holy Spirit participates in that. You do participate, isn't it, Sister? You do participate in the scholarship programs. So many of you, your tuition is subsidized by the government. That is our way of helping the private high schools because we want you to continue and we want you to flourish and we want to keep up your good standard of education.

This scholarship is also provided for college and post-graduate education. As I said earlier, almost half of high school private students have scholarships in college and post-graduate, it's over 600,000 scholars. In technical education and skills training, we have invested three times that of three previous administrations combined. As a result of our investments in education, the National Achievement Test scores have improved a lot in our administration. Forty-four percent to 65% in elementary schools; 36% percent to 47% in high schools. Much better than before, but I think still needing a lot of improvement.

And so to further improve our educational system, we have a Presidential Task Force on Education headed by a private educator, Jesuit educator Father Bienvenido Nebres of Ateneo. And this task force has come up with a proposal, a masterplan of a Main Education Highway towards a Knowledge-Based Economy which envisions seamless education from basic education, meaning pre-school or daycare, all the way up to vocational school or college and even beyond.

Because as I said, school is important for a successful life. But on top of making your lives have a better chance to be successful, I also want our educational system to instill in our youth a pride in our nation and a desire to get involved in the civic life of our country. There is a need for you, the students to get involved in a positive way in the civic life of the nation. And that is why I have decided to visit you today. Because I want to give you the message that the Philippines has come a long way since you were little children in January 2001. I'm sure you remember very little of that time because you were little children. But time itself has gratefully erased many memories of that tumultuous time less than ten years ago, when the nation teetered on political chaos and financial bankruptcy.

The economy was jammed in reverse. Few investments were being made, few jobs were being created. Our public sector debt was even bigger than our GDP 'cause our GDP was P3.3 trillion, our public debt was P3.8 trillion. Imagine a public debt bigger than the whole production of the country. And so understandably, foreign reserves were razor thin. It was a time of lower salaries, a time of high inflation. Very few taxes were coming in, that's why insufficient investments were being made to expand healthcare, improve education or even provide clean water and electricity to remote barangays. Those things were very difficult to do.

So into this dismal picture we stepped in.

Today, I was hearing mass — where some of the Holy Spirit sisters often come and join me for mass, in my daily mass — and the priest said because there was... the sermon was about asking things from God and praying. And he said, "Reflect on the gifts that God has given you. How much of them were given to you because you prayed and asked for them. How much of them were given to you even if you did not ask for them." And I started to reflect, and really it's very hard to tell to be able to make that comparison. But one thing I can say, in 2001, I did not seek the Office of the President. It was thrust upon me. But rather than shirk from the onerous task, I rolled up my sleeves and I was determined to turn the Philippines around.

I focused myself like a laser beam on delivering real results to better the lives of ordinary Filipinos. As an economist, I knew, however that to reverse years of economic decline I had to instill fiscal discipline. I had to grow the economy. I had to invest in human and physical infrastructure. And these things that we did would form the building blocks of a turnaround that would eventually, nine years later, deliver 35 quarters of uninterrupted growth, which other administrations have not experienced for the longest time since 1966. The creation of 9 million new jobs, again, with other administrations did not create a million jobs a year. The addition of 53 million to healthcare, health insurance from 29 million before I came in to 82 million today, and still on top of all that a stable fiscal situation.

And so that people and goods can be delivered faster, cheaper and safer from one end of the nation to the other. We built RORO ports, airports and more roads and bridges than in the past three administrations. And you from the province I hope you can see — no, you will not see ‘cause that was ten years ago — and now, but travel is much better now.

But this is very relevant to you: from scratch, we created what is today a global powerhouse, the Philippine Business Process Outsourcing industry. We were able to do this with vision, determination and smart government policies. First of all, we promoted strategic investments in telecommunications connectivity, and so billions of dollars came in to the country in investments, creating half a million new jobs in call centers and BPO alone, and counting. In fact, I’m sure many of you when you get out of school, you would like to be working in one of those very nice call centers and BPOs. And we have a million, a half a million jobs today, and more jobs are available.

How did we do all of these? How were we able to afford all of these?

We have never shied away from taking on tough issues. Most notably, my popularity dipped when I went against the grain and championed the passage of more taxes especially the Expanded Value Added Tax. Even before I did it I knew it would be unpopular, but someone had to get the nation’s fiscal house in order and bring in revenue to invest in the people. It was the right thing to do. It has served people well. It has served a lot of you well through scholarships, through the infrastructure, through the jobs available. And on top of all that, our government’s finances are in much healthier position than nine years ago. Revenues are up. We have enough revenues both for debt servicing and for investing in you, our people. I said earlier that when I started, our debt was bigger than our GDP. Today, our debt is only over 60% of our GDP. Why? Ah, and our foreign debt to GDP ratio has also come down. It used to be 70%, now it is down to just 30%. Why? Because our GDP has grown so much over the past years, it has doubled from 76 billion dollars when I started, to a 168 billion dollars today. And even per capita, it’s more than doubled. When I started, per capita income was $967. Today, its $2,000 and that puts the Philippines now no longer in the rank of the poor countries but the rank of a middle-class country.

And this doubling of per capita income, this doubling of GDP, this increase in GDP compared to debts was enabled because our average growth is higher than all past periods, and our average inflation is lower than at any time since my father’s administration way back in the 1960s. In fact, during this global financial crisis, we were one of few countries to avoid negative growth. We even secured a credit upgrade during the financial crisis of the world.

In fact, if we compare, ‘cause I’m ending my term, if we compare the state of the economy at the end of each President’s term: in 1986 there was an economic crisis; in 1992 there was a power crisis; in 1998 in the middle during the transition from one government to another, there was negative growth because of the Asian financial crisis; in 2001 there was a political crisis. What we have now is an upgrade of our credit outlook. And this is the only administration where the peso is stronger in the end than in the beginning.

And for those who refuse to see progress, just look at the skyline of Manila or Cebu or Fort Bonifacio or Santa Rosa in Laguna. Today, it’s a skyline with new, modern buildings, construction cranes, better roads, hotels, shopping malls that you enjoy, small businesses. This is part of the Philippines we have helped nurture and create.

Also, we inherited a culture of lawlessness and kidnapping that was directed in fact at certain domestic ethnic groups like the Chinese and foreign investors. We worked to end kidnapping as a major problem. We also narrow the lair of hardcore terrorists in the South and we continued to confine and limit the communist insurgency. So compare to nine years ago, people are certainly safer today.

But, there is still that culture of violence. Look what happened in Maguindanao. So, one of the reasons why I’m here because I want to call on all the school age youth to help our society become more safe and let less violence. I want you to help me do a “no guns, no violence” campaign geared at young people trying to change the culture of violence. You can help be the guardians of non-violence as you interact with adults and others in our community. And this is especially important now because there is a gun ban during elections, and we especially want to reduce violence during election time because that is usually when violence flares up.

Free and fair elections are important. You our young can help begin to ensure that we have not just a free and fair election, but one that is free from violence. And I hope you can help me do that.

And as I end my term, I can say that we will leave a legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, major investments in healthcare and education, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure. Yes, much work remains to be done. But a President's work is never done. So, it's never an excuse to strive to stay in office forever.

What is important is that we are determined to turn over to a new government a New Philippines, one that is ready to reach the verge of the first world in 20 years.

And as I'm sure you can hardly remember what was there 10 years ago, 20 years from now, you will remember, hopefully, what we did today so that in 20 years from now you will be the leaders of our country whether in business, whether in government, whether in civic life. But I hope that when you have that role of leadership in a country that's on the verge of first world in 20 years, I hope that the education that you have during this period will have prepared you well for your own role and your own duties as the leaders of a country on the verge of first world in 20 years.

To all of you, good luck and may you have a good future.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a visit to the College of the Holy Spirit.

Retrieved

from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235318/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27389&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the 19th anniversary of the Philippine National Police (PNP)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the 19th anniversary of the Philippine National Police (PNP)

[Delivered at the PNP Multi-Purpose Center, Camp Crame, Quezon City, January 29, 2010]

Thank you, Secretary Puno.

General Verzosa; other officials and men and women of the Philippine National Police; members of the Diplomatic Corps; other government officials; ladies and gentlemen. Please sit down.

Maligayang bati sa lahat ng mga kasapi ng PNP sa inyong anibersaryo.

As we have seen from the report of General Verzosa, the PNP has come a long way since January 2001 when you played a central role in a highlycharged political crisis at the start of the decade. You tilted the balance in favor of good governance and you proceeded to transform the PNP.

You inherited a society with a culture of lawlessness and kidnapping that was directed, if you remember at that time, at certain domestic ethnic groups and foreign investors. But through sheer energy and focus, you led the way in working to end kidnapping as a major problem, virtually erasing this plague from the Philipines. Congratulations!

As a woman, I want to especially point out that during these years with your vigor and determination the incidence of domestic violence and crimes against women and children has gone down. Congratulations as well!

But let me be more general, through all of your work, the people are safer than ever today. And that deserves a big congratulations.

Going to international relations, you have played a large role in the fight against global terrorism, boosting our intelligence gathering and sharing with key allies while lifting up your professionalism and training. And I don't need to talk about how you have lifted up your professionalism and training because General Verzosa has given a comprehensive report about how you have done that.

But let me point out also my gratitude that in quelling the attempts of delusional individuals and conspiracies to subvert Constitutional authority, always, you stood by the Constitution. And you did it without having to resort to force, while allowing dissenting voices to express their grievances. You the members of the PNP have conducted yourselves professionally in handling the various coup attempts, mass actions and other politically-motivated activities. That is why mass actions are now less violent than many other administrations in the past. I admire you and the people admire you, our police forces for demonstrating more temperance compared to the past even in the face of provocation.

I also congratulate you on your campaign against loose firearms, which netted over a hundred thousand firearms from July to September last year. And in response to what General Verzosa has said, I confirm that I have certified necessity of immediately enacting the bill imposing stiffer penalties on illegal firearms and light weapons. (applause) This is particularly important because of our continuing fight against terrorists and armed criminals, and also because we want to reduce election violence.

It is unfortunate that the Maguindanao tragedy happened, and I'm glad that you had an introspection and is part of the process of addressing that. But in the ensuing declaration of Martial Law, I am proud to say that the combined

PNP and Armed Forces assigned to implement it were models of good comportment and that you really have to be congratulated for.

Sa iba't-ibang klase ng hamon: bagyo at baha, mga sakuna at mga trahedyang gawa ng masasamang loob, the Philippine National Police always rose to the occasion, preventing crime, providing quick response, saving lives, assisting in rescue and rehabilitation.

Nandiyan yung mga binigyan natin ng mga awards, talagang you deserved the awards that you got. Nabanggit ni General Verzosa ang cop hero ng MV Baleno, si PO2 Mark Valiant Rey, na hindi inalintana ang pansariling kaligtasan maligtas lamang ang labinglimang pasahero ng lumubog na barko sa Batangas noong Kapaskuhan. Nariyan din ang kalingang ipinakita ng kapulisang tumulong sa pagsagip ng mga hinagupit ng bagyong Ondoy at Pepeng, kahit na marami sa kanila ay dumanas din ng pinsala mula sa bagyo.

Indeed, whether in your core activity of fighting crime and violence, or your very important additional civic activity of saving lives and helping people, our policemen and women, you have given so much of yourselves to remain faithful to your sworn duty to serve and protect our nation and our people. Some of your heroics have become plots of movies, but even more stories about your valiant deeds will probably remain unknown.

But whether they are celebrated or whether there everyday occurrences or hidden achievements, for your valor and sacrifice, our nation is grateful. As General Verzosa pointed out, the PNP has received a high approval rating of 67 percent from our countrymen. That is indeed a thank you from the people of the Philippines.

At hindi lamang dito sa ating bayan naipamalas ng kapulisan ang inyong giting at tapang. Kabilang kayo sa pinakamaraming peacemakers or peacekeepers ng U.N. sa buong mundo, at lately yung peacekeepers natin sa Haiti ay nandiyan sa gitna ng eksena, ang ating mga pulis, at nagpapasalamat tayo na ligtas pa rin sila sa panganib at kasalukuyang tumutulong sa search and rescue operations. Talagang dapat din silang magkaroon ng medalya. At inatasan ko ring magpadala pa ng dagdag na peacekeepers sa Haiti.

Kasama ko ang buong sambayanan sa paghanga sa inyong ipinamalas na kabayanihan, kabayanihang hindi naging madali sa harap ng mga pagsubok at mga hamong tumambad sa inyo.

Like the PNP, the Philippines itself has come a long way since January 2001. Time has gratefully erased many memories of that tumultuous time less than ten years ago, when the nation teetered on political chaos and financial bankruptcy.

The economy was jammed in reverse. Few investments were being made, few jobs were being created. The public sector debt of P3.6 trillion pesos was bigger than the GDP of P3.3 trillion pesos. The foreign debt was 73 percent of GDP. Foreign reserves were razor thin.

It was a time of lower salaries, including for the police force. You had a bill, you had a law increasing your salaries but it couldn't be implemented by the time I had come in. And there was high inflation to further disturb you low salaries. Due to the large debt to GDP ratios, insufficient investments had been made to expand healthcare, improve education, provide clean water and needed electricity to remote barangays.

Internationally, the Philippines had fallen far, far off the radar screen. It had taken itself out of consideration by investors as a place to invest and create jobs.

Into this dismal picture we stepped.

In 2001, I did not seek the Office of the President. It was thrust upon me, with as I said earlier, the PNP playing a central role in EDSA II. Rather than shirk from the onerous task, together with you, I rolled up my sleeves, determined to turn the Philippines around. Together with you, I was focused like a laser beam on delivering real results to better the lives of ordinary Filipinos. As an economist, I knew that to reverse years of economic decline we had to instill fiscal discipline, not just discipline of the citizenry to the police. We had to grow the economy and we had to invest in human and physical infrastructure, including investment in the police.

And I'm glad that General Verzosa already talked about the supplemental P10 billion pesos Capability Building Enhancement Fund as an offshoot of the PNP Modernization Program, including the two billion pesos release to acquire firepower and mobility and communication equipment for our police stations from 2008 to 2012. And I'm also glad that every police station now has at least one patrol vehicle. How could we afford this?

From day one, our actions to instill fiscal discipline, grow the economy, and invest in human and physical infrastructure would form the building blocks of a turnaround that would deliver 36 consecutive quarters of growth, create 9 million new jobs, including more than 20,000 in the police. And our turnaround also delivered the addition of 52 million people to healthcare and a stable fiscal situation that allowed us to afford your transformation.

You have never shied away from taking on tough challenges, as I have never shied away from taking on tough issues. Most notably, my popularity dipped when I went against the grain and championed the passage of the Expanded Value Added Tax. I knew it would be unpopular. But someone had to get the nation's fiscal house in order and bring in revenues to invest in the people, including in the police. It was the right thing to do. It has served the people and the PNP well, and I have no regrets about it.

We have also ensured that more and more families are able to own a home. During our tenure, more than 300,000 low-cost housing for the Filipino people have been built, including housing programs for the police as showed by General Verzosa such as those in Camp Bagong Diwa, Bicutan, Camp Macabulos in Tarlac, Camp Castañeda in Silang, Camp Capistrano in Cagayan de Oro. This is in keeping with what I said in 2001 that I would be studying "how to make the lives of policemen and their families better." Since that time, as I said before I came in, there had been a law giving you higher salaries but they couldn't be implemented. Since that time, the men and women of the PNP have been granted five increases in salaries and allowances, so that today you're earning more than double what you did in 2001. This is on top of scholarships for your children, and cheaper medicines and food sold in outlets within the camps. And the other many benefits that General Verzosa inventoried which I don't need to add after that.

In conclusion, in summary, we will leave a legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, renewed global engagement, major investments in healthcare, education and law enforcement, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure. Yes, much work remains to be done, but through your support, we are determined to turn over to a new government a New Philippines, one that is ready for the challenges of bringing our nation to the verge of first world in 20 years which would include a modern and thoroughly professional police force.

Kinikilala ng sambayanan ang napakalaking kontribusyon na ipinagkaloob ninyo para sa pambansang katahimikan at pangkahusayan — dalawa sa mahahalagang mga sangkap ng pangmatagalang kaunlaran.

Kaya ang aking hiling sa inyo, patuloy ninyong bigyan ng dangal ang organisasyong ito sa pamamagitan ng inyong tapat na paglilingkod.

Maraming salamat muli sa inyong suporta. And Happy Anniversary sa inyong lahat!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the 19th anniversary of the Philippine National Police (PNP). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235159/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27400&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during a visit to the Angeles University Foundation Information Technology Training Center

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During a visit to the Angeles University Foundation Information Technology Training Center

[Delivered at the Angeles University Foundation, Angeles City, Pampanga, February 1, 2010]

Thank you, thank you.

Thank you very much.

Thank you very much, Chairman Angeles for your introduction.

Thank you very much Congressman Tarzan Lazatin for joining us today and thank you Attorney Joseph Angeles for your warm words of welcome and for introducing the subject matter to our audience of Angeles University, faculty and students. I have here with me also my Presidential Assistant for Region III, former Mayor of Palayan City, Reily Fajardo.

I'm very glad to be with you again. Again because many years ago when you students were still children, I used to be a member of the board of Angeles University when I was a senator. (applause) I only resigned because I became vice president and the Constitution prohibits the vice president from having any employment anywhere else. So, I'm very glad to be here again.

And I'm glad to do this as we start a comprehensive tour of every Super Region because before the end of my term, I want to review our legacy of accomplishments. And I'm glad to do it here in Angeles University. I will explain to you why in a short while aside from the fact that I feel at home here having been a member of the board. The Super Regions were designed to spread development away from an inequitable concentration in Metro Manila. The Super Regions are: Agribusiness Mindanao, Tourism Central Philippines, the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle, the Luzon Urban Beltway and the Cyber Corridor, where we are. Actually, we are in two of the Super Regions: the Luzon Urban Beltway and the Cyber Corridor.

But for today, we will talk about the Cyber Corridor. And as Attorney Angeles said, this is an industry, the cyber industry is something which our administration created almost from scratch. And that is why I am very proud of our Cyber Corridor. The Cyber Corridor is made up of the strongest potential locations for ICT investments, services and activities, including call centers, back office, software development like what Angeles University is doing for free for the Department of Health. It also includes medical transcription, engineering design, animation and game development. The ICT or the Cyber Corridor presently houses 750 call centers and BPO companies served by three high bandwidth backbone and digital networks.

The composition of the Cyber Corridor is jointly identified and periodically updated by the private sector, the academe and the government. For now it starts here in the north from Metro Pampanga and goes up to the south in Davao City. It includes Metro Manila and Metro Cebu which were the country's two original ICT Centers of Excellence, and 10 urban areas being promoted at the so-called Top 10 "Next Wave Cities" to be the best new destinations of the ICT industry. These are: Metro Laguna composed of Santa Rosa, Calamba, Los Baños and San Pablo; Metro Cavite composed of Bacoor, Dasmariñas City, Imus and Cavite City; Iloilo; Davao; Bacolod; Metro Pampanga including Clark, Angeles, Mabalacat and Dau, in other words the district of Congressman Lazatin. Metro Bulacan composed of Baliuag, Marilao and Meycauayan; Cagayan de Oro; Central Bulacan composed of Malolos and Calumpit; and Lipa. Pasig, Cebu, Quezon City and Mandaluyong are ranked among the top 50 cities worldwide suited for BPO.

But I'm very proud to tell you that next to Metro Manila and Metro Cebu which were our original centers of excellence, the third most popular destination for BPO investments is none other than here in our own beloved Pampanga.

We are starting the Super Region tour in your school because as Attorney Joseph Angeles pointed out, this is the only school in the Central Luzon and one of only two schools in the Northern part of Luzon to be considered as ICT Center of Excellence and Center of Excellence in Computer Engineering. (applause) And I want to start my Cyber Corridor tour in the school because I want to continue to reach out to the youth of this nation. You are the future. The future of this nation depends on you, the next generation.

When I said that you were very little children when I left Angeles University as member of the board in 1998 and you were very small children yet in January 2001, the Philippines has come a long way since January 2001. Most of you were little children at that time, so you probably don't have much recollection of how it was like at that time. In fact, even for your elders, time has gratefully erased many memories of the tumultuous time less than ten years ago, when the nation teetered on political chaos and financial bankruptcy.

The economy was jammed in reverse. Few investments were being made, few jobs were being created. The public sector debt of 3.8 trillion pesos was bigger than the Gross Domestic Product of 3.3 trillion pesos. Foreign reserves were razor thin.

It was a time of lower salaries and high inflation. And due to low tax revenues, insufficient investments had been made to expand healthcare, improve education, provide clean water and needed electricity to remote barangays.

Into this dismal picture we stepped. I did not seek the Office of the President in 2001; it was thrust upon me. But rather than shirk from this onerous task, we rolled up our sleeves, determined to turn the Philippines around.

We were focused like a laser beam on delivering real results to better the lives of ordinary Filipinos. As an economist, I knew that to reverse years of economic decline we had to instill fiscal discipline, grow the economy and invest in human and physical infrastructure.

These actions would form the building blocks of a turnaround that would deliver 36 quarters of uninterrupted growth, the creation of 9 million new jobs, the addition of 53 million to healthcare, and a stable fiscal situation.

We are creating wealth by developing the labor-intensive, skills-intensive service sectors such as ICT and tourism as the key growth sectors, as I predicted during my first State of the Nation Address in 2001.

From scratch with only 2,000 workers before I became President, we have created what is today a global powerhouse: the Philippine BPO industry. We achieved this by promoting strategic investments in key areas:

First, a connectivity infrastructure backbone. We encouraged the provision of more broadband services in cities and identified growth areas. Thanks to these investments the cost of international calls went down from 40 cents to single digit. I see there it says, 2 cents. The number of internet users jumped from two million in 2000 to more than 24 million internet users today.

And so that no Taiwan tremor or tsunami can cut off our cyber services from their global clients, we encouraged PLDT and Globe to invest billions in international gateway redundancy.

The second investment we made was an investment in an appropriate policy and legal environment. We created the Commission on ICT, with the guidance that the ICT sector should be driven by the market and the private sector, not by government interference. Instead of interfering and regulating, what government did was to give incentives to developers of IT parks, assisted investors in identifying promising provincial sites, and built more transport facilities to those sites. This philosophy drove the fast growth of contact centers. Now the market is leading the growth of the high value added segments of the offshoring and outsourcing industries, such as accounting, legal, human resources and administrative services.

Third area of investment was the development of human capital. More than 5,000 schools mostly high schools in the public school system now have computer laboratories while almost 4,000 schools have been connected to the internet. In technical education and skills training, we have invested three times more than the previous three administrations combined. A very large portion of this goes to scholarships for call center training such as what Angeles University is offering on top of its ICT education.

Thanks to these strategic investments, billions in investments have been poured into the country, creating half a million new jobs in BPO. Today, the Philippines have challenged India for BPO supremacy. Compared to 24 million dollars in 2001, the BPO industry has earned or will be earning 7 billion dollars this year. And that is not far behind India's 9 billion dollars for call centers.

For the second time, the United Kingdom's National Outsourcing Association awarded the Philippines as the Offshoring Destination of the Year in recognition of the healthy environment as well as the power and infrastructure support in making the country attractive to foreign business.

The 500,000 jobs created in the BPO industry are part of the legacy I will leave. A legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, renewed global engagement, major investments in healthcare and education, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure.

Much work remains to be done, but I am determined to turn over to a new government a New Philippines, one that is ready for the challenges of bringing the nation to the verge of first world in 20 years.

As I said, ten years ago you were small children, you hardly knew, you hardly remember what it was like. Twenty years from now, you will be at the prime of your life, you will be the leaders of this nation whether you will be in politics, in business or in civic life. And I hope that 20 years from now, when we're on the verge of first world, the educational system and the opportunities made available for investments and employment in matters like ICT and other important job creating skills enhancing industries will have helped you become leaders of a country ready for the first world.

To all of you, Congratulations! Good luck! and thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during a visit to the Angeles University Foundation Information Technology Training Center. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235138/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27425&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Cyber Corridor National Capital Region Tour: Visit to Jose Rizal University (JRU)

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Cyber Corridor National Capital Region Tour: Visit to Jose Rizal University (JRU)

[Delivered at the Jose Rizal University, #80 Shaw Blvd. Mandaluyong City, Metro Manila, February 2, 2010]

Thank you. Thank you very much.

Thank you very much.

Thank you Secretary Rey Chua, Chairman of the Commission on ICT for your introduction. Thank you also to President Vince Fabella for your very kind words of welcome and for showing me an example of your ADEPT classes.

I'd like to introduce also the Chairman of CHED, Manny Angeles; our new Press Secretary Jun Icban; and my special fond greeting to one of the ladies of my father's... one of the Cabinet ladies, Mrs. Marinella Fabella of my father's time.

I am really very happy to be here at JRU, and although it is not the reason why I am here now, I'm happy to hear the recollection of Vince about Armand Fabella, revered member of the Fabella family who founded this school. He was one of the youngest Cabinet members of my late father's administration. He was the head of the program implementation agency which later on combined with the National Economic Council became the National Economic and Development Authority. And as Vince said... well, no, I will add the commentary, he was so young in my father's Cabinet that 40 years later in my own administration, I was still able to tap him to be Chairman of the UCPB. And he led a team that turned that bank around from an insolvent bank to now a going concern. So, I'd like to thank him for that posthumously.

One of the things that President Vince did not point out to you is that one of my favorite laws that I passed when I was a senator was the expanded Build- Operate-and-Transfer Law which improved the BOT Law and expanded it to other private sector participation and physical infrastructure, and one of the most important resource persons I had sitting if I was here defending the bill sitting right there in the gallery whispering to me all the answers to the technical questions was no other than analyst consultant Vince Fabella. So, I thank him for that.

And the result of that law I think you can see all over Metro Manila and the provinces, all the BOT projects being built: the North Luzon Expressway, the South Luzon Expressway, the Skyway, the Caticlan Airport and so many others. So, I'm glad to be here and I was happy that the last time I was here I was here for the installation of Dr. Fabella as president of your university.

Now I am here as part of a tour of the Super Regions to review our legacy of accomplishments. The Super Regions were designed to decongest Metro Manila and spread development. They are: Agribusiness Mindanao, Tourism Central Philippines, the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle, the Luzon Urban Beltway and the Cyber Corridor.

Mandaluyong where we are, Metro Manila where we are belongs both to the Luzon Urban Beltway and the Cyber Corridor.

The Cyber Corridor is made up of the strongest actual and potential locations for ICT investments, including call centers, back office, software development, medical transcription, engineering design, animation game development and others. It currently houses 750 call centers and BPO companies and counting, and these companies are served by three high-bandwidth backbone and digital networks.

What composes the Cyber Corridor is jointly identified and periodically updated by the private sector, the academe and government. For now it starts from the north from Metro Pampanga and goes down to the south in Davao City. It includes of course Metro Manila and Metro Cebu which were the country's two original ICT Centers of Excellence, and 10 urban areas being promoted as the so-called 10 "Next Wave Cities" to be the best new destinations of the ICT industry: Metro Laguna, Metro Cavite, Iloilo, Davao, Bacolod, Metro Pampanga, Metro Bulacan, Cagayan de Oro, Central Bulacan and Lipa. And ranked among the top 50 cities worldwide as suited for BPO are Cebu, Pasig, Quezon City and Mandaluyong. These are worldwide choices of the top 50. So, I congratulate Mandaluyong and its citizens like JRU.

And I like to believe that JRU is a factor as identified by the world's industry for Mandaluyong's potential for BPO and ICT because you offer, aside from a B.S. in IT, a B.S. in Engineering, your ADEPT. I understand that there are only 20 schools offering ADEPT. This is a six-unit course that at the end of the six units brings about a 60 or 70 percent chance of your being taken in for a job in a BPO or ICT industry. And so more power to JRU and more power to our students going to the ADEPT program.

So, I came here because they arranged for me a look in, a drop in into an ADEPT class because if we are to visit any Super Region, visits to schools are an essential backdrop like for instance in ICT and BPO we cannot have that without the school's providing the manpower to be able to make that industry flourish.

And that is true of every Super Region, so we must visit the schools especially because I want to reach out to the youth of this nation. You the youth are our future. The future of this nation depends on the next generation.

The Philippines has come a long way since January 2001. Most of you were kids at that time, so you probably don't remember much about that tumultuous time less than ten years ago. Even for your titas and your lolas, they probably have forgotten that at that time the nation was on the brink of political chaos and financial bankruptcy.

The economy was jammed in reverse. Few investments were being made. Few jobs were being created. The debt of the government and its corporations, I believe including UCPB at that time, a 3.6 trillion pesos was bigger than our GDP of 3.3 trillion pesos. There were almost no foreign reserves.

It was a time of lower salaries and higher prices. Tax revenues were so low that we could hardly invest in expanding healthcare, improving education, and providing clean water and needed electricity to remote barangays.

Into this dismal picture we stepped. I did not seek the Office of the President in 2001; it was thrust upon me. But rather than shirk from this onerous task, we rolled up our sleeves, determined to turn the Philippines around.

We were focused like a laser beam on delivering real results to better the lives of ordinary Filipinos. As an economist, I knew that to reverse years of economic decline we had to instill fiscal discipline, grow the economy and invest in human and physical infrastructure.

These actions would form the building blocks of a turnaround that would deliver an unprecedented 36 quarters of uninterrupted growth, create 9 million new jobs, and add 53 billion people to healthcare, while keeping government coffers stable enough to merit credit upgrades at the height of the global recession.

In my first State of the Nation Address, I said that we would create wealth by developing the labor-intensive, skills-intensive sectors such as ICT. From scratch with only 2,000 workers we created what is today a global powerhouse — the Philippine BPO industry. We achieved this by promoting strategic investments in three areas:

First, digital infrastructure. We encouraged more broadband services in cities and identified growth areas. Thanks to these investments in connectivity, the cost of international calls went down from 40 cents to 2 cents a minute through the VOIP. The number of internet users jumped from 2 million in year 2000 to more than 24 million today.

That's why you have an infrastructure for BPO and ICT to develop. And so that no Taiwan tremor or tsunami can cut off our cyber services from their global clients, we encouraged PLDT and Globe to invest billions in having more than one international telecommunications gateway. So throughout all of the calamities around the world our BPOs continue to operate 24/7.

The second area for investing was an appropriate policy and legal environment. We created the Commission on ICT chaired by Rey Chua. It is guided by the policy that the ICT sector should be guided by the market, with minimal government interference. For example, if the market calls for call centers, we should not force them to specialize in something else. Instead of regulating, we gave incentives to developers of IT parks, assisted investors in identifying promising provincial sites, built more transport facilities to those sites. And this morning I went to one of the IT inaugurations and the chairman of the board told me, that after he met me in 2007 in New York in one of my trips, he decided to come and invest in the Philippines because we have a very strong Intellectual Property Regulatory framework.

This philosophy of letting the market determine business decisions but supporting them drove the fast growth of call centers. Now the market is further leading the growth to the higher value added segments of the offshoring and outsourcing industries, such as accounting, legal, medical, personnel and administrative services.

And third... oh no, before I go the the third. About the second, about how the markets has been leading to these services. Earlier I mentioned in year 2000 salaries were very low. Today, a BPO agent begins with 15,000 pesos not including bonuses and allowances. And as you go up the value chain into IT, today when I went to the IT Center, many of the employees that I talked to were expatriates. They had done IT work in Singapore, in New York, in China, in the UK but they came home because the salaries are comparable to what they were receiving abroad plus they are able to be with their families. So because of BPO and ICT we have a regime of better salaries and better pay.

But that means the third investment, and this is where JRU is so important, the development of human capital. We start with the basic education, English as the medium of instruction which we are restoring, and we're making our high school students familiar with the computer and the internet. So more than 5,000 public high schools now have computer laboratories. Almost 4,000 of them have been connected to the internet.

And in technical education and skills training, we have invested three times as much as the combined budgets for three previous administrations and a very large portion of these investments goes to scholarships for the BPO and IT industry.

But I understand that ADEPT is in JRU is a self-supporting course. You are not getting any money from the government for that, in fact, you are giving the government skilled manpower that will man the future of our economy and that is the growth sectors like ICT. So, congratulations to JRU for that!

So thanks to these strategic investments by the public and the private sector like JRU. Billions of investments had been poured into the country, creating half a million new jobs in BPO and ICT.

Today, the Philippines with 90 million people has challenged India's one billion population for BPO supremacy. Compared to 0.02 billion in 2001, our BPO industry earned 7.3 billion dollars in 2009, not far behind India's 9 billion dollars for call centers. And for the second time, the United Kingdom's National Outsourcing Association awarded the Philippines as the Offshoring Destination of the Year.

The 500,000 jobs we are creating in ICT are part of the legacy that I am happy to leave. A legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, renewed global engagement, major investments in healthcare and education, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure like roads and bridges, irrigation and RORO ports.

Much remains to be done, but I am determined to turn over to a new government a New Philippines ready for the challenge of bringing the nation to the verge of first world in 20 years. Ten years ago, you were children, 20 years from now, you will be the leaders of our country whether you are in politics, in business or in civil society. I hope that by that time, the preparations that had been made for you in this generation will serve you well. And in these preparations, I want to thank JRU for playing such a big role in preparing our human capital to go to the first world in 20 years.

Maraming salamat sa inyong lahat. Thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Cyber Corridor National Capital Region Tour: Visit to Jose Rizal University (JRU). Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235122/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27420&Itemid=38

Speech of President Arroyo during the Cyber Corridor Visayan Tour: Visit to Teleperformance Bacolod City

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Cyber Corridor Visayan Tour: Visit to Teleperformance Bacolod City

[Delivered at the Luxur IT Center, Lacson St. cor. Magsaysay Ave. Bacolod City, Negros Occidental, February 3, 2010]

Thank you very much Secretary Chua, our outsourcing czar.

Thank you very much Mayor Leonardia and Governor Zayco for your warm words of welcome. I'd like to also greet Congressman Monico Puentevella, our host congressman and Congressman Ignacito Arroyo of Negros Occidental.

I'd like to congratulate Attorney Sigue and the leaders of the ICT industry here in Bacolod, and of course, thank you to Teleperformance for hosting this occasion that I asked to be held.

I still can't forget in 2006, I was here in the ballroom of this hotel for the Vice Mayors' League Convention and I said, "this is our last event in this place as a ballroom because tomorrow it will be transformed into a call center." And after we left, Teleperformance stepped in and here they are stronger than ever. Congratulations!

And so it's fitting that we should be here today as part of a tour of the Super Regions: Agribusiness Mindanao, Tourism Central Philippines which Negros is also a part of Bacolod, the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle, the Urban Luzon Beltway and the Cyber Corridor which we are featuring today. These Super Regions were designed to spread development away from an inequitable concentration in Manila.

I understand that some from the media would like to know how do they become a part of the Cyber Corridor. Well, let me answer in this way, the Cyber Corridor was identified jointly by the private sector, the academe and the government. And these elements or parts of the Cyber Corridor where the areas that they identified as comprising the strongest actual and potential locations for ICT investments like call centers, back office, software development, medical transcription, engineering design, animation and game development.

As we have heard glimpses earlier, certainly, the Cyber Corridor includes Metro Manila and Metro Cebu, because they were the two original ICT Centers of Excellence in our country. But now, they have included also 10 urban areas being promoted as the best new destinations for ICT: Metro Laguna, Metro Cavite, Iloilo, Davao, Bacolod, Metro Pampanga, Metro Bulacan, Cagayan de Oro, Central Bulacan and Lipa. Well, being already talked about some of the contents of the brochure on the Cyber Corridor and congratulations for being number one in business environment. I'm also told by the industry that Bacolod's best assets are its people, you the people and your progressive mindset that spills over to the BPO employees who come from different parts of the region to live and work in Bacolod. Also another very important element is the infrastructure.

During our administration we completed the Bacolod-Silay Airport and we are beginning the Bacolod-Silay access road, but that airport according to the industry certainly boosted Bacolod's potential as an IT hub. With such infrastructure now, Bacolod offers a conducive climate for ICT investments, and we have heard about the different IT-BPO companies in the area, the biggest number of IT parks outside of Cebu and Metro Manila. And we have giant investors here like Teletech, Convergys and of course our host Teleperformance.

ICT, BPO and the Cyber industry have come a long way since 2001. The Philippines itself has come a long way since January 2001. Many don't remember much about the tumultuous time less than ten years ago when the nation was teetering on the brink of political chaos and financial bankruptcy. The economy was jammed in reverse, few investments were being made, few jobs were being created. The debt of the government and its corporations of 3.6 trillion pesos was bigger than our GDP of 3.3 trillion pesos. There were almost no foreign reserves.

It was a time of lower salaries and higher prices. Tax revenues were so low that we could hardly invest in expanding healthcare, improving education, and providing clean water and needed electricity to remote barangays.

Into this dismal picture we stepped. I did not seek the Office of the President in 2001; it was thrust upon me. But rather than shirk from this onerous task, we rolled up our sleeves, determined to turn the Philippines around.

We were focused like a laser beam on delivering real results to better the lives of ordinary Filipinos. As an economist, I knew that to reverse years of economic decline we had to instill fiscal discipline, grow the economy and invest in human and physical infrastructure.

These actions would form the building blocks of a turnaround that would deliver an unprecedented 36 quarters of uninterrupted growth, create 9 million new jobs, add 53 million people to healthcare, with government coffers that helped us withstand the global economic crisis.

In my first State of the Nation in 2001, I said that we would create wealth by developing labor-intensive, skills-intensive services such as ICT. And sure enough from scratch with only 2,000 workers in the year 2000, we created what is today a global powerhouse: the Philippine BPO industry. We achieved this by promoting strategic investments in three areas:

First, digital infrastructure. We encouraged more broadband services in cities and identified growth areas. Thus the cost of international calls went down from 40 cents to 2 cents a minute for those using the VOiP. The number of internet users jumped from 2 million in 2000 to more than 24 million today. That is why we have an infrastructure for BPO.

And so that no Taiwan tremor or tsunami can cut off our cyber services from their global clients, we encouraged PLDT and Globe to invest billions in having more than one international telecommunications gateway into our country.

Second area of investment was an appropriate policy and legal environment. We created the Commission on ICT. Rey Chua, our chairman, has been guided by the policy that the ICT sector should be guided by the market, with minimal government interference. For example, if the market calls for call centers, we shouldn't force our investors to specialize in something else. Let them make the decision. Instead of regulating, we gave incentives to the developers of IT parks like the ones that are here in Bacolod, we assisted investors in identifying promising provincial sites that's why we designed the Cyber Corridor, and we built more transport facilities to those sites like the Bacolod-Silay Airport.

Also because, of course, ICT is more than call centers and the other side of the spectrum we have the IT. Yesterday, we opened an IT Center in Taguig in Metro Manila. And the Chairman said that one of the reasons why they decided to come to the Philippines after he met me in 2007 and learned of the possibility of doing IT in the Philippines, he was convinced by our very good Intellectual Property Protection environment.

So, that's what we mean by supportive rather than regulating. And this philosophy drove the fast growth of call centers. But now the market is leading to the growth of the higher value added segments of the offshoring and outsourcing industries, such as accounting, legal, medical, personnel and administrative services.

Third area of investment, human capital. To increase the country's share in the global market for offshoring and outsourcing services, the government intensified the implementation of various programs to train the workforce to enable them to find jobs in the BPO sector, and educate the young on the use of computers and internet for the next generation of IT and BPO workers. More than 4,000 public schools are now connected to the internet, including 22 schools in Bacolod.

In technical education and skills development training, we have invested three times as much as the combined budgets of the three previous administrations. A very large portion of this investment goes to scholarships for the BPO industry, including 3,000 scholarships here in Region VI.

Thanks to these strategic investments, billions in investments have been poured into the country by the private sector creating half a million new jobs in BPO alone.

Today, the Philippines with 90 million people has challenged India's one billion population for BPO supremacy. Compared to almost nothing in 2001, 0.02 billion dollars, our BPO industry in 2009 earned more than 7 billion dollars.

I'd like to think that the 500,000 jobs we are creating in ICT are part of the legacy that I will leave, that is the legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, renewed global engagement, major investments in healthcare and education, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure like the Bacolod-Silay Road, the Bacolod-Silay Airport, the RORO ports and other important infrastructure. Much work remains to be done, but I am determined to turn over to a new government a New Philippines ready for the challenge of bringing the nation to the verge of first world in 20 years.

And what other precursor of the first world we see in the Philippines than more than the BPO industry especially here where we are today. This is the only BPO center I know that has a swimming pool. So this is an industry that will continue to grow and grow. It is an industry that with all of your support and your active participation will really lead us to the verge of first world in 20 years.

Damo gid nga salamat sa inyo nga tanan!

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Cyber Corridor Visayan Tour: Visit to Teleperformance Bacolod City. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235030/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27440&Itemid=38

OFFICIAL GAZETTE OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

ATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Cyber Corridor Visayan Tour: Visit to John B. Lacson Foundation Maritime University RRLS Information and Communication Technology Academy

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Cyber Corridor Visayan Tour: Visit to John B. Lacson Foundation Maritime University RRLS
Information and Communication Technology Academy

[Delivered at the John B. Lacson Foundation Maritime University, Molo, Iloilo City, Iloilo, February 3, 2010]

Thank you, thank you. Thank you very much.

Thank you Secretary Chua for your introduction.

Thank you very much Chairperson Arcelo for your very very kind words of welcome; Dr. Sebastian. I'd like to thank the officials of the Philippine Government who are here with us today: City mayor of Iloilo, Mayor Jerry Treñas; Governor of the province of Iloilo, Niel Tupas; my Chief Presidential Legal Counsel, Raul Gonzalez; the head of TESDA who has helped provide all these scholarships, Buboy Syjuco; our new Press Secretary, Cris Icban; Secretary Ric Saludo, who is taking care of the Reconstruction Commission that includes the areas of typhoon "Frank"; and from the province of Negros Occidental, Congressman Ignacio Arroyo Jr.; other officials of this esteemed university. I'm happy to call it a university, the first and only private Maritime University in Southeast Asia. Congratulations for that!

But excellent as your Maritime education is, we're actually here now to showcase your ICT education. I'm here as part of a tour of the Super Regions: Agribusiness Mindanao, Tourism Central Philippines, the North Luzon Agribusiness Quadrangle, the Luzon Urban Beltway and the Cyber Corridor. These Super Regions were designed to spread development away from an inequitable concentration in Manila.

The Cyber Corridor was identified by the private sector, academe and government comprising the strongest actual and potential locations for ICT investments like call centers, back office, software development, medical transcription, engineering design, animation and game development. This Corridor includes Metro Manila and Metro Cebu, the two original ICT Centers of Excellence. And now in addition, 10 urban areas being promoted as the best new destinations for ICT: Metro Laguna, Metro Cavite, Davao, Bacolod, Metro Pampanga, Metro and Central Bulacan, Cagayan de Oro, Lipa and of course, the City of Iloilo.

And I dare say, that one of the factors why Iloilo has been identified as a great potential for BPO investments is your ICT Academy. I'd like to congratulate you for that! I understand that you offer courses in Contact Center Services, Medical Transcription, Computer Hardware Servicing, Programming, Spreadsheet Application and Photoshop. And I also understand that you will soon offer Visual Graphics Design and Technical Drafting courses. That's why it was essential that I visit you in the course of the Cyber Corridor tour. Visits to schools are an essential backdrop of our Super Regions tour because I want to reach out to the youth of this nation. You are the future. The future of this nation depends on you, the next generation.

You're very young and you were children in January 2001, so I'm sure you hardly remember what it was like. Certainly, the Philippines has come a long way since that time when you were still kids. But even your titas and your lolas, even for them, they probably have forgotten that at that time the nation was on the brink of political chaos and financial bankruptcy.

The economy was jammed in reverse. Few investments were being made, few jobs were being created. The debt of the government and its corporations of 3.6 trillion pesos was bigger than our GDP of 3.3 trillion pesos. There were almost no foreign reserves.

It was a time of lower salaries and higher prices. Tax revenues were so low that we could hardly invest in expanding healthcare, improving education, and providing clean water and needed electricity to remote barangays.

Into this dismal picture we stepped. I did not seek the Office of the President in 2001; it was thrust upon me. But rather than shirk from this onerous task, we rolled up our sleeves, determined to turn the Philippines around.

We were focused like a laser beam on delivering real results to better the lives of ordinary Filipinos. As an economist, I knew that to reverse years of economic decline we had to instill fiscal discipline, grow the economy and invest in human and physical infrastructure.

These would form the building blocks of a turnaround that would deliver an unprecedented 36 quarters of uninterrupted growth, create 9 million new jobs, and add 53 million people to healthcare with government coffers that helped us withstand the global economic crisis.

In my first State of the Nation Address in 2001, I said that we would create wealth by developing the labor-intensive, skills-intensive services such as ICT.

From scratch with only 2,000 workers in year 2000, we created what is today a global powerhouse: the BPO industry. We achieved this by promoting strategic investments in three areas:

First, digital infrastructure. We encouraged more broadband services in cities and identified growth areas. Thus, the cost of international calls went down from 40 cents to 2 cents a minute for those using VOIP. And the number of internet users jumped from 2 million in year 2000 to more than 24 million today.

And so that no Taiwan tremor or tsunami can cut off our cyber services from their global clients, we encouraged PLDT and Globe to invest billions in having more than one international telecommunications gateway into the country from abroad.

The second area of investment was an appropriate policy and legal environment. We created the Commission on ICT headed here by Secretary Rey Chua. It was guided by the policy that the ICT sector should be guided by the market, with minimal government interference but rather with government support. For example, if the market calls for call centers, we should not force the investors to specialize in something else. Instead of regulating, we gave incentives to developers of IT parks, assisted investors in identifying promising provincial sites like Iloilo and built more transport facilities to those sites. For instance, the Iloilo Airport and the access road from the airport to Iloilo.

This philosophy drove the fast growth of call centers. And now the market is leading to the growth of the higher value added segments of the offshoring and outsourcing industries, such as accounting, legal, medical, personnel and administrative services.

Third area of strategic investments, the development of human capital. More than 5,000 public schools now have computer laboratories. Almost 4,000 of them are connected to the internet. In technical education and skills training, Buboy Syjuco has invested three times as much as the combined budget of the three previous administrations, a very large portion of this investment goes to scholarships for the BPO industry. For example, as Dr. Lacson Arcelo said, your school has produced over 400 of our scholarships under the Finishing Course for call center agents. And I'm so proud the 250 have already been assured of jobs, that's more than... that is about 60 percent hiring rate. You know that nationally the hiring rate is 6 percent, so your 60 percent hiring rate is 10 times more than the national average.

Our 400 young trainees form part of almost 3,000 graduates of Region VI's BPO training programs. Thanks to the strategic investments, billions of investments have been poured into the country creating almost half a million jobs in BPO alone. Today, the Philippines with 90 million people has challenged India's one billion population for BPO supremacy. Compared to 0.02 billion dollars in 2001, which is almost nothing, our BPO industry has earned more than 7 billion dollars in 2009. And that's not far behind India's 9 billion dollars for call centers even if their population is one billion and ours is 90 million.

The 500,000 jobs created in ICT are part of the legacy that I am happy to leave behind. And I am happy with what Dr. Lacson Arcelo said at the end of her remarks that: "your achievement is our achievement; your legacy is our legacy." And I'm proud to say that that is a legacy of hard work, a strong and stable economy, renewed global engagement, major investments in healthcare and education, and dramatic improvements in physical infrastructure like roads and bridges, irrigation and RORO ports.

Much work remains to be done. But with your help, I am determined to turn over to a new government a New Philippines ready for the challenge of bringing the nation to the verge of first world in 20 years. And I believe that during that time the leaders of our nation whether it will be in politics, in civic life or in business and the professions will include among them our outstanding alumni from the John Lacson Foundation Maritime University and its related ICT Academy.

To you, Congratulations! And thank you.

Source: www.op.gov.ph

Macapagal-Arroyo, G. (2010). President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's speech during the Cyber Corridor Visayan Tour: Visit to John B. Lacson Foundation Maritime University RRLS Information and Communication Technology Academy. Retrieved from https://web.archive.org/web/20100407235043/http://www.op.gov.ph/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=27439&Itemid=38

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PORTAL – EDITED AT THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDER COMMONWEALTH ACT NO. 638

Speech of President Arroyo during the Cyber Corridor Mindanao Tour: Visit to Concentrix

Speech
of
Her Excellency Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President of the Philippines
During the Cyber Corridor Mindanao Tour: Visit to Concentrix

[Delivered at the Concentrix, Damosa IT Park, J.P. Laurel Ave. Davao City, Davao del Sur, February 3, 2010]

Good evening everyone. Please sit down.

